3. In several grounds of the bill of exceptions complaint was made that the act of 1845, as amended by the act of 1849, was unconstitutional; but the record does not disclose that these complaints were made in the pleadings or otherwise, so as to show that the question as to the constitutionality of the act was made before the trial court and decided. Other assignments of error relate to a construction of provisions of the act of 1845 in regard to the method of procedure in taking private property under the exercise of the power of eminent domain, and the application of such provisions of the act of 1845 to the present case. Under the statement above made, no constitutional question is presented for decision; and, as the act of 1845 has been superseded, in so far as it refers to the method of procedure in the matter of taking private property, under the power of eminent domain, it is unnecessary to deal with the questions relative to such procedure.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

DE LOACH et al. v. NEWTON et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. July 13, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 38*)—
ESTABLISHMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

When considered as a whole, the petition on which the ordinary of Tattnall county ordered an election in the school district of that county known as the Claxton-Hagan district was in substantial compliance with the law, and the election so ordered and held was not void on the ground that such petition furnished no basis for the order, so as to authorize an injunction to be granted against the levy of the local tax in such school district by virtue of the election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 53*)—
DE FACTO OFFICERS—EFFECT OF ACTS.

The act of August 23, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 425), as amended by the act of August 21, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 61), provides for the laying out of counties into school districts by the county boards of education, and that such boards shall order an election for trustees in the respective districts so laid out. Whenever the citizens of any school district, in a county not levying a local tax for educational purposes, wish to supplement the funds received from the state school fund by levying a tax for educational purposes, they shall present to the ordinary a petition from one-fourth of the qualified voters of the district, and thereupon the ordinary shall order an election to determine the question of local taxation. There is no provision in either of said acts for the ordinary to order an election to determine whether a school district shall be laid out, or for the purpose of electing trustees in such a district.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 130; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 53*)—
DE FACTO OFFICERS—EFFECT OF ACTS—SUC-CESSORS—NATURE OF TENURE.

If a school district has been duly laid out, and upon a petition of one-fourth of the qualified voters thereof the ordinary ordered an election to determine the question of local taxation, but also included in his order that trustees for the school district should be elected, which was done, and the county board of education, although it did not order the election of such trustees, recognized and approved the persons elected as such and caused them to be commissioned, and they acted as trustees under such commissions, they were de facto officers, and their actions as such, which de jure officers would be authorized to perform under the law, could not be collaterally attacked as void on account of the manner of their election.

(a) After the trustees of a school district were thus elected and commissioned, upon the expiration of the terms of two of them the board of education of the county ordered an election to be held to select successors for them. Semble, that the persons so selected for the new terms, whether the same as those originally elected or not, after such election and being commissioned thereunder, were de jure trustees.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 130; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 103*)—
LOCAL TAX—PETITION FOR ELECTION—SIGNERS.

The petition to the ordinary for the purpose of calling an election to determine the question of levying a local school tax in a district should be signed by the petitioning voters themselves. There is no provision for an attorney at law to present a petition, signed only by him, as the representative of a number of voters. The signature of one acting as an attorney cannot take the place of the signatures of the voters.

(a) In the present case a petition was signed by persons purporting to constitute one-fourth of the qualified voters of the district. A copy of this was attached to an additional petition to the ordinary, signed by certain persons as attorneys for the petitioners. The latter petition was not a substitute for, or in lieu of, a petition by the voters, and the persons named in it also signed the other petition. This mere duplication of petitions did not operate to invalidate the original petition signed by the requisite number of voters.

5. STATUTES (§ 18*)—ENACTMENT—LEGISLA-TIVE JOURNALS.

If an enrolled act of the Legislature was duly signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House and approved by the Governor and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, it was not competent to attack its validity on the ground that the legislative journals showed that the bill originated in the House, was there passed by a constitutional majority, and transmitted to the Senate, where it was amended and passed by a constitutional majority, and then transmitted to the House, where the Senate amendment was concurred in, but failed to show that this was done by a constitutional majority.

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by J. A. De Loach and others against D. C. Newton and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Hines & Jordan, for plaintiffs in error.
J. P. Moore and Gordon Saussy, for defendants in error.

FISH, C. J. Certain persons, as citizens and taxpayers, sought to enjoin the collection of a tax in a school district in Tattnall county. On the hearing of the application for an interlocutory injunction it was refused, and they excepted. It was contended that the election, which was held under the act of August 23, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 425), as amended by the act of August 21, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 61), was invalid, because the petition on which the ordinary based his order for an election was insufficient, and the election held was therefore void. The petition to the ordinary stated that "the undersigned qualified voters of said county respectfully show the following facts." It was contended that this showed a petition by the voters of the county, and not those of the district. But later in the petition it was stated "that the undersigned petitioners represent more than one-fourth of the qualified voters in said proposed district," thus showing that the signers purported to be qualified voters both of the county and the district, and the petition showed plainly that they were acting as such and with reference to a district election. There was no contention that the district had not already been laid out by the county board of education as provided by law, and, while the petition referred to establishing a school district, there is nothing to show that the district was not already established; and the real thing sought was to provide for local taxation within it. It was said that the petitioners did not seek to have local taxation, or show under what act they were proceeding; but they stated "that they desire to establish a school district to be maintained by local taxation pursuant to the amended act of August, 1906, of the acts of the General Assembly of said state," and they prayed "that your honor order an election for said proposed district, pursuant to the act above referred to." This sufficiently indicates that the petitioners were proceeding under the act of August 21, 1906, which was the only act passed in that year, touching the subject of such elections. While the language used may not have been exact, it was sufficient to show that the thing desired was an election in regard to the maintenance of the school by local taxation, pursuant to the act mentioned, and not merely to establish a school district. Coleman v. Board of Education, 131 Ga. 643 (7), 63 S. E. 41. In stating the number of qualified voters who signed the petition, it was said: "The undersigned petitioners represent more than one-fourth of the qualified voters in said proposed district." It is evident that this meant that "the undersigned" were more than one-fourth of such voters. It would be a strained construction to hold that the petitioners meant that they were acting as agents or representatives of such voters, and to upset the election on that ground. Town of Solon v. Williamsburg Savings Bank, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 1, 7. The petition, thus amended, was not presented alone; but another petition, covering substantially the same ground, though differently expressed, and having attached to it a copy of the original petition signed by the voters, was also presented. This was signed by a firm of attorneys. The law provides for such a petition to the ordinary to be made by one-fourth or more of the qualified voters of the district. There is no provision of law for having a petition of this character signed by attorneys, nor will the signature of attorneys take the place of the signatures of the qualified voters. Still, as it appears there was an original petition, signed by the voters, which was presented to the ordinary, the duplication will not affect the validity of his action on the proper petition. The plaintiffs alleged that the original petitions could not be found in the ordinary's office, but the answers set up that they had been found there, and they were tendered in evidence.

There was no law authorizing the ordinary to call an election for the selection of trustees for the school district, nor was there any prayer for this in the petition presented to him. Nevertheless, in addition to ordering an election to determine the question of local taxation, he ordered that three school trustees should be elected for the district. It appears that this was done, and that the county board of education recognized and approved the three trustees thus elected and commissioned them; and it appears also that the persons so elected proceeded to discharge the duties of such trustees until the terms of two of them had expired, when successors were elected by order of the county board of education. The three first elected were, at least, de facto officers, and the two last elected were probably de jure officers. At any rate, the official acts of such trustees were not subject to collateral attack. Brown v. Flake, 102 Ga. 528, 29 S. E. 267.

Objection was also made to the sufficiency of the allegations of the petition to the ordinary, on other grounds; but the petition, taken as a whole, was substantially sufficient. It was not so lacking in jurisdictional averments as to render the election void.

It is contended that the act of 1906 is unconstitutional, on the ground that the journals of the House of Representatives and the Senate do not show that it was enacted in the manner prescribed by the Constitution; the contention being based upon the following facts derived from these journals: The act originated in the House of Representatives and was there passed by a constitutional majority. It was then transmitted to the Senate, where certain amendments were made, and, as amended, was passed by that body by a constitutional majority. It was then returned to the House, where the Senate amendments were concurred in; but the journal of the House does not show by what vote this was done. It is not contended that the enrolled act was not duly signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House and approved by the Governor and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State. The question is whether the omission from the journal of the House of a statement showing that the Senate amendments to the House bill were concurred in by a majority of all the members elected to the House invalidates the act. The decision in regard to whether the journals of legislative bodies will be looked to for the purpose of invalidating an act of the Legislature apparently regular on its face, and, if so, to what extent such journals may be considered, is one which has been productive of many decisions and much conflict. Some of the courts, it must be conceded, have not only rendered decisions conflicting with those of other courts, but also with those previously rendered by themselves. The decisions may be generally classified under four heads: First, those holding that the enrolled act, duly signed by the presiding officers of the two branches of the Legislature and approved by the Governor and lodged with the Secretary of State, is conclusive, and cannot be shown to be invalid by reference to the journals. Second, those which hold that the enrolled act, thus signed, approved, and deposited, is not conclusive, but that the legislative journals can be examined to see whether the act has been constitutionally passed. This class of decisions consider the journals as in the nature of minutes or the ultimate documentary evidence of what was done by the Legislature, and hold, not only that an affirmative entry upon a journal showing a violation of the constitutional method of enacting laws will invalidate an act, but also that, the journal being the complete evidence of legislative action, silence is equivalent to negation, and the failure of the journal to show that a constitutional provision was complied with is equivalent to a statement that it was not complied with, and hence is as equally fatal to the act as a direct statement of noncompliance. Third, those which hold that such enrolled act is not conclusive, and that the journals may be examined for certain purposes, but that a failure of the journals to show a full compliance with the constitutional provisions in regard to the modes of passage of acts will not cause the act to be held unconstitutional, and that this will only be done when the entries on the journals affirmatively show that the act has not been constitutionally passed. Fourth, decisions which do not rest upon general rules or principles, but set up as a basis the peculiar or special language of the Constitution under consideration.

For the present, we will lay aside the class of cases last mentioned and consider those based upon reason and principle rather than upon special words. The third class of decisions mentioned, which go behind the enrolled act duly signed, approved, and deposited, and consider the journals for the purpose of invalidating the act, but which hold that an affirmative entry on the journal showing noncompliance with constitutional provisions will accomplish that result, but an absence of such an entry or an entry which does not show that constitutional provisions were complied with, will not so operate, seem to us to be illogical. If the act is to be held to be invalid because of an inspection of the journals, it must be because the journals are the highest and best evidence of what the Legislature did, by virtue of their customary keeping, or because of some constitutional provision requiring them to be kept. If they are in fact the constitutional evidence of what was done and what was not done, and are final and conclusive in their nature, it would seem that silence in regard to a step required to be taken by the Constitution would be equivalent to negation. It is improbable that a journal ever contains such an entry as that an act was passed, but was not read as constitutional provisions required, or was not published, or read three times, or the like. So that if the journal must show what the Legislature did and is the conclusive evidence of it, it is difficult to see why an absence of showing a required step is not equivalent to a denial that such step was taken. Silence of the ultimate witness as to requisites which must be shown is apparently equivalent to negative assertion. Cases of the class referred to condone omission in the journals to show compliance with requirements and cure them by the aid of presumptions that something happened which the journals do not show, but upset the act and declare it invalid when the journals do speak. In other words, they are final as to what happened, but practically of no weight as to what did not happen.

Taking up the two great divisions of adjudication, one of which goes behind the enrolled act, duly signed, approved, and deposited, and invalidates it by inspecting the journals, and the other of which holds the enrolled act, thus signed, approved, and deposited, to be conclusive, at least unless some constitutional provision distinctly declares otherwise, we will mention a few of the many adjudications. At the outset, however, let it be borne in mind that there is a wide distinction between taking up an act which has been passed by the Legislature, comparing it with the Constitution, and declaring whether its provisions are in accord with that instrument or not, and looking into the details of the method of procedure by the legislative bodies in passing the act and the regularity of the steps which they took in so doing. The court declares the law. If there are two statutes in apparent conflict, the court must determine which is the controlling one, or the existing law. If a statute and a provision of the Constitution are set up as being in conflict with each other, the court must compare the two and determine if such a conflict in fact exists, and, if so, that the Constitution must prevail. But this is not the same thing as going into the details of legislative procedure, critically examining the methods of a co-ordinate department of the government, and declaring that its members have failed or refused to obey constitutional directions or commands as to the manner in which they should perform their duties, because of an entry, or the absence of an entry, on the journal kept by some clerk or subordinate employé. The latter proceeding is at best a matter of delicacy, and not to be indulged in by the courts unless plainly required by the Constitution. The Legislature is one of the three departments of the government. Its members and officers are sworn to support the Constitution, and in the discharge of their duties they are acting under oath. Where the Constitution directs or commands them to take certain steps in a certain way, or not to enact a law without some prescribed antecedent procedure, their oath includes the obligation to enact the measure in the constitutional manner, or not to enact it without the happening of the Constitutional event thus provided. In the imperfection of all human institutions, Legislatures may sometimes, through inadvertence or even through design, violate the Constitution; but the courts will not lightly conclude that they have intentionally or unintentionally violated rules of conduct laid down for them by the Constitution in the transaction of their business. The clerical officials who keep the legislative journals must necessarily do so in the haste and pressure of business; and memoranda, often hurriedly made, must be relied on by them. Assistants and subordinates are employed to aid them. As between the question of whether the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, aided by the enrollment committees, all of whom are charged with the duty of seeing that the constitutional rules are enforced, have through incompetence or corruption, violated that duty and signed and sent to the Governor an act which had not in fact been passed in the constitutional manner, and the Governor, who is also sworn to obey the Constitution, has likewise inadvertently or unintentionally approved an act which had not been lawfully passed, or, on the other hand, that some journalizing clerk or assistant has made a mistake in the preparation of the journal, courts will be more ready to adopt the latter theory than the former. Const. art. 3, § 7, pars. 13, 23. We do not mean that correct entries should not be made. It is the duty of the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of Representatives to have correct entries made, so that the journals shall truly show the history of the transactions of the Legislature and of each bill introduced; and there are journalizing committees charged with a similar duty. The journals are deposited, after completion, with the Secretary of State. There is no law by which mistakes in them can be corrected. It would be unfortunate, indeed, if an accidental error by the clerk, beyond correction, must be seized on by the courts to destroy the act, unless it is clearly so required.

In England the signed and enrolled act has uniformly been held to be conclusive. Rex v. Arundel, Hobart, 110; The Case of Herey, 12 Coke's Rep. 57, 58; College of Physicians' Case, 3 Keb. 587; Edinburg Ry. Co. v. Wauchope, 8 Cl. & F. Rep. 710, 724.

While the English Constitution is unwritten. It is not without existence, and in the conservatism of that country long-continued custom has sometimes been adhered to as closely as written declarations in enactments in other countries.

In America the United States and each of the individual states has a written Constitution, most, if not all, of which contemplate the keeping of journals by the respective legislative bodies. One of the leading cases discussing the relative weight to be given to the enrolled act and the entries on the journals, for the purpose of invalidating it, is that of Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294. It was there held: "The signing by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and by the President of the Senate, in open session, of an enrolled bill, is an official attestation by the two Houses of such bill as one that has passed Congress; and when the bill thus attested receives the approval of the President, and is deposited in the Department of State according to law, its authentication as a bill that has passed Congress is complete and unimpeachable. It is not competent to show from the journals of either House of Congress that an act so authenticated, approved, and deposited, did not pass in the precise form in which it was signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses and approved by the President." The Constitution of the United States is not identical with that of the state of Georgia on the subject of the method of passing acts; but it does declare that "each House shall keep a journal of its proceeding and from time to time publish the same, except such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one fifth of those present, be entered on the journal." Article 1, § 5. It does not require the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House to attest the bill in the presence of the respective Houses. In the case cited, it was contended that a tariff act, which had been signed by the presiding officer of each House and approved by the President and deposited with the Secretary of State, was invalid because it had omitted entirely a section which was contained in the act as passed by the two Houses, and this could be shown by reference to the journals of those bodies, reports of committees of conference, and other papers printed by authority of Congress, and having reference to the bill in question. While the court said that as to matters which the Constitution expressly required to be entered on the journals it was unnecessary to enter into a discussion, as that question was not involved, yet the reasoning of the court is cogent. Mr. Justice Harlan, among other things, said: "It was assumed in argument that the object of this clause was to make the journal the best, if not conclusive, evidence upon the issue as to whether a bill was in fact passed by the two Houses of Congress. But the words used do not require such interpretation. On the contrary, as Mr. Justice Story has well said: "The object of the whole clause is to insure publicity to the proceedings of the Legislature, and a correspondent responsibility of the members to their respective constituents. And it is founded in sound policy and deep political foresight. Intrigue and cabal are thus deprived of some of their main resources, by plotting and devising measures in secrecy. The public mind is enlightened by an attentive examination of the public measures; patriotism and integrity and wisdom obtain their due reward; and votes are ascertained, not by vague conjecture, but by positive facts. * * * So long as known and open responsibility is valuable as a check or an incentive among the representatives of a free people, so long a journal of their proceedings and their votes, published in the face of the world, will continue to enjoy public favor and be demanded by public opinion." 1 Story, Constitution, §§ 840, 841. * * * It is admitted that an enrolled act, thus authenticated, is sufficient evidence of itself—nothing to the contrary appearing upon its face—that it passed Congress. But the contention is that it cannot be regarded as a law of the United States if the journal of either House fails to show that it passed in the precise form in which it was signed by the presiding officers of the two houses, and approved by the President. It is said that, under any other view, it becomes possible for the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate to impose upon the people as a law a bill that was never passed by Congress. But this possibility is too remote to be seriously considered in the present inquiry. It suggests a deliberate conspiracy to which the presiding officers, the committee on enrolled bills, and the clerks of the two Houses must necessarily be parties, all acting with a common purpose to defeat an expression of the popular will in the mode prescribed by the Constitution. Judicial action based upon such a suggestion is forbidden by the respect due to a co-ordinate branch of the government. The evils that may result from the recognition of the principle that an enrolled act, in the custody of the Secretary of State, attested by the signatures of the presiding officers of the two Houses of Congress, and the approval of the President, is conclusive evidence that it was passed by Congress, according to the forms of the Constitution, would be far less than those that would certainly result from a rule making the validity of congressional enactments depend upon the manner in which the journals of the respective Houses are kept by the subordinate officers charged with the duty of keeping them."

Attached to the brief of the attorneys for the government in that case, and printed on page 661 et seq. of 143 U. S. (12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294), is a list of authorities up to that time (1891), by states, upon the question whether the legislative journals could be used to impeach the enrolled act duly recorded and authenticated; and some of the leading decisions were discussed in the opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan. Since the decision of that case, several of the courts have changed their position on the subject, and have abandoned the practice of holding duly signed and enrolled acts invalid because of entries and omissions in the journals. Thus, in the Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. C. 200, the journals were considered; but in State v. Chester, 39 S. C. 307, 17 S. E. 752, it was held: "Where an original bill and an act duly ratified and approved show on their face that the bill originated in the House of Representatives, received three readings in both Houses, and the act was duly signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and approved and signed by the Governor, and deposited with the Secretary of State, the court cannot look to the journals of the two Houses to show that the bill did not originate in the lower House, did not receive three readings in both Houses and was not duly ratified, the true rule being that such an act is sufficient evidence that it passed the General Assembly, and it is not competent to impeach such an act by the journals of the Houses, or any other evidence, other than evidence of such prerequisites as the organization of the Houses, the presence of a quorum, and the record of votes upon the journal when so required by the Constitution." Some previous rulings on the subject were formally overruled.

In Indiana some of the earlier decisions followed the doctrine of holding acts invalid by references to the journals; but in Evans v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514, 95 Am. Dec. 710, the court reversed its position and followed the rule later announced in Field v. Clark. Frazer, J., said that it was believed that the anomalous and essentially mischievous doctrine of thus upsetting acts had its origin in New York, and had passed into other states and been adopted without much examination though afterwards largely exploded in the state of its origin.

In Kentucky it was first apparently thought that the enrolled bill might be attacked by considering the journals. The Constitution of that state (section 46) declares that: "No bill shall become a law unless, on its final passage, it receives the votes of at least two fifths of the members elected to each House, and a majority of the members voting, the vote to be taken by yeas and nays and entered on the journal." In Lafferty v. Huffman, 99 Ky. 80, 35 S. W. 123, 32 L. R. A. 208, upon full consideration, that position was repudiated. It was said the argument in a former decision was not decisive of the point, and it was held: "An enrolled bill, when attested by the presiding officers of the two Houses of the General Assembly, as required by law, cannot be impeached by the journals of those Houses, and must be accepted by the courts as the bill adopted by the Legislature and as conclusive of the regularity of the steps taken in its passage." Hazelrigg, J., referring to the decisions which hold that the journals are competent to impeach the enrolled bill, but which declare that where those records are merely silent the presumption is absolute that the required steps were in fact taken, said: "This seems to be hardly logical. If the validity of a law is to rest at all on the entries in the journals, it seems to us, when there is a total absence of evidence that a necessary step has been taken, the superstructure—the law—thus built up without a foundation must fall. Those courts assume that the failure of the clerk to make the entry and in this violate the Constitution requiring the entry to be made was an oversight or mistake, and treat the entry as made, supplying the omission, and yet are not willing to assume it to be a mistake or mere misapprehension of the inferior officer, if an entry is made, showing steps taken not in conformity with the constitutional requirements." Again, he said: "But it is said, since the Constitution requires the journals to be kept, it must be because they are to be used as evidence of legislative compliance or noncompliance with the constitutional requirements. We can see, however, much use for these journals other than the one suggested. Besides being necessary for the conduct of the business, it is to be remembered that our government is a representative one, and the journals show the respective parts borne by each representative in the enactment of the laws and the conduct of the public business. Responsibility cannot be shifted or made to rest on the body as a whole. We know that the enrollment of bills receives careful attention at the hands of special committees for that purpose. It is the final act of the body, the climax of the work before the finishing hand of the presiding officer sets his approval thereto. It receives and merits attention for that reason, and there is small room for imposition or fraud. The enrolled act is well-nigh necessarily the very act passed by the body; but the chances of mistake are very great in the make-up of the journals, as they are ordinarily kept; and, if it be understood that the enrolled bill may be impeached by them, the chances of fraud are likewise great."

The Constitution of Washington of 1891 (article 2, § 22) contains this provision: "No bill shall become a law unless on its final passage the vote be taken by yeas and nays, the names of the members voting for or against the same be entered on the journal of each House, and the majority of the members elected to each House be recorded thereon as voting in its favor." Nevertheless, in State v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 84 Pac. 201, 23 L. R. A. 340, it was held: "The enrolled bill on file in the office of Secretary of State of an act of the Legislature, which is duly signed by the presiding officers of both Houses, and otherwise appears fair upon its face, is conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings necessary for its proper enactment in conformity with the constitutional provisions." In the opinion it was said: "Unless the method of keeping journals should at once be revolutionized, and so much attention be paid to them that they will be made to absolutely represent all the doings of the body to such an extent as to very much prolong the sessions of the Legislature, the sanctity of legislative enactments will be entirely dependent upon the carefulness and good faith of some copyist employed by the Legislature at a few dollars per day." The authorities on the subject were elaborately discussed.

In California a full discussion of the subject was had in Sherman v. Story, 30 Cal. 253, 89 Am. Dec. 93, where it was held that the enrolled act could not be impeached by the journals. In 1879 a new Constitution was adopted in that state, which provided (article 4, § 15) that on the final passage of all bills they should be read at length and the vote should be by yeas and nays on each bill separately, and should be entered on the journals, and no bill should become a law without the concurrence of a majority of the members elected to each house. Nevertheless, in Yolo County v. Colgan, 132 Cal. 265, 64 Pac. 403, 84 Am. St. Rep. 41, the court held that the validity of a statute, which had been duly certified, enrolled, approved, and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, could not be impeached by a resort to the journals of the Legislature; and this has been followed in later cases.

One of the earlier and leading cases on the subject is that of Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. Law, 29, in which Chief Justice Beasley filed a forcible opinion, considering the question and holding that the enrolled act, duly signed and filed in the office of the Secretary of State, or an exemplification of it under the great seal, was conclusive evidence of its existence and contents, and that the minutes of the two houses, although kept under the requirements of the Constitution, could not be received as evidence for the purpose of showing that the law as actually voted on and passed, and approved by the Governor, was variant from that filed in the office of the Secretary of State. He declared that this view was in conformity with the decided weight of American authority. It was stated that the Constitution provided that "each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same; and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one fifth of those present, be entered on the journal." And that another clause directed, with regard to the form of enacting bills, "that the yeas and nays of the members voting on such final passage shall be entered on the journal." In the opinion it was said: "Can any one deny that, if the laws of the state are to be tested by a comparison with these journals, so imperfect, so unauthenticated, that the stability of all written law will be shaken to its very foundation? Certainly no person can venture to say that many of our statutes, perhaps some of the oldest and most important, those which affect large classes of persons, or on which great interests depend, will be found defective, even in constitutional particulars, if judged by this criterion." Referring to the argument that, unless the courts were permitted to examine the journals to see if the Legislature was following the constitutional provisions in regard to the manner of enacting laws, the Legislature might, at will, set at defiance the restraints of the organic law, the Chief Justice said: "If we may be permitted, for the purpose of illustration, to suppose the Legislature to design the enactment of a law in violation of the principles of the Constitution, a judicial authority to inspect the journals of that body would interpose not the slightest barrier against such transgression, for it is obvious that there could not be the least difficulty in withholding from such journals every fact evincive of such transgression. A journal can be no check on the actions of those who keep it, when a violation of a duty is intentional. It cannot, therefore, fail to be observed how inadequate to the correction of the supposed evil is the proposed remedy." Again, he said: "If an enrolled statute of this state does not carry within itself conclusive evidence of its own authenticity, it would seem that the same principle must be extended to the statutes, however authenticated, of other states. An act, therefore, of Virginia or California, with regard to the mode of enactment, would be open to trial as a matter in pais. And, indeed, the doctrine, if carried to its legitimate conclusion, would seem to abolish altogether the conclusiveness even of international authentications; for if the great seal of this state, attesting the existence of a statute, is not final, it is not perceived how great efficacy is to be given to the seal of a foreign government."

In Ex parte Wren, 63 Miss. 512, 532 (56 Am. Rep. 825), Mr. Justice Campbell said: "If the validity of every act published as law is to be tested by examining its history, as shown by the journals of the two Houses of the Legislature, there will be an amount of litigation, difficulty, and painful uncertainty appalling in its contemplation and multiplying a hundredfold the alleged uncertainty of the law. Every suit before every court where the validity of a statute may be called in question as affecting the right of a litigant will be in the nature of an appeal or writ of error or bill of review for errors apparent on the face of the legislative records, and the journals must be explored to determine if some contradiction does not exist between the journals and the bill signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses. What is the law is to be declared by the court. It must inform itself as best it can what is the law. If it may go beyond the enrolled and signed bill and try its validity by the record contained in the journals, it must perform this task as often as called on, and every court must do it. A justice of the peace must do it, for he has as much right and is as much bound to preserve the Constitution and declare and apply the law as any other court, and we will have the spectacle of examination of journals by justices of the peace and statutes declared to be not law as the result of their journalistic history; and the circuit and chancery courts will be constantly engaged in like manner, and this court will, on appeal, have often to try the correctness of the determination of the court below as to the conclusion to be drawn from the legislative journals on the inquiry as to the validity of statutes thus tested."

In a note by Mr. A. C. Freeman to the case of Carr v. Coke, 47 Am. St. Rep. 801, 815, it is stated that: "The current of the later and better reasoned authorities is unhesitatingly in favor of the doctrine that a duly enrolled and authenticated statute regular on its face is conclusive of the fact that it was regularly passed, and that the courts cannot go behind it and entertain evidence by which it may be impeached. Wherever the question is one of first impression, this rule is generally adopted, while in some other states the courts continue to follow earlier precedent, and adhere to the contrary view."

It would unduly prolong this opinion to take up the constitutional provisions of each state and the rulings made under them. Most of the decisions will be found classified in a note to Palatine Insurance Co. v. Northern Pacific Railway Co., 9 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 532. See, also, 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 556 et seq., and cases cited. In a number of the states it has been held that the legislative journals can be considered. The decisions rendered by the Supreme Court of Illinois, beginning with that in Spangler v. Jacoby, 14 Ill. 297, 58 Am. Dec. 571, are typical of this class. In some of the states particular words in a Constitution have been construed one way, as bearing on the subject now in hand, while substantially the same words have been construed in a different way in other jurisdictions. Thus, the words, "to be entered on the journal of each House," are construed as mandatory in Florida (State v. Green, 36 Fla. 154, 18 South. 334) while the words, "to be noted on the journal," are construed in Tennessee as directory merely (Home Telegraph Co. v. Mayor, etc., of Nashville, 118 Tenn. 1, 101 S. W. 770). In North Carolina the Constitution provides (article 2, § 14): "No law shall be passed to raise money on the credit of the state, unless the bill for the purpose shall have been read three several times in each House of the General Assembly, and passed three several readings, which readings shall be on three different days, and agreed to by each House respectively, and unless the yeas and nays on the second and third readings of the bill shall have been entered on the journal." It was held, in Bank v. Commissioners, 119 N. C. 214, 25 S. E. 966, that the validity of an act could be impeached by reference to the journals. But compare what was said in Carr v. Coke, 116 N. C. 223, 22 S. E. 16, 28 L. R. A. 737, 47 Am. St. Rep. 801, and what was said in State v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 34 Pac. 201, 23 L. R. A. 340, under the provisions of the Constitution of that state. It would be fruitless to enter into an elaborate discussion of the peculiar language employed in some of the state Constitutions and the rulings made in regard to it. It may be stated, generally, that unless the Constitution, in effect, establishes a standard by which the courts are to measure the validity of the legislative procedure, they will not go behind the enrolled act, duly signed and filed in the proper depository. Some of the courts treat the direction or mandate of the Constitution as to the methods of procedure as directed to the Legislature; some, under the special language of a particular provision, as furnishing a guide for the courts. We need not determine what would be the ruling under a stringent provision similar to that contained in the North Carolina Constitution, as, for example, the constitutional statement contained in section 5775 of our Civil Code of 1895 that no bill or resolution appropriating money shall become a law unless upon its passage the yeas and nays, in each House, are recorded.

In the present case it is contended that the act in question is invalid, because the journal of the House of Representatives does not show that the constitutional provision embodied in Civ. Code, § 5777, was complied with. That section is as follows: "No bill shall become a law unless it shall receive a majority of the votes of all the members elected to each House of the General Assembly, and it shall, in every instance, so appear on the journal." The language here employed is different from that contained in section 5775. The section now involved declares that no bill shall become a law unless it receives a majority of the votes of all the members elected to each House, but does not add and also unless it shall so appear on the journal, but, after the first provision, it adds the command or direction that it shall so appear. Therefore, whatever might be held in regard to an appropriation act, the present law clearly comes within the reasoning and authority of the weight of judicial decisions above discussed. Neither are we dealing with what may be the requirements as to amendments proposed to the Constitution, which, strictly speaking, are not acts of the Legislature in the ordinary acceptance of those words, but proposals of amendments.

There has been no ruling in this state directly upon the question of declaring an act invalid by reference to the journals, in regard to the steps to be taken in its passage. There are some expressions employed in different opinions which might imply that the journals could be looked to for that purpose; but they were not direct rulings. Thus, in Speer v. Mayor, etc., of Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 11 S. E. 802, 9 L. R. A. 402, the validity of a local act was involved; it being contended that no notice of its intended introduction had been given as required by the Constitution. Extrinsic evidence was offered to show that the necessary publication had not been made. This court held that the act could not be so impeached, and that whether proper notice had been given for the introduction of a local or special bill was for the decision of the Legislature. It was said that evidence in regard thereto "outside of the journals" could not be received, but the case did not involve the question whether the act could be shown to be invalid by reference to the journals. In later rulings the language in regard to evidence "outside of the journals" has been omitted. White v. Atlanta, 134 Ga. —, 68 S. E. 103. In Lee v. Tucker, 130 Ga. 43, 49, 60 S. E. 164, 166, the question arose on a proceeding to remove a county site, where there was an election followed by an act of the Legislature. It was said: "If, in Georgia, the courts have any such power to pass upon such a question of fact, it is at least clear from the rulings heretofore cited that they can consider no evidence outside of the journals of the two Houses of the General Assembly"—thus expressing a doubt as to the power of the courts to pass upon the question of fact at all. In Carswell v. Wright, 133 Ga. 714, 66 S. E. 905, no point was made as to the right to consider the journals, but only as to the construction of certain entries thereon. In Georgia Penitentiary Co. v. Nelms, 65 Ga. 490, 38 Am. Rep. 793, an attack was made on an act or resolution on the ground that it gave a donation or gratuity, and that the journals did not show that it passed by a two-thirds vote, and that the yeas and nays were recorded. The actual ruling was that the act or resolution in question did not give a donation or gratuity; and that, whatever were the requirements of the Constitution on that subject, they had no application to the case in hand. Without citing all of the cases in this state on the subject, it may be said that in none of them has it been directly held that an act of the Legislature, duly enrolled and signed, approved by the Gov-error, and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, could be shown to be invalid by reason of entries or lack of entries on the journals touching the details of its passage, such as whether it was duly published, if a local act, or was read on three separate days in each House, or what was the vote on its passage.

It is said that the Constitution provides for keeping of journals, which shall be deposited with the Secretary of State and published, and that the Legislature has provided, in Civ. Code, § 5210, that the journals of each branch of the General Assembly, as published, shall be recognized judicially without proof; and the inquiry is made: For what purpose can they be used, if not to show noncompliance by the Legislature with the constitutional provisions in regard to reading and passing bills? Certain useful functions of the journals and their publication have already been noted as suggested by Judge Story and the Supreme Court of Kentucky. In addition to these, other uses might be suggested. For instance, it might be desirable to consult them to ascertain who were the presiding officers of the respective Houses; or, if it should be shown that a certain event happened during the session of the Legislature in a particular year, the journals might show when the Legislature was in session that year. A possible use for them might arise on the construction of an act. In Solomon v. Commissioners of Cartersville, 41 Ga. 157, the journals of the General Assembly were consulted to ascertain when the Legislature adjourned. In Gormley v. Taylor, 44 Ga. 76, a query was put on this subject. Apparently, however, the journals were consulted as to certain sessions held by the General Assembly. The court said: "When important and almost revolutionary results must flow from declaring a session of the Legislature illegal, the courts are bound to require a most palpable and direct violation of the Constitution before they interfere." See, also, McDaniel v. Strohecker, 19 Ga. 432, 435; Bibb County Loan Association v. Richards, 21 Ga. 592, 613-616; Cutcher v. Crawford, 105 Ga. 180, 31 S. E. 139. While the mere consequence of declaring a plainly unconstitutional act to be so cannot affect the adjudication, yet, if the far-reaching consequences of scrutinizing the conduct of the Legislature in respect of passing acts may legitimately be considered by the courts in determining the constitutional purpose on that subject, it may be mentioned that there are now pending before this court four cases in which attacks have been made upon the validity of acts of the Legislature on the ground of irregularity, or failure to strictly pursue the constitutional provisions in regard to their passage. The case now under consideration involves the entire system of county and district schools and local taxation for educational purposes. Another act thus attacked is what is commonly known as the "prohibition law," prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in this state, etc. With the fall of this act would probably go the taxation on substitutes for spirituous or malt liquors. Still another of the cases involves the method of passing an act increasing the salaries of certain judges of superior courts and city courts. Still another involves the legislative proceedings in passing an act requiring headlights of a certain character on locomotives. These cases alone involve most important consequences. If the rule sought to be established should be laid down, by which the courts would scrutinize the legislative journals for years past and declare invalid all acts in regard to which such journals do not show compliance with the methods prescribed by the Constitution, it is difficult to see how far-reaching the results might be.

There were some other points mentioned in the petition, but not referred to in the briefs. Upon a careful consideration, we are of opinion that the act now in question should not be declared invalid for the reason urged against it.

For the reasons stated, we are of opinion that the judgment complained of should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

WHITLEY v. STATE. †

(Supreme Court of Georgia. July 13, 1910.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 17*)—PROHIBITION—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

The act approved August 6, 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81), entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture, sale, barter, giving away to induce trade, or keeping or furnishing at public places, or keeping on hand at places of business, of any alcoholic, spirituous, malt or intoxicating liquors, or intoxicating bitters or other drinks which, if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication; to except sales of alcohol in certain cases, upon certain conditions; to provide certain rules of evidence in connection with the enforcement thereof; to prescribe penalties, and for other purposes"—is not unconstitutional on the ground that it is in conflict with article 8, § 1, par. 1, of the Constitution, which declares that "there shall be a thorough system of common schools for the education of children in the elementary branches of an English education only, as nearly uniform as practicable, the expenses of which shall be provided for by taxation, or otherwise," or that it is in conflict with article 8, § 3, par. 1, of the Constitution, which reads as follows: "The poll tax, any educational fund now belonging to the state (except the endowment of, and debt due, to the University of Georgia), a special tax on shows and exhibitions, and on the sale of spirituous and malt liquors, which the General Assembly is hereby authorized to assess, and the proceeds of any commutation tax for military service, and all taxes that may be assessed on such domestic animals as, from their nature and habits, are destructive to other property, are hereby set apart and devoted for the support of common schools."

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 17*)—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ACTS—INHERENT RIGHTS.

The act of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81) is not unconstitutional on the ground that it conflicts with article 1, § 5, par. 2, of the Constitution, which provides that "the enumeration of rights herein contained as a part of this Constitution shall not be construed to deny to the people any inherent rights which they may have hitherto enjoyed."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 107*)—SUBJECTS AND TITLES.

Said act is not unconstitutional on the ground that it conflicts with article 3, § 7, par. 8, of the Constitution, which provides that "no law or ordinance shall pass which refers to more than one subject-matter."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 18*)—ENACTMENT.

A plea in abatement to an accusation set up that said act was unconstitutional as being in violation of article 3, § 7, par. 14, of the Constitution, which provides that "no bill shall become a law unless it shall receive a majority of the votes of all the members elected to each House of the General Assembly, and it shall, in every instance, so appear on the journal," and of article 3, § 7, par. 4, which provides that "each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and publish it immediately after its adjournment," and alleged that the legislative journals showed that the bill was introduced in the Senate and passed by a vote of a majority of the members thereof; that it was transmitted to the House, where several material amendments were made to it, and as amended it was passed by a vote of a majority of the members (the number of votes cast in each of these instances being stated); that it was then returned to the Senate, where several amendments were proposed and rejected; and that the entry on the Senate journal in regard to the final action of that body concurring in the House amendments did not show that the bill as altered by the House or the alterations therein received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to the Senate. Held, that such plea was insufficient in law, and was properly stricken.

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 6*)—POLICE POWER—PROHIBITION OF SALE OF INTOXICANTS.

Const. art. 4, § 2, par. 2 (Civ. Code 1895, § 5798), provides that the exercise of the state's police power shall never be abridged. Const. art. 3, § 7, par. 22 (Civ. Code 1895, § 5784), provides that the General Assembly shall have power to make all laws consistent with its Constitution and not repugnant to the United States Constitution, which they shall deem necessary and proper for the welfare of the state. Held, that the Legislature had the right thereunder to enact Act Aug. 6, 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81), prohibiting the manufacture, sale, giving away to induce trade, keeping or furnishing at public places, or keeping on hand at places of business, any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors.

6. STATUTES (§ 227*)—CONSTRUCTION—"MAY"—"AUTHORIZE."

The words "authorize" or "may," as used in a statute, are sometimes construed as mandatory in effect, though permissive in form, as where a statute provides for the doing of some act required by justice or public duty; but, where they confer or recognize a discretionary power, a mandatory construction will not be given to them.

F. P. Whitley was convicted of keeping intoxicants at his place of business, and he brought error. On certified questions from the Court of Appeals. Questions answered.

The Court of Appeals certified to the Supreme Court the following questions:

(1) The defendant was tried in the criminal court of Atlanta on an accusation charging that he, in the county of Fulton, on the 26th day of February, 1909, did keep on hand at his place of business intoxicating liquors. Was the accusation good as against a demurrer on the following grounds:

"That the Legislature of the state of Georgia was without authority to enact the prohibition law under which this defendant is indicted (to wit, the act approved August 6, 1907, entitled, 'An act to prohibit the manufacture, sale, barter, giving away to induce trade, or keeping or furnishing at public places, or keeping on hand at places of business, of any alcoholic, spirituous, malt or intoxicating liquors, or intoxicating bitters or other drinks which, if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication; to except sales of alcohol in certain cases, upon certain conditions; to provide certain rules of evidence in connection with the enforcement thereof; to prescribe penalties, and for other purposes'). [Acts 1907, p. 81.] That by article 8, § 1, par. 1, of the Constitution of said state, it is provided that 'there shall be a thorough system of common schools for the education of children,' and by article 8, § 3, par. 1, of said Constitution, it is provided that 'the poll tax, any educational fund now belonging to the state (except the endowment of, and debt to, the University of Georgia), a special tax on shows and exhibitions, and on the sale of spirituous and malt liquors, which the General Assembly is hereby authorized to assess, and the proceeds of any commutation tax for military service, and all taxes that may be assessed on such domestic animals, as from their nature and habits are destructive to other property, are hereby set apart and devoted for the support of common schools,' and that it is therefore mandatory upon the General Assembly of said state to assess a specific tax on the sale of spirituous and malt liquors as one means of supporting such schools; and said prohibition act being an act to prohibit the sale of said liquors in said state, and by consequence an act to destroy the subject-matter on which said mandatory constitutional tax is ordained to operate, is, so far as the same assumes to prohibit the sale of such liquors in said state, no law, but null and void by reason of a lack of constitutional authority in said General Assembly to enact the same.

"That said prohibition act, so far as the same assumes to prohibit the manufacture, sale, barter, giving away, keeping and furnishing of any of the liquors therein specified, in said state, is inconsistent with and repugnant to article 1, § 5, par. 2, of the Constitution of said state, which provides as follows, to wit, 'the enumeration of rights herein contained as a part of this Constitution shall not be construed to deny to the people any inherent rights which they may have hitherto enjoyed,' because at the time said Constitution was adopted in 1877 the people of said state had ever theretofore enjoyed, as an inherent right, the right to make, sell, barter, give away, keep, and furnish any such liquors, subject only to sundry statutory regulations as to the sale of such liquors in tippling-houses, and the intent and effect of said just-cited clause of said Constitution was and is to inhibit the General Assembly of said state from denying the same; the defendant conceding that said assembly has the right to regulate said rights by any regulation not destructive thereof or otherwise illegal.

"That the act referred to and heretofore described is in direct contravention of paragraph 8, § 7, art. 3, of the Constitution of the state of Georgia, which said paragraph is to be found in section 5771 of the Code of the state of Georgia, and which paragraph provides, amongst other things, as follows: 'No law or ordinance shall pass which refers to more than one subject-matter'—because said act is repugnant to the constitutional provision aforementioned, for the reason that the same in terms prohibits both the sale and manufacture of the various liquors in said act mentioned. That sale and manufacture are in the very nature of things two separate and distinct subject-matters. That, because of the limitation imposed upon the power of the General Assembly by the terms of the paragraph aforementioned, the prohibition against both the sale and manufacture of such liquors could not lawfully be included within the terms of said act. That the two provisions of the acts aforementioned are so blended one with the other as that they constitute one general expression of the legislative scheme, and neither can be disregarded without destroying the evident purpose intended to be accomplished by the passage of the legislation in question. And therefore that, because the said two subject-matters are thus sought to be included within the terms of said act, the said act is rendered thereby unconstitutional, null, and void as a whole."

(2) To the accusation referred to in the preceding question, the defendant filed a timely plea in abatement on the following ground, namely: "That the act of the Legislature under which this prosecution is being conducted is void and is no law for the following reasons, to wit: Because by article 3, § 7, par. 14, of the Constitution of said state, it is provided that 'no bill shall become a law unless it shall receive a majority of the votes of all the members elected to each House of the General Assembly, and it shall, in every instance, so appear on the journal,' and article 3, § 7, par. 4, of said Constitution, provides that 'each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and publish it immediately after its adjournment,' and it does not appear on the journal, so kept and published, of either House of said General Assembly, that a bill identical with said prohibition act received a majority of the votes of all the members elected to each House of said General Assembly. On June 28, 1907, there was introduced in the Senate of said state a certain bill to prohibit the sale in said state of any drink, which, if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication, which bill, after being altered in a number of material particulars, was passed by said Senate on July 13, 1907, by a vote of 34 to 7; the total number of members elected to said Senate being 44. That this bill was altered by the House of Representatives of said state in a number of material particulars, and as so altered was passed by said House on July 30, 1907, by a vote of 139 to 39; the total number of members elected to said House being 183. And that it does not appear on the journal of said Senate that said bill so altered by said House, or the alterations therein made by said House, received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to said Senate. While it appears on the journal that said Senate passed one bill on July 13, 1907, by a vote of 34 to 7, and that said House passed a different bill on July 30, 1907, by a vote of 139 to 39, it does not appear on the journals that one and the same bill, identical with said prohibition act, received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to each House of said General Assembly, as required by said Constitution as aforesaid, and therefore said prohibition act is no law, but null, nonexistent, and void. This defendant attaches hereto, as a part hereof, marked 'Exhibit A,' the text of the bill originally introduced in the Senate, and of all the alterations made therein, the text of the bill passed by the Senate, the text of the alterations made in the bill by the House, and the text of the bill passed by the House, with appropriate reference to the pages of the journals, and a summary of the points of divergence between the bills by the Senate and by the House."

The Exhibit A, referred to, is as follows:

"On June 26, 1907, a bill was introduced in the Senate which read thus: 'A bill to be entitled an act to prohibit the sale, barter, or giving away to induce trade, or furnishing at public places, of any alcoholic, spirituous, malt or intoxicating liquors, or intoxicating bitters, or other drinks, which if drunk to excess will produce intoxication, and for other purposes. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by authority of the same: Section 1. That, from and after the first day of January next after the passage of this act, it shall not be lawful for any person, within the limits of this state, to sell or barter for valuable consideration, either directly or indirectly, or give away to induce trade at any place of business, or furnish at any other public places, or manufacture for the purpose of sale, any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors, or intoxicating bitters, and any person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished as prescribed in section 1039 of the Penal Code of Georgia Sec. 2. Be it further enacted that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the manufacture, sale, and use of domestic wines, or cider, or the sale of wines for sacramental purposes: Provided, such wine or cider shall not be sold in barrooms by retail, or in places to be drunk on the premises; nor shall any thing herein contained prevent licensed druggists from selling or furnishing pure alcohol for medical, art, scientific, and mechanical purposes. Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby repealed.' This bill was read first on June 26, 1907. Sen. Journ. 14. Second time on July 3, 1907. S. J. 104. And third time on July 13, 1907. S. J. 148. But on each of these three readings it was read precisely as originally introduced; no changes whatever being made therein. After the third reading, it was altered in the following particulars: (1) The words 'or keep on hand at their place of business' were inserted in the caption between the word 'place' and the word 'of.' S. J. 150. (2) The words 'or keep on hand at their place of business' were inserted in section 1, between the word 'sale' and the word 'any.' S. J. 15. (3) The words, 'nor shall it be lawful in the limits of said state for intoxicating liquors to be sold in dispensaries, and the sale of intoxicating liquors in said state shall be prohibited to private persons and to the state; its officers and agents,' were added to section 1 at the end thereof. S. J. 149. (4) Section 2 was stricken from the bill, and in lieu thereof a new section 2 was inserted, as follows: 'Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent licensed druggists from selling or furnishing pure alcohol for medicinal purposes only, provided the same is sold or furnished for such purpose, upon the presentation of a written prescription from a reputable physician actually in charge of the patient for whom such prescription is given. Before giving out any prescription as contemplated in this act, it shall be the duty of such physician to have actually examined any and all persons applying for same and to have determined from such examination that the same is necessary, and that said written prescription shall certify that said examination has been made, and that any person violating this section shall be punished as prescribed in section 1039 of the Penal Code of 1895.' S. J. 150. (5) Section 3 was stricken from the bill, and a new section 3 inserted in lieu thereof, as follows: 'Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, that nothing in this act shall prohibit the sale, by licensed druggists, of wood or denatured alcohol for art, scientific and mechanical purposes, or grain alcohol for bacteriologists, who are actually engaged in that class of work, for scientific purposes only.' S. J. 150, 149. (6) A section 4 was added as follows: 'Sec. 4. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that all laws and parts of laws (in conflict with this act) be, and the same are hereby repealed.' S. J. 151.

"As thus altered the bill read: 'A bill to be entitled an act to prohibit the sale, barter, or giving away to induce trade, or furnishing at public places, or keep (ing) on hand at their places of business, of any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors, or intoxicating liquors or intoxicating bitters, or other drinks, which, if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication, and for other purposes. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by authority of the same: Section 1. That, from and after the first day of January next after the passage of this act, it shall not be lawful for any person within the limits of this state to sell or barter for valuable consideration, either directly or indirectly, or give away to induce trade at any place of business, or furnish at any other public places, or manufacture for the purpose of sale, or keep on hand at their places of business, any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors, or intoxicating bitters, or other drinks which if drunk to excess will produce intoxication, and any person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished as prescribed in section 1039 of the Penal Code of Georgia. Nor shall it be lawful in the limits of said state for intoxicating liquors to be sold in dispensaries, and the sale of intoxicating liquors in said state shall be prohibited to private persons and to the state, its officers and agents. Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent licensed druggists from selling or furnishing pure alcohol for medicinal purposes only, provided the same is sold or furnished for such purpose, upon the presentation of a written prescription from a reputable physician actually in charge of the patient for whom such prescription is given. Before giving out any prescription as contemplated in this act, it shall be the duty of such physician to have actually examined any and all persons applying for same and to have determined from such examination that the same is necessary, and that said written prescription shall certify that said examination has been made, and that any person violating this section shall be punished as prescribed in section 1039 of the Penal Code of 1895. Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, that nothing in this act shall prohibit the sale, by licensed druggists, of wood alcohol, of denatured alcohol for art, scientific, and mechanical purposes, or grain alcohol for bacteriologists, who are actually engaged in that class of work, for scientific purposes only. Sec. 4. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that all laws and parts of laws (in conflict with this act), be, and the same are hereby repealed.'

"As above altered, the bill was passed by the Senate on July 13, 1907, by a vote of 34 to 7, which vote appears on the journal. S. J. 148. The bill was then read in the House first time on July 17, 1907. H. J. 362. Second time on July 19, 1907. H. J. 415. And third time on July 30, 1907. H. J. 563. And on each of these three readings was read precisely as it came from the Senate; no changes whatever being made therein. After its third reading it was altered in the following particulars: (1) The caption was stricken out, and the following inserted in lieu thereof: 'An act to prohibit the manufacture, sale, barter, giving away to induce trade, or keeping or furnishing at public places, or keeping on hand at places of business, of any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating bitters, or other drinks, which if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication; to except sales of alcohol in certain cases upon certain conditions, and to provide certain rules of evidence in connection with the enforcement hereof; to prescribe penalties, and for other purposes.' H. J. 567, 568. (2) The words 'keep or' were inserted in section 1, between the word 'or' and the word 'furnish.' H. J. 568. (3) The words 'for the purpose of sale,' after the word 'manufacture,' in section 1, were stricken out. H. J. 568, 569. (4) The words, 'provided, that licensed druggists may sell and furnish pure alcohol, for medical purposes only, upon written prescription of a regular practicing physician of this state, in the manner herein prescribed, to wit: Before any physician shall issue any such prescription, he shall make an actual examination of the person for whom the prescription is granted. The prescription shall be substantially in the following form: Georgia, county. I,, a regular practicing physician under the laws of said state, do hereby prescribe for the use of, a patient in my charge, whom I have personally examined, of pure alcohol, and do certify in my opinion that the same is necessary in the alleviation or cure of illness from which said patient is suffering. This (date). (Signed by the physician.) No prescription shall be filed [filled] hereunder except under the date upon which it is dated and issued, or upon the following day. Within ten days after the same is filled by the druggist he shall file said prescription for record with the ordinary of the county in which filed, who shall cause the same to be recorded in his office, and a certified copy of the same, or the original prescription, showing it has been recorded, shall be primary evidence in any court in this state. The record containing such prescription, showing it has been recorded, shall be open to public inspection. A recording fee of five cents for each prescription so recorded shall be paid by such druggists to the ordinary. Upon any prosecution under this act the burden of proving the defense that the sale was pure alcohol under prescription as herein provided for, shall be upon the defendant. Provided, further, no druggist who is also a practicing physician shall fill his own prescriptions hereunder, nor shall they be filled at any drug store in which said physician is financially interested, and no prescription shall be re-filled; nor shall more than one pint be furnished on any one prescription. The delivery of the alcohol under such prescription shall be made only directly to the person for whom such prescription is issued, or to the physician, or in case of a minor, to his parent or guardian for him, or, in case of a married woman, to her husband for her. Provided, that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent wholesale druggists from selling or furnishing alcohol in wholesale quantities to regular licensed retail druggists or public charity hospitals or to medical pharmaceutical colleges. Be it further provided, that all wholesale druggists shall be required to keep a complete record of all their sales of alcohol, which record shall at all times be open for inspection to the regular authorities of such counties or cities in which such wholesale stores are located"—were added to section 1 at the end thereof. H. J. 566, 567. (5) Section 2 was stricken out, and a new section 2 was inserted in lieu thereof, as follows: 'Sec. 2. Be it further enacted by the same authority, that any person, firm or corporation who shall violate this act in any respect shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; any physician who shall issue a prescription hereunder containing any false statements, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; any druggist who shall fill any prescription for alcohol in anywise other than herein allowed, or shall fail to file a prescription filled by him hereunder with the ordinary within the time prescribed, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; any person who shall obtain alcohol for another in accordance with the terms hereof, and who shall convert the same to any other use, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.' H. J. 568. (6) In addition to the foregoing alterations, it appears by the journals that the House further altered the bill passed by the Senate by what is known on the journals as 'House Amendment No. 18.' The text of this particular alteration does not appear on the journals; but it does appear that it was at least four lines in length and contained the word 'five' in the second line and also the word 'five' in the fourth line. S. J. 323.

"As altered by the House (otherwise than by House Amendment No. 18), the bill then read thus (the alterations made by the House being indicated by underscoring): 'A bill to be entitled an act to prohibit the manufacture sale, barter, giving away to induce trade, or keeping or furnishing at public places, or keeping on hand at places of business, of any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors, or intoxicating bitters, or other drinks, which, if drunk to excess, will produce intoxication; to except sales of alcohol in certain cases, upon certain conditions; to provide certain rules of evidence in connection with the enforcement hereof; to prescribe penalties, and for other purposes. purposes only. Sec. 4. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be and the same are hereby repealed.'

"On July 30, 1907, the bill, as altered as above stated by the House, was passed by the House, by a vote of 139 to 39, which vote appears on the journal. H. J. 592. The differences between the two bills are: (1) The Senate bill made penal 'manufacture for the purpose of sale,' leaving innocent and lawful the manufacture of any form of intoxicant for medical, social, domestic, or any other use not involving the element of gain. The House bill made it penal to 'manufacture' for any purpose whatever. (2) The Senate bill left it open to manufacture for export out of the state, so that fruit and grain could have been sold to our brewers and distillers who could have operated their plants for export purposes. This House bill annihilated this. (3) The Senate bill, while making it penal to 'furnish at any public place,' did not make it penal to 'keep' at such place. The House bill made it a substantive offense to 'keep' at any 'public place.' Under the former it would have been lawful to store liquor on hand in any public warehouse; under the latter such retention was made a crime. (4) The Senate bill allowed the sale of pure alcohol for medical use, annexing but one condition, namely, on written prescription by a reputable physician after examination of the patient. This done, any quantity necessary, in the judgment of the physician, could be furnished, any licensed druggist could fill the prescription, any person whomsoever could convey the medicament to the sufferer, and it was not required that the name of the sick person, the name of his or her physician, the name of his or her apothecary, and all the details of his or her prescription should be spread upon the public records. The House bill made the law do the prescribing, and not the attending physician. Not more than one pint could be furnished on any one prescription. If the vicinage had but one drug store, and the attending physician was owner of it, or financially interested in that, then the prescription could not be filled at home but must be sent abroad. When the prescription was filled, the medicament could not be delivered to any one indifferently for transmission to the sufferer. A husband might receive it for his wife, or a parent or guardian for a minor, but in all other cases 'the delivery of the alcohol under such prescription shall be made only directly to the person for whom such prescription is issued, or to the physician.' A son could not receive it for his father, or a wife for her husband, or a parent for his adult child. In short, save as to married women and minors the druggist or the doctor must convey it to the sick person, or else the sick person himself or herself must go for it or do without. When the prescription had been filled, all the details thereof were to be entered on the public record 'open to public inspection.' (5) The House bill created 14 new offenses not known to the Senate bill; the same being as follows: To manufacture for any purpose other than for sale; to keep at any public place; to fill any prescription except upon the day of its issue [issuance] or the following day; to fail to file the prescription with the ordinary; for the ordinary to fail to record the same; for the druggist to fail to pay the ordinary his recording fee; for the physician, if also a druggist, to fill his own prescription; to fill the prescription at any drug store in which the prescribing physician is financially interested; to refill any prescription; to furnish more than one pint on any one prescription; to deliver the medicament to any one but the sick person or the physician, the case of married women and minors only excepted; for wholesale druggists to sell alcohol to any hospital or private sanitariums; or to fail to keep a complete record of their sales; or to fail to keep such record open at all times to the inspection of the local authorities. (6) The Senate bill made an alleged illegal sale of alcohol triable as in other criminal cases; the House bill made it incumbent upon defendant to prove his innocence. As thus altered, the bill was taken up in the Senate on August 1, 1907, for a consideration of the same, and on pages 317-323 of the journal will be found all the proceedings had in the Senate thereon; and it does not appear that the bill, as altered by the House, or the alterations therein made by the House, received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to the Senate."

Was the plea in abatement properly stricken on the ground that it was insufficient in law?

LUMPKIN, J. 1. Article 8, § 1, par. 1, of the Constitution (Civ. Code, § 5908), declares: "There shall be a thorough system of common schools for the education of children in the elementary branches of an English education only, as nearly uniform as practicable, the expenses of which shall be provided for by taxation, or otherwise." Section 3, par. 1, of the same article (Civ. Code, § 5908), reads as follows: "The poll tax, any educational fund now belonging to the state (except the endowment of, and debt due to, the University of Georgia), a special tax on shows and exhibitions, and on sales of spirituous and malt liquors, which the General Assembly is hereby authorized to assess, and the proceeds of any commutation tax for military service, and all taxes that may be assessed on such domestic animals as, from their nature and habits, are destructive to other property, are hereby set apart and devoted for the support of the common schools." It was contended that it was mandatory upon the Legislature to assess a specific tax on the sale of spirituous and malt liquors as one means of supporting such schools, and that this excluded the power of the Legislature to prohibit the sale of such liquors. If the two paragraphs of the Constitution quoted be fairly considered, they do not sustain the position. While that first cited declares that there shall be a thorough system of common schools for the education of children in the elementary branches of an English education, it states that the expenses shall be provided for "by taxation, or otherwise." The second of the sections declares, in effect, that any revenue derived from certain sources shall be set apart and devoted to the support of the common schools. It does not say that the Legislature shall impose a tax on the sale of spirituous and malt liquors, but that it is authorized to do so. Several other items besides this tax are mentioned in the section. But it may well be doubted whether it was the intention of the Constitution to make a mandatory provision as to them, so that the Legislature must provide a commutation tax in lieu of military service, or must assess a tax on certain animals, for instance. In article 7, § 13, par. 1 (Civ. Code, § 5900), the proceeds of the sale of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, "whenever the General Assembly may authorize the sale," are devoted to the payment of the bonded indebtedness of the state. But nobody would contend for a moment that the Constitution intended to require the Western & Atlantic Railroad to be sold. Undoubtedly permissive words, such as "authorize," or "may," are sometimes construed as mandatory in effect, though permissive in form, as for instance where a statute provides for the doing of some act which is required by justice, or public duty. But where the language employed, together with its context, shows that the constitutional or statutory provision under consideration conferred or recognized a discretionary power, a mandatory construction will not be given to it. In the present case, if a tax were assessed on the sale of spirituous and malt liquors, there would be no discretion on the part of the Legislature as to what should be done with the proceeds. They would be devoted to the support of the common schools. But construing this provision in the light of its context, and of other provisions of the same instrument, it does not command the Legislature to tax the sale of spirituous and malt liquors, and impliedly deny to them the power to prohibit such sale. In paragraph 22, § 7, art. 3, of the Constitution (Civ. Code, § 5784), it is declared that "the General Assembly shall have power to make all laws and ordinances consistent with its Constitution, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, which they shall deem necessary and proper for the welfare of the state." The police power is recognized in this and in other sections of the Constitution, notably in paragraph 2, § 2, art. 4 (Civ. Code, § 5798), where, among other things, it is declared that "the exercise of the police power of the state shall never be abridged, nor so construed as to permit corporations to conduct their business in such a manner as to infringe the equal rights of individuals, or the general well-being of the state." The sale of spirituous and malt liquors has from early times been considered as falling peculiarly within the cognizance of the police power of the state.

In Perdue v. Ellis, 18 Ga. 586, it was said that "the General Assembly have the right, should the general public good require it, and public opinion demand it, to pass a law to restrict or even suppress the internal traffic in spirits." In Howell v. State, 71 Ga. 224, 228, 51 Am. Rep. 259, Hall, J., said: "Undoubtedly the Legislature had the power to make this inhibition general, and, having this power, it would seem that they might confine it to certain special localities." In Menken v. City of Atlanta, 78 Ga. 688, 672, 2 S. E. 559, 562, the local option legislation then in force, by which the sale of liquors could be prohibited in counties by popular vote, was held to be constitutional as a valid exercise of the police power. Chief Justice Bleckley said: "If it has not been heretofore sufficiently decided, we decide now that the local option legislation of this state is constitutional as a valid exercise of the police power. Historically considered, there is no subject more completely amenable to this power than the sale of intoxicating liquors." This decision was rendered after the adoption of the present Constitution. In Ison v. Mayor and Council of Griffin, 98 Ga. 623, 25 S. E. 611, it was said that a license to sell spirituous liquors was neither a contract nor a property right in the licensee, but a mere permit to do what would otherwise be an offense against the general law, and when granted by a municipal corporation it was subject at all times to the police power of that corporation; and that, in the absence of any restriction upon its authority, the municipality could revoke such license. In Plumb v. Christie, 103 Ga. 686, 694, 30 S. E. 759, 762 (42 L. R. A. 181), Mr. Justice Lewis said: "No principle is more universally recognized by the courts than the right of a state, under general police powers reserved and granted to its Legislature, to control the traffic in any commodity the use of which may endanger either the public health or morals. It is equally well established that the sale of intoxicating liquors is peculiarly, on account of the evil effects resulting from their use, subject to legislative control and regulation. To such an extent can this power be exercised that an absolute prohibition of the sale of this commodity throughout the state can be accomplished by an act of its Legislature, and, among the number of cases reviewing such legislation, our attention has never been called to a single case in a court of last resort where the validity and constitutionality of such an act has not been upheld." In Henderson v. Heyward, 109 Ga. 373, 376, 34 S. E. 590, 591 (47 L. R. A. 366, 77 Am. St. Rep. 384), Mr. Justice Cobb said: "That the state has a right to prohibit absolutely the sale of whisky is no longer an open question, either in this court or in the Supreme Court of the United States."

It is true that in none of these cases were the paragraphs of the Constitution now invoked directly considered; but most of them were rendered after the adoption of the present Constitution, and they all considered the Legislature as having the authority to prohibit the sale of spirituous or malt liquors, under the general police power of the state. We hold that the constitutional provisions in regard to the maintenance of a common school system, and the appropriation of any amounts which might arise from certain sources to its support, did not prevent the Legislature from exercising its police power in regard to spirituous or malt liquors, or render the prohibition law of 1907 unconstitutional on that ground.

It was sought to differentiate the local option law and the local prohibition laws from the general prohibition law, in respect of the matter now under consideration. But we think the differentiation sought to be made is unsound. Article 3, § 7, par. 16 (Civ. Code, § 5778), was cited as indicating a difference. That paragraph requires publication of notice of intention to apply for a local or special law prior to the introduction of a bill in the General Assembly. It has no relevancy to the question now before us.

2. By article 1, § 5, par. 2, of the Constitution, it is declared: "The enumeration of rights herein contained as a part of this Constitution shall not be construed to deny to the people any inherent rights which they may have hitherto enjoyed." It was contended that prior to the time when the Constitution of 1877 was adopted the people of the state had enjoyed, as an inherent right, the right to make, sell, barter, give away, keep, and furnish any of such liquors, subject only to sundry statutory regulations, and that the intent and effect of the section just quoted was to inhibit the General Assembly from denying such alleged right. The point is without merit. What has been said in the previous division of this opinion answers it. We need only to add that in Loeb v. Jennings, 133 Ga. 796, 67 S. E. 101, it was claimed that the prohibition law violated the provision of the Constitution of the United States which declares that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States. In dealing with that contention it was said: "There is no constitutional privilege or immunity in any citizen of this state or of any other state to come within its borders and violate its laws in regard to prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors."

3. Article 3, § 7, par. 8, of the Constitution (Civ. Code, § 5771), provides: "No law or ordinance shall pass which refers to more than one subject-matter," etc. It was urged that the act of 1907 was violative of this provision, because it prohibited both the sale and manufacture of various liquors mentioned in it, and that sale and manufacture are two separate and distinct subject-matters. The question of what constitutes duality of subject-matters has been so frequently discussed by this court that it would serve no good purpose to repeat what has been said. Of course selling an article is not identical with its manufacture. Neither is malt liquor identical with distilled liquor. Nor yet is giving away liquor to induce trade the same thing as furnishing it at public places. But all of these things were germane to and formed a part of the general purpose of the act. They were not so entirely distinct and different as to constitute different subject-matters within the meaning of the paragraph of the Constitution last quoted. In 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 575, occurs this statement: "The word 'subject', as used in the Constitution, is not to be taken as synonymous with 'provision.' An act may properly include any number of provisions so long as they are not inconsistent with or foreign to its general object. This requirement of singleness of subject is not intended to embarrass honest legislation, but only to prevent the vicious practice of joining in one act incongruous and unrelated matters; and if all the parts of a statute have a natural connection and reasonably relate, directly or indirectly, to one general and legitimate subject of legislation, the act is not open to the objection of plurality, no matter how extensively or minutely it deals with the details looking to the accomplishment of the main legislative purpose."

4. By article 3, § 7, par. 14, of the Constitution, it is provided that "no bill shall become a law unless it shall have received a majority of the votes of all the members elected to each house of the General Assembly, and it shall, in every instance, so appear on the journal." It was urged that the legislative journals showed that a bill to prohibit the sale of liquors, etc., was introduced into the Senate and was passed by a majority of that body; that this bill was amended by the House of Representatives in a number of material particulars, and as so altered was passed by the House by a vote of a majority of the members of that body; that it appeared from the journal of the Senate that, after the bill was returned to that House several amendments were offered and rejected; and that the Senate journal, showing the concurrence in the amendments originating in the House of Representatives and the final action on the bill, did not show that it received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to the Senate. The question thus raised is controlled by the decision in De Loach v. Newton (decided to-day) 68 S. E. 708. The plea in abatement filed by the defendant, in which he set up this contention, was properly stricken.

The accusation was not subject to the objections set out in the questions certified to this court. All the Justices concur.

HARDWOOD LUMBER CO. v. ADAM & STEINBRUGGE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. July 15, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES (§ 418*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The general rule is that in a suit for breach of contract for failure to deliver goods of a certain quality sold at a specified price, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time and place of delivery.

2. SALES (§ 418*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

This is not an inflexible rule in all cases, so as to exclude a recovery of actual damages sustained in cases to which such rule in its very nature is inapplicable; as, where there is no market at the time and place of delivery by which damages can be measured, and resort must be had to the nearest available market, with the cost of shipment to the place of delivery added.

3. SALES (§ 418*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—GOODS BOUGHT FOR RESALE.

If goods are bought for the purpose of resale, and so known to both parties, and upon failure of the seller to deliver there is no market in which the buyer can readily obtain them, he may go into the market and purchase the best substitute obtainable, using reasonable care and diligence, and charging the seller with the difference between the contract price of the goods and the price of the goods substituted.

4. SALES (§ 418*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—GOODS BOUGHT FOR RESALE.

In order to entitle the purchaser to recover full damages in such a case he must have acted within a reasonable time, and have used due diligence to mitigate the loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1188; Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

5. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The evidence was sufficient to authorize the charge of the judge, and to sustain the finding of the jury, approved by the presiding judge.

6. SALES (§ 418*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—DAMAGES.

If the seller of goods fails to deliver them according to the contract, and thereafter the purchaser urges delivery, and the seller promises to make it, but fails to do so, this alone does not work such an extension of the contract as will prevent the purchaser from recovering damages on the basis of the original breach.

7. SALES (§ 418*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—DAMAGES.

In such a case, if there is no market in which the articles sold can be readily bought, and within the knowledge of both parties they were bought for resale, and the purchaser buys the best substitute obtainable in order to fulfill his subcontract of sale, in determining the reasonableness of his conduct and of the time when he makes the purchase, the conduct of the defendant in asking delay after the failure to deliver, and promising to make delivery, may be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1176; Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

8. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

When taken in connection with the entire charge, none of the excerpts of which complaint was made are such as to require a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Adam & Steinbrugge against the Hardwood Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

In May, 1905, the Hardwood Lumber Company, of this state, contracted to sell to Adam & Steinbrugge, of New Orleans, La., 75,000 feet of red gum lumber for July and August shipment. The correspondence between the parties showed that the lumber was bought for the purpose of resale, references being made in the letters of the purchasers to their customers. The first letter written by them, which was introduced in evidence, said: "If you would care to make us a price C. I. F. Rotterdam, and guarantee that our customers will get exactly what the B/L calls for, we believe that we could do some business with you." The lumber was not shipped at the time agreed upon. In October thereafter the plaintiffs began writing a series of letters to the defendants, urging the latter to deliver the lumber. The sellers replied by making various excuses, such as that the logs had to be gotten out of the swamp, that it had been raining so as to make it impossible to do so, and that the railroad did not furnish enough cars; and promising delivery at an early time. This correspondence of urgency on one side and excuses on the other continued for a number of months. On October 11, 1906, the purchasers wrote: "We sold this stock according to your contract with us; and if you don't deliver it, the customer that we sold it to will certainly hold us up for indemnity so much per M. feet, in which event we will put the matter up to you. Please let us know if you know of some place where we could buy this stock?" In its reply the seller said: "We know of no place where you can place this order. If we could find some one to take it, we do not think they could get it out any quicker than we will. We will make delivery just as soon as possible." On December 10, the purchasers wrote: "If you cannot give us any definite information in regard to delivery of this stock, we must go out and buy it somewhere else; and if there is any difference in price, we would expect you to help us out." On January 30, 1907, they again wrote: "We really do not know how we can make our customers wait any longer; they simply must have this stock, and they will not accept the excuse you give us, and threaten to buy the stock on the open market, charging us up with the difference." On February 21, 1907, the purchasers wrote: "We wish to advise you that inasmuch as you have made no efforts, apparently, to get this stock for us, this letter will serve to advise you that, if you will not have delivered this stock by the first of May, we will buy what is due on the open market, or allow you the privilege of doing it." The sellers replied: "We have yours of the 21st, with reference to extending the time of delivery of the red gum sold you to the first of May. We will use our best endeavors to get the lumber ready for shipment by that time. We are anxious to fill your order, and regret that conditions have been such that we have been unable to do it. We intend to do it, and if you just have patience you will get the lumber all right." The purchasers continued to write letters urging the delivery of the lumber until November, 1907. On October 24th they informed the seller that, if the latter did not deliver the lumber immediately, the purchasers would at once bring suit for the breach of contract. They added: "We have secured at different times gum lumber at considerably higher prices than we paid you to deliver our contracts that we made based on getting the stock from you." The seller finally wrote on November 9, 1907, saying: "It is useless for us to promise to make delivery of this stock within the next thirty days. We have always intended to deliver this stock, as we told you before; but if you think that you can get your money quicker by bringing suit against us, it is a matter for you to decide. We have told you before we regretted this delay, but it is impossible to prevent it."

The purchasers brought suit, alleging that they had been compelled to buy red gum lumber to fill their contracts at a higher price than that at which they purchased, and had incurred the expense of transportation, which the seller agreed to pay, making an aggregate difference of $441.78. They recovered a verdict for the full amount. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and the defendant accepted.

Wm. H. Fleming, for plaintiff in error. S. H. Myers and Geo. T. Jackson, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The defendant did not deny that it broke the contract, and never delivered the red gum lumber sold. The only question was as to the measure of damages. The plaintiffs contended that they were entitled to recover the difference between certain lumber which they had purchased in this country and had shipped to Europe, in order to meet the contracts which they had made on the faith of the contract with the defendant and the price at which the lumber was sold to them, with cost of delivery at Rotterdam, in accordance with the contract with the defendant. The latter claimed that there was no sufficient evidence to show that there was not a market at Rotterdam in which the lumber could have been procured; that the date of the breach was either in July and August, 1906, or in November, 1907; and that the purchases made by the plaintiffs were between those dates; that the proper measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time and place fixed for delivery; and that, in the absence of sufficient evidence to show this difference, only nominal damages could be recovered. Various exceptions were made to charges and refusals to charge, but they all referred to the measure of damages, and need not be stated in detail.

Damages are given as compensation for the injury done. "Damages recoverable for a breach of contract are such as arise naturally and according to the usual course of things from such breach, and such as the parties contemplated when the contract was made, as the probable result of its breach." Civ. Code 1895, § 3799. "Any necessary expenses which one of two contracting parties incurs in complying with the contract may be recovered as damages." Section 3806. One injured by a breach of contract is bound to lessen the damages as far as practicable by the use of ordinary care and diligence. Section 3802. In a suit for breach of contract for failure to deliver goods of a stated quality sold at a specified price, the general rule is that the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time and place fixed for delivery. If there is no market at the place of delivery at the time fixed therefor, resort may be had to the nearest available market, with cost of transportation to the place of delivery usually added. Ford v. Lawson, 133 Ga. 237 (6a), 65 S. E. 444. It is evident that the general rule cannot be taken as a Procrustean one, subject to no exception or modification. If so, it would exclude the possibility of recovering profits, where in contemplation of the parties at the time of the contract. If there should be no market at the time and place fixed for delivery, the seller breaking his contract could not escape liability for actual damages, on that account. The article sold may be such as requires to be manufactured, and such as is not ordinarily carried in the market for sale. Sizer v. Melton, 129 Ga. 143 (7), (8), 58 S. E. 1055.

In 2 Benjamin on Sales (8th Am. Ed.) § 1327, after reviewing a number of cases, the author states as follows: "It is submitted that these decisions establish the following rules in cases where goods have been bought for the purpose of resale, and there is no market in which the buyer can readily obtain them: I. If at the time of the sale the existence of a subcontract is made known to the seller, the buyer, on the seller's default in delivering the goods, has two courses open to him: (1) He may elect to fulfill his subcontract, and for that purpose go into the market and purchase the best substitute obtainable, charging the seller with the difference between the contract price of the goods and the price of the goods substituted. (2) He may elect to abandon his subcontract, and in that case he may recover as damages against the seller (a) his loss of profits on the resale, and (b) any penalties he may be liable to pay for breach of his subcontract; but if the amount of the penalties has not been made known to the seller, the buyer is not entitled to recover their amount as a matter of right, but the jury may, if the penalties are reasonable, assess the damages at that amount. It is further submitted that, in order to entitle the buyer to claim exceptional profits arising from a subsale, express notice of the amount of such profits must have been given to seller at the time when the contract was made, under circumstances implying that he accepted the contract with the special condition attached to it. II. If at the time of the sale the existence of a subcontract is not made known to the seller, a knowledge on his part that the buyer is purchasing with the general intention to resell, or notice of the subcontract given to him subsequent to the date of the contract, will not render him liable for the buyer's loss of profits on such subcontract; the buyer may either procure the best substitute for the goods as before, and fulfill his subcontract, charging the seller with the difference in price, or abandon the subcontract and bring his action for damages, when the ordinary rule, it would seem, will apply, and the jury must estimate, as well as they can, the difference between the contract price and the market value of the goods, although there is no market price in the sense that there is no place where the buyer can readily procure the goods contracted for. III. In every case the buyer, to entitle him to recover the full amount of damages, must have acted throughout as a reasonable man of business, and done all in his power to mitigate the loss."

According to the seller's letters in this case the timber from which it was to be sawed had to be gotten out of the swamps, where it grew. After the failure to deliver in accordance with the contract, the purchasers made this request of the seller: "Please let us know if you know of some place where you could buy this stock?" To this the seller replied: "We know of no place where we can place this order." The agent of the purchasers testified that "their default had forced us to enter the open market for the purchase of lumber wherever we could get it, and to meet obligations we had assumed when we supposed that the Hardwood Lumber Company was going to fulfill their contract." It is true that the agent testified that the lumber bought to fill the contracts of the purchasers, as indicated in an exhibit to their petition, was bought after November 9, 1907. He, however, testified to the items of the account. The bills of lading introduced in evidence indicated that the purchases were in fact made after the time provided in the contract for delivery, but before the date mentioned by him. After the breach occurred, the plaintiffs again and again urged the defendant to ship the lumber, and informed the latter that it had been sold to customers who insisted on having their contracts filled; and the plaintiffs threatened to hold the defendant liable if its contract of sale was not complied with promptly. The seller made excuses and various indefinite promises to make the shipment at an early date until November, 1907, when the patience of the plaintiffs was exhausted, and they brought suit.

After a contract of sale of goods is broken by failure to deliver, the mere fact that the purchaser is willing, by way of voluntary forbearance, to waive the delay and receive the property sold, and urges delivery, does not operate as a waiver of the legal damages incurred by him, if there is no extension for a consideration and no compliance or tender of compliance on the part of the person in default. He cannot repudiate his contract, and be relieved from damages for its breach because he was urged to comply with it. This case presents no question of request for delay in performance and grant thereof before breach or pending delivery in installments.

After a complete breach of contract on the part of the seller to deliver the goods sold, if they are of a kind not readily obtainable in the market, and if the seller undertakes to procure the best substitute he can to fill his contract of resale, for which purpose both parties knew that the goods were bought, the purchaser must act within a reasonable time and with reasonable diligence. In determining whether he does so or not, the conduct of the seller tending to cause some delay in action may be considered. The presiding judge charged, on this subject, as follows: "I charge you that the plaintiff is only bound to exercise good business judgment and reasonable diligence in the matter of repurchasing the lumber, and would not be bound to purchase all in one lot, if he exercised good faith and reasonable business ability as a reasonably good business man would exercise under the circumstances." While generally the measure of damages is to be fixed at the time of the breach of the contract, it cannot be said as matter of law, under the conduct of the seller and its repeated assurances of early shipments and requests for delay, that the purchasers were bound to purchase the entire lumber immediately. Indeed, it might be inferred from the evidence that they could not do so, but that they did the best they could to remedy the default of the seller and save themselves from damages as far as possible on account of their resales. There are some decisions which go further than this charge, and hold that if the purchaser waits until a certain time, at the request of the seller, and then purchases goods to meet his subcontract of sale, the seller cannot complain. On the subject of delay induced by the party in default see Mendel v. Miller, 126 Ga. 834, 56 S. E. 88, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1184.

Upon a careful consideration of the entire record, we do not think this a case for nominal damages. While there is some conflict in the testimony introduced by the plaintiffs as to the dates of the purchases made by them after the defendant's default, and as to whether the specific purchases made were rendered necessary by such default, there was sufficient evidence to authorize the finding of the jury in favor of the plaintiffs. Nor do any of the grounds of the motion for a new trial, when considered in the light of the entire evidence and the charge of the court, require a reversal. As showing the general rule and certain modifications of it both in England and America, see Ogle v. Vane, L. R. 2 Q. B. 272 (dealing both with the question of the statute of frauds and delay, not as a new contract, but as a voluntary forbearance); Barrow v. Arnaud, 8 Q. B. 595, 601; Loder v. Ke-Kule, 3 C. B. N. S. (91 E. C. L.) 126; Hinde v. Liddell, 10 L. R. Q. B. 265; Borries v. Hutchinson, 18 C. B. (114 E. C. L.) 445; Hickman v. Haynes, 10 L. R. C. (Syllabus by the Court.)

WILLS (§ 634*) — CONSTRUCTION — ESTATES CREATED.

A will contained the following items, which were before this court for construction: "Item 3. I give to my daughter, Catherine T. Thornton, five hundred acres of land, with all the improvements, including the house and lot on which I now live, * * * to have and to hold the same for the maintenance, use, and benefit of said Catherine T. Thornton, during her life, and then to revert back to my grandchildren, John T. Dickinson, W. Q. Dickinson, and the heirs of Richard A. Dickinson, deceased. Said property not to be subject to the debts or liabilities of said Catherine T. Thornton in any manner whatsoever. * * * Item 7. Should either of my grandchildren, John T. Dickinson or W. Q., or my great grandchildren, A. Q. and Z. B. Dickinson, die without heirs, then the property above given, thus left, shall be given to the estate of the survivors." The devise contained in the items of the will above set forth gave to W. Q. Dickinson, who survived the testator and the life tenant, a remainder interest in the property, which became indefeasibly vested upon the death of the testator, whether item 3 of the will be construed alone or in connection with item 7. The court below properly so held, and in doing so determined adversely to the plaintiff in error, the only issue in the case. Civ. Code 1895, § 3104; Sumpter v. Carter, 115 Ga. 893, 42 S. ROYAL FRATERNAL UNION v. HALL et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. July 27, 1910.)

1. PLEADING (§ 238*)—AMENDMENT OF ANSWER AFTER TIME ALLOWED—AFFIDAVIT BY ATTORNEY.

Under section 5057 of the Civil Code of 1895, as amended by the act of December 21, 1897 (Acts 1897, p. 35), the affidavit which a defendant is required to make in order to set up, after the time allowed for answer has expired, "any new facts or defense of which notice was not given by the original plea or answer," cannot be made by an attorney at law for his client, even though such client be a nonresident of this state.

2. PLEADING (§ 238*)—AMENDMENT OF ANSWER AFTER TIME ALLOWED—AFFIDAVIT BY ATTORNEY.

The proposed amendment to the answer, setting forth the substantial allegations which were sought to be added to the original answer, was sworn to, in another state, by an agent of the nonresident defendant corporation, on January 8, 1909, but no affidavit in regard to the delay was made as required by law; and upon the hearing of the cause on February 4th, such amendment to the answer was offered, and, upon objection to its being allowed, a brief additional amendment was also offered, the substance of which was practically covered by the amendment already tendered, which, in effect, only alleged that the plaintiffs had received all to which they were entitled, and the attorney at law of the nonresident defendant made an affidavit to such second proposed amendment in respect to the delay, and sought to make the affidavit cover also the delay in reference to the amendment first tendered. Held, that there was no error in rejecting said amendments, and that the presiding judge did not abuse his discretion in declining to allow such amendments to be filed without the affidavit required by the statute.

3. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

Under the decision of this court in this same case (130 Ga. 820, 61 S. E. 977), and the evidence submitted on the trial under review, the presiding judge, to whom the case was submitted without the intervention of a jury, did not err in finding in favor of the plaintiffs the amount of the certificate, less the amount which they had previously received from the defendant.

JONES v. McELROY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. July 27, 1910.)

1. DEEDS (§ 70*)—RIGHT OF VENDOR—FRAUD OF PURCHASER.

Where land is jointly owned by two persons, and one obtains a deed from the other of his interest by means of an intentionally false and fraudulent promise to sell the land at its true value and pay off an incumbrance and account for the balance, or, failing to find a purchaser, he will procure a new loan to discharge the present incumbrance, and, having thus obtained the title, he retains, uses, and claims the property as absolutely his own, the whole transaction by which ownership is obtained is such a fraud as will entitle the grantor to have the deed canceled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 165-182; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 70*)—RIGHT OF VENDOR—FRAUD OF PURCHASER.

In such a case equity affords relief, not because of the mere breach of the verbal promise, but because of the fraud of the grantee in procuring an absolute deed to be made to him upon his false and fraudulent representation and promise that he will use the title for the grantor's benefit.

3. TRIAL (§ 233*)—DUTY TO GIVE INSTRUCTIONS.

While it is the duty of a judge to state the contentions of the litigants, an instruction that the jury will find the contentions of the parties in the petition and answer, which are so clearly set out and so frequently referred to by counsel that the court does not deem it necessary to again state them, sufficiently meets the requirement, unless the special facts of the case demand a more formal summary to prevent possible misapprehensions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 529; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

In view of its context and the general charge, an instruction "that the evidence should be stronger to show the plaintiff is correct in her contentions than it is to go to show that the defendant's contentions are correct, but it be but slightly so, that would be sufficient," though inaccurate, is not so misleading as to require a new trial.

5. TRIAL (§ 296*)—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

In a case where documentary evidence is submitted, an instruction that "you take the law from the court and the facts from the witnesses, and apply the one to the other, and make your verdict," is technically inaccurate. But from the general structure of the charge and the scope of the evidence it is apparent in this case that the jury could not have been misled by the inaccurate expression, as excluding the documentary evidence from their consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 703-717; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

6. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

There was sufficient evidence to support the verdict, which is approved by the trial judge. No substantial error of law was committed requiring a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County.

Action by Mrs. S. F. McElroy against J. M. Jones. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

John T. Norris and Neel & Peebles, for plaintiff in error. D. K. Johnston, G. H. Aubrey, and Thos. W. Milner & Son, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. The action is by Mrs. S. F. McElroy against her brother J. M. Jones, and his mother-in-law, Mrs. K. P. Larey, for cancellation and other relief. The case made in the amended petition may be thus briefly stated: C. M. Jones, the father of the plaintiff and J. M. Jones, was the owner of a tract of land, incumbered by a deed to secure a debt of $1,000. On January 7, 1895, he transferred the bond to reconvey, executed by the lender, to the plaintiff and her brother J. M. Jones, upon an expressed consideration of $3,000. After maturity of the loan the brother represented to the sister that he could sell the land for its real worth, and orally promised, if she would make a deed to him of her half interest, that he would sell the land and account to her for one-half of the net purchase price, and, in the event he could not sell the land for its full value, he would procure a new loan on the land, and from the proceeds pay off the present incumbrance. On the faith of this promise the plaintiff, on March 18, 1899, made to her brother a quitclaim deed to her half interest in the property, stating in the deed that the consideration was $1 and love and affection. It is alleged that the brother obtained this conveyance with the intentional design to defraud the plaintiff, his sister. Thereafter, on May 22, 1900, J. M. Jones conveyed the land by quitclaim deed to his mother-in-law, Mrs. Larey, upon a consideration of $100, and Mrs. Larey, on the same day, paid the incumbrance and took a conveyance from the holder of the security deed, in which the amount paid by her was stated to be $1,218.15. At the time Mrs. Larey received the deed from J. M. Jones and paid the incumbrance she knew the purposes for which the plaintiff executed the deed to J. M. Jones, and that the conveyance from J. M. Jones to Mrs. Larey was in pursuance of a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff of her land. The value of the land was alleged to be $3,000, and the net income therefrom, while in the defendant's possession, during the interval between the making of the deed and the bringing of the suit, was $115, which amount, with $550, was sufficient to pay the plaintiff's half of the loan debt, which latter amount was tendered to the defendants and refused by them. The plaintiff prayed for the cancellation of the deeds, and for general relief. The defendants severally demurred and answered. The demurrers were overruled, and the trial of the case resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendants each moved for a new trial, which motions were overruled. J. M. Jones sued out a bill of exceptions, assigning error on the refusal of his motion for new trial and on the pendente exceptions to the overruling of his demurrer. No error is assigned on the rulings against Mrs. Larey.

1, 2. Cancellation of the deed was prayed on the ground that the grantee obtained it by means of an intentionally false and fraudulent verbal promise to hold and use the land for certain specific purposes, and, having thus obtained the title, he conveyed the land to another who had notice of his fraudulent purpose, and in pursuance of his scheme to defraud. Equity affords relief in such a case, not because of any express trust declared in the verbal promise, but because of the fraud of the grantee. This relief may be granted either by declaring the holder of the legal title a trustee ex maleficio (Brown v. Doane, 86 Ga. 82, 12 S. E. 179, 11 L. R. A. 381) or by a cancellation of the deed fraudulently procured. The plaintiff's relief is not based on a mere breach of an oral promise, but upon the fraud of the grantee in procuring an absolute deed to be made to himself upon his fraudulent representation and promise that he would use the title for the grantor's benefit. There is no law which requires a fraudulent undertaking to be manifested in writing; and parol evidence is admissible, not for the purpose of contradicting the deed, but for the purpose of establishing the fraud by means of which the grantee became vested with the absolute title.

3. The court instructed the jury that they would find the contentions of the parties set out in the pleadings. Error is assigned that the court should have restated the contentions. While it is the right and duty of the court to state the contentions of the parties, his reference to the pleadings as containing such contentions will suffice, unless the special facts of the case may require a formal statement of the actual issues in order to prevent possible misapprehension. Central Ry. Co. v. McKinney, 118 Ga. 538, 45 S. E. 430.

4. The court charged: "The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff in the case to show that her contentions are correct. What is meant by the burden of proof is the weight of evidence; it should be stronger going to show the plaintiff is correct in her contentions than it is going to show the defendant's contentions are correct; but if it be but slightly so, that would be sufficient, but it must preponderate in her favor in order for her to recover in the case. Then I charge you, if you find from the evidence that the contentions of the plaintiff are correct, you would find in her favor; otherwise, you would find for the defendant." The error assigned is that, before the plaintiff is entitled to relief by cancellation on the ground of fraud, the evidence must be clear and unequivocal as to the fraud, and that the court should have so instructed the jury; that the expression that if the evidence of the plaintiff be but slightly stronger than that of the defendant, that would be sufficient, in effect abrogates the rule as to the strength of evidence sufficient to justify cancellation. Our Code declares that in all civil cases the preponderance of evidence is sufficient to produce mental conviction; and that by a preponderance of evidence is meant that superior weight of evidence which, while not enough to wholly free the mind from a reasonable doubt, is yet sufficient to incline a reasonable and impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than the other. Civil Code, §§ 5144, 5145. Further on in his charge the court said: "When you come to make your verdict in this case, don't view the evidence in detached portions, but take the whole of it, all the facts and circumstances proven in the case, to determine for yourselves what the truth is as best you can, and let your verdict speak the truth, trying to do justice between the parties." While the particular expression to which exception is taken may be inapt, yet, when taken in connection with its context and the general charge, we do not think that it misled the jury as to the degree of proof required in order to authorize a recovery by the plaintiff.

5. In his instruction the court said to the jury, "You take the law from the court, and the facts from the witnesses, and apply the one to the other and make your verdict." Certain documentary evidence was used, and it is contended that this charge excluded such evidence from the consideration of the jury. We do not think so. The court was charging upon the issues made in the case by the parol evidence which was offered relating to such documentary evidence. While it would have been better for the court to have instructed the jury that they should consider all the evidence, oral and written, in applying the law to the case, we do not think that the jury was in any way misled by the particular expression of the court of which complaint is made. Especially so, where it appears that the court, in discussing the weight of evidence, instructed the jury: "Now, there is some record evidence introduced here, and the same rules will apply to that, except that it is not delivered from the stand, and not delivered in the same way as witnesses on the stand."

6. There was sufficient evidence to authorize the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge. We do not think any substantial error was committed in the trial; and the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concur.

JOHNSON v. AMERICAN NAT. LIFE INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. July 14, 1910.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 134*)—ACTION ON POLICY—FRAUDULENT STATEMENTS OF INSURED—ADMISSIBILITY IN EVIDENCE.

A statute declares that all life or fire insurance policies issued upon the lives or property of persons within the state, which contain any reference to the application for insurance, or the constitution, by-laws, or other rules of the company, either as forming part of the policy or contract between the parties thereto, or having any bearing on said contract, shall contain or have attached to said policy a correct copy of said application, signed by the applicant, and of the by-laws referred to, and, unless so attached and accompanying the policy, no such constitution or by-laws shall be received in evidence, either as part of the policy or as an independent contract, in any controversy between the parties to or interested in the said policy, "nor shall such application or by-laws be considered a part of the policy or contract between the parties." Held, that a failure to attach an application for life insurance to the policy, which referred to it, prevented such application from being treated as a part of the contract or introduced in evidence as such, or to show that certain statements were contracted or warranted to be true; but it did not prevent the defendant from pleading and proving that the insured had made false and fraudulent statements as to his age and health, and had thus fraudulently induced the insurer to issue the policy, and that it was therefore void, not as matter of contract, but because of fraudulent procurement.

2. INSURANCE (§§ 255, 655*)—ACTION ON POLICY—EVIDENCE—RATE BOOK.

Suit was brought on a policy of life insurance containing the following provision: "If the age of the insured is incorrectly stated, the amount payable under this policy shall be the insurance which the actual premiums would have purchased at the true age of the insured." The age stated in the policy was 55 years. The defendant pleaded fraud in the procurement of the policy, alleging that in fact the insured was more than 70 years of age, and uninsurable. Held, that the rate book of the company was admissible for the purpose of showing that there was no rate on a person 70 years of age, and that the misrepresentation was material.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 548; Dec. Dig. §§ 255, 655.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 655*)—ACTION ON POLICY—EVIDENCE.

Under the issue of fraud in the procurement of the policy, it was competent to show false representations by the insured as to his age and health, and what they were in fact; and admissions made by him were relevant in that connection.

4. EVIDENCE (§ 333*) — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

The tax digest of the county of the residence of the insured was admissible in evidence to show that, while his name appeared thereon, he returned no poll tax, as bearing on his age.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 333*)—RECORDS.

So, also, was the book of registered voters, containing the name of the insured and the statement of his age.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1247-1257, 1259-1265; Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

6. PLEADING (§ 307*) — APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1089*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

It is not correct practice to attach to a plea as exhibits original documents which will be relied on as evidence. Copies, not original papers, should be used as exhibits to pleadings. Where originals are so attached, on proper motion made in due time, the court should require the originals to be detached and copies substituted. But where no motion was made, and just before the jury retired the court was asked to have the exhibits detached from the answer of the defendant, and not to allow them to be taken out by the jury, and not to allow the jury to see them, a refusal of such motion will not necessitate a new trial, where the court had, in the presence of the jury, rejected such papers from evidence, and ruled them inadmissible as such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 930-934; Dec. Dig. § 807; Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4075-4088; Dec. Dig. § 1039.*]

7. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

When considered in the light of the evidence and the entire charge, the charges complained of do not require a new trial. The evidence was sufficient to authorize the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by E. A. W. Johnson against the American National Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

J. L. Kent, E. L. Stephens, and Hines & Jordan, for plaintiff in error. Wm. Faircloth, B. B. Blount, Fred Harper, Brown & Randolph, and Robt. S. Parker, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. A policy of insurance was procured on the life of an aged negro, who was about 70 years old and in feeble health, as shown by the weight of the testimony. He represented himself to be 55 years of age and in good health, and the policy stated his age to be 55 years. There was evidence tending to show that he did not pay the premium himself, but it was paid by a white man, on whose place he lived. The person who paid the premium also appeared to have taken considerable interest in effectuating the insurance. The policy was dated January 22, 1908, and was assigned to the person who paid the premium, the assignment being dated January 30th. The evidence showed that the assignment was prepared in advance, and was taken to the insured, along with the policy, and that then it was signed and both together were delivered to the assignee. On February 3d the insured died, 12 days after the date of the policy. Suit was brought by the assignee against the insurance company. The defendant set up fraud in the procurement of the policy, and that it was a wagering contract, but offered to return the premium paid. The jury found for the defendant. The presiding judge overruled the motion for a new trial, and the plaintiff excepted.

The principal question involved is as to the effect of the act of August 17, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 107). It declares that, "from and after the passage of this act, all life and fire insurance policies issued upon the life or property of persons within this state, whether issued by companies organized under the laws of this state or by foreign companies doing business in this state, which contain any reference to the application for insurance, or the constitution, by-laws, or other rules of the company, either as forming part of the policy or contract between the parties thereto, or having any bearing on said contract, shall contain or have attached to said policy a correct copy of said application signed by the applicant, and of the by-laws referred to; and unless so attached and accompanying the policy, no such constitution or by-laws shall be received in evidence either as part of the policy or as an independent contract in any controversy between the parties to or interested in the said policy; nor shall such application or by-laws be considered a part of the policy or contract between such parties." This act provides that, where a reference is made in the policy of insurance to the application, a correct copy of the latter must be attached to the policy, and unless this is done such application shall not "be considered a part of the policy or contract between such parties." But this does not exclude an insurance company from showing that the policy was procured by fraud and misrepresentation.

To consider the application as a part of the contract of insurance, and as forming a warranty or covenant, treats the policy as a valid contract and sets up one of its terms. To seek to set aside or repudiate the policy as having been obtained by fraud is to set up that there was no valid and binding contract of insurance. The two things are entirely different. The legislative enactment, which declares that, under certain circumstances, an application for insurance mentioned in the policy shall not be considered a part of the policy or contract between the parties, does not prohibit one of such parties from showing that, whatever the contract was, it was procured by the fraud of the other. 1 May on Insurance (4th Ed.) § 29, C. Section 2097 of the Code of 1895, in so far as it provides that the representations contained in an application for insurance are considered as covenanted to be true, is modified by the act of 1906. But section 2098 provides: "Any verbal or written representations of fact by the assured to induce the acceptance of the risk, if material, must be true, or the policy is void. If, however, the party has no knowledge, but states on the representation of others, bona fide, and so informs the insurer, the falsity of the information does not void the policy." And section 2099 declares that "a failure to state a material fact, if not done fraudulently, does not void; but the willful concealment of such a fact, which would enhance the risk, will void the policy." The court excluded the application; but evidence was admissible to show false representations and concealment.

The tax digest was admissible. Griffin v. Wise, 115 Ga. 610, 41 S. E. 1003; Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Tate, 129 Ga. 526, 59 S. E. 266. The registration book of voters was also admissible, to throw light on the age of the insured.

The charge of the court was not entirely accurate, in view of the sections of the Code above cited, and of the provision in the policy that, "if the age of the insured is incorrectly stated, the amount payable under this policy shall be the insurance which the actual premium would have purchased at the true age of the insured." But when the entire charge is considered together, and it is remembered that, if the insured was 70 years of age, instead of 55, he was not an insurable risk in this company, and that the premium would not have purchased any insurance at his true age, we do not think that any of the charges to which objection was taken should cause a new trial.

The jury found for the defendant. The presiding judge approved their finding, and we cannot say that he erred in so doing.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 80*)—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWERS—CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION.

The Court of Appeals certified the following question: "Is section 4 of the act approved December 23, 1892 (Acts 1892, p. 213), amending the charter of Brunswick, unconstitutional and void in so far as it authorizes the mayor of the city of Brunswick to preside as judge in the police court of said city, he being a member of the legislative body of the city, because said section above referred to is in violation of article 1, § 1, par. 23, of the Constitution of the state of Georgia (Civ. Code 1895, § 5720), which provides that 'the legislative, judicial, and executive powers shall forever remain separate and distinct, and no person discharging the duties of one shall at the same time exercise the functions of either of the others, except as herein provided,' in that said section allows the mayor, who is charged with legislative functions, to exercise judicial functions also by presiding in the mayor's court?" Held, that the provision of the Constitution referred to relates to state legislative, judicial, and executive powers, and has no relation to municipal offices, created by the Legislature, in the discharge of strictly municipal functions. *Shafer v. 2. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

While there were some slight inaccuracies in the court's charge upon the subject of the mortality and annuity tables introduced in evidence, they were not of such a nature as to require the grant of a new trial.

3. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The charge of the court as a whole was full, fair, and complete, and no material error appears in the excerpts of the charge which are attacked as erroneous in the motion for a new trial.

4. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

No error appears in the other rulings of court complained of, and there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by J. D. Wilkinson against the Milledgeville Oil Mills. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

It was alleged in the petition that the plaintiff was employed in the mill of the defendant as a mill hand, and was subject to orders of the superintendent; that he was directed by the latter to sharpen certain knives upon an emery wheel operated by steam power, in connection with which there were mechanical devices of a nature unknown to petitioner; that while engaged in performing this work a piece of steel from one of the knives was broken off by the wheel and thrown into petitioner's right eye, thereby destroying the sight of the same; that petitioner was without experience in operating machinery of the character of that described in the petition, and this was known to the defendant; that plaintiff was directed by the superintendent to hold the knives against the wheel with his hand, and that to do so necessitated his standing in front of the wheel; that the frame carrying the emery wheel was defective, in that it had no proper feed or guide to regulate the pressure of the knife on the wheel, and that the guide did not properly place the knife, which defects were known to the defendant and unknown to petitioner; that the defendant was negligent in furnishing plaintiff with a defective and dangerous machine upon which to sharpen the knives, and in placing petitioner in a position of danger, and in failing to warn petitioner of the dangerous position and of the dangerous and defective character of the machine, and in failing to instruct petitioner as to the safe and proper use and operation of the machine; that the position occupied by petitioner in front of the wheel was the place indicated to him by the defendant's machinist and superintendent as the proper position; that the position thus indicated was a dangerous one, because it was where the wheel would likely cast fragments broken from the wheel or instrument being ground; that the danger of this position was not so obvious and plain that a person of petitioner's inexperience in the use of such a wheel or of machinery generally could have discovered it by the exercise of ordinary care, and petitioner had not discovered such danger prior to the injury complained of, but the danger was discernible to a person skilled in the use of machinery, and was known to defendant's superintendent and machinist; that because of the defects described, and the high speed with which the wheel was operated, the same was rendered dangerous, especially to an inexperienced operator; that petitioner was an ordinary mill hand, entirely without experience in the operation of machinery like that referred to; that the defendant was negligent, in that its superintendent and machinist directed plaintiff to adjust the knife to the stone by the use of a hand attachment, and did not notify and direct him to use the automatic adjuster then adjusted to the carriage of said machine.

The defendant demurred generally; also specially, upon the ground that it did not appear from the petition that it was the duty of the defendant to warn the plaintiff that the place was dangerous, nor why it was dangerous, nor in what the danger consisted, nor why such danger was not within the knowledge of the plaintiff, nor why the plaintiff did not have as full an opportunity to know of the danger as the defendant had; that the plaintiff did not state in what consisted the defect or danger of the machine furnished, nor whether the defect was latent or apparent, whether obvious or concealed, nor in what the same consisted; and that it did not appear from the petition what or why instructions were necessary as to the use of the machine, or why any warning of danger was required of the master to an adult servant.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Application of John P. Ross for writ of mandamus to M. Lettice, County Treasurer. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

J. E. Hall and John P. Ross, for plaintiff in error. Jos. H. Hall, Du Pont Guerry, and Warren Roberts, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. In 1871 the General Assembly created the road board of Bibb county, conferring upon that body ministerial authority over clearing and working the legally established public roads. The fiscal affairs of Bibb county are looked after by the county board of commissioners, and that board has also jurisdiction to lay out and establish a public road. The county board of commissioners established a public road, directing it to be entered upon the register of public roads, to be worked by the county road forces. The road board refused to obey this order, and certain citizens of Bibb county filed an application for mandamus against them to compel obedience to such order. The road board employed Mr. Ross, an attorney at law, to defend the application for mandamus. His defense was successful. Green v. Road Board of Bibb County, 126 Ga. 693, 56 S. E. 59. Mr. Ross presented a bill for his fees to the proper authorities of Bibb county, who refused to audit and pay the demand; and suit was instituted, which resulted in favor of the county. Thereupon the General Assembly passed an act authorizing and directing Bibb county to pay Mr. Ross' fee and certain expenses incurred by him in the litigation. The county commissioners, after the passage of this act, approved the demand and issued a warrant to the treasurer for its payment. The treasurer refused to pay the warrant, and Mr. Ross applied for a mandamus to compel him. The court refused to grant a mandamus absolute, and exception is taken thereto.

At the time of the enactment of the act of 1909 it had been adjudicated that Mr. Ross was not entitled to receive from the county's revenues compensation for defending the road board in certain litigation. This adjudication was based on the lack of power in the road board to employ counsel at the county's expense to defend the board in a mandamus proceeding instituted by citizens of the county to compel it to open and work a road purporting to have been established by order of the county board of commissioners. Ross v. Bibb County, 130 Ga. 585, 61 S. E. 465. Whatever right Mr. Ross may now have against the county to collect his fee and certain expenses must spring from the act of 1909. By the terms of the act Bibb county "is authorized and directed to pay to John P. Ross, of said county, the sum of seven hundred and fifty ($750) dollars for attorney's fees incurred by the road board of Bibb county in the case of John C. Green and T. B. West v. The Road Board of Bibb county, petition for mandamus, in the superior court of Bibb county, and fourteen dollars and seventy-five cents ($14.75) for costs incurred by said road board and advanced by him on a cross-bill of exceptions in said case." Acts 1909, p. 377. This act is assailed as being void, because violative of article 1, § 3, par. 2, of the Constitution (Civ. Code, § 5730), which declares that "no bill of attainder, ex post facto law, retroactive law, or law impairing the obligations of contracts, or making irrevocable grants of special privileges or immunities, shall be passed." Manifestly the act is retrospective, and intended, not only to confer power upon the county to pay the fee, but to create a liability against the county which theretofore did not exist. In construing a similar provision in the Texas Constitution, the Supreme Court of that state said that "retrospection, within the meaning of the Constitution, would be to give a right where none before existed, and, by relation back, to the party the benefit of it." Sutherland v. De Leon, 1 Tex. 250, 46 Am. Dec. 101. A statute is retroactive, in its legal sense, which creates a new obligation on transactions or considerations already past, or destroys or impairs vested rights. A statute does not operate retrospectively because it relates to antecedent facts, but if it is intended to affect transactions which occurred or rights which accrued before it became operative as such, and which ascribe to them essentially different effects, in view of the law at the time of their occurrence, it is retroactive in character. Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 39, 80 Am. Dec. 718; Evans v. Denver, 28 Colo. 193, 57 Pac. 696; Chicago, B. & Q. Railroad Co. v. State, 47 Neb. 549, 66 N. W. 624, 41 L. R. A. 481, 53 Am. St. Rep. 557; State v. Whittlesey, 17 Wash. 447, 50 Pac. 119; Maxwell v. Goetschius, 40 N. J. Law, 383, 29 Am. Rep. 242. Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Society for Propagating the Gospel v. Wheeler, 2 Gall. 189, Fed. Cas. No. 13,156, thus defines a retroactive law: "Upon principle every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new liability in respect to transactions or considerations already past, must be deemed retrospective."

This definition has been adopted in Rairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 207, and Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 5 Sup. Ct. 1014, 29 L. Ed. 240. The design of the act is to create a new obligation and to impose a new duty in respect to a transaction or consideration already past, and, under the overwhelming weight of authority, such a statute is retroactive. The Constitution forbids the General Assembly to pass retroactive laws, and the act of 1909 comes within the prohibition.

The statute was attacked as offending other provisions of the Constitution, and special facts were pleaded in bar of the plaintiff's remedy; but, in view of our holding that the act of 1909 is unconstitutional because it is retroactive, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the other features of the case.

Judgment affirmed. The other Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

TURNER v. CITY ELECTRIC RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 9, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 303*)—STREET RAILROADS—LANDINGS FOR PASSENGERS.

Generally the duty which the law imposes upon an ordinary railroad company to provide and maintain a safe place for landing its passengers is not applicable to a street car company, operating its line along a public street of a city and not stopping at regular places selected by it, or providing places for passengers to get on and off its cars, but stopping such cars at street crossings or various intermediate places upon signal from a passenger. Macon Ry. & Light Co. v. Vining, 120 Ga. 513, 48 S. E. 232. [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1231; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 303*)—STREET RAILROADS—DUTY TO PASSENGERS.

Under such circumstances it is the duty of the company, and its agents or employees representing it, to use due diligence to select a reasonably safe place for landing its passengers, and to make such selection with reference to getting off the car while it is at rest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1231; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 280*)—DUTY TO PASSENGERS—EXTRAORDINARY DILIGENCE.

The diligence due from a carrier of passengers for hire for the protection of its passengers is extraordinary diligence. Civ. Code, § 2266.

4. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—STREET RAILROADS—LANDING FOR PASSENGERS.

While the charge of the court, that "in that connection I charge you it is the duty of the defendant in this case to provide for passengers on their railway a reasonably safe place to alight from the car; that is, to get off of the cars"—was not accurately adjusted to the evidence in the case, standing alone, it might not require a new trial; but the judge nowhere in his charge instructed the jury as to the duty of the defendant company in regard to selecting a reasonably safe place for the landing of passengers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 348*)—INJURY TO PASSENGERS — CARE REQUIRED IN ALIGHTING FROM STREET CAR.

The judge should not inform the jury that ordinary care on the part of a passenger requires him to do some particular thing, such as looking out for danger.

(a) Charges that "if the plaintiff could have avoided the consequences of its negligence by ordinary care in looking out for danger and avoiding it," and that "if there was a safe place on one side of the car, and she chose to alight on the other side, which was not safe, and that unsafe condition would have been apparent to her, had she used ordinary care in looking out for danger, and by ordinary care she could have avoided injury, she could not recover," were not accurately expressed. The expressions "by ordinary care in looking out for danger and avoiding it," and "had she used ordinary care in looking out for danger," may have led the jury to understand that the court instructed them, as matter of law, that under the evidence ordinary care required the plaintiff to look out for danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1403-1407; Dec. Dig. § 348.*]

ELLIOTT et al. v. HIPP et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. July 27, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 70*)—POWER TO ISSUE—COMPELLING PERFORMANCE OF OFFICIAL DUTIES.

When duties are imposed on a judge of a superior court as an officer, another judge of the superior court has no power to issue a mandamus to compel the performance of such duties.

(a) The duty devolving upon the judge of a superior court under Pol. Code, §§ 50, 51, providing for the appointment of a board of county registrars, is an official act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 132; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 141*)—JUDGES (§ 49*)—DISQUALIFICATION—REVOCATION OF MANDAMUS.

Where the judge of another circuit to whom such application was presented refused a mandamus nisi against the judge named in the petition, and granted a restraining order and mandamus nisi against the registrars, it was proper for the judge granting the order and mandamus nisi to subsequently revoke the same and refuse to take further action on such application, for the reason that the same should be presented to the judge referred to in the application, who had jurisdiction to act thereon and who was not disqualified from so doing.

(a) The allegation that a judge is active in aiding one faction of a political party in a county to gain control of the party and the politics of the county, in order to further his political purposes and interests and those of a faction with which he is in sympathy, does not disqualify him from passing on an application to enjoin the registrars from filing a registration list alleged to have been prepared by them with the names of certain persons opposing such faction illegally left off for the purpose of gaining such control, and to compel them by mandamus to place such names on the registration list.

(b) While the petition and the amendment thereto aver political interest and activity on the part of the judge in whose jurisdiction the case falls, and an attempt and conspiracy on his part with others to dominate and control the politics of the county in his own interest and that of others, the allegations made do not show that he has any pecuniary interest in the result of the litigation, nor do they state any other facts sufficient to render him disqualified from presiding in the case.

Error from Superior Court, Gilmer County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Mandamus by E. S. Elliott and others against J. O. Hipp and others. From the judgment, plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

A. H. Burtz and Gober & Griffin, for plaintiffs in error. D. W. Blair and L. Z. Rosser, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. The plaintiffs in error addressed a petition to the superior court of Gilmer county, alleging that they were citizens and taxpayers of that county; that the judge of the circuit in which the county is situated had appointed a board of county registrars, all of whom belonged to one faction of a named political party. The petition prayed that a writ of mandamus issue against the judge of the circuit, requiring him to appoint a bipartisan board of registrars, composed of citizens belonging to both factions; and an injunction against the registrars, restraining them from filing with the clerk of the superior court a list of registration with the names left off which they had illegally omitted therefrom; and a writ of mandamus, requiring them to complete the list of registration as they were required to do by law, and to place thereon the names of petitioners and others whom they had illegally left off. The judge of the Atlanta circuit, to whom the petition was presented, refused to issue a mandamus nisi against the judge, but issued a restraining order against the registrars and an order that the registrars show cause before him at a named time why the mandamus absolute and injunction as prayed should not be granted. Upon the hearing the judge of the Atlanta circuit rejected an amendment offered by the plaintiffs, and revoked the restraining order and mandamus nisi theretofore granted against the registrars, and refused to take further action in the matter, on a motion made by the registrars on the ground that Judge Morris of the Blue Ridge circuit was not disqualified to act upon the application, and the judge of the Atlanta circuit had no jurisdiction to pass upon the same. The plaintiffs filed exceptions pendente lite to the refusal to issue a mandamus nisi against Judge Morris. They excepted to the order revoking the restraining order and mandamus nisi against the registrars, and to the refusal of the judge of the Atlanta circuit to entertain jurisdiction in the matter.

1. The provisions in reference to the appointment of county registrars are contained in Pol. Code, §§ 50, 51. Section 50 requires that the judge of the superior court of each county shall biennially appoint three upright and intelligent citizens of the county as county registrars, and that he shall have the power, with or without cause, to remove any registrar and appoint a successor. Section 51 makes it the duty of the judge not to appoint all the registrars from any one political interest or party, but to so regulate his appointments and removals as to maintain a bipartisan board. Clearly the duties defined in these sections relate to acts to be performed by the judge of the superior court in his capacity as such judge, and therefore are official functions pertaining to that office. The writ of mandamus implies that the authority issuing it is possessed of power to enforce obedience to its mandate. One superior court judge in this state has no more power than another, and no one of them has power to compel another to perform an official act. Shreve v. Pendleton, 129 Ga. 374, 58 S. E. 880.

2. The only relief sought against Judge Morris was that the court issue a writ of mandamus requiring him to appoint a bipartisan board of registrars. The prayer for process was that the defendants be required to appear "at a time fixed by the court." The petition was addressed to the superior court of Gilmer county, of which Morris is the judge, but was presented to a judge of the Atlanta circuit, who indorsed thereon that he took jurisdiction "by reason of the fact that Judge N. A. Morris is named as a party." The judge to whom the petition was presented refused to issue a mandamus nisi, or other process, against Morris, and therefore the latter never became a party defendant in the case; and it cannot be said that as judge of the superior court to which the petition was addressed he was disqualified from hearing the case because of being a party thereto. The action of the judge of the Atlanta circuit, refusing process against Judge Morris, left the case as one standing against the registrars named in the petition, in which the relief sought against them was an injunction to prevent them from filing with the clerk of the superior court the list of registration from which it was alleged they had illegally left off certain names, and a writ of mandamus requiring them to complete the list of registration as required by law and to place thereon the names of petitioners and others illegally omitted therefrom. Was the judge of the Blue Ridge circuit disqualified to pass on the application because of any of the matters alleged in the petition? Briefly stated, the gravamen of the case alleged against the registrars in the petition was a failure to discharge their duties as registrars, and the performance by them of illegal acts in connection with their duties as such in passing upon the qualification of citizens whose right to vote had been challenged and in preparing the registration lists; and on information and belief it was alleged that their illegal conduct was done at the instance and under the direction of Morris, the judge of the circuit. An amendment was offered alleging that since 1904 Morris had been in a conspiracy with one Cox to dominate and control the politics of the county, and stating various acts done by them in furtherance of this design. The allegations, that one who holds the office of judge of the superior court is an active partisan of one political faction in a county; that it is his desire and to his interest that such faction should dominate and control the politics of the county; that he is engaged in a conspiracy to that end; that he attempts to influence and control the acts of other officials with this purpose in view; and that such officials, at his instance and direction, are acting illegally in order to accomplish such purpose—are not such as to disqualify such judge from hearing and acting on a petition making such allegations, and seeking to restrain such officials from committing the illegal acts charged, and to compel them to perform the duties enjoined upon them by law. The above is especially true where, as in this case, the allegations regarding the conduct of the judge were made on information and belief, and were not positively verified. It is to be presumed that, in hearing and acting upon an application of the character outlined above, the judge will not disregard his solemn oath as an official charged with the just administration of the law, but will accord a fair and impartial hearing to the petitioners and grant them whatever legal relief they may show themselves entitled to receive. In 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 738, and in 23 Cyc. 582, it is stated that, in the absence of statutory provisions, bias or prejudice on the part of a judge does not disqualify him. The only provision of our law on the subject of the disqualification of a judge is set forth in Civ. Code, § 4045, which provides "that no judge * * * can sit in any cause or proceeding in which he is peculiarly interested, or related to either party within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity, nor of which he has been of counsel, nor in which he has presided in any inferior judiciary when his ruling or decision is the subject of review, without the consent of all the parties in interest." In 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 738, 740, it is stated that it is the general rule that statutory grounds of disqualification are exclusive. Under the provisions of the code section above referred to, Morris was not disqualified to act upon the petition, as the allegations thereof do not show that he was peculiarly interested in the cause, or that he came within any of the other provisions relating to disqualification.

After the judge of the Atlanta circuit to whom the petition was presented refused a mandamus nisi against Morris, judge of the Blue Ridge circuit, as the allegations in the petition did not show that Judge Morris was disqualified from acting thereon, it would have been proper for the judge of the Atlanta circuit to have refused to grant a restraining order and a mandamus nisi against the registrars; but after having granted such order and mandamus nisi against them, it was proper to sustain the motion made by the defendant registrars and to revoke the restraining order and mandamus nisi against them, and to refuse to entertain jurisdiction in the matter. No error was committed in refusing to allow the amendment offered by the plaintiffs, and in sustaining the motion of the registrars.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

MAYS v. REDMAN BROS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 9, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EJECTMENT (§ 9*)—TITLE TO SUPPORT ACTION.

Persons claiming to have bought land, fully paid the purchase money, gone into possession, and erected valuable improvements, brought suit to recover it, and damages on account of destruction of the improvements, against an alleged disseisor, averring that the persons from whom they bought had conveyed to another, who had conveyed to the defendant, and that both of these grantees took with notice of plaintiffs' rights. Held, that the plaintiffs showed a sufficient title to authorize the maintenance of such an action against the defendant, who thus obtained a conveyance. Grace v. Means, 129 Ga. 638, 59 S. E. 811.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 16-29; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§§ 238, 239*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

In such a case, if the defendant was a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice, he would be protected from the equitable owner, even if his grantor had notice of the equitable rights of the plaintiff; or, if his grantor was a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice, the defendant would be protected, even if he himself bought with notice. Civ. Code, § 3938.

(a) Under the evidence, and in view of the general charge, an omission to charge distinctly that, if the first grantee purchased without notice, the grantee under him would be protected, whether he had notice or not, would not alone require a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 580-600; Dec. Dig. §§ 238, 239.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 393*)—IMPEACHMENT—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE ON FORMER TRIAL.

After laying the proper foundation, a brief of evidence, approved by the presiding judge as a correct brief of the evidence introduced on a former trial of the same case, and filed under his order as a part of the record in connection with a motion for a new trial then made, was admissible for the purpose of impeaching a witness who testified on the last trial, by showing that he testified differently on the former trial. City of Columbus v. Ogletree, 102 Ga. 293 (5), 29 S. E. 749; Owen v. Palmour, 111 Ga. 885 (2), 36 S. E. 969.

4. EJECTMENT (§ 90*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

It appeared that the persons under whom both the plaintiff and the defendant claimed became bankrupt; that the land, together with certain machinery thereon, was included in the appraisal of the bankrupt's property; that the referee issued a notice that, unless sufficient cause should be shown to the contrary, he would pass an order of sale; that one of the present plaintiffs interposed a claim to the machinery, and at the same time the person now alleged to have purchased with notice of the plaintiff's equitable rights interposed a claim to the land. Held, that there was no error in admitting the claim interposed by one of the plaintiffs, in order to show that it did not include the land, but rejecting the claim interposed by the other party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 254-277; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

5. EJECTMENT (§ 90*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Where the trustee in bankruptcy of the persons under whom both parties to the present case claim brought suit to recover the land and machinery against the present plaintiffs and the persons under whom the present defendant holds as a grantee, and the defendants in that action filed a joint plea, duly verified, in which it was alleged that the land belonged to such other person and that the machinery belonged to the present plaintiffs, a certified copy of such plea was admissible as tending to show that the plaintiffs admitted that they were not then the owners of the land.

6. EJECTMENT (§ 86*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action of the character described in the first headnote above, the burden of showing both a perfect equitable title to the land and also notice to the subsequent purchasers rested on the plaintiffs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 238-245; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

7. PROPERTY (§ 10*)—ACTUAL POSSESSION—NOTICE.

Actual possession of land is notice of whatever right or title the occupant has.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Property, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

8. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The other grounds of the motion for a new trial, when considered in connection with the evidence and the entire charge, are not such as to require a reversal. As there is a reversal on rulings of law, and a new trial will be had, the sufficiency of the evidence is not discussed.

Error from Superior Court, Butts County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

CASWELL v. MOTEN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 340*)— SALE OF PERSONALTY — INTERPOSITION OF CLAIM—EVIDENCE.

The verdict was not authorized by the evidence, and the court, therefore, erred in overruling the motion for a new trial, wherein this ground was alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

Error from Superior Court, Liberty County; P. E. Seabrooke, Judge.

Application by J. M. Caswell, administrator, for leave to sell personal property. Mary Moten interposed a claim. Verdict for claimant, and the administrator brings error. Reversed.

J. M. Caswell, as administrator of the estate of Isaac Futch, deceased, obtained an order to sell personal property of the estate and thereupon undertook to sell certain cattle as the property of such estate to which cattle Mary Moten interposed a claim alleging that the cattle belonged to her. The verdict was in favor of the claimant, whereupon the administrator made a motion for a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was contrary to law and contrary to the evidence. This motion was overruled, and the administrator excepted.

Upon the trial the claimant testified: "Isaac Futch was my stepfather. * * * These cattle belonged to my mother. She got them from her father's estate. Isaac Futch was in possession of them when he died. My mother left him in possession when she died, and I let him remain in such possession. She has been dead about 18 or 20 years. I have one sister, Nicey Williams. Isaac Futch was in possession from before my mother's death till he died, about 2 years ago. He returned them and marked them as his own, and when he sold beeves would buy others in place of them. I am married, and have not lived with Futch since my mother died. I am about 42 years old."

Frank Sheppard, introduced by claimant, testified: "I know that Isaac Futch sold a red cow that his first wife got from her father's estate, and bought another one in its place. He told me that he raised 11 head from that cow." A few weeks before he died he "told me that there was 11 head of cattle at his place descended from the white-faced black cow. Mary Moten's mother gave her the red cow, which was traded and replaced by the black cow with white face."

Stephen Martin testified, in behalf of claimant: "I bought a red cow from Isaac Futch in the lifetime of his first wife, * * * and he bought one in the place of it from Frank Sheppard—a white-faced black cow from which these cattle in dispute descended. I don't know anything about paying for the cows."

Jesse Futch, introduced by plaintiff, testified: "I know the cattle in question. They belonged to Isaac Futch in his lifetime. * * * He bought one of the original cows from which these were raised with money that I loaned him. He had been in possession about 18 or 20 years, and marked them in his own mark, and when he sold beeves he used the money for himself, and I never knew of any one claiming them except him. Mary Moten came to me soon after he died, and asked me if these cattle didn't come from that [which] belonged to her mother, and I told her they did not, and she said, 'That lets me out of it.' I know the cattle that his first wife got from her father's estate. I know that the red cow did not raise a single calf. He sold the red cow to Stephen Martin, and told me repeatedly that he had never been paid for her. This was the only cow that she got from her father's estate."

Ophella Futch testified, in behalf of plaintiff: "I was Isaac Futch's second wife, and lived with him 4 years before he died. He was in possession of these cattle, marked them in his own mark, and used them for himself; and no one ever claimed them but him."

Ben A. Way, for plaintiff in error. Donald Fraser and S. B. Brewton, for defendant in error.

FISH, O. J. Judgment reversed. The other Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

FOSTER v. STATE. (No. 2,751.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. July 25, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES (§§ 4, 7*) — "CHEATING AND SWINDLING"—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

The offense of cheating and swindling consists of some false pretense, device, trick, or contrivance fraudulently made or enacted by the defendant with the intent to deceive the prosecutor or the public, so successfully accomplished that the prosecutor or some member of the public is in fact deceived thereby, and suffers loss or damage. If the false pretense consists in a representation, it must relate in part at least, and materially, to a present or past fact or state of facts, and not consist merely in a false promise or statement as to something to happen in the future.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 13-18, 25; Dec. Dig. §§ 4, 7.*]

2. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 7*)—CHEATING AND SWINDLING—VALUE OF THING OBTAINED.

A person may be guilty of cheating and swindling in a transaction in which both parties know that they are violating or about to violate the law, provided that the one therein cheats and swindles the other out of something of value. But neither counterfeit money itself nor the possession thereof is a thing of value; and therefore one person cannot cheat and swindle the other by representing to him that if he will go to certain expense he can procure at a certain time and place a designated amount of counterfeit money, though the latter fails to get the expected spurious currency.

(a) There may be an exception to this rule in a case where a person of superior or sharpened intellect or cunning imposes upon the credulity of a very ignorant or weak-minded person, and secures the latter's money or property; but the present case does not fall within any such exception.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. WORDS AND PHRASES—"STELLIONATE." In Scots and civil law the word "stellionate" denotes all such crimes in which fraud is an ingredient, as have no special names to distinguish them, and are not defined by any written law, and hence Pen. Code 1895, § 670, providing that one using any deceitful means or artful practice other than those mentioned in the Code by which an individual or the public is defrauded and cheated shall be punished as for a misdemeanor may be said to be the statute against stellionates.

Error from City Court of Hall County; Geo. K. Looper, Judge.

Harry Foster was convicted of cheating and swindling, and he brings error. Reversed.

B. P. Gaillard, Jr., for plaintiff in error.
Fletcher M. Johnson, Sol., for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was prosecuted and convicted of cheating and swindling. It seems from this record that there was in Gainesville a grass widow named Mrs. Robertson, and that she had as an intimate acquaintance the defendant, Foster, who was a young married man, connected with some kind of a show. According to Mrs. Robertson's version of the transaction here involved, Foster told her that he represented a Cincinnati company which organized lodges and furnished counterfeit money to its members; that he could cause her to be initiated by her paying the sum of $100, and that she would receive $500 in counterfeit money; but that she would have to go to Jacksonville, Fla. (where the company's agent would be on January 12-14), to be initiated and get the money. It was understood between them that they were to leave Gainesville secretly, so, on the night of January 12th, she privately met him at the railroad station. Here she gave him $10 to purchase her ticket to Atlanta. He purchased it for $3.15 and offered her back the change, but she told him to keep it for her. In Atlanta she gave him $20 with which to buy her a mileage book, and he bought that for her, putting the book in his pocket after securing her transportation to Jacksonville from it. Arriving in Jacksonville next day, she gave him the $100 with which he was to get her the $500 in spurious currency. He did not come back. She was left penniless, but borrowed enough money from a policeman to get back home. She returned from Jacksonville on the same day she arrived there.

The defendant's statement was that the affair was purely a meretricious escapade; that he and the woman left secretly and went to Jacksonville merely on a pleasure trip of a libidinous nature; that she gave him her money to keep for her, because she had no safe means of keeping it herself; that on the day of their arrival in Jacksonville, after they had spent awhile in the room they were jointly occupying, he went down to the bar where he met a number of old acquaintances; that he there became involved in a fight in which he was severely cut and slashed with a knife, and he was sent to the hospital where he was confined for some time; that Mrs. Robertson, taking fright at what had happened, left him and returned to Gainesville. No other witness testified.

What the truth of this affair is, we, of course, do not know. Our personal views on that subject are not material. The jury's finding has given credence to the woman's version, and we must accept that as conclusive of the facts. But do the facts make a case of cheating and swindling in Hall County in which Gainesville is located? The accusation was apparently based on section 670 of the Penal Code of 1895, which provides: "Any person using any deceitful means or artful practice, other than those which are mentioned in this Code, by which an individual, or the public, is defrauded and cheated, shall be punished as for a misdemeanor." In Scots and civil law, the word "stellionate" is used to denote all such crimes in which fraud is an ingredient, as have no special names to distinguish them, and are not defined by any written law. This section may, therefore, be said to be the statute against stellionates. However, the elements essential to the maintenance of a prosecution under it are tolerably well defined by the decisions of the court. There must be a false pretense, device, trick, or contrivance fraudulently made or enacted by the defendant with intent to deceive the prosecutor or person injured, so successfully accomplished that the prosecutor or person injured is in fact deceived and thereby suffers loss or damage. If the false pretense consists in a representation, it must relate (in part at least, and materially so) to a present or past fact or state of facts, and not consist merely in a false promise as to something to happen in the future. If the representation relied on by the state in this case be that there was a Cincinnati company forming lodges and selling counterfeit money to its initiates, the state did not prove that the representation was false. If the representation relied on be the statement that a representative of that company would be in Jacksonville on a named day and would deliver the money, the prosecution cannot be maintained, for that related to a future matter.

But beyond all this, the prosecution should not lie for the offense of cheating and swindling under the facts of this case. How was Mrs. Robertson swindled? We must eliminate all transactions occurring out of Hall county, except in so far as they illustrate and give legal point to what occurred there. Was Mrs. Robertson deceived in Hall county? Yes; she was deceived into believing that if she would go to Jacksonville, Fla., she could get $500 in spurious currency in return for $100. She makes no complaint of not getting all she expected to get out of the trip and in return for the money she expended in connection therewith, except that she did not get the counterfeit money. The transaction in Jacksonville whereby she was induced to turn the $100 over to him must be eliminated; for that occurred in Florida. So the question resolves itself into this: Can the defendant be convicted of cheating and swindling because he falsely represented to the prosecutrix that the existing conditions were such that, if she would go to certain expense, she could buy a certain amount of counterfeit money, and she, believing him, incurred that expense and did not get the counterfeit money? The question must be answered in the negative. If the representation had proved true, she would have been in a worse fix than she was when they proved untrue. The very possession of the counterfeit money would have made her a felon. As it was, when she did not get it, she was simply left as a foolish woman with less money and more experience; and, in legal contemplation at least, even this is better than being a felon.

We are not to be understood as holding that cheating and swindling cannot be predicated of an unlawful transaction. There are many transactions for which the state can prosecute where the parties by reason of the uncleanness of their hands, would not be allowed to maintain a civil action. Thus, although the sale of liquor is a crime in this state, yet if the keeper of a blind tiger should represent to a prospective purchaser that the contents of a bottle was corn whisky, and should sell it as such, receiving therefor the purchaser's money, when in fact the bottle contained water only, he could be held for cheating and swindling. Or, if in a similar case the prospective purchaser should palm off on the keeper of a blind tiger in the nighttime a worthless slip of paper as a dollar bill, and receive in exchange therefor a quart of whisky, the person so deceiving the seller of the liquor could be convicted of cheating and swindling. However, it must be noticed in each of these illustrations that the person deceived parts with something of value. It is true that in this state liquor cannot be said to have any market value in the full sense of the words, yet it is a thing of value. But in no sense is counterfeit money a thing of value. The very possession of it is criminal. It is a violation of law to make it, to own it, or use it. It is utterly without value. Suppose that the defendant had said to the prosecutrix: "Your sworn enemy is in Jacksonville, if you will go there with me and pay me $100, I will show that enemy to you that you may poison him." Suppose the defendant's statement were a lie, could the transaction be treated as cheating and swindling? The privilege of poisoning one's enemy is not a thing of value.

This case is also to be distinguished from those cases in which the defendant, by imposing on the credulity or weak-mindedness of the prosecutor has caused him to pay money for something which could not be of value, but which the prosecutor was led to believe was in fact so. In such cases a prosecution for cheating and swindling may lie. But in this case, the prosecutrix acted with her eyes open; she admitted that she knew that the money she was to get would not be good money.

Plainly, the conviction cannot rest on the failure of the defendant to return the change out of the $10 bill which he received from the prosecutrix at Gainesville to buy her railroad ticket to Atlanta. She asked him to keep that for her. If he failed to return it on demand, the criminality of the transaction might be investigated under an indictment for larceny after trust, but not under this accusation for cheating and swindling. However consummate the defendant's knavery may appear, however pitiable is the plight of the prosecutrix, we are constrained to hold that the defendant's conviction must be set aside. And after all—

"When lovely woman stoops to folly,
And finds too late that men betray,
What charm can soothe her melancholy?
What art can wash her guilt away?"

Judgment reversed.

GIBBS v. STATE. (No. 2,398.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. July 26, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. BURGLARY (§ 4)—CHARACTER OF BUILDING—"DWELLING HOUSE"—RAILROAD CAR.

A railroad car may be treated as a "dwelling house," and may be the subject of burglary, when it is used exclusively for the purposes of habitation.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2285-2295; vol. 8, p. 7646.]

2. BURGLARY (§ 41*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The defendant's guilt of the crime of burglary being wholly dependent upon the inference arising from the possession of goods stolen at the time of the burglary, and this possession being shown by the uncontradicted and unimpeached evidence to be lawful and consistent with the defendant's innocence of burglary, the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and a new trial should have been granted. Hampton v. State, 6 Ga. App. 778, 65 S. E. 816.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 94-109; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Henry Gibbs was convicted of burglary, and he brings error. Reversed.

M. B. Eubanks and W. B. Mebane, for plaintiff in error. John W. Bale, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant in the court below was convicted of the offense of burglary. He moved for a new trial upon general grounds, and now excepts to the overruling of his motion.

Evidence on the part of the state showed that the prosecutor occupied a railroad car, which had been placed at a point called Atlanta Junction, as a dwelling house. "He lived, ate, and slept in this car." The car was placed there for the prosecutor and other section hands to live in. The car was entered on May 21st through one of the windows, and a certain suit case, some shoes, a coat, and pants were taken therefrom while the prosecutor was absent at his work. The pants were speckled or spotted color, the coat was black with stripes in it, and the shoes were low-quartered men's shoes, No. 9. About two weeks after these goods were taken, the defendant came up to the car at Atlanta Junction, in the presence of the prosecutor and several other men, wearing the pants and shoes which had been stolen, and talked "to the boys." The prosecutor "fool-ed him down to Mr. Christopher's house," and he was arrested. This is substantially the state's case as shown by the testimony. A witness, who was not sought to be impeached by proof of general bad character or by contradictory statements, and whose testimony was not contradicted by any evidence in the case, testified that on the 7th day of June (following the burglary) she saw one Peter Baker sell the defendant a pair of shoes and pants similar to those that were lost for 60 cents. The other persons mentioned by this witness as being present at the time of the transaction were not introduced by the defendant; but there was no conflict between this testimony of the defendant's witness, which accounts for the defendant's possession of the goods, and the testimony of the prosecutor. On the contrary, the prosecutor himself testified that he knew Peter Baker; that Peter lived in the quarters, and perhaps knew that he had those things in the car.

1. A railroad car, which is withdrawn from service as such, and is used exclusively for the purposes of habitation, as the car in this case was shown to be, may be so included within the term "dwelling house" as to be the subject of burglary, and one who breaks in or enters it for the purpose of committing a felony or a larceny therein may properly be convicted of burglary, instead of the lesser offense of breaking and entering a railroad car.

2. Upon the evidence submitted, the conviction of the defendant was not authorized. The corpus delicti was proved, it is true; but the only circumstance connecting the defendant with the perpetration of the offense was the possession of part of the stolen property, and this possession was so explained by uncontradicted testimony as necessarily to rebut the inference arising from possession of the stolen property. The decision must be controlled by the ruling in Hampton v. State, 6 Ga. App. 778, 65 S. E. 816, and similar cases. If the witness who corroborated the defendant's statement had been impeached or discredited in any way, we should not feel authorized to disturb the verdict. If there were any circumstance which would supply a reason why the jury did not believe this witness, we would not interfere. If there had been any testimony that the witness was unworthy of belief on account of general bad character, or in a conflict between different portions of the witness' own testimony, if the witness had made contradictory statements either previously or upon the trial, or if there had been any evidence directly or circumstantially in conflict with her testimony, the verdict of the jury would be authorized; but a jury cannot arbitrarily disregard testimony which is wholly unimpeached and not contradicted, unless it is in relation to a matter which is unreasonable or impossible.

If, upon another trial, the witness is shown by testimony to be unworthy of credit for any legal reason, or by any method provided by law, the testimony delivered upon this trial might be discredited, and the jury authorized to disregard it; but in the absence of some testimony to this effect upon the trial now under review it appears to us that the jury merely arbitrarily disregarded uncontradicted and unimpeached evidence, and it is beyond their power to do this in any case.

Judgment reversed.

ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO. v. BLALOCK. (No. 2,644.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. July 5, 1910. Rehearing Denied July 19, 1910.)

1. PLEADING (§§ 11, 252*)—MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 80*)—ACTION FOR WAGES—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

The court did not err in overruling the general demurrer; and, the objection made by the only special demurrer which was well taken having been cured by amendment, there was likewise no error in overruling the special demurrers and in refusing to dismiss the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 31, 742; Dec. Dig. §§ 11, 252;* Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 113; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1061*)—REVIEW—NONSUIT.

An exception based upon the refusal of the court to award a nonsuit will not be considered, where, subsequently thereto, the case is submitted to the jury, and, a verdict being rendered against the defendant, a motion for a new trial is made which presents the complaint that the verdict is contrary to the evidence and without evidence to support it. Where a motion for a new trial is based upon this ground, the court will review the sufficiency of the evidence as a whole, in the light of the verdict, and will not merely consider the sufficiency of the plaintiff's case to withstand the nonsuit at the particular stage at which the motion for nonsuit was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4210; Dec. Dig. § 1061.*]

3. WORK AND LABOR (§§ 18, 28*)—EFFECT OF EXPRESS CONTRACT—EXTRA WORK.

Even though a trainhand was employed under a schedule of wages to serve as a flagman between two designated points, this fact would not prevent his recovering on a quantum meruit for additional services not provided for in the schedule of rates, if he was directed to perform such additional services and did perform them satisfactorily. Evidence that an employer pays a stipulated amount for certain services may afford a basis for the conclusion that the rendition of one-half of the given service would be worth one-half of the amount at which the whole service was valued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Cent. Dig. §§ 28, 55; Dec. Dig. §§ 18, 28.*]

4. PAYMENT (§ 74*)—EVIDENCE—RECEIPT.

A receipt, being only prima facie evidence of payment, is subject to be denied or explained by parol evidence; and, if the explanation given is satisfactory, the receipt may be disregarded by the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 226-231; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

Error from City Court of Tifton; R. Eve, Judge.

Action by William Blalock against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. E. Simpson and Bennet & Branch, for plaintiff in error. C. C. Thomas, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. 1. Blalock brought suit upon account against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, attaching to his petition an itemized statement of the services rendered by him as flagman, and allowing credit for certain payments made him by the defendant, and showing a balance in his favor of $184.95. He alleged that he went into the employ of the defendant company under their schedule of wages for trainmen and yardmen which was effective March 1, 1907, and under which, as he alleged, all flagmen of the company worked and received their pay. He alleged: That the schedule of wages for flagmen on local freight trains between Tifton and Waycross for one continuous trip a day was $45 per month. The schedule of wages between Waycross and Brunswick for a round trip each day was $45 each month. That he was required and directed by the defendant to make the run between Tifton and Waycross each day, for which he was entitled under the schedule to be paid at the rate of $45 per month, and also, in addition to this, as he was required to make one-half of the round trip between Waycross and Brunswick each day in addition to the regular daily run between Tifton and Waycross, he was entitled for this half round trip to one-half of the amount set forth in the schedule of wages for a round trip, to wit, at the rate of $22.50 per month. He alleged that during the term of his service he earned $525.00, but had only been paid $340.05, leaving a balance of $184.95 due him, as appeared by his statement of account attached. Plaintiff further alleged a demand for payment, and averred that when he placed his claim in the hands of an attorney, and demand was made by his attorney, he was immediately discharged because said demand was made.

The defendant demurred to the petition generally, upon the ground that it failed to set forth a cause of action and also demurred specially, upon several grounds, which it is not necessary to state in extenso. As to that portion of the petition which alleged that the petitioner was immediately discharged because of his demand, the court sustained a demurrer based upon the ground that this impertinent and irrelevant statement was calculated to prejudice the rights of the defendant. In response to this ruling, that portion of the petition was stricken by the plaintiff. When this had been done, we are of the opinion that the trial judge properly refused to dismiss the petition. It is certainly not subject to a general demurrer. Nor do we think that the plaintiff was required to attach a schedule of wages adopted. The contents of this schedule was not a matter of pleading but of evidence. So far as the petition was concerned, the definite and detailed reference to the schedule gave the defendant ample opportunity to object to it or defend against it in case it was introduced.

The second special demurrer, based upon the ground that the petition does not allege that the schedule did not provide for wages for a one-way run, as run by the plaintiff between Tifton and Brunswick, was, for a similar reason, not well taken; and furthermore the demurrer was without merit because it was naturally inferable that the schedule did not provide for a one-way run; from the fact that the plaintiff stated that the provision of the schedule upon that subject was for a double-run return trip, or a run each way. It was likewise immaterial, as held by the court below, in what manner the schedule was promulgated, and the statement that all of the flagmen of the company worked and received pay under the schedule might well be held irrelevant; but it is not objectionable as being a conclusion of the pleader. It is plainly a statement of fact. The statement that the plaintiff was entitled to one-half the amount set forth in the schedule of wages for the round trip, viz., the rate of $22.50 per month for making one-half of the round trip, is not a conclusion of the pleader in one sense, while it may be in another. It is more properly a statement of the pleader of the amount of the plaintiff's demand as the net result of his figures shown by the statement of the account and the facts previously detailed in the petition. Such a summary of the plaintiff's case is always allowable, although it may be opinionative. The plaintiff who sues for $5,000 damages merely states that in his opinion the injury has damaged him $5,000, basing this opinion upon the antecedent facts which he alleges to exist. The court did not err in overruling the general demurrer, and, the objection to the only special demurrer which was well taken having been cured by amendment, there was likewise no error in overruling the special demurrers and in refusing to dismiss the petition.

2. At the conclusion of the evidence for the plaintiff the defendant made a motion for nonsuit, which was overruled, and the case proceeded to trial, resulting in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. This court has several times held that an exception based upon a refusal to allow a nonsuit is nugatory if the case proceeds to trial and the complaint is thereafter made by the defendant that the finding of the jury was without evidence to support it. In such a case, even if the court erred in not awarding a nonsuit at the time the motion was made, yet if, considering the evidence as a whole, the verdict is right, the error becomes immaterial. In such event it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in opening the case to further testimony; and, even though some of the testimony in support of the verdict may have come from the defendant himself, it would be immaterial if the evidence, taken as a whole, supported the verdict of the jury. An exception based upon the refusal of the court to award a nonsuit will not be considered where, subsequently thereto, the case is submitted to the jury, and, a verdict being rendered against the defendant, a motion for a new trial is made which presents the complaint that the verdict is contrary to the evidence and without evidence to support it. Where a motion for a new trial is based upon this ground, the court will review the sufficiency of the evidence as a whole, in the light of the verdict, and will not merely consider the sufficiency of the plaintiff's case to withstand the motion for a nonsuit at the particular stage at which the motion for nonsuit was made. In Ellenberg v. Southern Ry. Co., 5 Ga. App. 390, 63 S. E. 240, we held that the discretion of the judge should be liberally exercised in behalf of allowing the whole case to be presented, and that, "except in rare cases, as where the defendant would be subjected to unfairness or undue prejudice, or where the plaintiff has given evidence of intention deliberately to trifle with the court, or to delay the progress of the trial, it is an abuse of discretion for the trial judge to refuse to allow the plaintiff to produce additional evidence sufficient to avoid a nonsuit." As, in the broader light of our advancing intelligence, we more plainly see that the object of a trial is to reach the truth, the less is a progressive profession inclined to tolerate the observance of any technical rule which will tend only to test the skill and vigilance of the counsel, when it is at the expense of the real justice of the case.

3. Upon the trial the plaintiff testified that he was employed as a flagman, and that at the time of his employment the schedule of rates (which was later introduced in evidence) prescribed a salary of $45 per month for a daily run between Tifton and Waycross and $45 per month for a run each way (that is, going daily and returning the same day) between Waycross and Brunswick. There was no express contract (according to the plaintiff's testimony) between himself and the company, and the amount of his wages was only inferable from the amount fixed by the schedule. He testified that two crews were doing the work which, according to the schedule, should be performed by three crews of trainmen. In this latter statement he was corroborated by other testimony in the case. On the 8th of each month during the period of his service he was paid certain amounts which, upon examination, we find to be correct, if his wages were calculated as being $45 per month, but which would not be payment for the time served by him in any of the months if, as testified by him, he performed additional services to those which (as prescribed by the schedule) would entitle him to $45 per month. The whole point in the case is whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover anything on a quantum meruit for a half run per day between Waycross and Brunswick, because the schedule is silent as to any such service as this. The schedule of wages allows trainmen $45 per month for a daily trip between Waycross and Brunswick and return. It says nothing as to the compensation of a trainman who, in addition to making the daily trip between Tifton and Waycross, is required to go on to Brunswick, and the next day return from Brunswick to Waycross, serving the company as a trainman before proceeding on his regular run from Waycross to Tifton. It is undisputed that the plaintiff performed this service. In other words, he made a flagman and a half. He received pay for one flagman. The company refused to pay him for the additional service performed between Waycross and Brunswick, although his service, in the way the trains were arranged, and performance of like service on the part of another flagman, enabled the company to dispense with the third flagman, who was ordinarily required, and who, according to the testimony, was "cut out."

Counsel for the railroad company takes the position that the adoption of the schedule of rates, and the entrance of the plaintiff into the employment of the company under the schedule of rates, created a contract which precludes the plaintiff from recovering anything upon a quantum meruit. The trial judge seems to have entertained a contrary view, and we concur in the opinion, evidently entertained by him, that the mere fact that the contract (if one may be said to have been made by the schedule of rates) fixed the value of the plaintiff's service as a flagman between Tifton and Waycross, would not prevent him from receiving a proper compensation without regard to the contract, for any extra services he might perform, not included in the contract. As the plaintiff testified that he was directed to perform the service of a flagman between Waycross and Brunswick, it is undisputed that the defendant knew he was performing it, and received the benefit of his services. If the schedule of rates contained no provision for this service, is it just and right that the defendant, for that reason, should receive services in addition to those prescribed by the schedule of rates without compensation? We think not. It is true that there is evidence to the effect that the plaintiff agreed to perform the entire service rendered by him between Tifton and Brunswick for $45 per month; and, if this was the truth, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything for services performed by him in addition to those provided for by the schedule of rates. But the plaintiff positively denied the testimony to that effect, and the credibility of the witnesses, and the as-certainment of the truth as to this point, was a matter exclusively for determination by the jury.

Granting that the jury were authorized to find that the plaintiff performed services in addition to the services prescribed for the run between Tifton and Waycross, and the value of which was fixed by the schedule of rates, and that he was entitled to some compensation therefor, we do not see that there could be any fairer means of ascertaining the true value of such extra services than that adopted by the jury. The schedule of rates was introduced before the jury without objection; and, in fact, the defendant had demurred to the petition because it was not attached thereto. This schedule of rates showed that the valuation fixed by the company upon a run between Waycross and Brunswick, going both ways in one day, was $45 per month. The plaintiff testified that he was required to go one way each day. Were not the jury authorized, from these facts, to infer, as well as if it had been a matter of expressed testimony, that if two trips between Waycross and Brunswick daily, for a month, were worth $45 a month, one daily trip over the same points would be worth one-half as much? It seems so to us, and therefore, agreeing with the contention of the counsel for the plaintiff in error that the plaintiff in the court below was required to establish the value of his extra services by quantum meruit, we think the trial judge properly overruled the motion for a new trial, over the objections that the evidence was improperly admitted on the trial, and that the verdict was not sufficiently supported by the testimony.

4. Considerable stress is laid upon the fact that Blalock signed the payroll of the defendant company, acknowledging receipt in full of all the amounts claimed by him, except $15.10 which was tendered him by the company. Blalock did not deny signing these receipts; and they might have afforded a conclusive circumstance to rebut every contention he maintained with regard to what he should receive for his services. The receipts might also have served to satisfy the jury that there had been complete accord and satisfaction. However, Blalock explained these receipts, as he had a right to do; and, in view of the finding of the jury, it must be held that his explanation was satisfactory. Under section 5208 of our Civil Code of 1895, "receipts for money are always only prima facie evidence of payment, and may be denied or explained by parol." According to Blalock's testimony, he never knew that the receipts purported to be in full, and he was constantly asking for payment for his extra services and expecting to receive it. According to his testimony, the payments were mutually understood to be only partial payments. According to the verdict of the jury, this was the truth of the case. The trial judge was satisfied with the finding of the jury, and it is not within our power to say that the verdict did not speak the truth. Judgment affirmed.

HILTON v. SYLVANIA & G. R. CO.

(No. 2,131.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. July 5, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 133*)—RIGHTS OF STOCK-HOLDERS—TRANSFER OF STOCK.

The owner and holder of a certificate of stock has the right to have the stock transferred into his name on the books of the corporation, and the illegal refusal of the president of the corporation to permit the transfer makes the corporation liable for any damages resulting from the refusal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 513-520; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 242*)—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the material issues in a case depend upon the consideration of documentary evidence, the court should not charge the jury that they "should receive the evidence from the witnesses on the witness stand." In such case an instruction of this restrictive character tends to mislead and confuse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 569-576; Dec. Dig. § 242.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 133*)—REFUSAL TO TRANSFER STOCK—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

A petition to recover damages from a corporation for the refusal of the president of the corporation to allow a proper transfer of stock upon the books of the corporation must contain allegations of facts showing damage from the refusal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 133*)—REFUSAL OF CORPORATION TO TRANSFER STOCK.

The illegal refusal of a corporation to transfer stock to the name of the owner constitutes a conversion of the stock by the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 513; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 133*)—REFUSAL OF CORPORATION TO TRANSFER STOCK—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where a corporation converts stock by illegally refusing to transfer it on its books to the name of the owner, the measure of damages is the value of the stock at the time of demand and refusal.

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 133*)—REFUSAL TO TRANSFER STOCK—LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF OFFICERS.

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 1861, providing that a corporation is liable for acts of its officers in the sphere of their appropriate duties, a corporation is liable for the illegal refusal of its president to allow the proper transfer of stock to the name of the true owner.

Error from City Court of Sylvania; H. A. Boykin, Judge.

Action by L. H. Hilton against the Sylvania & Girard Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Hilton brought suit for damages against the Sylvania & Girard Railroad Company, alleging, in substance: That on July 5, 1906, he was the owner of five shares of capital stock of the defendant company, and was the holder of the stock certificate representing these shares. That this certificate had been originally issued to one Ennels, from whom he bought the stock, and who delivered the certificate to him. That on said date the plaintiff had an offer from a third person for the purchase of four of these shares. That the defendant had no by-law providing the mode in which transfers of stock should be made, but on the face of each of the stock certificates was printed the following: "Transferable only on the books of the corporation by the holder thereof, in person or by attorney, upon the surrender of this certificate properly indorsed." That the plaintiff, in order to make delivery of the four shares for which he had an offer of purchase, called upon the president of the defendant company to transfer this stock to his name, and stood ready to surrender the certificate properly indorsed, and made a formal demand for the transfer on the books of the corporation. That the defendant, through its president, without cause, refused to transfer the stock on surrender of the certificate, or to issue a new certificate in lieu of the old certificate, and therefore the plaintiff was unable to deliver the four shares he had sold. That he had previously accepted the offer made to purchase the stock, but that the proposed purchaser declined to take the stock, except upon condition that the transfer be made, and, the plaintiff not being able to have the transfer made by the defendant, the purchaser withdrew his offer. That the price offered for the four shares was the sum of $2,500, or $625 per share. By an amendment to his petition, to meet a special demurrer, the plaintiff alleged that this offer was made to him by Demere & Hammond, brokers of Savannah, Ga. He alleged that after the withdrawal of the offer he sold the five shares, making diligent effort to sell at the best price obtainable, and obtained for them $1,000 less than he had been offered for the four shares. He sued for the special loss of $1,000 on the four shares, and for $625 as the value of the one share, which he alleged was worth that amount at the time he received the offer for the four shares and when his demand for transfer was refused by the company. He based his right to recover the value of the one share on the ground that the refusal of the defendant to transfer the five shares amounted to a conversion of the one share. On demurrer the court struck from the petition all allegations of damage by reason of the conversion of the one share of stock, and restricted the issue to the actual loss of profit in the sale, alleged to be $1,000, to which ruling the plaintiff excepted pendente lite. The defendant contended that the offer of purchase of the four shares was not made bona fide, but was made through the procurment of the plaintiff, and was fraudulent. The jury returned a verdict for $100 in favor of the plaintiff, and he moved for a new trial, on the general grounds, and filed an amendment excepting to certain instructions of the court. The motion was overruled, and he sued out this writ of error.

It appeared from the evidence on the trial that in the year 1906 Hilton, with certain parties identified with him, together with one Morel and certain parties identified with him, formed a corporation known as the Sylvania & Girard Railroad Company, the defendant in this suit; that there were two so-called factions in this company, known respectively as the Hilton and Morel factions; and that the capital stock of the company was $10,000, evenly divided between the two factions, neither having control. By agreement at the meeting for organization, the Morel faction was given the presidency and control of the directorate of the company; the Morel faction having three of the five directors. Later one of the directors died, and the Hilton faction applied for a writ of mandamus to compel a meeting of the stockholders, to be held for the purpose of electing a board of directors. This mandamus proceeding was decided by the Supreme Court in favor of the applicants. See Sylvania & Girard R. Co. v. Hoge, 129 Ga. 734, 59 S. E. 806. At the next meeting of the stockholders for the election of directors, the five shares of stock now in controversy were the cause of considerable dissension. Ennels, the original owner of the five shares, was one of the Morel faction. Becoming offended with Morel, he sold his five shares to Hilton, which gave the Hilton faction control of the corporation. Morel and his friends refused to recognize the sale from Ennels to Hilton as being valid, and at the next regular meeting of the stockholders, of which Morel was chairman, Hilton was not allowed to vote these five shares; their action being based on the contention that in the incorporation of the company it had been agreed between the two factions that Morel and his friends were to have indefinite control in the management of the company. Thereupon the two factions held separate meetings, electing separate officers and directors. Hilton and his friends brought an application for mandamus to compel Morel and his friends to turn over the physical property of the corporation to them, and the Supreme Court decided in favor of the applicants, on the ground that the agreement between the two factions of the shareholders to the effect that one of said factions, owning one-half of the corporation stock, should have the right indefinitely to name a majority of the directors of the company, and thus manage and control its affairs, was against public policy, and therefore void. See Morel v. Hoge, 130 Ga. 625, 61 S. E. 487, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186.

The statement of the evidence up to this point, although not strictly relevant, illustrates to some extent the issues in the present case. Hilton proved substantially all the allegations of his petition. He proved positively and conclusively that he had been offered $2,500 for the four shares of stock, by the brokerage firm of Demere & Hammond, of Savannah; that this firm, in making the offer for the stock, represented G. Noble Jones; that the $2,500 was actually offered by Jones through the firm for this stock; that this money was in a bank at Savannah, subject to the order of Hilton, on presentation of the certificate of the stock duly transferred on the books of the corporation; that the only reason why the sale was not consummated was the failure of the defendant, through its president, Morel, to recognize as valid his purchase of the five shares of stock from Ennels, and to transfer the same to his name on the books of the corporation; that the purchaser refused to accept the stock certificate unless this transfer was made; that he had made, in person and by letter, repeated demands on Morel, as president of the company, to make this transfer, in order that he might consummate the sale, notifying Morel that he had had an offer of sale for the stock and could not consummate the sale unless the transfer was made, and that his refusal to transfer would subject him to great damage and loss; that after the refusal of the company to make the transfer, and the refusal of the proposed purchaser to accept the stock without the transfer, he used all due diligence to sell the same, even offering it to Morel himself; and that the best price he could get for it was $1,500. The defense relied upon, that the sale to Jones was not a bona fide sale, but was fraudulent, was not sustained by any evidence, direct or circumstantial.

T. J. Evans and A. B. Lovett, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Overstreet and E. K. Overstreet, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. In our opinion, under the evidence and the law applicable thereto, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict for $1,000. He was the owner of the five shares of stock bought by him from Ennels. His title to this stock had been settled by the adjudication of the Supreme Court in the case of Morel v. Hoge, supra. He had a bona fide offer of $2,500 for four shares of this stock. This offer was clearly shown, and it failed of consummation solely because of the refusal of the president of the company to make the proper transfer upon the books of the corporation. The effort made by the defendant to attack the bona fides of this sale was not successful. While it is true that fraud may be shown by slight circumstances, and by inferences fairly and reasonably deducible from the facts, yet the jury cannot arbitrarily assume its existence; but there must be some proof, direct or circumstantial, from which such an hypothesis can be drawn. In this case the evidence in behalf of the plaintiff is clear and undisputed that the offer of $2,500 was made to him by the brokerage firm of Demere & Hammond, of Savannah, representing G. Noble Jones; that it was made in good faith; that the plaintiff did not know this firm, and had had no communication with them on the subject before they made the offer in a letter which he received from them. There is no evidence whatever that he had ever had any personal communication with G. Noble Jones, the alleged purchaser of the stock through the firm of brokers.

The court charged the jury the law of actual and constructive fraud, and this portion of the charge was assigned as error. The jury must have been misled by these instructions. There appears no evidence whatever upon which to base such instructions, and they should not have been given. The verdict for $100 in favor of the plaintiff seems to have been purely arbitrary on the part of the jury. The suit was for an actual loss of profits on the sale of four shares of stock, amounting to $1,000, and the proof established indisputably that this was the loss. The proof clearly established that the plaintiff could have procured $2,500 for the four shares of the stock, but for the refusal of the defendant company, through its president, to make the transfer on the books of the company, and the evidence for the plaintiff is also uncontradicted that, after this sale had failed by reason of the company's conduct, he made all due diligence to sell the stock and could only get for the four shares $1,500. The jury could not have found, under the evidence, any other sum than $1,000; for if they believed that the sale was fraudulent, as contended by the defendant, their verdict should have been against the plaintiff entirely. There was no evidence upon which to base the verdict for $100. But, of course, the plaintiff cannot recover damages against the company unless the refusal of the president to transfer the stock on the books of the corporation was illegal. Stock in a railroad corporation in this state is personal property (Civ. Code 1895, § 2165), and it has been universally held that the illegal refusal of a corporation to transfer stock to the name of the owner constitutes a conversion of the stock by the corporation so refusing; the measure of damages being the value of the stock at the time of demand and refusal. Bank of Culloden v. Bank of Forsyth, 120 Ga. 576, 48 S. E. 226, 102 Am. St. Rep. 115; 26 Amer. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 887; 2 Cook on Corporations, § 392. That a corporation is liable for the illegal refusal of the president to allow the proper transfer of stock to the name of the true owner cannot be doubted. Civ. Code 1895, § 1861. "Subject to the right of the corporation to assert a lien on shares, * * * both the assignor and the assignee have a legal right to have a transfer made on the books of the corporation and a new certificate issued to the assignee." 4 Thompson on Corporations, §§ 4628, 4650. And in some jurisdictions this transfer may be compelled by mandamus. 2 Cook on Corporations, §§ 389, 392; Thornton v. Martin, 116 Ga. 115, 42 S. E. 348.

To meet these well-settled principles of law, it is contended by the defendant that under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Sylvania & Girard R. Co. v. Hoge, supra, there was no duty resting upon the defendant corporation to transfer any stock upon its books, as in that case Justice Evans held that the corporation had neither charter nor by-laws which required a transfer on the books. The learned justice further held that where neither the charter, statute, nor corporate by-laws required a book transfer, the assignee of the certificate of stock might vote thereon, although on the books of the company the stock stands in the name of the assignor. In that case, however, it was not shown that there was a mode of transfer provided by the corporation; it was not shown that the stock certificate itself provided on its face that the stock was transferable only on the books of the corporation. These stock certificates together with the charter and the statute under which the corporation is organized constitute the contract of association between the various stockholders, and between the stockholders and the corporation. 26 Amer. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 831. Where there is a by-law on the subject, the transfer should be made in the manner prescribed by the by-law. Civ. Code 1895, § 2165. But if there is no by-law on the subject, and nothing in the charter on the subject (as in the present case), should not the transfer be made according to the provisions written across the stock certificate? And where the certificate of stock, the evidence of the purchaser's title and ownership, gives notice that, to secure a good title, he must have the transfer recognized by the corporation, by registry on its books, is not such purchaser entitled to have such transfer duly made; and does not an arbitrary refusal to so transfer the stock, by the officer of the company, render the corporation itself liable in damages? In other words, does not the provision written across the face of the stock certificate have the force and effect of a by-law of the corporation; and does it not follow, if this be true, that the corporation is under a legal duty to transfer the stock upon demand? "In the case of a sale of stock, the purchaser's right to have the stock transferred from the name of the seller into his own and to surrender the old certificate, if he desires, and have a new one issued to him in his own name, is unquestioned and unquestionable." 26 Amer. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 877.

We therefore conclude, under these authorities, that, although the charter or by-laws contain no provisions on the subject of transfers of stock, yet, in view of the statement on the face of the certificate that the stock was "transferable only on the books of the corporation by the holder thereof, in person or by attorney, upon the surrender of this certificate properly indorsed," the plaintiff in this case had the right to have his stock transferred on the books of the corporation to his name, and the corporation was under a legal duty to make such transfer, and the failure of its proper officer to do so rendered it liable for any resulting damage.

2. Another ground in the amended motion for a new trial is that the court erred in charging the jury that they should receive the evidence "from the witnesses upon the witness stand." It was contended that this charge was prejudicial, as almost the entire case for the plaintiff was made by documentary evidence, such as letters, telegrams, etc. While we do not think a jury of ordinary intelligence would probably have considered these instructions as depriving them of the right to take into consideration the documentary evidence, yet it has been repeatedly ruled that such instructions, where there was material documentary evidence, was reversible error. Stiles v. Shedden, 2 Ga. App. 317, 58 S. E. 515; Myers v. State, 97 Ga. 79, 23 S. E. 252. The other excerpts from the charge excepted to, when considered in connection with the whole charge, are without material error. Of course, this does not refer to the charge objected to on the subject of actual and constructive fraud, which, as above intimated, was erroneous because not authorized by the evidence. Indeed, we might put the reversal in this case solely on the general grounds, without reference to any of the special assignments of error.

3. The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to that part of the petition seeking to recover $625 for an alleged conversion of one share of stock. While the plaintiff was entitled to have that share transferred on the books of the corporation, there is no averment of any damage resulting from the refusal of the defendant company to do so. There is no allegation that the plaintiff had been offered $625 for that share, or that it could have been sold for this sum but for defendant's refusal to transfer it on the books to the name of the plaintiff or of any alleged purchaser. The refusal to transfer on demand was illegal, but no damage is alleged to have been caused thereby.

Judgment reversed.

GRAY LUMBER CO. v. HARRIS et al.

(No. 2,860.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. July 19, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—DECISION—CONSTRUCTION.

Where, on reviewing a judgment of non-suit, the Supreme Court has rendered a decision which could not have been correctly rendered, as rendered, if a certain insistence of one of the parties had been considered well taken, it will, in future trials of the case, be construed as a decision against that insistence, although the matter is not mentioned in the course of the opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4661-4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—TIMBER DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where the vendor of standing timber sells it to another, and in the conveyance makes a stipulation by which the right to cut the timber is to terminate upon the expiration of three years from the time the vendee or his assign begins to cut it, the three-year period will not be started to running by the act of an outsider in entering upon the lands and cutting a portion of the timber without the consent of the vendee or his assign; aliter, if the person doing the cutting has authority to do so from the then holder of the title to the timber under the conveyance mentioned.

(a) In a case like that just mentioned, if the person who wrongfully did the cutting should, more than three years thereafter, purchase the timber rights from the person who owned them at the time of the unauthorized cutting, his prior trespass, in having entered upon the timber and cut a portion of it without authority, would not operate to forfeit the title to the timber, on the theory that the period of three years had expired since he (the person thus acquiring the title) had commenced to cut it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—TIMBER DEEDS—ORAL WAIVER OF CONDITION.

Though standing timber is realty, and a conveyance of standing timber should be in writing, yet where such a conveyance contains a clause whereby the vendee's right to cut the timber is to expire within a certain time after the happening of a designated act, the vendor may orally waive his right to insist upon counting the time of this limitation as running because of the happening of an act which, but for his waiver, might be considered as the starting point.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. TRESPASS (§ 19*)—TITLE TO SUPPORT ACTION.

The plaintiff in trespass recovers on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of the defendant's. The alleged error in respect to the admission of testimony in regard to the asserted title of the defendant in this case was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 18-31; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"WAIVER."

"Waiver" is a voluntary relinquishment of some known right, benefit, or advantage, which, except for such waiver, the person waiving would have enjoyed.

Error from City Court of Douglas; E. Wall, Judge.

Action by the Gray Lumber Company against E. G. Harris and others. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

The Gray Lumber Company brought trespass against Harris et al. for the cutting of the pine timber suitable for sawmill purposes off certain lands in Coffee county. The plaintiff proved title to the lands in John Vickers, and then showed conveyances as follows: A deed dated September 18, 1889, from John Vickers to E. L. and H. Vickers, conveying the timber in dispute, and providing that the grantees were to have three years from the date of beginning to remove the sawmill timber, in which to remove the same. Also a conveyance of the same timber from E. L. and H. Vickers to W. W. Timmons and H. L. Covington, dated June 23, 1890. Also a conveyance from W. W. Timmons to H. L. Covington, dated June 10, 1899, transferring to him an undivided half interest in the timber in dispute; thus putting the entire title in Covington. Also a conveyance from H. L. Covington to the Gray Lumber Company, dated October 20, 1903, conveying not only the timber in dispute, but also the timber on many other lots of land in the same county. The plaintiff proved the value of the timber, and it was admitted that in the year 1904 the defendants cut and carried the timber away. The defendants introduced in evidence a conveyance from John Vickers to Peter Vickers, dated February 3, 1903, conveying the timber in dispute; and showed that Peter Vickers in March, 1903, transferred this conveyance to the defendants. Both parties, therefore, claim under a common grantor, John Vickers; and, so far as the question of title is concerned, it depends merely upon a comparison of the rights of the parties as respectively derived from John Vickers. No question of notice is involved as the plaintiff's conveyances were duly recorded. The case mainly hinges upon the fact that in the year 1897 the employees of the Gray Lumber Company, while cutting other timber in the vicinity of the timber in dispute, cut some few trees, variously estimated as being from 4 to 70, upon the lands in dispute. The contention of the defendants was that the three-year period designated by the lease, after which the right to cut the timber under the lease would expire, began to run from the date of this cutting in 1897, and that Vickers had the right to resell the timber after three years from that time. The plaintiff, however, insisted that it owned the title to the timber in fee, and that the restriction as to the time of cutting was a covenant, and not a condition; also that the cutting of the timber in 1897 having been done at a time when the title to the timber was not in the Gray Lumber Company, which did the cutting, but in Timmons and Covington, the trespass of the Gray Lumber Company could not have operated to give a starting point for the running of the three years after which the rights of Timmons and Covington under the lease would expire; also that, even conceding that this cutting of the timber did operate as a starting point from which the three years was to be counted, Vickers, the owner of the reversion, had waived any right to insist upon this act as being sufficient to put the limitation clause of the lease into operation.

A previous suit between the same parties as to the same subject-matter has been before the Supreme Court for adjudication. See Gray Lumber Co. v. Harris, 127 Ga. 698, 56 S. E. 252. In that case a judgment of nonsuit was affirmed. In the present case the court directed a verdict for the defendant.

Lankford & Dickerson, for plaintiff in error. Lane & Park and J. W. Quincey, for defendants in error.

POWELL, J. 1. We consider that the decision of the Supreme Court has settled (at least so far as the present case is concerned) that the limitation clause of the timber conveyance from John Vickers, under which the plaintiff claimed, was such as to cause the estate held by the grantees in the timber to terminate within three years from the time that the grantees in that lease or any other person authorized by them began to cut the timber. If the point that the limitation clause in the lease was not a limitation upon the title—but merely upon the right of ingress and egress (i. e., was a covenant and not a condition), were well taken, it would have been a sufficient reason for the Supreme Court to have reversed the former judgment of nonsuit. Only upon the theory that the lease had terminated by the fact of the cutting and the running of the three years thereafter can the affirmance of the judgment of nonsuit be justified, under the facts presented by the record in the case then before the Supreme Court; and, therefore, while the court did not in express language refer to this feature of the case, the judgment rendered must be taken as having by necessary implication decided this branch of the plaintiff's case adversely to it.

2. The evidence was substantially different on the trial under review from what it was on the former trial, as appears from an examination of the facts set out in the course of the opinion of the Supreme Court and a comparison of them with the evidence in the present record. From the evidence on the former trial it appeared plainly that when the Gray Lumber Company, in 1897, did the cutting upon the timber in dispute, it did so intentionally, and with the consent of Covington, who was then the holder of the legal title to the timber under the first Vickers lease. In the present record the defendants, in order to establish this element of the case (that the cutting was done intentionally and by the consent, actual or implied, of Covington), offered two witnesses who testified as to the declarations of one H. L. Gray, an employé of the plaintiff corporation, alleged to have been made just before the timber was cut, that they had bought this timber from Covington, and were going to cut it. However, Mr. Gray, as a witness on the trial, denied making any such statement. The woodsman of the Gray Lumber Company was introduced as a witness for the defendants, and testified that at the time this cutting in question was done he understood that the Gray Lumber Company had bought the Covington timber. He testified to some conversation had with one of the Messrs. Gray on the subject, but admitted on cross-examination that he did not know whether the Gray Lumber Company did at that time own the Covington timber or not; and that he did not remember whether Mr. Gray told him that he had bought the timber or merely that he had bargained for it, or merely had an option on it. He further testified that at the time he did this cutting he was under the impression that the Gray Lumber Company had bought all the timber owned by Covington, but later found that they had bought only part of it. Fairly construed, the testimony of this witness is susceptible of no other construction than that at the time this cutting was done Mr. Gray had said something to him about either having bought the Covington timber or some part of it, or having bargained for it, or having taken an option on it, and that the price was to be $325 per lot, to be paid before they should have the right to cut it. The expression, "the Covington timber," it must be kept in mind, included a large amount of timber other than that contained in the tract in question. It was, therefore, under the evidence in the present case, issuable as to whether the Gray Lumber Company at the time of the cutting of the few sticks of timber on the tract in dispute, had any right to do so, under color of any authority from the then owners of the timber. The written conveyance which they acquired from Covington was dated several years after the cutting in question was done. As the court directed the verdict for the defendant, the plaintiff is to be given the benefit of all issues of facts and the inferences to be drawn therefrom; and in this view of the evidence, it may be stated that it does not appear that the cutting in question was done with the consent, actual or implied, of Timmons and Covington, or of either of them. The jury would have had the right to have found that the cutting was a mere trespass, having been committed either intentionally or under some mistake of right or of fact.

sion of the Supreme Court has adjudicated adversely to the plaintiff the point we are now discussing. The Supreme Court merely decided the case then before it upon the facts there presented, and we have before us a state of facts substantially different in principle. We cannot agree with counsel for defendant that the Supreme Court intended to hold, or did hold, that if the Gray Lumber Company trespassed on these lots in 1897, with no authority from the then owners of the timber conveyances to do so, this would operate to give a starting point from which the time mentioned in the limitation in the conveyance would begin to run, either generally as against all persons, or specially as against the Gray Lumber Company, upon its afterwards purchasing the timber from the then holders of the conveyance. If we understand the Supreme Court decision, what they held was that, if the Gray Lumber Company cut this timber with the authority of the holders of the timber conveyances, it would operate to start the limitation period to running; and that Mr. Gray's admissions that they were then the owners of the tract of timber, and that they had bargained for it from Covington, was sufficient to prove that the cutting was in fact done under the conveyance held by Covington, or by his consent. It seems too plain to admit of argument that if the Gray Lumber Company, in 1897, did the cutting without the consent or authority of Timmons and Covington, who then held the title to the timber as derived through the Vickers conveyance, it merely committed an act of trespass against Timmons and Covington, and that no act of the Gray Lumber Company could start the running of the limitation contained in this conveyance thus adversely held by the other persons. This being true, it follows that in 1908, the date on which Covington did convey to the Gray Lumber Company, he still held the legal title to the timber, and that the beginning of the limitation period had not then arrived. This being so, it must follow that Covington could convey the title to the timber to the Gray Lumber Company. But say the defendants: "Although as against Covington, or Timmons and Covington, the prior tortious cutting done by the Gray Lumber Company would not have given a starting point for the running of the time under the limitation clause in the conveyance, yet when the Gray Lumber Company became the holder of the rights formerly granted by Vickers, the transaction related back, so that as against the Gray Lumber Company its act is to be considered as sufficient to have started the time to running." We cannot concede this, for to impose such a penalty upon the Gray Lumber Company for its trespass would be to impose it indirectly upon Covington. It may be seen that if such were the legal result of the transaction, Covington would have been deprived of one of the most valuable rights which he had under the conveyance—the right to sell the timber to whomsoever would give the most of it. It is very probable that in 1903 the Gray Lumber Company, owing to the location of its sawmills and tramroads, was in a position to give more for this timber than any other prospective purchaser to whom Covington might have contemplated selling it, and yet if the contention of the defendant were to be considered well taken, Covington, howsoever unconnected he might have been with the commission of this trespass back in 1897, could not have sold the timber to the Gray Lumber Company; for, of course, a sale which could pass nothing, on account of the forfeiture which would immediately ensue, would in all fair contemplation have been the same as no sale at all. We know of no principle of law or of equity which would thus impair the rights of the holder of the legal title to sell and convey, on account of the act of a trespasser. The proposition here asserted is analogous to that stated in the Civil Code of 1896, § 3938, that, "if one without notice sell to one with notice the latter is protected, as otherwise a bona fide purchaser might be deprived of selling his property for full value." See, also, Collins v. Heath, 34 Ga. 443. There might have been some difference in principle if the cutting had been a trespass against Vickers.

It is very probable that the full facts of the transaction have not been developed in the evidence. It may be that if the whole truth were known, the Gray Lumber Company did have authority from the owner of the timber to cut it in 1897. If so, then under the decision of the Supreme Court when the case was up before, the verdict should be for the defendant, unless Vickers waived his right to insist that this act of cutting a few sticks of timber in 1897, started the limitation period to running.

3. A sale of standing timber is a sale of realty and is within the statute of frauds, and consequently, requires a written conveyance. Nevertheless, where such a conveyance contains a clause which forfeits the timber for nonremoval within a designated time, the right to insist upon the time limit may be waived orally. See Wallace v. Kelly, 148 Mich. 336, 111 N. W. 1049, 118 Am. St. Rep. 580; Morgan v. Perkins, 94 Ga. 353 (2), 21 S. E. 574. In the Michigan case cited, it appears that the waiver was based on consideration. The Georgia case is silent as to this point. Waiver, however, usually needs no consideration to make it effective. "Waiver is a voluntary relinquishment of some known right, benefit, or advantage, which, except for such waiver, the party otherwise would have enjoyed." See the very excellent discussion as to the elements of waiver by Judge Russell, in Kennedy v. Manry, 6 Ga. App. 816, 66 S. E. 29. Waivers not based on consideration have been too frequently enforced by the courts to demand any citation of authority for the proposition that consideration is not an essential of waiver. There was some evidence in this case that Mr. Vickers, the owner of the reversion, after the time of the cutting in 1897 and within less than 3 years thereafter, told the woodsman of the Gray Lumber Company that on account of the previous cutting, the lease would soon expire, and upon the woodsman's saying that if this was so he would hurry to get it off, Mr. Vickers replied that he need not bother about that, as he had gotten pay for it once and that was all he wanted, and that the lumber company could cut it when they got to it, and the woodsman reported this conversation to the president of the company. It is true that Mr. Vickers denied this conversation to some extent, but this presented a question of fact for the jury, and not for solution by direction of the verdict. It was for the jury, under the evidence, to say what was the language of Mr. Vickers, used on the occasion in question, and whether he expressed at that time an intention not to insist upon the forfeiture, if any, which was about to come about through the previous cutting.

4. There is one other exception in the record. The plaintiff insists that the court erred in admitting in evidence in behalf of the defendant a transfer to the plaintiff of the second conveyance made by John Vickers. The point the plaintiff makes is that this transfer purports to assign the conveyance, and not the title to the timber. There is no merit in this point. The case turned on the strength of the plaintiff's title, and the strength of the defendant's title was not involved. We reverse the judgment because the court erred in directing the verdict, since there was evidence to support a finding for either party.

Judgment reversed.

RICHLAND COUNTY v. OWENS et al.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 13, 1910.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 101*)—ACTION ON BOND OF OFFICER—BREACHES—COMPLAINT—DEFT-NITENESS.

The complaint on the bond of a county supervisor for failure to perform the duties of his office, when supplemented by an itemized statement filed according to order of court, the part of the statement referring to any class of acts being read with the part of the complaint referring thereto, held to be sufficiently definite and certain, and to inform defendants of what they are to meet, especially where the matters are nearly all on record in the supervisor county board of commissioners' office.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 152-159; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

2. COUNTIES (§ 99*)—BOND OF SUPERVISOR—EXTENT OF LIABILITY—ACTS AS MEMBER OF BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS.

One of the duties devolving on a county supervisor being to act as a member of the county board of commissioners, his acts as a member of such are contemplated in his bond as supervisor, requiring him to "well and truly perform the duties of said office as required by law."

3. DAMAGES (§ 141*)—ACTION ON BOND OF OFFICER—COMPLAINT—ALLEGING DAMAGES.

The complaint on the bond of a county supervisor sufficiently alleges damages to the county as a result of his failure to well and truly perform his duties as supervisor, it being stated in nearly all the assignments of breaches of the bond, "thereby causing a diversion and loss of the public funds of the county," in some "to the loss and detriment of the county," and in one "that by reason of the matters and things aforesaid plaintiff has suffered loss and damage" to a certain amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 406-412; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

4. COUNTIES (§ 101*) — BOND OF OFFICER — BREACH—NEGLIGENCE AND CARELESSNESS.

Under the bond of a county supervisor conditioned that he would "well and truly perform the duties of said office as required by law," knowledge by him of breaches of the bond need not be alleged and proved, but his bond is breached if, and it is enough to allege and prove that, he so negligently and carelessly performed his duties that loss resulted to the county.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Geo. E. Prince and R. W. Memminger, Judges.

Action by the County of Richland against Samuel H. Owens and another. From orders refusing to strike out parts of the complaint and overruling a demurrer to the complaint, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bellinger & Welch, for appellant S. H. Owens. Allen J. Green, for appellant American Surety Co. Solicitor W. Hampton Cobb and Thomas & Thomas, for respondent.

SEASE, J. This is a suit on the official bond of the defendant Samuel H. Owens as county supervisor for Richland county, commenced 1906. The defendant Owens, having been elected supervisor for said county for three successive terms, gave bond as required by law for each term with the defendant American Surety Company of New York as surety on each bond. The complaint therefore contains three separate causes of action, one on each bond given. The whole complaint, excepting the itemized statement hereinafter mentioned, is as follows (the parts thereof stricken out by order of his honor, George E. Prince, being printed in italics):

"Complaint.

"The plaintiff above named, complaining of the defendants herein, alleges:

"For a first cause of action:

"(1) That the plaintiff, the county of Richland, is and was at the times hereinafter mentioned a body politic and corporate under the Constitution and laws of the state of South Carolina, and duly authorized by law to bring this action in its said name.

"(2) That the defendant American Surety Company of New York is now, and was at the times hereinafter mentioned, a corporation duly chartered and organized under and by the laws of the state of New York, and doing business in the state of South Carolina, and having full power, and authority to make and execute surety bonds for public officers in the state of South Carolina.

"(3) That on or about the 8th day of November, 1898, the defendant Samuel H. Owens was duly elected to the office of county supervisor for the county of Richland in the state aforesaid, in which county said defendant resided, and now resides, the term of said office being for two years and until his successor should have been elected and qualified, and on the 9th day of December, 1898, the said Samuel H. Owens, together with his codefendant, American Surety Company, executed and delivered to the state of South Carolina their certain bond in writing and under seal, dated on said day, whereby they became bound in the form and manner prescribed by law to the state of South Carolina in the penal sum of $5,000, which bond recited that the said Samuel H. Owens had been elected to the office of county supervisor for the county aforesaid, and contained the condition that, if the said Samuel H. Owens should well and truly perform the duties of said office as then or thereafter required by law during the whole period he might continue in said office, then the said obligation to be void and of none effect, or else to remain in full force and virtue.

"(4) That the said defendant Samuel H. Owens having duly qualified and given bond as aforesaid did on or about the 1st day of January, 1899, enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office of county supervisor for the county of Richland, to which he had been elected, and continued in the discharge of the duties of said office until on or about the 31st day of December, 1900, upon which day he was succeeded by himself, having been re-elected to said office.

"(5) That the condition of the bond aforesaid has been broken, in that the said defendant Samuel H. Owens, after entering upon the discharge of the duties of the office to which he had been elected, and between the 1st day of January, 1899, and the 31st day of December, 1900, failed as county supervisor to well and truly perform the duties of said office as required by law, and according to the true meaning and intent of the bond aforesaid and the condition thereof, in that:

"(a) Said defendant gave out work upon the public highways, roads, and bridges of the county where the amounts exceeded $10 without requiring contracts therefor, and without posting notice of the same; and, where the amount exceeded $100, without advertising the same, and without requiring the proposals therefor to be accompanied by two or more sufficient sureties, as required by law; that said work so given out was given to incompetent and irresponsible persons, who failed to perform said work in good and substantial manner. That claims therefor were rendered in extravagant amounts, far in excess of the true value of said work. That said claims were unlawfully approved by the said Samuel H. Owens, as county supervisor, and warrants therefor drawn by him upon the county treasurer in violation of the law, and paid out of the funds of Richland county, to the loss and detriment of the said county.

"(b) Said defendant was negligent and careless and unmindful of his duties in failing to scrutinize and examine claims presented against the county. That he approved claims that were rendered in extravagant amounts for labor that had never been performed, and for materials that had never been furnished. That he approved claims that were not itemized and were not accompanied by an affidavit made by the person or officer and presenting the same that the items thereof and that the labor, fees, disbursements, services, or other matters charged therein have been, in fact, done, made, rendered, or were due, and no part thereof paid or satisfied, and that he signed warrants or checks for the payment of such nonitemized and unverified claims, thereby causing a diversion and loss of the public funds of the county.

"(c) Said defendant was grossly negligent and careless and utterly unmindful of the interests of the county in matters relating to the supervision, direction, and control of work upon the public highways, roads, and bridges of the county in failing to inspect work done by his order and direction, and by order and direction of the county board of commissioners, and in accepting work that was incomplete and defective.

"(d) Said defendant was grossly negligent, careless, and lax in matters relating to the disbursement of public funds for county purposes. That he signed his name as county supervisor to county warrants or checks in blank, leaving them with the clerk of the county board of commissioners to be filled out as occasion might require. That the said warrants or checks so signed in blank were in large numbers, and in considerable amounts subsequently filled in by the said clerk for the payment of fraudulent, illegal, and extravagant claims against the county, for the payment of claims made out in excess of the true and proper amounts, for the payment of claims in the names of fictitious persons for labor, services, and materials which had never been performed and furnished to the county, for the payment of individual debts and obligations of said clerk, and for many and various other purposes not authorized by law, and he, the said defendant, as county supervisor, was grossly negligent and careless in that, after signing the said warrants or checks and leaving them to be filled in by the clerk aforesaid, he failed to inspect the stubs of the said warrants or checks, and permitted and allowed the said warrants or checks to be paid without objection out of the public funds of the county, thereby permitting a fraudulent and unlawful diversion of the public funds of the county.

"(e) Said defendant was careless and negligent in signing warrants or checks for the payment of claims purporting to have been approved by him and by the members of the county board of commissioners, when, in fact, the signatures evidencing such approval were forged signatures; thus permitting and causing a diversion of the public funds of the county and the payment of claims in large numbers and considerable amounts, which had, in fact, never been audited and approved as required by law.

"(f) Said defendant violated his duties in the approval of false and fraudulent claims against the county, evidenced by false and fraudulent vouchers, signed with a cross-mark in the name of fictitious persons, and in the signing of warrants or checks for payment of such false and fraudulent claims, and was careless and negligent in failing to discover that said vouchers were false and fraudulent.

"(g) Said defendant was negligent and careless and violated his official duty in the approval and payment of claims for transportation of paupers to their alleged homes. That the allowances for this purpose were extravagant and unnecessary, not properly vouched, and the entry thereof negligently omitted from the records of his office. That he was negligent and careless and violated his official duty in the approval and payment of the weekly and monthly pay rolls of the laborers working upon the public works of the county, said pay rolls not being accompanied by proper vouchers, and not approved by the foreman in charge of the work, and containing the names of alleged laborers who had not performed the work or rendered the service claimed, and that he was negligent and careless, and violated his official duty in the approval and payment of claims upon contingent account, the same being not properly itemized, verified, or vouched as required by law.

"(h) Said defendant violated his official duty in failing to cause a record to be kept of all the proceedings of the board of which he was chairman, as well as a record of all contracts entered into with said board, by failing and neglecting to keep an accurate record of claims approved and ordered paid, and by failing to enter or cause the same to be entered upon the proceedings of the board for public inspection, thus preventing the discovery of false and fraudulent claims, to the loss and detriment of the county.

"(i) Said defendant violated his official duty in failing to publish the full statements required by law of all claims audited by the county board of commissioners by failing to examine into the nature and amount of the claims contained in these published reports, and by failing to detect the errors, omissions and false entries therein, thereby permitting and allowing said errors, omissions, and false entries to remain uncorrected, to the loss and injury of the county.

"(j) Said defendant violated his official duty by voting an extra allowance to the clerk of the board of commissioners, the salary of said clerk having been fixed by law, and in the approval and payment out of the county funds of such extra allowance.

"(k) Said defendant was careless and negligent in the care of the machinery, tools, mules, and other property of the county. That he was guilty of gross extravagance and mismanagement in the purchasing of chain gang supplies, in the contracting of blacksmithing accounts, and in purchasing, sweeping, and trading in the mules and other property of the county. That he was extravagant, careless, and negligent, and violated his official duty in the purchasing of lumber and in buying lumber unsuited for use upon the works of the county, and not necessary or needed therefor. That he made use of property of the county for his own benefit and for the benefit of private individuals without consideration. That he disposed of lumber, old bridge material, and other property of the county without rendering or making any account therefor, and permitted and allowed individuals to take and appropriate the same for their own use.

"(l) Said defendant violated his official duty in that he, as county supervisor, made and entered into contracts for expenditures for county purposes, and voted for the same in excess of the taxes levied for said purposes.

"(m) Said defendant violated his official duty in that he as county supervisor diverted or appropriated the funds arising from the taxes levied and collected for one fiscal year to the payment of indebtedness contracted or incurred for a previous fiscal year.

"(6) That by reason of the matters and things aforesaid the plaintiff has suffered loss and damage to the amount of $5,000, the amount of the penalty of the bond aforesaid, no part of which has been paid, and this action is brought in pursuance of the statute of this state in such case made and provided.

"For a second cause of action.

"(1) [Same as paragraph 1 of first cause of action, and need not be reprinted here.]

"(2) [Same as paragraph 1 of first cause of action, and need not be reprinted here.]

"(3) That on or about the 6th day of November, 1900, the defendant Samuel H. Owens was duly elected to the office of county supervisor for the county of Richland, in the state aforesaid, in which county said defendant resided and now resides, the term of said office being for two years, and until his successor should have been elected and qualified, and on the 17th day of December, 1900, the said Samuel H. Owens, together with his codefendant, American Surety Company, executed and delivered to the state of South Carolina their certain bond in writing and under seal, dated on said day, whereby they became bound in the form and manner prescribed by law to the state of South Carolina in the penal sum of $5,000, which said bond recited that the said Samuel H. Owens had been elected to the office of county supervisor for the county aforesaid, and contained the condition that, if the said Samuel H. Owens should well and truly perform the duties of said office as then or thereafter required by law during the whole period he might continue in said office, then the said obligation to be void and of none effect, or else to remain in full force and virtue.

"(4) That the said defendant Samuel H. Owens, having duly qualified and given bond as aforesaid, did on or about the 1st day of January, 1901, enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office of county supervisor for the county of Richland, to which he had been elected, and continued in the discharge of the duties of said office until on or about the 31st day of December, 1902, upon which day he was succeeded by himself, having been re-elected to said office.

"(5) That the condition of the bond aforesaid has been broken, in that the said defendant Samuel H. Owens, after entering upon the discharge of the duties of the office to which he had been elected, and between the 1st day of January, 1901, and the 31st day of December, 1902, failed as county supervisor to well and truly perform the duties of said office as required by law, and according to the true meaning and intent of the bond aforesaid, and the condition thereof, in that: without requiring contracts therefor, and without posting notice of the same; and, where the amount exceeded $100, without advertising the same, and without requiring the proposals therefor to be accompanied by two or more sufficient sureties, as required by law. That said work so given out was given to incompetent and irresponsible persons, who failed to perform said work in good and substantial manner. That claims therefor were rendered in extravagant amounts, far in excess of the true value of said work. That said claims were unlawfully approved by the said Samuel H. Owens, as county supervisor, and warrants therefor drawn by him upon the county treasurer in violation of the law, and paid out of the funds of Richland county, to the loss and detriment of the said county.

"(b) Said defendant was negligent and careless and unmindful of his duties in failing to scrutinize and examine claims presented against the county. That he approved claims that were rendered in extravagant amounts for labor that had never been performed, and for materials that had never been furnished. That he approved claims that were not itemized and were not accompanied by an affidavit made by the person or officer and presenting the same that the items thereof and that the labor, fees, disbursements, services, or other matters charged therein have been, in fact, done, made, rendered, or were due, and no part thereof paid or satisfied, and that he signed warrants or checks for the payment of such nonitemized and unverified claims, thereby causing a diversion and loss of the public funds of the county.

"(c) Said defendant was grossly negligent and careless and utterly unmindful of the interests of the county in matters relating to the supervision, direction, and control of work upon the public highways, roads, and bridges of the county in failing to inspect work done by his order and direction, and by order and direction of the county board of commissioners, and in accepting work that was incomplete and defective.

"(d) Said defendant was grossly negligent, careless, and lax in matters relating to the disbursement of public funds for county purposes. That he signed his name as county supervisor to county warrants or checks in blank, leaving them with the clerk of the county board of commissioners to be filled out as occasion might require. That the said warrants or checks so signed in blank were in large numbers, and in considerable amounts subsequently filled in by the said clerk for the payment of fraudulent, illegal, and extravagant claims against the county, for the payment of claims made out in excess of the true and proper amounts, for the payment of claims in the names of fictitious persons for labor, services, and materials which had never been performed and furnished to the county, for the payment of individual debts and obligations of said clerk, and for many and various other purposes not authorized by law, and he, the said defendant, as county supervisor, was grossly negligent and careless in that, after signing the said warrants or checks and leaving them to be filled in by the clerk aforesaid, he failed to inspect the stubs of the said warrants or checks, and permitted and allowed the said warrants or checks to be paid without objection out of the public funds of the county, thereby permitting a fraudulent and unlawful diversion of the public funds of the county.

"(e) Said defendant was careless and negligent in signing warrants or checks for the payment of claims purporting to have been approved by him and by the members of the county board of commissioners, when, in fact, the signatures evidencing such approval were forged signatures; thus permitting and causing a diversion of the public funds of the county and the payment of claims in large numbers and considerable amounts, which had, in fact, never been audited and approved as required by law.

"(f) Said defendant violated his duties in the approval of false and fraudulent claims against the county, evidenced by false and fraudulent vouchers, signed with a cross-mark in the name of fictitious persons, and in the signing of warrants or checks for payment of such false and fraudulent claims; and was careless and negligent in failing to discover that said vouchers were false and fraudulent.

"(g) Said defendant was negligent and careless and violated his official duty in the approval and payment of claims for transportation of paupers to their alleged homes. That the allowances for this purpose were extravagant and unnecessary, not properly vouched, and the entry thereof negligently omitted from the records of his office. That he was negligent and careless and violated his official duty in the approval and payment of the weekly and monthly pay rolls of the laborers working upon the public works of the county, said pay rolls not being accompanied by proper vouchers, and not approved by the foreman in charge of the work, and containing the names of alleged laborers who had not performed the work or rendered the service claimed, and that he was negligent and careless, and violated his official duty in the approval and payment of claims upon contingent account, the same being not properly itemized, verified, or vouched as required by law.

"(h) Said defendant violated his official duty in failing to cause a record to be kept of all the proceedings of the board of which he was chairman, as well as a record of all contracts entered into with said board, by failing and neglecting to keep an accurate record of claims approved and ordered paid, and by failing to enter or cause the same to be entered upon the proceedings of the board for public inspection, thus preventing the discovery of false and fraudulent claims, to the loss and detriment of the county.

"(i) Said defendant violated his official duty in failing to publish the full statements required by law of all claims audited by the county board of commissioners by failing to examine into the nature and amount of the claims contained in these published reports, and by failing to detect the errors, omissions and false entries therein, thereby permitting and allowing said errors, omissions, and false entries to remain uncorrected, to the loss and injury of the county.

"(j) Said defendant violated his official duty by voting an extra allowance to the clerk of the board of commissioners, the salary of said clerk having been fixed by law, and in the approval and payment out of the county funds of such extra allowance.

"(k) Said defendant was careless and negligent in the care of the machinery, tools, mules, and other property of the county. That he was guilty of gross extravagances and mismanagement in the purchasing of chain gang supplies, in the contracting of blacksmithing accounts, and in purchasing, swapping, and trading in the mules and other property of the county. That he was extravagant, careless, and negligent, and violated his official duty in the purchasing of lumber and in buying lumber unsuited for use upon the works of the county, and not necessary or needed therefor. That he made use of property of the county for his own benefit and for the benefit of private individuals without consideration. That he disposed of lumber, old bridge material, and other property of the county without rendering or making any account therefor, and permitted and allowed individuals to take and appropriate the same for their own use.

"(l) Said defendant violated his official duty in that he, as county supervisor, made and entered into contracts for expenditures for county purposes, and voted for the same in excess of the taxes levied for said purposes.

"(m) Said defendant violated his official duty in that he as county supervisor diverted or appropriated the funds arising from the taxes levied and collected for one fiscal year to the payment of indebtedness contracted or incurred for a previous fiscal year.

"(3) That on or about the 3d day of November, 1902, the defendant Samuel H. Owens was duly elected to the office of county supervisor for the county of Richland, in the state aforesaid, the term of said office being for two years, and until his successor should have been elected and qualified, and on the 30th day of December, 1902, the said Samuel H. Owens, together with his codefendant, American Surety Company, executed and delivered to the state of South Carolina their certain bond in writing and under seal, dated on same day, whereby they became bound in the form and manner prescribed by law to the state of South Carolina in the penal sum of $5,000, which bond recited that the said Samuel H. "(6) [Same as paragraph 6 of first cause of action, and need not be reprinted here.]

"Wherefore, the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of $15,000, and for the costs and disbursements of this action."

The defendants moved before his honor, D. E. Hydrick, then circuit judge, for an order requiring the plaintiff to make the allegations of paragraph 5 in each of the three causes of action of its complaint more definite and certain on some 10 or 12 particulars, which need not be set out here. Upon the hearing of this motion, his honor, Judge Hydrick, ordered: "That the plaintiff do on or before the 1st day of November, 1903, file and serve upon the defendant's attorneys, as a part of the complaint herein, itemized statements showing the various instances of the alleged failure of the defendant Samuel H. Owens to well and truly perform the duties of his office of supervisor as required by law, and according to the true meaning and intent of the bonds set up in the complaint under subdivisions 'a' to 'm,' both inclusive, of each of the three causes of action alleged in the complaint." From this order there was no appeal. Thereafter the plaintiff, in compliance with this order, filed and served itemized statements purporting to show various instances of the failure of the defendant Owens to well and truly perform the duties required of him by law and according to the true meaning and intent of the three bonds. Those itemized statements cover 100 pages in the printed case, and need not be set out here, but they are classified as follows:

"First cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'b.' Claims not verified, 1899-1900.

"First cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'd.' Warrants signed in blank, 1900. Warrants signed in blank, 1899-1900.

"First cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'f.' Cross-mark claims.

"First cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'g.' Weekly pay rolls of macadam work on roads, 1900.

"First cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'l.' Claims not in minute book, 1899-1900.

"Second cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'b.' Claims not itemized and verified, 1901-02.

"Second cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'd.' Warrants signed in blank, 1901-02.

"Second cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'f.' Cross-mark claims, 1901-02, 'Roads and Bridges.'

"Second cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'g.' Transportation of paupers, 1901-02.

"Second cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'h.' Claims not in minute book, 1901-02.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'b.' Extravagant claims for labor and material not furnished, 1903-04.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'b' (2). Claims not itemized and verified, 1903-04.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'c.' Work not inspected, 1903-04.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'd.' Warrants signed in blank, 1903-04.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'e.' Forged claims, 1903-04.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'f.' Cross-mark claims, 1903-04.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'g.' Transportation of paupers, 1903-04.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'h.' Claims not in minute book, 1903-04.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'l.' Claims not in published list.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'k.' Extravagance and mismanagement in the purchasing of chain gang supplies.

"Third cause of action—paragraph 5, subdivision 'm.' Payment of claims in 1903 and 1904, which were contracted in 1902 and 1903, respectively."

These itemized statements contain lists of hundreds of claims, setting forth the number of the claim, the name of the claimant, the date of the claim, the amount of the claim, the date of payment and number of the warrant, and in the vast majority of instances the nature of the claim all particularly set out and according to the order of Judge Hydrick made a part of the complaint. There was no effort to comply with the order in respect to the subdivisions stricken out by Judge Prince. Upon the serving and filing of the above itemized statements, defendant's attorneys excepted to the said statements on the ground that they were not in compliance with Judge Hydrick's order and moved before his honor, Judge Geo. E. Prince, at his chambers, to strike all of the said statements out of the complaint on the ground that the same failed to comply with the order of Judge Hydrick, and, failing in this, to strike out special matters and things in the fifth paragraph of each of the said causes of action.

Upon the hearing of this motion his honor, Judge Geo. E. Prince, ordered: "That the following subdivisions of the complaint herein be and the same are hereby stricken out, to wit, in the first cause of action, in paragraph 5, subdivisions 'a,' 'c,' 'e,' 'l,' 'j,' 'k,' 'i,' and 'm.' In the second cause of action, in paragraph 5, subdivisions 'a,' 'c,' 'e,' 'l,' 'k,' 'j,' and 'm.' In the third cause of action, paragraph 5, subdivision 'a,'" and in all other respects the motion was overruled. From this order defendant appealed upon the following exceptions:

"(1) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out all of said itemized statement upon the ground that the same fails to comply with the order of Judge Hydrick, in that the said statements are general, and not specific, and fails to apprise the defendants of the dates and particulars wherein the said several items of the several causes of action stated are a breach of the condition of the several bonds as alleged in the several causes of action in the complaint, and action herein, and of the itemized statement thereto, served as is required by law, and by the terms of the said order.

"(2) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out of subdivision 'b' of paragraph 5 of each of the causes of action alleged the sentence, 'that he approved claims that were rendered in extravagant amounts for labor that had never been performed, and for materials that had never been furnished.' Because under the law the approval of claims is a judicial function vested in the board of commissioners, and the same does not constitute a breach of defendant's bond, and also because no itemized statement has been served covering the same.

"(3) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out all the itemized statements covering 'b' of paragraph 5 of the three causes of action, because the items therein listed do not appear to be itemized and verified as alleged in the complaint, and, so refusing, he further erred in refusing to order subdivision 'b' of paragraph 5 of the several causes of action alleged made more definite and certain by specifying severally and particularly the year in which the alleged items were presented and paid, and the particulars wherein the said several items were extravagant, and those in which the labor and services had not been performed, and what labor and what service the same applied to.

"(4) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out of subdivision 'c' of paragraph 5 of the third cause of action the words, 'and in accepting work that was incomplete and defective,' and in refusing to make said itemized statement served for said subdivision 'c' of said third cause of action more definite and certain, by specifying the date and year in which the alleged claim was made, the date and year of its payment, if paid, together with the number and date of the warrant, which of the several claims are bridges and what bridges they refer to, which were road and what roads, and to what part of the roads they refer.

"(5) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out all of the itemized statements covering subdivision 'd' of paragraph 5 of each of the three causes of action alleged in the complaint, because they fail to apprise the defendants of the facts upon which the alleged fraud is based, which, if any, are in the name of fictitious persons for labor and work never performed, which, if any, are for payment of the individual debts of the said clerk, and so holding he erred in refusing to order said statements made more definite and certain in the particulars above specified, and also erred in refusing to strike out of said subdivision of said paragraph in each of the several causes of action the clause: 'And for many and various other purposes not authorized by law,' just following the word 'clerk' on the thirteenth line, down to the semicolon on the following line, because no itemized statements had been served concerning the same.

"(6) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out subdivision 'c' of paragraph 5 of the third cause of action, and the itemized statement served purporting to cover the same, and, so holding, he erred in refusing to require said itemized statements to be rendered more definite and certain by stating particularly what items among those served, the signature to the approval of which were forged, and in what years the same were forged and whose signatures, if any, were forged.

"(7) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out subdivision 'f' of paragraph 5 of each of the three causes of action, because the statement served failed to show that the said items listed are false and fraudulent or fictitious; and, so holding, he erred in failing to require the said complaint and statement to be made more definite and certain by specifying particularly and severally what claims, if any, are false and fraudulent, what, if any, are fictitious, and setting out the facts showing the fraud and falseness relied on severally and specifically, and the items to which it refers, together with the year in which the same were severally approved and paid, and the date of payment.

"(8) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out subdivision 'g' of paragraph 5 of the three causes of action for the reason that under the law the approval of claims is a judicial function vested in the board of commissioners, and that the same does not constitute a breach of defendants' bonds, and, so holding, he further erred in failing to strike out of subdivision 'g' of paragraph 5 of the first cause of action all after the word 'claims' on the second line of said paragraph, down to word 'claimed' on twelfth line down to and including the end of said paragraph, so as to make the allegation of said paragraph conform to the statement covering the same, and in refusing to make the said statement more definite and certain by specifying which of said items were not accompanied by vouchers, and not approved by the foreman in charge of the work, who was the foreman, wherein the vouchers were improper, what items contained the names of laborers who had not performed the work or rendered the services claimed, and to what roads do said items relate, and his honor erred in refusing to strike out all of subdivision 'g' of paragraph 5 of second and third cause of action in the complaint after the word 'officer' on sixth line of said subdivision of said paragraph down to and including the end thereof in each of said causes of action, so as to make the same conform to the statement of particulars served, and make said statement of particulars served more definite and certain by specifying the year in which the said several alleged claims were paid, which of said items, and wherein they were extravagant and unnecessary, which and wherein not properly vouched, and in what the improper vouching consists, which were omitted from the records of the office, and from what records the same were omitted.

"(9) That his honor erred in failing to strike out subdivision 'h' of paragraph 5 of each of the three causes of action alleged in the complaint, and in failing to strike out of the statement served the itemized statement of each of the items covering said paragraph in each of the three causes of action, because it does not appear from the said statement that the said claims are false or fraudulent, or were not proper debts against the county, or that the county has in any way been injured thereby.

"(10) That his honor erred in failing to strike out subdivision 'i' of paragraph 5 of the third cause of action of the complaint, and the statement of particulars served as covering the same, because it does not appear from the statement that the said debts are false or fraudulent, or were not proper debts against the county, or that the county has in any way been injured thereby, and, so holding, he erred in refusing to require said statements to be made more definite and certain by specifying which of said items are false entries, which are erroneous, and wherein the error lies, which are omissions and specifying particularly the year in which said false entries, errors, and omissions occurred and were paid.

"(11) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out subdivision 'k' of paragraph 5 of the third cause of action in the said complaint, except so much thereof as alleges 'said defendants were guilty of gross extravagance in the contracting of blacksmithing accounts,' so as to make the allegations of said subdivision in some measure conform to the statement of particulars served, and further erred in not requiring said statement of particulars served more definite and certain by specifying which items, and wherein the same were extravagant, and in what respects the same were mismanaged, and also the year in which each of said items were contracted and paid.

"(12) That his honor erred in refusing to strike out subdivision 'm' of paragraph 5 of the third cause of action, and the statement of particulars served covering the same, because it does not appear that the said claims are false or fraudulent, or were not proper debts against the county, or that the county has in any way been injured thereby, and, failing in this, he further erred by failing to strike out all items on pages 131 and 132 of the said itemized statement served, except claims numbered '3138' on page 131 and numbers '1418, '1428,' and '1446' on page 132, because none of said items appear to have been contracted in a year different from the year of their payment."

The defendants also demurred to the complaint as it stood after Judge Prince's order on the ground that the assignments of breaches of the bonds do not state a cause of action and giving various reasons which need not be set out here. This demurrer was heard and overruled by his honor, R. W. Memminger, in a short order, from which the defendant appeals on the following exceptions:

"(1) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'b' of the first, second, and third causes of action because the allegations of this paragraph in each of said causes of action allege negligence on the part of the defendant Samuel H. Owens in failing to examine claims and approving some that were extravagant, and in approving others that were not itemized and verified, and paying the same by drawing warrants on the county treasurer, whereas, it was the duty of the county board of commissioners to examine and approve claims, and not the duty of the supervisor; it being the duty of the supervisor, however, to pay all claims examined and approved by the board.

"(2) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'd' of the first, second, and third causes of action because the allegations of this paragraph of each of said causes of action allege negligence in signing his name to warrants, and leaving them with the clerk of the county board of commissioners, and in failing to inspect the warrant stubs, and in allowing the warrants paid without objection; whereas, no breach of duty on the part of the supervisor is here charged.

"(3) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'f' of the first, second, and third causes of action because the allegations of this paragraph of each of the said causes of action allege violation of duty on the part of the supervisor in approving fraudulent claims made out in the name of fictitious persons, and in signing warrants to pay the same; whereas, all claims against the county are required by law to be approved, not by the supervisor, as such, but by the county board of commissioners, of which by law the supervisor is only a member, and he is not liable as supervisor for his actions as a member of the county board of commissioners; this paragraph, therefore, charging no breach of duty of supervisor as such.

"(4) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'g' of the first, second, and third causes of action because the allegations of this paragraph of each of said causes of action allege the violation of duty in approving extravagant claims for the transportation of paupers and negligently omitting them from the records of his office, violation of his duty in approving the pay rolls for public works, when the same were not accompanied by vouchers, etc., and violation of his duty in approving and paying claims upon contingent account when the same are not verified; whereas no breach of duty on the part of the supervisor as such is herein charged, the approval of claims being a matter for the county board as such, and it being mandatory upon the supervisor to pay all claims approved by the board.

"(5) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'h' of the first, second, and third causes of action because the allegations of this paragraph of each of said causes of action alleged a violation of duty in failing to cause a record to be kept of all proceedings and contracts; also, in failing to keep a record of claims approved, and failing to have them entered upon the record for public inspection; whereas, no violation on the part of the supervisor as such is herein alleged.

"(6) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'c' of the third cause of action, because the allegation of this paragraph alleges negligence on the part of the supervisor in the supervision of the work on the public highways, in failing to inspect the same, and in accepting the same while incomplete and defective; whereas, no damages whatever are alleged as a result of said alleged breach, and if said breach occurred, as alleged, no damages flowed therefrom. It would be a case of damnum absque injuria.

"(7) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'e' of the third cause of action because the allegation of this paragraph charges negligence in signing warrants in blank for the payment of forged claims, causing thereby a diversion of the public funds; whereas no breach of duty on the part of the supervisor is charged, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay claims approved by the board by drawing his warrants on the county treasurer, and there is no allegation that he knew that said claims were forged as alleged, and, in the absence of such allegation, there is failure to charge any breach of duty on the part of the supervisor as such.

"(8) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'i' of the third cause of action because the allegation of this paragraph charges a violation of duty in failing to publish a full statement of all claims approved and paid; whereas, no damages are alleged as flowing from said alleged breach, and, in the absence of such allegation, a case of damnum absque injuria is presented.

"(9) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'j' of the third cause of action because the allegation of this paragraph charges a violation of duty while as a member of the board voting an extra allowance to the clerk of the said board and in paying the same out of the county funds; whereas, no breach of duty is here charged against the supervisor as such.

"(10) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'k' of the third cause of action, because the allegation of this paragraph charges negligence in the case of machinery, tools, mules, and other property of the county, in purchasing chain gang supplies, in swapping and trading the mules and property of the county, being extravagant in the purchase of lumber, buying material, etc., for the county that was unsuited and not needed, using the property of the county for personal use without consideration, and in disposing of lumber, old bridge material, and other property without rendering an account therefor, whereas, the purchasing of such supplies is a matter for the board, and not for the supervisor, and, if extravagant, unsuited, and not needed, the work was done by the board, as such, and not by the supervisor, as such, and for that reason no breach of duty on the part of the supervisor, as such, is charged.

"(11) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'l' of the third cause of action because the allegation of this paragraph charges a violation of duty in entering into contract for expenditure of public money and voting for the same in excess of the taxes levied for that year; whereas, no breach of duty under the law is here charged against the supervisor as such.

"(12) His honor erred in overruling the demurrer to paragraph 'm' of the third cause of action, because the allegation of this paragraph charges a violation of duty on the part of the supervisor in the payment of claims contracted for during one year out of the taxes collected for another year; whereas, no damages are alleged as flowing from said alleged breach, and, in the absence of such allegation, a case of damnum absque injuria is presented, and because no breach of duty on the part of the supervisor is charged."

This appeal is therefore from the order of Judge Prince refusing to strike out certain portions of the complaint, and from the order of Judge Memminger overruling the demurrer to the complaint. The exceptions to these orders involve practically the same points of law, and are very numerous, and therefore for the purposes of this opinion it is not deemed necessary to consider them in detail. It is sufficient to say that the main contention of the appellants is that the itemized statement served was not a compliance with the order of Judge D. E. Hydrick, and, if it was a compliance, still the complaint, as it comes before this court, stated no cause of action for the reason that the acts complained of as breaches of the bond were done as a member of the board of county commissioners, and not as supervisor, and therefore his bonds are not liable therefor, they having been given as supervisor, and not as county commissioner, and for the further reason that there is no damages to the plaintiff alleged in the complaint, and therefore the doctrine of damnum absque injuria applies, and for the further reason that there is no allegation that the supervisor knew of the breaches and loss therefrom assigned in the complaint; thereby the supervisor and his bondsmen cannot be held liable. Reading the complaint with the itemized statement served under Judge Hydrick's order, putting each class in its proper place, it is apparent that the statement is a substantial compliance with Judge Hydrick's order, in so far as it relates to the subdivisions not stricken out of the complaint by Judge Prince's order; and it may well be assumed that certain subdivisions were stricken out by Judge Prince because the itemized statement was not a compliance with Judge Hydrick's order with respect to them.

Now, with respect to the question as to whether or not the defendant Owens' acts as a member of the county board of commissioners are contemplated in his bonds as supervisor. When the supervisor was elected as supervisor, he was elected to perform all of the duties devolving upon him as supervisor, and one of these duties under the law was to act as a member of the county board of commissioners. His bond required him to "well and truly perform the duties of said office as required by law." The law required him to perform the duty of acting as a member of the board of county commissioners, and in his bonds he so bound himself. It seems that this point is well settled, and against appellant's contention in the case of Fort v. Assmann, 38 S. C. 253, 16 S. E. 887, where the sureties on Assmann's bond as clerk of court sought to avoid liability for money received by Assmann under an order of court directing him to sell land in a foreclosure proceeding on the ground that, when he received the money, he was not acting as clerk of court, and was not performing duties imposed upon him by law. This court held that the sureties were liable on his bond as clerk of court for the money received. Liberal construction should be placed upon the language of a pleading, but this liberality need not be invoked in this complaint in order to find that it alleges damages to the plaintiff as a result of the failure of Owens to well and truly perform his duties as supervisor. It will be seen that in nearly all of the assignments of breaches of the bonds it is stated in language as follows: "Thereby causing a diversion and loss of the public funds of the county"—and in some assignments the following language is used: "To the loss and detriment of the county." It is also alleged in paragraph 6 of each of the three causes of action "that by reason of the matters and things aforesaid the plaintiff has suffered loss and damage to the amount of five thousand dollars," etc. The matters and things refer to the assignment of breaches of the bonds under the various subdivisions of paragraph 5 in each of the three causes of action. It must be remembered that in reading the complaint as above indicated it is necessary to place each class of the itemized statement in its proper place; for example, that class designated as "warrants signed in blank, 1901-02," must be made a part of subdivision "d" of paragraph 5 of the second cause of action. When this is done, it will be seen that there is no room for complaint on the part of the defendants that the pleading should be made more definite and certain, or that they have not been informed as to what they are to meet, especially as these matters are nearly all, if not all, on record in the supervisor county board of commissioners' office, and are open to everybody's inspection.

But it is further contended that knowledge of the defendant Owens of the various breaches of the bonds and loss therefrom must be alleged and proven. The bonds given according to law as alleged in the complaint guarantee that Owens would "well and truly perform the duties of said office as then or thereafter required by law." These words constitute the gravamen of the bonds, and, this being a suit for breaches of the bonds, they become important. The principal and surety are bound by the terms of their bonds. The conditions named in the bonds are not that, if Owens knowingly fails to "well and truly perform the duties," etc. then he and his surety are bound in the penal sum of $5,000. The complaint nowhere alleges that the various breaches of the bonds and the consequent loss therefrom were willful, or that they were knowingly made, and the loss therefrom was known to Owens, but it is alleged that the defendant Owens was "negligent and careless." This is sufficient. If a bonded official is "negligent and careless," he cannot be said to have complied with his bond to "well and truly perform the duties of his office," etc., and, if he is shown to have been so negligent or so careless that loss resulted to the county, loss that could have been prevented by the exercise of care, his official bond would be liable. For example, if, as alleged in subdivision "d" of paragraph 5 in the first cause of action, the supervisor signed in blank warrants or checks and left them in the hands of his clerk to be filled in and negligently and carelessly failed to inspect such warrants or checks, can he be said to have "well and truly performed the duties of his office," etc.? We think not, and, if loss resulted to the county as alleged, then the bonds are liable.

The complaint is necessarily long, but the scope of its allegations is that Owens was elected supervisor for three terms and gave bond as required by law for each term, that he negligently and carelessly performed the duties of his office, and that by reason of such negligence and carelessness the county suffered loss to the amount claimed in the complaint. This constitutes a cause of action against the supervisor and his surety, and is not demurrable.

It is the judgment of this court that all of the exceptions in the appeals from the orders and rulings of Judge Prince and Judge Memminger be dismissed, and that the judgments of the circuit court be affirmed.

(86 S. C. 523)

TALBERT v. HAMLIN.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 6, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 220*)—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT MADE BELOW.

Plaintiff in an action for a partnership accounting cannot complain on appeal that the master did not require defendant to file an itemized account of money received and paid out, that plaintiff might scrutinize, surcharge, and falsify the account, there having been no request therefor, and objection having in no way been made to the form of the account, and time to examine, surcharge, or falsify it not having been asked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1325-1332; Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 36*)—DISREGARDING ADMISSION IN ANSWER.

While as a general rule an admission in a pleading is taken as conclusive of the thing admitted, though it, even if under oath, may be withdrawn by leave of court, error cannot be predicated on the master's finding that defendant's total receipts were a certain amount, when his statement of the account filed as an exhibit to his answer, which was under oath, showed they were more; it not appearing how the difference arose, which may have been through a mere difference in the method of stating the account, or through a mistake in defendant's addition, in either of which cases he should not be concluded by his statement of the aggregate amount received.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-86; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 273*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EXCEPTIONS.

When an account has been stated by a master according to correct methods, an exception thereto must specify the item or items to which objection is made; and on a mere general exception alleging error therein the court will not enter on a detailed examination of the whole account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1620-1630, 1764; Dec. Dig. § 273.*]

4. COURTS (§ 107*)—STATEMENT IN DECISION—CONSIDERATION OF EVIDENCE.

The statement of the court in its decree confirming the report of a master that "to review the testimony in full would require a tremendous amount of labor, and, according to the view which I take of the case, would be entirely," is not meant to indicate that the court did not fully review the testimony in the sense of weighing and giving it full credit, but merely that it was unnecessary to review it in the sense of going over it and discussing it in detail in the decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 360; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

5. PARTNERSHIP (§ 83*)—ALLOWANCE FOR SERVICES OF PARTNER.

A partner is not to be allowed credit for his services to the firm, in the absence of agreement therefor, though he devote his whole time thereto, and his copartner do little or nothing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 131; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

6. PARTNERSHIP (§ 83*)—ALLOWANCE FOR SERVICES OF PARTNER—AGREEMENT.

The agreement of plaintiff when entering into an equal partnership with defendant that he would pay half the rent, the buildings being owned by defendant, and half the insurance and half the wages, is not an agreement that defendant should be paid for his services, but refers merely to the services of employes of the firm, where it is agreed what shall be paid defendant's son, and nothing is said as to any amount to be paid defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 131; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

7. PARTNERSHIP (§ 84*)—EXPENSE OF BUSINESS—RENT OF BUILDING OWNED BY PARTNER.

The rent of buildings occupied by a firm is a legitimate expense of the business, to be allowed the partner owning them, in the absence of any agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 132; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; C. C. Featherstone, Special Judge.

Action by H. Q. Talbert against A. B. Hamlin. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Modified.

Grier & Park and W. P. Greene, for appellant. W. N. Graydon, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. In December, 1905, plaintiff and defendant entered into a partnership in the business of carrying on a feed and sales stable. The defendant had practically the entire management of the business.

He kept no regular set of books. The only record of the transactions of the firm was kept on memorandum books which he carried in his pocket, and which were kept in an irregular and confusing manner. The business proving unprofitable this action was brought, in the fall of 1908, for an accounting and settlement of the affairs of the partnership. The defendant by his answer admitted his liability to account, and expressed his readiness to do so, alleging that, on such accounting, it would be found that plaintiff was indebted to him. He attached to his answer, as exhibits, certain statements, showing the amounts which he alleged that he had received and paid out in the conduct of the business, and moneys advanced by him for the use of the firm. Some of the entries were not itemized. For instance, on the debt sheet is, "Cash received from sale of stock and all other sources, $14,683," and on the credit sheet is, "For feed and labor at stables, $4,965," both being the aggregate of many smaller items. According to these statements, his total receipts were $21,010, and his total disbursements $23,845, the difference being the amount which he claimed the firm owed him.

The case was referred to the master to take the testimony, state the account, and report his conclusions of law and fact. The master reported that the firm was indebted to the defendant in the sum of $2,235.65, and that plaintiff was liable for half that amount, and recommended that defendant have judgment therefor. His report was confirmed by the circuit court in a short decree, in which the court says: "The testimony in the case is very voluminous, consisting of testimony taken by the master and reduced to writing by him, and of many books and papers. To review the testimony in full would require a tremendous amount of labor, and, according to the view I take of the case, would be entirely unnecessary. The master has made a full, able, and satisfactory report, which shows that he has gone into the matter very thoroughly. I am satisfied that his mode of accounting is correct, and I am not prepared to say that his findings of fact are incorrect."

The appellant complains that the master erred in not requiring the defendant to file an account, showing item by item the cash received and paid out by him, so that the plaintiff might scrutinize, surcharge, and falsify the account. It does not appear that the master was ever requested by the plaintiff to require such an account to be filed. Nor does it appear that any objection was made by the plaintiff to the form or manner of the statement of the accounts attached by the defendant as exhibits to his answer. No demand was made for a bill of particulars. No motion was made to make the statement more definite and certain. Nor does it appear that, after the evidence of defendant as to the accounting had all been taken, the plaintiff asked for time to examine it and introduce evidence surcharging or falsifying the account.

The next allegation of error is as to the finding that the total receipts of the defendant were only $17,824, when he had admitted in the statement of the account filed as an exhibit to his answer, which was sworn to, that he had received $21,010. Appellant contends that the court should have held this admission conclusive against respondent. While it is true, as a general rule, that an admission in a pleading is taken as conclusive of the fact admitted, and, so long as it remains in the pleading, evidence to the contrary will be excluded, still even such an admission, though made under oath, may be withdrawn by leave of the court. Hall v. Woodward, 30 S. C. 564, 9 S. E. 684. But this is not that kind of admission. The difference between the amount found by the master and the amount stated by the defendant may have arisen from a difference in the method of stating the account; for instance, the defendant may have charged himself with the whole amount received and the whole amount paid out in certain transactions, and the master may have debited or credited only the difference between the two amounts. Or the difference may have arisen from a mistake in the defendant's addition, or a mistake in some other respect. In either event, he should not be concluded by his statement of the aggregate amount received. We are not informed how the difference arose. But the master did just what the order of reference required him to do—to take up and report a statement of the account from the testimony.

Many of the exceptions to the report of the master and to the circuit decree assign error in the accounting without specifying the particular item or items debited or credited to which objection is made, so that, to determine whether there was error in respect to the matters complained of, a detailed examination of the whole account would be necessary. The purpose of referring matters of account to the master is to save the court the time and labor that would be necessary to do the work of an accountant. When the account has been stated, according to correct methods, the exceptions must specify the item or items of debit or credit to which objection is made. The court will not in response to a general exception alleging error in an account enter upon a detailed examination of the whole account. Myers v. Myers, Bailey, Eq. 23. In this connection, we will next consider the exception that the circuit court erred in not reviewing the testimony. We think the appellant has misapprehended the language of the circuit decree. When the court said: "To review the testimony in full would require a tremendous amount of labor, and, according to the view which I take of the case, would be entirely unnecessary," it was not meant that the court had not fully reviewed the testimony in the sense of weighing and giving it due consideration, but merely that it was unnecessary to review it in the sense of going over it and discussing it in detail in the decree.

We think the court erred in allowing the defendant credit for his services to the firm. It is the legal duty of each member of a partnership to devote his time, skill, and energy to the business of the firm; and, in the absence of an agreement therefor, he is not entitled to extra compensation. The presumption is that his share of the profits is all that each expects to get for his efforts, and that notwithstanding one may devote his whole time and attention to the business and the other may do little or nothing. The plaintiff swears positively that there was no agreement to pay the defendant anything for his services. The only testimony tending to show such an agreement is that of the defendant and his son, neither of whom say in so many words that there was an agreement that the defendant should have extra compensation for his services. All that defendant said on that subject was: "His (plaintiff's) proposition was to pay me one-half of rent of stables, one-half of insurance and one-half of wages." His son, who was employed by the firm, testified: "Mr. Talbert said he wanted to be halfers with my father, and said he would pay half of the rent, the insurance, and half of the wages." Whose wages? Defendant's son and other assistants were employed and paid wages, and we think it was the wages of these assistants that were referred to. The defendant's son testified that the agreement was that he was to be paid $40 per month for his services and for boarding his father. Neither of them say how much defendant was to be paid. It is not reasonable to conclude that they would have agreed upon the wages without some agreement as to the amount. The testimony shows, also, that defendant was in a similar partnership the two years before with another person, and did not get any extra compensation for his services to that firm, although he had, as in this case, the sole management of the business. Moreover, there is no proof whatever as to what the defendant's services to the firm were reasonably worth, and the finding that they were worth $60 per month is unsupported by any testimony. The preponderance of the evidence is against the finding of the court below upon this point, and the accounting must be corrected by striking out that credit. The rent of the stables, though they were owned by one of the partners, was a legitimate expense of the business and would have been allowed the defendant without any specific agreement, but the preponderance of the evidence shows that there was an agreement to pay a reasonable rent. Judgment modified.

(86 S. C. 503)

STATE v. MESSERVY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 4, 1910.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 169*)—EVIDENCE—PRIOR ACTS—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a prosecution for the murder of a dispensary constable while he was attempting to arrest defendant as he was starting to leave a railroad station with several gallons of alcohol in his wagon, evidence of a conversation between a witness and defendant six months previous to the homicide in regard to a search by deceased of defendant's house for contraband liquors was admissible to show that defendant knew that deceased was a dispensary constable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 129*)—CONSTABLES—BOND—STATUTE.

The requirement of Civ. Code 1902, § 1047, that constables shall "take the oath of office and give bond, does not relate to constables commissioned by the Governor under the Carey-Cothran act (Act Feb. 16, 1907 [25 St. at Large, p. 464]), but only to constables elected or appointed under section 1046.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 129*)—DISPENSARY CONSTABLES—APPOINTMENT.

The appointment by the Governor of dispensary constables is specifically authorized by Act Feb. 16, 1907 (25 St. at Large, p. 477) § 38.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 830*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—ERRONEOUS REQUESTS.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, it appeared that deceased was a dispensary constable, who had been appointed by the Governor under the Carey-Cothran act (Act Feb. 16, 1907 [25 St. at Large, p. 464]) without giving bond, as not being required to do so under the act, even if it should be held that this act was not inconsistent with and did not repeal the former dispensary law, section 661 requiring the constables to give bond, yet it was no error for the court to refuse to charge that Civ. Code 1902, § 1047, should have been complied with before he could have authority to act as constable; that section not being applicable to constables appointed under the Carey-Cothran act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 830.*]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 129*)—DISPENSARY CONSTABLE—OFFICER DE FACTO—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Even if a dispensary constable was required by statute to file his bond and take the prescribed oaths before entering upon his duties, and did not do so, yet, if he was acting as constable in good faith under the commission of the Governor and the seal of the state, he was a constable de facto.

6. OFFICERS (§ 41*)—"OFFICER DE FACTO"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

To constitute an officer de facto, he must have a presumptive or apparent right to exercise the office, resulting from either full and peaceable possession of the powers of such office, or reasonable color of title, with actual use of the office.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1845-1851.]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 111*)—SELF-DEFENSE—RESISTING ARREST—DE FACTO OFFICER.

The authority of a de facto officer cannot be questioned collaterally, so that one who resists and slays him while in the discharge of his apparent duty has only such defense as would exist were the person slain an officer de jure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 143, 144; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

8. HOMICIDE (§ 338*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, the time of the offense had already been shown, the defendant was not prejudiced by the court's refusal to allow him to testify as to that fact, in the absence of any showing of a good reason for the repetition.

9. WITNESSES (§ 890*)—CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS—EVIDENCE.

Where proper foundation has been laid, proof of inconsistent statements made by a witness may be given by any person who heard the statements, and is not restricted to the person to whom they were made.

10. COMMERCE (§ 40*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—INTOXICATING LIQUORS—DELIVERY TO CONSIGNEE—EFFECT.

After certain alcohol had been delivered to the consignee at the railroad station, it was no longer protected as an article of interstate commerce, if it was held for unlawful use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. §§ 29, 30; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Colleton County; Chas. G. Dantzer, Judge.

J. W. Messervy was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Padgett, Lemacks & Morser, for appellant. John H. Peulfof, Sol., and Howell & Gruber (Jas. E. Peulfof, of counsel), for the State.

JONES, C. J. The defendant at fall term, 1909, was indicted for the murder of C. P. Fishburne at Ravenel station, in Colleton county, on July 6, 1909. The jury rendered a verdict for manslaughter, and defendant was sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary.

At the time of the homicide the deceased, Fishburne, was acting as a constable with a commission dated March 22, 1907, issued by Governor Ansel under the dispensary law known as the "Carey-Cothran act." The defendant had just received from the railroad station agent at Ravenel a barrel containing about 30 gallons of alcohol, and placed it in the wagon, and was about to drive off, when Fishburne seized the horse attached to the wagon and demanded surrender. Fishburne called to J. D. Altman, who was assisting him to come and hold the horse and let him take charge of the prisoner. The defendant gave this version of what then occurred: "When he said, 'Mr. Altman, come and hold the horse, and let me take charge of the prisoner,' Mr. Altman started to hold the horse, and then I cut the horse, and, when I cut the horse, Mr. Altman stopped, and I cut the horse four times, and each time I cut the horse to make it go he tried to jerk the horse down and I continued to cut the horse four times. When I cut the horse, Mr. Fishburne said, 'If you won't surrender, we will have to kill you,' and he pulled his pistol and was going to shoot, and I shot him."

The first and second exceptions assign error in admitting the testimony of E. E. Fowler, state's witness, as to a conversation between the witness and defendant, Messervy, about six months previous to the homicide, relating to a search by deceased of defendant's house for contraband liquors. The court was correct in ruling the testimony admissible, as it tended to show that defendant has reason to know that Fishburne was acting as a dispensary constable.

Under exceptions 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 appellant contends that, in addition to the commission by the Governor of Fishburne as constable under the Carey-Cothran act (Act Feb. 18, 1907 [25 St. at Large, p. 464]), it was necessary to Fishburne's authority to act as such for him to comply with section 1047, Civ. Code, which provides: "When any person shall be elected or appointed to the office of constable, he shall repair to the clerk's office of the county, and, together with the evidence of his election or appointment he shall lodge his bond, in the form prescribed by law in the penalty of five hundred dollars, with good sureties, not less than two nor more than five, to be approved in writing by the clerk; and, upon taking the oaths herein prescribed such person shall be entitled to a certificate from the clerk that he has filed his bond and taken the requisite oaths and shall thence forth be regarded as a regularly qualified constable; nor shall any person not so qualified exercise the powers of a constable: provided," etc. The court refused to allow testimony to show that this statute had not been complied with, and refused to instruct the jury that Fishburne was bound to comply with the statute before he could have authority to act as constable, and interfere with defendant if he was violating the dispensary law.

The court further refused to charge that under section 879, Cr. Code, Fishburne was acting unlawfully and committing a misdemeanor if he attempted to exercise the duty of a constable without having given bond as required. The requirement of section 1047 that constables shall take the oath of office and give bond does not relate to constables commissioned by the Governor under the Carey-Cothran act, but to constables when chosen by the qualified electors or appointed by magistrates, as provided for in section 1048. The appointment of dispensary constables is authorized by section 38 of the act of 1907, which declares: "It shall be the duty of the sheriffs and their deputies, magistrates, constables, rural police, city and town officials to enforce the provisions of this act. If they fail to do so it is hereby made the duty of the Governor to enforce the same and he is hereby authorized to appoint such deputies, constables and detectives as may be necessary, the salaries and expenses of such officers to be paid out of the profits of the dispensaries in counties wherein they may be established and out of the ordinary county funds in counties wherein they have not been established." We do not find in this statute any requirement that the deputies, constables, and detectives authorized to be appointed by the Governor shall take the oath of office and give bond, as required in section 1047, supra. We do not find in the Constitution any requirement that constables shall give bond. Const. art. 3, § 26, does provide that all officers before entering upon the duties of their respective offices shall take the oath prescribed in the Constitution, and, if this provision should be construed as relating to constables, deputies, and detectives specially appointed by the Governor to enforce the dispensary law, there was no attempt to show that such oath was not taken by Fishburne before some officer before appointment by the Governor. The fact that ordinary constables have many duties to perform under various laws, and that the duties of dispensary constables are limited to enforcement of the dispensary law alone, affords a reason why the Legislature should fail to require dispensary constables to take the different oaths referred to in sections 582 and 1047. There is no reason for requiring dispensary constables to take the oath to enforce the laws against gaming and keeping gaming tables and to enforce the penalties prescribed against dueling required of constables elected or appointed under section 1046.

Section 534 merely prescribes the form of the bond which shall be given by officers who are required by law to give bond, but dispensary constables under the Carey-Cothran act are not by that act required to give bond. Under the former dispensary law (section 661) state constables were required to give bond to the state in the sum of $500 with sureties to be approved by the Attorney General, and, even if it should be held that this legislation is not inconsistent with the act of 1907 and is not repealed thereby, still there was no error in the rulings to which exceptions are taken, as the question presented to the court was whether Fishburne should have complied with section 1047 as prerequisite to his qualification to act as constable in enforcing the dispensary law. But if it be true that a dispensary constable appointed by the Governor under the act of 1907 should take the prescribed oaths of office and file a bond for the faithful performance of his duty, and that Fishburne did not take such oaths and file such bond, still, if he was acting as constable in good faith under the commission of the Governor and the seal of the state, as appears in this case, he was at least constable de facto. State v. Hill, 2 Speers, 150; McBee v. Hoke, 2 Speers, 138, Kottman v. Ayer, 3 Strob. 92; State v. Hopkins, 15 S. C. 156. Tinsley v. Kirby, 17 S. C. 1, cited for appellant, is not to the contrary, as it recognizes the general rule as to de facto officers and merely holds that there cannot be a de facto officer where there could be no de jure officer. "To constitute an officer de facto, he must have a presumptive or apparent right to exercise the office, resulting from either full and peaceable possession of the powers of such office, or reasonable color of title, with actual use of the office." Ex parte Norris, 8 S. C. 473; Note to Hildreth v. McIntire, 19 Am. Dec. 63. Public policy requires that the authority of one in fact holding a public office under color of legal title shall not be questioned collaterally. One who resists a de facto officer and slays him while in the discharge of his apparent duty has only such defense as would exist were the person slain an officer de jure. 1 Bishop Crim. Law, § 465; 29 Cyc. 1395; State v. Dierberger, 96 Mo. 666, 10 S. W. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 380.

It is contended under the tenth exception that the presiding judge refused to allow the prisoner to testify as to when the homicide occurred. As the defendant had already testified that the homicide was committed on the evening of July 6, 1909, and there was no issue on this point, he was not prejudiced. The court was not advised that there was any purpose in repeating testimony on this point, except possibly to show that a special session of the court had been called to try the case soon after the homicide, a wholly irrelevant matter.

There was no error, as alleged in the twelfth exception, in allowing T. J. Blanchard, witness for the state, to contradict defendant's witness, John Brown, as to a statement made by Brown to Murray concerning the homicide. Proper foundation had been laid by advertising the witness Brown as to the time, place, and person to whom the statement was alleged to have been made. While Blanchard was not the person to whom the statement was made, he was present and heard it; hence his testimony was supported by the foundation laid for the introduction of that statement.

The thirteenth and fourteenth exceptions assign error in refusing to instruct the jury that, if the alcohol was intended for unlawful use, the deceased had no right to seize it, or the horse and wagon, or to arrest defendant until the shipment arrived at the home of the defendant, if it was in unbroken package, said alcohol being an article of interstate shipment. The alcohol having been completely delivered to the consignee and owner at the point of its destination as an interstate shipment before the attempt to seize it, it was no longer protected as an article of interstate commerce, if it was held for unlawful use. State v. Moody, 70 S. C. 56, 49 S. E. 8; Jaro v. Holstein, 73 S. C. 112, 52 S. E. 870; State v. Pope, 79 S. C. 90, 60 S. E. 234. State v. Holleyman, 55 S. C. 207, 31 S. E. 362, 33 S. E. 366, 45 L. R. A. 567, does not support appellant's contention as the liquor was being transported for lawful use.

The remaining exceptions were not argued by counsel for appellant, and are either immaterial or controlled by the rulings announced.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

KING v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 4, 1910.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 20*) — CLAIM—PENALTY—PRE-REQUISITES.

Under the statute providing that claims against carriers shall be "filed" with the agent at the point of destination, a "verbal" complaint to such agent about the loss of goods is insufficient, in order to obtain the statutory penalty for the carrier's failure to adjust the claim within the statutory period after it was filed.

2. CARRIERS (§ 20*) — CLAIM—PENALTY—PRE-REQUISITES.

Under the statute requiring claims against carriers to be filed with the agent at the point of destination, such filing is a condition precedent to recovery of the statutory penalty for the carrier's failure to adjust such claims within the statutory period after their filing, unless there is waiver of strict compliance with the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

3. RECORDS (§ 7*) — FILING CLAIMS — REQUISITES — "FILED."

A paper is "filed" when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2764-2770.]

4. CARRIERS (§ 20*) — "FILING A CLAIM" — WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Such terms as "filing a claim" necessarily imply the placing of some written or printed paper showing the nature and amount of the claim and the person to whom due with the proper custodian.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 20*) — CLAIM—FILING—"WAIVER."

In an action for goods lost by a carrier, and the statutory penalty for failure to adjust the claim within the time allowed after a claim is filed with the agent at the destination of the goods, it appeared that plaintiff had had a conversation with the carrier's local agent at the destination of the goods, who told him to send his claim to the general freight agent, which he did. In the correspondence with such agent there was no mention of the statutory penalty; and at that time defendant was not liable for it. Defendant had no right to compel plaintiff to file his claim with the local agent. Held, that the direction by such agent to send the claim to the general agent was not a waiver of the statutory requirement that the claim must be "filed" with the agent at the destination of the goods before the penalty sued for can be recovered, because waiver is the voluntary relinquishment of some existing right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 7375-7381; vol. 3, pp. 7831, 7832.]

6. CARRIERS (§ 20*) — CLAIM—PENALTY—WHEN IMPOSED.

The statutory penalty required of a carrier for its failure to adjust a claim within the statutory period after it was filed, being a creature of the statute, can be imposed only when all statutory conditions exist, and not otherwise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Gary, A. J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Darlington County; Thos. S. Sease, Judge.

Action by A. L. King against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed as to the penalty.

W. F. Dargan and P. A. Willcox, for appellant. S. O. King, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. The circuit court affirmed the judgment of the magistrate in favor of the plaintiff against defendant for $7.75, the value of freight lost in transportation, and for $50, the statutory penalty for failure to adjust the claim within the time required.

The appeal relates to the judgment for the penalty, and the question involved is whether there was evidence of compliance with the requirement of the statute as to the filing of the claim with the agent at the point of destination, or of a waiver of such compliance so as to authorize the penalty. The circuit court held that there was a waiver of strict compliance with the statute, and further held that the evidence shows that it might be doubtful whether the defendant had an agent at the point of destination. The shipment was over defendant's line from Darlington, S. C., to Auburn, S. C. The plaintiff testified that P. R. McIntosh was the representative of defendant at Auburn, S. C., and P. R. McIntosh testified that he was defendant's agent at that point. There was no testimony to the contrary; hence there is no room to doubt that McIntosh was the agent at the point of destination.

It is also manifest that plaintiff did not file his claim with the agent at the point of destination. The plaintiff testified: "I filed my claim with the general agent at Wilmington. * * * I first made complaint to Mr. P. R. McIntosh, the A. C. L. representative at Anderson. I did not file any claim with Mr. McIntosh, only verbally. He advised me to send the claim to the general claim agent." McIntosh, the agent, testified that plaintiff and he talked about the shortage, but that no claim was filed with him. A mere verbal complaint made to the agent at the point of destination is not a compliance with the statute, which requires that the claim for loss or damages shall be adjusted or paid within a specified time "after the filing of such claim with the agent of the carrier at the point of destination of such shipment." It is further provided that no such claim "shall be filed until after the arrival of the shipment," etc. It is further provided that the carrier shall be liable for interest "from the date of the filing of the claim." The words "filed," "filing," which we have italicized, show the legislative intent was to require more than a verbal claim. The word "file" is derived from the Latin word "filum," a thread, and, according to ancient practice, papers were filed when placed upon a cord or wire by the proper custodian for safe-keeping and convenient reference. In modern practice a paper is filed "when it is delivered to the proper officer and by him received to be kept on file." Townsend v. Sparks, 50 S. C. 384, 27 S. E. 801. Such terms as "filing a claim" necessarily imply the placing of some written or printed paper or papers showing the nature and amount of the claim and the person to whom due with the proper custodian. The statute positively designates the place of the filing to be the point of destination and the person to receive the paper to be the agent at that place. Such filing is a condition precedent to recovery of the penalty unless there is a waiver of strict compliance with the statute. Brown v. Southern Ry., 71 S. C. 274, 51 S. E. 151; Hawes v. Railroad, 73 S. C. 274, 53 S. E. 285; Walker v. So. R. R. Co., 76 S. C. 308, 56 S. E. 952; Goldstein v. So. R. R. Co., 80 S. C. 523, 61 S. E. 1007.

The final question is whether there was evidence tending to show such a waiver of statutory requirement as to warrant imposition of the penalty. The evidence on this point was the testimony of plaintiff that the agent at the point of destination directed him to send his claim to the general freight agent and a letter from the general freight agent as follows: "Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co., Freight Claim Department, Wilmington, N. C. Feb. 9, 1907.—Dear Sir: We beg to acknowledge receipt of papers in your claim. If you do not hear further from us in a reasonable time will appreciate your stirring us up and continuing to do at reasonable intervals until settlement is effected. In all cases refer to our number. Your number Oats 7.78. Our number K—175728. A. C. Kenly, Freight Claim Agent." Waiver is the voluntary relinquishment of some existing right. The plaintiff at the time of the correspondence had no right to the penalty, nor was defendant then liable for the penalty, nor was any reference made to the penalty in the correspondence; hence there is nothing to show the matter of the penalty was in the consideration of the parties. The communication related solely to the claim filed for the first time with the general agent at Wilmington. Furthermore, so far as it appears, the defendant had no right to compel plaintiff to file his claim with the agent at the point of destination and therefore the filing and consideration of the claim at the Wilmington office was no evidence of waiver of any statutory requirement as a basis for a penalty. The penalty is the creature of the statute, and comes into existence when all statutory conditions exist, and not otherwise.

We do not regard the case of Goldstein v. Southern Ry., supra, as holding that there may be a waiver of this requirement, as it expressly determined that there had been compliance with the statute by filing with the agent at the point of destination, the bill of lading, invoice of the goods, and a list of the shortage as a claim, as these papers showed the nature and amount of the claim and the name of the claimant within the rule stated in Hawes v. Southern Ry., supra.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed as to the penalty.

GARY, A. J. I dissent as far as the judgment of the circuit court as to the penalty is reversed.

LEVAN et al. v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 6, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—EXCEPTIONS ELIMINATED BY VERDICT.

Exceptions to refusal to charge that there was no evidence to support a finding of punitive damages are eliminated by the verdict not including any punitive damages.

2. CARRIERS (§ 381*)—GIVING TICKET OVER WRONG ROUTE—EJECTION—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

Where passengers, a woman and young child, called for tickets to a place over one route, were given tickets there over a second route, boarded a train over the first route, and were put off at the next station, evidence of the conditions at such station—a cold winter day, an unheated waiting room, a boisterous crowd, and the next train to destination over the route called for by the ticket not being due for seven or eight hours—and of the injuries from a carriage ride back to the initial station, is admissible as tending to show the necessity of such ride and damages therefrom.

3. TRIAL (§ 29*)—REMARKS OF COURT.

The mere repetition by the judge for the benefit of defendant's counsel of plaintiff's answer to a question as to where he first saw something is not objectionable as an expression of opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-84, 508; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 29*)—REMARKS OF COURT IN RULING ON EVIDENCE.

For the court in accepting or rejecting evidence to merely state its reason therefor without any indication of opinion as to the merits of the case is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-84, 508; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 381*)—GIVING PASSENGER WRONG TICKET—ACTION—EVIDENCE.

There being evidence that defendant's ticket agent had made a mistake in selling plaintiffs tickets for a train over a different route than asked for, evidence that he was in a position where he could see they were boarding the train for which they had asked tickets, and not that for which the tickets called, is competent in an action for damages; they having been ejected and obliged to return.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1473-1482; Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Even if evidence that defendant's ticket agent who sold plaintiffs tickets for a train over a route other than that asked for was in a position to see they were boarding the train for which they had asked tickets, and not that for which the tickets called, was incompetent in an action for damages, plaintiffs having been ejected from the train and obliged to return, it could hardly have had any weight with the jury; the uncontradicted evidence being that the agent was hard pressed and absorbed in his work of selling tickets.

7. EVIDENCE (§ 155*)—IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE—REBUTTAL.

It not appearing that the testimony was relevant or competent, it was not error to refuse to allow defendant's ticket agent, in an action for damages for selling a ticket over a route other than that contracted for, to contradict plaintiffs' testimony that the name of a certain railroad company was on the ticket.

8. CARRIERS (§ 384*)—CONTRACT FOR CARRIAGE—BREACH—EVIDENCE.

That one asks a ticket agent for a certain ticket, and the agent responds by stating and accepting the price, is evidence of an undertaking by the agent to furnish such ticket, and of a contract by the carrier to transport the passenger to his destination by the route specified; so that, defendant carrier having had on sale tickets for S. by way of C., evidence that its agent in response to a request for such a ticket, handed him instead thereof a ticket for S. by way of H., and that plaintiff, having boarded the train by way of C., was ejected at the next station, and obliged to return, warrants submission of the issues of defendant having contracted with plaintiff for a ticket by way of C., and having breached the contract to plaintiff's injury.

9. CARRIERS (§ 384*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—DAMAGES—NECESSITY OF CARRIAGE TRIP—INSTRUCTIONS.

Plaintiff at S. asked defendant's agent for a ticket to A. by way of C., was handed one by way of H., and, having boarded a train for A. by way of C., was ejected at W., and there being no train returning to S. for seven or eight hours, and it being a cold day, and the waiting room at W. being unheated, and there being a boisterous crowd about it, returned to S. by carriage. Held that, as taking from the jury the question whether the circumstances made the trip from W. to S. necessary, it was proper to refuse the bracketed part of the requested instruction: "It is the duty of a passenger who has been inadvertently informed by a ticket agent that a certain train would take her to her destination, if you believe that the agent did give such misdirection, to use all reasonable means known to her or suggested to minimize her damages, [and if she, by waiting at the station a few hours, could have returned to S. and proceeded to her destination on another train, after returning to S., she should have waited and taken that train and not have exposed herself. The law requires that]."

10. CARRIERS (§ 383*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—DAMAGES—NECESSITY OF CARRIAGE TRIP—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that when passengers, a woman and young child, were ejected at W. from a train for S. by way of C., having asked defendant's agent for a ticket for S. by way of C., and been furnished with one for S. by way of H., the next train for S. by way of H. would not arrive for seven or eight hours, that it was a cold winter day, that the waiting room was unheated, and that they were without money to procure accommodations, is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of a carriage trip back to the initial station taken by them, having been a necessity forced on them by defendant's breach of duty, and so prevents it being said as matter of law that their duty to minimize the damage required them to remain at W., and obtain accommodations there till arrival of such next train.

11. CARRIERS (§ 384*)—GIVING TICKET OVER WRONG ROUTE—DILIGENCE OF PASSENGER—INSTRUCTION.

The bracketed words in the requested instruction, given in a case in which plaintiff, having asked defendant's agent for a ticket for S. by way of C., was given one used for trains for S. by way of H., and, having taken the train for S. by way of C., was ejected at the next station, that "It is the duty of a passenger before boarding a train to use all due diligence to ascertain if it is the right train, [the train on which his ticket entitles him to transportation], and, if the passenger fails to use the means of information at his command, he cannot complain of the resulting * * * damage, even if, on his refusal to pay the additional fare to the next station, or regular stopping place, he is ejected from the train"—imply that due diligence in ascertaining the right train requires the passenger to examine his ticket in every case to see if it expresses his contract of carriage, and are therefore properly rejected.

12. EVIDENCE (§ 407*)—CONTRACT OF CARRIAGE—TICKETS—PAROL EVIDENCE.

An ordinary unsigned railroad ticket is not the sole evidence of the contract of carriage. It is a token or receipt given to show the passenger has paid his fare from the place of departure mentioned therein to the destination mentioned therein; so that parol evidence is admissible to prove the terms of the contract entered into, or the representation made by the agent when the ticket was purchased.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1826-1828; Dec. Dig. § 407.*]

13. CARRIERS (§ 383*)—PASSENGERS—DUTY TO EXAMINE TICKETS.

A passenger is not in all cases obliged to see that his ticket expresses the carrier's contract for the guidance of the conductor, so that having asked for a ticket for S. by way of C., and been given one used on another route for S., and boarded a train for S. by way of C., it is a question of fact whether due diligence in the effort to get on the right train required him to examine his ticket, though if he had examined it, and it had shown on its face, and he had discovered therefrom, that it was by a route different from that asked for, good faith would have required him to report the mistake to the ticket agent, and have the mistake corrected.

14. CARRIERS (§ 370*)—GIVING PASSENGER WRONG TICKET—NOTICE.

Plaintiff, who asked defendant's agent at U. for a ticket to S. by way of C., and was given a ticket without a coupon, such as was used over the route to S. by way of H., was not charged with notice that the route by way of H. must be taken, because defendant neither owned nor operated a road from U. to S. by way of C., and did own and operate one by way of H., and the ticket had no coupon attached to it from C. to S. on some other road; there being no proof that defendant always indicated the route over roads in this way, and that plaintiff knew or ought to have known it.

15. CARRIERS (§ 356*)—GIVING PASSENGER WRONG TICKET—KNOWLEDGE IMPUTED TO CONDUCTOR.

Knowledge by the ticket agent of the right of a passenger under a ticket, the passenger having asked for a ticket by one route and been given one by another route, and got on the train by the route for which he asked a ticket, is to be imputed to the conductor of the train.

16. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

The giving of an instruction for plaintiff affecting only the question of exemplary damages is harmless, the verdict having been for only actual damages.

17. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where there was no evidence that one of the plaintiffs suffered physical injury, it is to be assumed the jury included in their verdict nothing on account of physical injury to him; so that inadvertent expressions in the instructions that the jury might find a verdict for suffering of either or both of plaintiffs were harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4225-4230; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Sumter County; Thos. S. Sease, Judge.

Action by Malinda L. Levan and another against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

P. A. Willcox and Mark Reynolds, for appellant. L. D. Jennings, for respondents.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff Barton Levan bought of the agent of defendant a ticket and a half ticket for his wife, Malinda L. Levan, and her child from Sumter, S. C., to Savannah, Ga., and return. There was evidence from Barton Levan and other witnesses that he asked for a ticket by way of Columbia, and that, supposing tickets had been given him by that route, he put his wife and child on the train for Columbia; that between Sumter and Wedgefield, the next station, the conductor of the train told Malinda L. Levan that she had tickets for herself and child from Sumter to Savannah by way of Charleston; that the only explanation made by the passenger was that she thought she had the right tickets for that train, no claim being made by her to the conductor that the ticket agent had not given her the tickets asked for; that the plaintiff was charged no fare to Wedgefield, but was put off there, and directed to take the next train going to Charleston and thence to Savannah. The evidence of the plaintiff indicated that she was treated with courtesy by the conductor, but the plaintiff testified that it was a cold Christmas day, that there was no fire in the waiting room at Wedgefield; that there was a crowd of bolsterous persons about the station; that the train from Columbia to Charleston was not due in seven or eight hours; that, under these conditions, she undertook to return to Sumter in a carriage sent by her husband in response to her request by telephone; that on the journey she was exposed to a very severe storm which resulted in much discomfort and sickness. The action is for the alleged negligent and willful breach of duty by the defendant in refusing to carry the plaintiff to Savannah by way of Columbia under a contract to do so, and for the suffering and sickness alleged to have resulted from its refusal. On this allegation the verdict of the jury was for "three hundred dollars actual damages."

The 22 exceptions with utmost detail charge as erroneous almost every step taken by the court in the conduct of the trial. The exceptions as to the refusal of the circuit judge to charge that there was no evidence to support a finding of punitive damages and as to other alleged errors on the subject of punitive damages are put entirely out of the case by the fact that the verdict did not include any punitive damages.

Evidence as to the conditions which the plaintiff found at Wedgefield, and the injuries resulting from the carriage ride from Wedgefield to Sumter, was clearly admissible as tending to show that the journey was necessary, and that the plaintiff suffered injury therefrom. Carter v. Southern Ry., 75 S. C. 355, 55 S. E. 771; Entzminger v. Seaboard A. L. Ry. Co., 79 S. C. 151, 60 S. E. 441; Campbell v. Railway, 83 S. C. 448, 65 S. E. 628, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056.

The exception to the remark of the court in the course of the trial as to the time when the plaintiff Barton Levan said he observed on the tickets the words, "North Western Railroad Company of South Carolina," was taken under an obvious mistake. The remark contained no suggestion of the expression of opinion, but was a mere repetition of an answer of the witness for the benefit of defendant's counsel. The objections to other remarks of the judge in passing on the admissibility of evidence have as little foundation. The court merely gave the reasons for the acceptance or rejection of evidence, without any indication of opinion as to the merits of the case. The case therefore falls under the principle applied in Willis v. Telephone Co., 73 S. C. 379, 53 S. E. 639, and not under that applied in Latimer v. Electric Co., 81 S. C. 374, 62 S. E. 438.

In view of the evidence that the ticket agent had made a mistake in the sale of the tickets, no argument seems necessary to show the competency of evidence that the agent was in a position where he could see that the plaintiffs were boarding the wrong train. But, even if incompetent, this testimony could hardly have had any weight with the jury, because of the uncontradicted evidence that the agent was hard pressed and absorbed in the work of selling tickets.

The contention that the court erred in not allowing the ticket agent to testify in contradiction of Barton Levan that the words "North Western Railroad Company" were not on the tickets sold cannot be sustained, because it does not appear that the testimony was relevant or material. There was direct evidence that defendant's agent handed the plaintiffs tickets to Savannah by way of Charleston in response to a request for tickets to Savannah by way of Columbia. There was no dispute that the defendant had on sale such tickets as the plaintiffs asked for. When one asks a ticket agent for a certain ticket, and the agent responds by stating and accepting the price, that is evidence of an undertaking on the part of the agent to furnish the ticket asked for, and of a contract on the part of the company to transport the passenger to his destination by the route specified. Therefore the court did not err in submitting to the jury the issue whether the defendant had contracted with the plaintiffs for tickets by way of Columbia, and whether the defendant had breached that contract to the injury of the plaintiffs.

The court, in accordance with the rule laid down in Carter v. Ry., 75 S. C. 355, 55 S. E. 771, gave to the jury as part of his charge the following request, except the portion italicized: "It is the duty of a passenger who has been inadvertently informed by a ticket agent that a certain train would take her to her destination, if you believe that the agent did give such misdirection, to use all reasonable means known to her or suggested to minimize her damages, and if she, by waiting at the station a few hours, could have returned to Sumter and proceeded to her destination on another train, after returning to Sumter, she should have waited and taken that train and not have exposed herself. The law requires that." The court could not have accepted the latter part of the request without taking from the jury the question whether the circumstances were such as to make the trip from Wedgefield to Sumter necessary. Berley v. Railway, 83 S. C. 411, 65 S. E. 456; Campbell v. Railway, 83 S. C. 448, 65 S. E. 628, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056.

The evidence of necessity for the trip in the carriage from Wedgefield to Sumter was weak, and brings the case close to that line where the court must reject the verdict of the jury as being without any evidence to support it. Yet a review of the testimony is not convincing that there was no evidence that the carriage trip was a necessity forced on the passenger by the defendant's breach of duty. The wait at Wedgefield would have been for almost the entire day. The passenger testified that she was without money to procure accommodations. There was no fire in the waiting room, and the record indicates that the passenger's inexperience in travel and her comparative helplessness in any emergency must have been obvious to the officers of the defendant. Under these peculiar conditions, it would not be safe for the court to say that the duty of the passenger to minimize the damage required her to remain at Wedgefield and obtain accommodations there until the arrival of a train to Savannah by way of Charleston. The question whether the suffering and sickness caused by exposure to an unexpected storm was a result too remote to be embraced in damages for which the defendant was responsible is not before us. Evidence on the subject was introduced without objection, and the court was not requested to charge the jury that in considering the effects of the journey in the cold they should eliminate the storm as a factor.

The court also properly refused to charge the words italicized in the following request: "It is the duty of a passenger before boarding a train to use all due diligence to ascertain if it is the right train, the train on which his ticket entitles him to transportation, and, if the passenger fails to use the means of information at his command, he cannot complain of the resulting inconvenience or damage, even if on his refusal to pay the additional fare to the next station, or regular stopping place, he is ejected from the train." The rejected words implied that due diligence in ascertaining the right train requires the passenger to examine his ticket in every case to see if it expresses his contract of carriage. The ordinary unsigned railroad ticket is not itself the sole evidence of the contract of carriage. Such a ticket is a token or receipt given to show that the passenger has paid his fare from the place of departure mentioned therein to the place of destination mentioned therein. Hence parol evidence is admissible to prove the terms of the contract entered into, or the representation made by the agent at the time the ticket was purchased. 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1593; Richardson v. A. C. L. Ry., 71 S. C. 444, 51 S. E. 261. Whether the ticket given in token of the undertaking of the railroad company properly indicates to the officers of the company that which they must do in execution of the contract is mainly the concern of the railroad company. The passenger is not in all cases rigidly charged with the obligation to see that the railroad company has properly expressed its undertaking for the guidance of the conductor and the other officials who are to act for the carrier under the ticket. It is therefore a question of fact as to whether due diligence in the effort to get on the right train requires the passenger to examine his ticket. Circumstances might arise where it would be his duty to do so. Whether the circumstances require such examination as due care on the part of the passenger is ordinarily a question for the jury. We think it safer for the court to avoid laying down hard and fast rules as to what particular acts constitute negligence or due diligence. The evidence here does not warrant the court in holding that no other inference could be drawn than that it would have been negligence on the part of the passenger not to examine his ticket. In this case, however, the purchaser of the ticket indicated plainly by his testimony that he did examine his ticket. If the ticket had shown on its face that it was by a route different from that asked for by the purchaser and he had discovered the mistake when he examined it, then good faith obviously required of him the duty to report the mistake to the ticket agent and have it corrected. The difficulty of the defendant is that there was no evidence that a thorough reading of the ticket could have made any mistake therein evident to a passenger. The tickets were taken up by the conductor and in possession of the defendant and were not produced. Coupons were introduced which the agent testified were in the same form as those sold to Levan. These coupons expressed that they were good for one first-class passage from Sumter to Savannah, but the route was left blank. The defendant's contention is that the purchaser of the ticket and the passenger were chargeable with notice that the Charleston route must be taken, because the defendant neither owned nor operated a railroad from Sumter to Savannah by way of Columbia, but did own and operate a railroad from Sumter to Savannah by way of Charleston, and the tickets did not have attached to them coupons from Columbia to Savannah on some other railroad. Had there been proof that the defendant always indicated the route over roads in this way and that the plaintiffs knew or ought to have known that fact, observation by the passenger or purchaser of the lack of such coupons would afford strong reason to infer negligence in undertaking to use the ticket on a route requiring travel on other roads, but there was no such proof.

The last exception to be considered is as follows: "Because his Honor committed error of law in charging plaintiff's sixth request to charge, which was as follows: 'I further charge you that in proper cases the conductor must heed the statement and explanation of the passenger as to his rights, and that when he has requested and paid for a ticket to a certain place and he boards a train without fault, believing that he has obtained that which he sought, he is entitled to ride thereon, even though the agent has not furnished him with the proper evidence of his right to ride.' There was no statement or explanation of the plaintiff Malinda L. Levan, or any one else, made to Capt. Webb, the conductor, as to her rights, or what ticket she or her husband sought to buy, or that the ticket agent contracted to furnish her with any other kind of ticket, or tickets, than the one she presented." It is a task of great difficulty to define the duties which devolve on the conductor and on the passenger when the passenger takes a train not called for by his ticket and the conductor has no information except the statement of the passenger that he is in that situation by reason of the mistake of a ticket agent. The difficulty is still greater when the effort is made to impute willfulness to the conductor as the agent of the carrier because of incorrect information imparted by the ticket agent or a mistake made by him. The cases in other jurisdictions on this subject are in hopeless conflict. In view of the obvious embarrassment of both parties when such a situation arises, both passenger and conductor should meet it in a spirit of mutual accommodation. Oppression by the unreasonable assertion of authority on the part of the conductor and conduct by the passenger indicating a purpose to speculate on honest mistakes of the agents of the carrier should be rebuked by the courts with equal emphasis. In this case there is no evidence of such misconduct by either party. The rule that knowledge by the ticket agent of the rights of passengers must be imputed to the conductor is laid down in this state in Richardson v. Railway, 71 S. C. 444, 51 S. E. 261. The only division of the court in that case was on the issue of punitive damages, and that issue was taken out of this case by the verdict of the jury. The exceptions on this point therefore cannot be sustained.

As there was no evidence whatever that Barton Levan suffered any physical injury, it is not to be assumed that the jury included anything in their verdict on that account. Therefore inadvertent expressions of the court that the jury might find a verdict for the suffering of either or both of the plaintiffs cannot affect this appeal.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. BUTLER MARBLE & GRANITE CO.

(No. 2,050.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. July 5, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 69*)—LOSS OF GOODS—INTEREST.

The judgment must be amended by striking therefrom the sum returned as interest. "Where a suit is brought for damages arising from the destruction of property, and there is a basis of calculation as to the value, interest is not recoverable eo nomine. But the jury may consider the length of time damages have been withheld, the character of the tort, the conduct of the defendant, and all the circumstances of the transaction, and may in their discretion increase the amount of damages by adding to the value of the property destroyed a sum equal to the interest on such value; the entire sum found being returned as damages, and not exceeding the amount sued for."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-140; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 42*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—CUSTOM AS TO RECEIVING SHIPMENTS—WAIVER.

A custom imposing conditions as to the hours within which shipments will be received or forwarded by a carrier becomes immaterial if the conditions are waived and the shipment is in fact accepted by the carrier for the purpose of transportation and delivery to the consignee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 153*)—LIMITATION AS TO VALUE—VALIDITY.

While a common carrier may make a contract of affreightment embracing an actual and bona fide agreement as to the value of the property accepted for transportation, a mere general limitation as to value, expressed in a bill of lading, which is clearly nothing more than an arbitrary preadjudgment of the measure of damage in case of loss, will not, in any case, exempt a carrier from liability for the true value of a shipment lost or destroyed by the negligence of the carrier.

4. CARRIERS (§§ 158, 166*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—VALUATION—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Even where there is an attempt to limit liability in return for a lower rate of freight, the question as to whether there was an actual bona fide valuation of a shipment accepted by the carrier for transportation, or a mere effort arbitrarily to limit liability, is one of fact and for the jury. In the present case the jury were authorized to find that the valuation fixed in the bill of lading was not intended or understood to represent the mutual conclusion of the parties that the valuation mentioned had any reference to the real or actual value of the shipment. Where there is an arbitrary fixing of value before an inspection of the goods, and without any regard to their real worth, the assumed valuation may be treated as a mere attempt in advance to limit liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 640, 708; Dec. Dig. §§ 158, 166.*]

5. CARRIERS (§§ 129, 156*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—SHIPMENT "RELEASED"—LOSS OF GOODS—RIGHT TO RECOVER—EFFECT OF ILLEGAL RATE.

(a) The term "released," as a legal phrase, and when used in reference to a shipment, means no more than that a carrier is relieved from losses not occasioned by his negligence.

(b) The fact that a rate given to a shipper may be in violation of the rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission does not affect the liability of the carrier to respond, or the right of a plaintiff to recover for the loss or destruction of property intrusted by him to a carrier for shipment, though both the carrier and the shipper might be subject to criminal prosecution, and although the carrier might recover, in an action brought for that purpose, the charges fixed by the commission.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6061; vol. 8, p. 7783.]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

So far as the ultimate effect upon the result of the trial is concerned, an objectionable feature in the pleadings can be as effectually removed by the charge of the court as by sustaining a demurrer thereto, and therefore, though the judgment upon the demurrer be erroneous, the error in such a case becomes harmless.

7. INSTRUCTIONS CORRECT.

There is no merit in any of the exceptions to the charge of the court. The pertinent contentions of both parties were clearly and fairly presented, and the jury properly instructed in the law applicable to every phase of the case.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—TRIAL (§ 85*)—OBJECTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The assignments of error upon the admission of testimony do not require the granting of a new trial.

(a) The admission of testimony which was merely the conclusion of a witness could not in this instance have harmed the defendant, because there was ample legal evidence to sustain the inference of the witness.

(b) If objection is made to certain testimony as a whole, and a portion of it is legal and competent, the court is not required to sustain the objection.

9. EVIDENCE (§ 48*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—CLASSIFICATION AND RATES OF RAILROAD COMMISSION.

The court takes judicial cognizance of the classification and rates of the railroad commission.

Error from City Court of Americus; C. R. Crisp, Judge.

Action by the Butler Marble & Granite Company against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed, with directions.

The Butler Marble & Granite Company brought a suit against the Central of Georgia Railway Company to recover the actual value of certain shipments of monument marble consigned to four different customers. The petition alleged that the goods were delivered to the railway company and accepted for transportation, but were never delivered to the petitioners or to the consignees, and that the defendant claimed that the property was destroyed by fire while in the defendant's possession. The plaintiffs charged that the loss was due entirely to the carelessness and negligence of the defendant's employes, and that by the use of reasonable diligence on the part of the defendant the damage could have been avoided. They sued for $441.78 principal, interest at 7 per cent., and the penalty of $50 prescribed by law for failure to adjust the claim within the time allowed by law. The defendant demurred to paragraphs 3, 5, and 6 of the petition, contending that the act of 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 102) is unconstitutional, that the city court of Americus has no jurisdiction of the recovery of the penalty, and that the plaintiff cannot recover at all as to any shipment destined to points without the state of Georgia. The defendant in its answer denied that it was guilty of any negligence, and alleged that the fire originated off the premises of the defendant, and, without any negligence on its part, was communicated to the car. The defendant further pleaded that the plaintiff fixed the value of the marble which was destroyed at 20 cents per cubic foot, and thereby obtained a rate of freight much lower than the plaintiff would have otherwise obtained, and that the defendant agreed to accept this valuation and issued its bill of lading at that valuation, at the plaintiff's instance, and therefore that, if the plaintiff was entitled to recover anything, it could only recover the amount so fixed, to wit, $13, which the defendant averred it had tendered and continued to tender to the plaintiff. By way of replication to the answer of the defendant, the plaintiff, in an amendment to the petition, alleged: That neither the plaintiff nor its agents misrepresented the true value of the articles shipped, and that the agent and employes of the railroad company knew that 20 cents per cubic foot was not a reasonable valuation upon the property shipped; that the railroad company was not a victim of misrepresentation; that in fact the amount specified in the bill of lading was purely fictitious, and only represented an attempt on the part of the carrier to limit its liability to an arbitrary amount; that the loss was due to the negligence of the defendant, and that therefore the stipulation was not binding on the plaintiff; that the valuation stated was fixed without any reference to the real value of the goods, as was fully understood both by the carrier and the shipper. The amendment further set out that the defendant, instead of promptly shipping the goods to their destination, pulled the car which contained them "on the side track which runs along the Americus Compress Company"; that the compress was full of jute bagging and lint cotton, which are very combustible materials; that these conditions were fully known to the employes of the defendant company; that a portion, if not all, of the compress was on the right of way of the defendant, and the combustibles mentioned were in close proximity to the main inside tracks of the defendant, where engines were passing and repassing, and said combustibles were subject to be ignited at any time; that, notwithstanding these conditions, the defendant allowed the car containing the plaintiff's goods to be pulled in on this side track, on which the compress company loaded and unloaded its cotton, and to remain there over Sunday (there being no freight trains run on Sunday), where it was destroyed by fire. The trial judge overruled the demurrer as to so much of the petition as referred to the recovery of a statutory penalty, and, also, over the defendant's objections, allowed the amendment to which we have referred. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $441.78, and $19 interest. The defendant excepts to the refusal of a new trial.

E. A. Hawkins, for plaintiff in error. W. P. Wallis, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. We find no error in the judgment refusing a new trial, though the judgment must be amended. Under the rulings in Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Brown, 102 Ga. 13, 29 S. E. 130, and in Central R. Co. v. Hall, 124 Ga. 322, 52 S. E. 679, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170, interest is not recoverable eo nomine. While the jury may consider the length of time the damages have been withheld, and all other circumstances connected with the transaction, and may, in their discretion, increase the amount of damages by adding to the value of the property destroyed a sum equal to the interest on such value, the entire sum found must be returned as damages, and not exceed the amount sued for. The judge might have sent the jury back to consider whether they desired to include as damages the amount mentioned by them as interest in their findings, if the sum total would not have exceeded the amount for which the plaintiff sued. But the mere fact that the jury found interest eo nomine is not sufficient ground for reversing the judgment. The forfeiture of the interest which the jury thought the plaintiff was entitled to recover is a sufficient penalty, and we therefore direct that the judgment be amended by striking therefrom the $19 returned as interest.

2. It is not disputed in the evidence that the four several shipments of monumental marble delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant was destroyed by fire while in the custody of the defendant. Whether the plaintiff complied with the custom which requires shippers, if they desire a car to be forwarded on a certain day, to deliver the shipment to the defendant before 9 o'clock, and whether the defendant was unable to forward the shipment, because it had no freight train on Saturday after the time it received the shipment, and no freight trains except for live stock and perishables on Sunday, is wholly immaterial in this case, because, as a matter of fact, the railroad company accepted the shipment and gave its bill of lading for it, and it was in proper condition to be transported. It might have declined to accept the shipment in violation of custom at the particular time; but there is no dispute that the employees of the defendant carried the car containing the marble from the Seaboard Air Line Railway's transfer track to its own side track near the Americus compress. It waived custom and accepted the shipment for transportation. The real issue in the case, therefore, turns upon the question whether the defendant carrier is entitled to have its liability diminished to the amount of its continuing tender, and in accordance with the valuation of the shipment mentioned in the bill of lading. If so, the plaintiff was only entitled to recover $13 instead of the amount of the verdict actually rendered.

3. It is insisted by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs in error that the bills of lading were prepared by an agent of the marble company, and that by reason of the low valuation given the shipment, and the fact that it was billed "released," the shipper obtained a lower rate than he would otherwise have been entitled to; also, that the rate specified was one prescribed in the classification and rates of freight fixed by the railroad commission; also, that, because it being a violation of law and in contravention of the "Hepburn act" (Act Cong. June 29, 1906, c. 3591, 34 Stat. 584 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1149]), regulating interstate commerce, for a carrier to charge or a shipper to obtain a higher or lower rate than that fixed, and the shipments in question having been made by classification fixed by law, the plaintiff's right to recover was limited to the classification selected by them. The controlling question is whether there was a bona fide valuation, or whether the assumed value was arbitrarily reached. We consider this as the only question to be viewed, because the evidence fails to show that the contents of the car were unknown to the carrier; for the agent of the company testifies that he knew the shipments going south from the marble company were monumental stuff. Each bill of lading specified the shipment as being marble, either boxed or crated. The value was fixed at 20 cents per cubic foot, and the number of cubic feet in each shipment was specified. In Central Ry. Co. v. Hall, supra, it was held that a railway company in its capacity as a common carrier, may, as a basis for fixing its charges and limiting the amount of its corresponding liability, lawfully make a contract of affreightment with the shipper, embracing an actual and bona fide agreement as to the value of the property to be transported, and in such a case the shipper will be bound by an agreed valuation, when loss, damage, or destruction occurs. "But a more general limitation as to value, expressed in a bill of lading and amounting to no more than an arbitrary preadjustment of the measure of damage, will not, though the shipper assent in writing to the terms of the document, serve to exempt a negligent carrier from liability for the true value." It is a proposition undisputed in this state, so far as we are aware, that a carrier cannot, even by special contract, exempt himself from liability for the loss of goods intrusted to him, where a loss arises from his negligence or that of his servants.

4. And even where there is an attempt to limit liability in return for a lower rate of freight, and there is an issue of fact as to whether there was an actual bona fide valuation or a mere arbitrary effort to limit liability, the question is one for the jury. The case at bar is quite similar as to its facts to that of Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Venable, 132 Ga. 501, 64 S. E. 466, in which some of the bills of lading, as in the present case, expressed a value of 20 cents per cubic foot, and others erroneously 40 cents per cubic foot. In delivering the opinion of the court, Justice Atkinson said: "Especially did the court not err in not holding that the plaintiffs were limited in recovery of damages to the value of the stone as set out in the bills of lading received by the plaintiffs from the defendants."

5. Under the ruling in Georgia Southern & Fla. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 121 Ga. 231, 48 S. E. 807, where goods are shipped "released," the burden is upon the carrier to show that the loss was within the exemption, and not occasioned by his own negligence. The term "released," as a legal phrase, is construed to mean no more than that the carrier is relieved from losses not occasioned by his negligence. In the case just cited, the judgment was reversed because it appeared that there was a bona fide valuation, and that the contents of the shipment (or at least the value of the contents) were entirely unknown to the carrier, as well as that the valuation was fixed solely by the shipper; but in passing upon the question it was held that where the carrier arbitrarily fixes the value of a consignment, or where, by the terms of the bill of lading, there is an arbitrary fixing of value before the goods are inspected, without any regard to their real worth, the assumed valuation in either event must be treated as a mere attempt in advance to limit liability. Applying these rules to the present case, we find that while it is true that the agent of the shipper inserted in the bills of lading the words, "Rel val. at 20. cents cu. ft.," this valuation bore no relation whatever to the true value of the shipment, and that the jury were authorized to find not only this to be true, but that the agents of the defendant company, from having made very numerous shipments of the same kind for the plaintiff prior to that time, were fully aware of the disparity between the valuation mentioned in the bill of lading and the true worth of the shipment. It was not a case of a segregated instance in which the plaintiff for the first time tendered to the defendant a shipment of marble at a valuation of 20 cents per cubic foot. The evidence was ample to authorize the jury to find that the value of the consignment was merely arbitrarily fixed; in other words, that there was no bona fide effort, either on the part of the shipper or of the carrier, to value the shipment. This court takes judicial cognizance of the classification and rates of the railroad commission (Central Ry. Co. v. Cook, 4 Ga. App. 701, 62 S. E. 464); but the question in this case is not affected by the fact that there is a rate prescribed by the commission for monuments and grave-stones with a valuation limited to 20 cents per cubic foot. This rule might apply to an honest agreement as to the valuation of marble (if there be any worth only 20 cents per cubic foot); but in this case there is no evidence whatever that the parties conferred about the value of this marble or considered it at all. The jury were obliged to find that the valuation was arbitrary. Under the ruling in G. S. & F. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, supra, and the unbroken line of decisions holding that the value of the shipment cannot be arbitrarily fixed as a mere prearrangement against liability, it must be held that the rate announced in the classification of the railroad commission has no application to such a state of facts as those presented in this case. It appears here that the freight on marble from Marletta to Americus is 26 cents per cubic foot, and presumably it is much more on marble from Vermont. It is possible that the classification of the railroad commission might apply as a true measure of value to shipments from some points where the initial freight rate is less than 20 cents per cubic foot; but it certainly could not have been intended to apply, and cannot apply as a fair valuation, to a shipment where even the cost of transportation is greater than the agreed valuation.

(b) Nor is the result affected by the fact that the rate given to the shipper by the carrier may have been in violation of the rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and required to be published. As pointed out in Creety's Case, 5 Ga. App. 427, 63 S. E. 528, this might subject both parties to criminal prosecution, and would allow the carrier to sue for and to recover the charges fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission in an action brought for that purpose. The amount of freight charged for the carriage of a shipment, however, has nothing to do with the right of a plaintiff to recover for the loss or destruction of the property he has intrusted to a carrier for shipment, except in so far as the charge for freight may be a circumstance showing that there was a bona fide valuation of the shipment.

6. It is unnecessary for us to determine whether the trial judge ruled correctly upon the demurrer which sought to strike from the petition that portion thereof which related to a recovery of the penalty provided by the act of 1906, because the judge charged the jury that, under the evidence submitted the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the penalty, and the jury did not find the defendant subject to the penalty. In view of the judge's instructions upon that subject, the defendant's cause could not have been prejudiced. So far as its ultimate effect upon the result of a trial is concerned, an objectionable feature in the pleadings can be as effectually removed by the charge of a judge as by sustaining a demurrer thereto. The error then becomes harmless. The court's failure to sustain a demurrer, even though the demurrer be well founded in law, is not an error which affords just ground for complaint, if the charge of the judge to the jury effectually accomplishes the end sought to be attained by the demurrer, and precludes the plaintiff from the relief to which the defendant objected, or withholds from the plaintiff a defense to which he is not entitled by law.

7. The instructions of the court upon the effect of an arbitrary valuation of property received by a carrier for transportation, which are excepted to, so far from being objectionable, are clear, definite, and pertinent charges, presenting not only the view that an arbitrary valuation, if the jury found it to be such, would not relieve the defendant from its liability, if the jury thought it otherwise liable for the destruction of the property, but presenting with equal fairness the view that, if there was a bona fide valuation of the shipment, the liability of the carrier would be limited to that. There was no evidence in this case that the agent of the shipper overreached or misled the employees of the carrier, or that there was any concealment of the nature of the shipment.

8. Strictly construed, it was perhaps erroneous to have allowed one of the witnesses for the plaintiff to give to the jury his conclusion that "no fault or negligence whatever, on the part of the Butler Marble & Granite Company, occasioned the damages to them"; but the error is not such as to have called for the granting of a new trial. There is no evidence whatever to dispute this testimony of the witness, although it may be a conclusion. All of the testimony, every fact in the case, confirms his statement. There is certainly no contention that the plaintiff had anything to do with placing the car at the side track near the compress, and no dispute as to the fact that it was burned because of its proximity to the compress.

The judge did not err in overruling the objection to certain testimony of C. A. Snyder, a witness for the plaintiff, for the reason that the objection was made (as appears from the record) to that testimony as a whole, and, while a portion of it might have been subject to the objection urged, many of the statements included in it were legal and competent. No effort was made to separate the objectionable portion from the legal testimony; and, under the well-settled rule, the duty of making this separation devolved upon the objector. After a careful review of the record, we are satisfied that the controlling issues in the case were properly submitted to the jury, that the verdict is sustained by ample evidence, and that the minor errors to which we have referred had no effect upon the result.

With the direction that the judge of the city court amend the verdict and judgment so as to exclude the amount returned as interest, the judgment is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with direction.

ORR v. PLANTERS' PHOSPHATE & FERTILIZER CO. (No. 2,089.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. July 19, 1910.)

1. TRIAL (§ 233*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court's statement of the defendants' contentions was more detailed, specific, and comprehensive than was required under the issue raised by the answer, but it was for that reason favorable rather than prejudicial to her interests.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 527; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 228*)—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS.

The fact that nicety of verbal criticism might suggest the use of a particular word more appropriate under the circumstances than the special word or phrase employed by the judge in his charge is not ground for new trial where, comparing the complaint with the context, it is apparent that the sense in which the inappropriate word was used is unmistakable, and the instruction (as it must have been understood by the jury) is pertinent and correct.

3. SALES (§ 201*)—TRANSFER OF TITLE—DELIVERY OF BILL OF LADING.

As between the seller and the purchaser the delivery of the bill of lading amounted to a delivery of the quantity of guano called for by the bill of lading. A bill of lading is symbolic of the goods shipped. For many purposes it stands as representative of the shipment itself, and title to the goods may be transferred by the owner by means of a transfer of the bill of lading as long as the goods are in the possession of the carrier. There is an exception in some instances in favor of the consignee's right of stoppage in transitu, but generally the delivery of a bill of lading by the person who, according to the terms of the bill, is entitled to the goods will transfer his title.

4. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO ISSUES.

A party cannot complain of an instruction, which is favorable to his contentions even though the charge may not be nicely adjusted to the precise issue presented by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 537; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—HARMLESS ERROR—RESTRICTION OF CROSS-EXAMINATION.

While the right of subjecting a witness introduced by the opposite party to a thorough and sifting cross-examination should not be denied or abridged, yet where the fact sought to be elicited by the question which the court refused to allow is afterwards proved, the error becomes harmless.

Error from City Court of Sandersville; E. W. Jordan, Judge.

Action by the Planters' Phosphate & Fertilizer Company against S. H. Orr. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Hardwick, Wright & Hyman, for plaintiff in error. Evans & Evans, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The Planters' Fertilizer & Phosphate Company brought suit upon an account against Mrs. Orr for certain fertilizer which it alleged it had furnished her. She filed a plea setting up that she did not know the fertilizer company in the transaction, but had bought the fertilizer from one B. B. Lovett, Jr., individually, and pleaded, by way of set-off, an account which she claimed was due her for hauling for said Lovett. It is not necessary to say more in regard to the general grounds of a motion for a new trial than that there was a conflict in the evidence, and the verdict in favor of the plaintiff was authorized by the evidence. The testimony for the defendant, it is true, tended to show that there was an agreement that the fertilizer should be paid for by hauling, and $500 was paid to the fertilizer company by Lovett on Mrs. Orr's account; but whether this payment was made because the hauling was to be done for Lovett individually, or was assumed by him as a member of the copartnership known as the Davisboro Lumber Company, there still remained a conflict as to what was the agreed price to be paid for the services of the teams; and it appears that there was evidence from which the jury would have been authorized to find that in any view of the case there should be no further deduction from the purchase price of the guano on account of hauling. The real issue in the case, however, as presented by the pleadings was whether Mrs. Orr purchased the fertilizer from Lovett individually, or from the fertilizer company through Lovett as its agent, for, as the judge correctly informed the jury, if they were satisfied from the evidence that Mrs. Orr purchased the guano from Lovett individually, there was no need for them to go further in the consideration of the case, but they should find their verdict in favor of the defendant. Naturally, if Lovett sold Mrs. Orr the guano, the fertilizer company would have no right of action, except under some doctrine of concealed principal. The plaintiff in error assigns error upon four portions of the charge and upon one ruling on testimony.

1. It was insisted that the judge, in his charge to the jury, erred in stating that one of the defendant's contentions was "that she [the defendant] paid Lovett by doing certain hauling for the Davisboro Lumber Company, and that the Davisboro Lumber Company was Byrd B. Lovett operating under a business name; that the Davisboro Lumber Company was not a partnership, but was Lovett acting under a business name as the Davisboro Lumber Company." When this excerpt from the charge is considered in connection with its context, it does not appear that there is any merit in the assignment of error. The statement to which exception is taken follows immediately a statement that the defendant denies the indebtedness alleged in the plaintiff's petition and alleges that she never at any time purchased any fertilizers from the fertilizer company, but dealt directly with Lovett as principal, and purchased 365 sacks of guano from Byrd B. Lovett, and paid him therefor $700.85, and paid for the guano by doing certain hauling for the Davisboro Lumber Company. Then follows the explanatory statement to which exception is taken. It is true that the court's statement of the defendant's contention was more detailed, specific, and comprehensive than was required, under the issue as raised by the answer, but as the statement was in strict accord with the evidence which had been introduced in her behalf, certainly she has no right to complain. The specific recital of each point, presented step by step in the evidence in behalf of the defendant, called the special attention of the jury to the inferences arising from the evidence in support of her defense; and for that reason, if error was committed, it was favorable to the defendant rather than prejudicial to her interests.

2. Complaint is made in the second special assignment of error that the language employed by the judge in this portion of his charge was tantamount to an instruction that the jury might arbitrarily do as it pleased in regard to the defendant's plea of set-off. We cannot understand this contention. In our opinion the exception is without merit. After telling the jury that "there is an issue of fact between the parties in this case as to the agreed price of the hauling and the agreed value thereof," the court proceeded to tell the jury in the excerpt to which the complaint is addressed: "You look to the evidence submitted to you upon this issue, and determine from all the facts the amount you will allow Mrs. Orr for the hauling done, if, under the evidence and rules of law I have given you in charge, you think she is entitled to set off the hauling account in this suit." It is argued that by the use of the word "allow," the court turned the jury loose to do as it pleased without regard to the evidence. The amount to be allowed Mrs. Orr, according to the judge's instructions, was to be determined by their opinion as to what was the true agreed price or agreed value of the hauling done according as the jury might find it from the evidence which they were charged to look to for the purpose; and as the jury must have understood the charge the instruction was absolutely correct, even if a phrase more apt than that used, as to allowing a set-off, can be suggested. It was no doubt plain to the jury that they were to determine from the evidence to what amount Mrs. Orr was entitled if she was entitled to anything under the evidence, and as there was dispute as to what was the contract price for the team which did the hauling, that they were first to determine from the evidence what was the true contract price. This exception seems to us to be totally without merit. The fact that extreme nicety of verbal criticism might suggest the use of a particular word more appropriate under the circumstances than the precise word or phrase which the court employed affords no ground for a new trial, when it is apparent, as it is here, from the sense conveyed by the instruction as a whole, that the jury could not have been misled, and that the unmistakable meaning of the charge as a whole conveyed a pertinent and correct instruction.

3. The court charged the jury in regard to the bill of lading which it was testified, had been delivered to the defendant's agent: "If you find that the plaintiff delivered to the defendant a bill of lading to a car of fertilizer in this case, and the defendant accepted such bill of lading, and that the bill of lading was for a certain number of sacks, she would be liable for such amount as the bill of lading called for, if, after she accepted it, she made no claim that the guano was short." Exception is taken to this instruction upon the ground that it is an incorrect statement of the law with reference to the liability of the defendant under the premises stated, and that there was no evidence to justify such a charge. So far as the evidence is concerned, the only dispute in regard to the bill of lading was that the defendant insisted that it was a bill of lading for a car of lumber, independent of the fertilizer transaction, while the plaintiff insisted that it was a bill of lading evidencing the receipt by the carrier of the quantity of guano therein specified, so that there was evidence authorizing an instruction upon the subject, and the only question is whether the law applicable to the plaintiff's contention was properly presented in case the jury found the testimony in the plaintiff's favor upon this point to be true. We find no error in the instruction. The assignment of a bill of lading constitutes a symbolic delivery of the property, and if Lovett, as agent of the fertilizer company, delivered the bill of lading for a car of fertilizers to an agent of Mrs. Orr, who was duly authorized to act for her in the premises, and she accepted it, she would be liable to the fertilizer company for the amount of guano called for by the bill of lading, in the absence of any fraud; and certainly she should be if she made no complaint. If there was a shortage in the guano, she might look to the carrier and hold the carrier liable for the value of that portion of the shipment which the carrier failed to deliver. L. & N. R. Co. v. Pferdenges, Preyer & Co. (this day decided) 69 S. E. 617. But so far as the fertilizer company is concerned the delivery of the bill of lading amounted to an actual delivery of the guano itself. Upon the subject of transfer by delivery of the bill of lading, Mr. Hale, in his work on Bailments, page 127, says: "A bill of lading may be pledged by a mere delivery without indorsement. It is well settled that where a party consigns goods to another and thereupon draws upon the consignee for funds, accompanying the draft with the delivery of the bill of lading or shipping receipt, as collateral security for its payment, the acceptance and payment by the consignee of the draft, accompanied with the bill of lading or shipping receipt, vests in him a special property in the goods. The bill of lading in such case is a symbol of the goods, and the delivery thereof with the intention to transfer the property in the goods, is a symbolical delivery of the goods." See, also, authorities cited in footnote on page 127 upon this subject. See, also, 6 Cyc. pp. 424, 426 (v).

As between Lovett and Mrs. Orr the delivery of the bill of lading amounted to a delivery of the quantity of guano called for by the bill of lading. A bill of lading is symbolic of the goods shipped, and if by the "giving" or delivery of the bill of lading, the consignee places another in a position where he can procure the shipment from the carrier (and it appears in this case that the railroad did not make any point on Mrs. Orr's right to take possession of the guano), certainly in such case the party who received the shipment by virtue of the possession of the bill of lading is in no position to insist that the assignment of the bill of lading was defective for lack of formality, or insufficient by reason of the fact that it was not reduced to writing. While bills of lading are not in a strict sense negotiable instruments (because they do not represent money), they are for many purposes representative of the shipment to which they purport to refer. It is true as insisted by counsel for plaintiff in error that in the case of Branan v. A. & W. P. R. Co., 108 Ga. 70, 33 S. E. 836, 75 Am. St. Rep. 28, the Supreme Court was dealing with the consignors' right of stoppage in transitu, and it was said that where the purchaser had an assignment of the bill of lading from a bona fide purchaser, a right of stoppage in transitu would not exist, but we do not construe this as a ruling that it is indispensable that there should be in every case a written assignment of a bill of lading, in order to pass title to the shipment which the bill of lading symbolizes; because the decision in that case really turned upon the fact that the carrier had never parted with the possession of the shipment up to the time that it had received notice not to deliver. While a bill of lading may be assigned in writing, such an assignment is not indispensable, for the carrier is the only party who can insist upon this formality, and if the carrier recognizes the one to whom the bill of lading has been delivered, as owner or as justly entitled to possession of the goods which the bill of lading represents, it does so at its own risk; and though the consignee might complain, a holder of the bill of lading who had used it as a means of securing possession of the shipment would certainly be estopped from saying that there was no assignment. As stated in 6 Cyc. 426(v), generally the delivery of a bill of lading by the person who, according to the terms of the bill, is entitled to the goods will transfer his title. It must be remembered that the transfer of a bill of lading is not a transfer of the contract itself, but merely a transfer of the goods represented by it.

4. It is insisted that the court erred in charging the jury that "if they found the Davisboro Lumber Company was a partnership consisting of Lovett and another person, and further found that Mrs. Orr did this hauling under these circumstances for the Davisboro Lumber Company, she would have no right to set off in this suit the account of the Davisboro Lumber Company for hauling." If we should consider this disjointed fragment of the charge by itself, we would adjudge it to be error, because it does not seem to be applicable to the issues presented by the pleading; but when it is considered in the light of the evidence and the manifest trend of the defendant's contention before the jury, and especially when it is considered in connection with the instruction given the jury at the close of the charge, in which the jury were told that if they found from the evidence "that Mrs. Orr did not know that the Davisboro Lumber Company was a partnership, and that she traded with Byrd B. Lovett to do this hauling for the Davisboro Lumber Company, then she would be entitled to a set-off, just as if the Davisboro Lumber Company was not a partnership," it is manifest that the instruction complained of was more favorable to the defendant than her plea would have authorized. And while the instruction complained of is not adjusted to the issues explicitly stated in the pleadings when it is noticed that in connection with this instruction the court clearly presented in a concrete form every possible contention for every phase of the case which could legally be favorable to the defendant, it is clear that the specific objection urged is not meritorious. The only ground of objection contained in the assignment of error is that this instruction took from the jury the question as to whether or not Byrd B. Lovett, Jr., as an individual, agreed to stand liable for the amount, and allowed it to go as a credit upon the guano account, as was contended by the defendant, and that it was an incorrect statement of the law for the reason that an individual member of a partnership may become liable individually for a partnership debt by assuming its payment, and the charge in question denied the defendant's right of recovery and set-off against Lovett even though he had assumed legal responsibility as an individual for the debt. Reference to the instruction which we quoted in the beginning of this division of opinion shows that the court expressly charged the principle, the benefit of which it is asserted was denied the defendant in the court below.

5. It appears from the record that the counsel for the defendant in the court below asked Byrd B. Lovett upon cross-examination the following question: "He [Mr. Dudley] received so much for sawing the lumber, didn't he, and then he was to get so much of the profits?" The court sustained the objection to the question, and repelled the answer, upon the ground that it was irrelevant whether there was a partnership existing between Mr. Lovett and Mr. Dudley or not. We think the court's ruling was correct, because the plaintiff contended that the fertilizer was not sold by Lovett individually at all, but that the fertilizer company was the seller, and, on the contrary, the defendant insisted that B. B. Lovett individually agreed to take pay for the guano in hauling; so that whether the jury sustained the contention of the plaintiff or that of the defendant, it would seem to have been immaterial whether Lovett was in partnership or not. But if we are mistaken as to this, the error in the court's ruling was harmless, because a review of the testimony shows that the defendant afterwards proved the facts which she insisted would be shown by the answer to the question which the court refused to allow. The right of a party to thoroughly sift the witnesses of the opposite party upon cross-examination should not be abridged. While this is so, the defendant's contentions in any case are to be gathered from his answer. There is in the defendant's answer no allegation referring in any way to a partnership, nor any averment that Lovett agreed (as he would have had the right to do) to individually assume the payment of the debts of the Davisboro Lumber Company. The whole theory of the defendant's defense was that she contracted with Lovett individually, as an original undertaking on his part, and therefore, under her answer, it was entirely immaterial to her defense whether Dudley was Lovett's partner in the Davisboro Lumber Company, or merely his employé.

In our view of the case, the trial was fair, and its result was authorized by the law and the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

VASSIE v. CENTRAL OF GEORGIA
RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 78*)—SECOND NEW TRIAL—
INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

There is no absolute and invariable rule which limits to one grant the power of the judge of the superior court to grant a new trial upon the grounds that the verdict is contrary to law, contrary to evidence, and without evidence to support it, and decidedly and strongly against the weight of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 162-165; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 979*)—REVIEW—
SECOND GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

After one such grant, a subsequent grant on account of alleged conflict between the evidence and the verdict will be closely examined, to see that the discretion of the court below has been justly and wisely exercised, in view of the peculiar issues and facts of each case, and having due regard to the general consideration of the fitness of juries to ascertain facts and of the necessity that there must be some end to litigation. Taylor v. Central Railroad & Banking Co., 79 Ga. 330, 5 S. E. 114; Peavy v. Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., 81 Ga. 485, 488, 8 S. E. 70, 12 Am. St. Rep. 324; Stewart v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 3 Ga. HEATLEY v. LONG et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WILLS (§ 77*)—ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 78*) — OPERATION OF WILL—PROPERTY TRANSFERRED.

A testator, the day before his death, sold and conveyed the east half of a certain land lot, "except one fourth the mineral interest," and in his will, executed on the same day, he provided that, with the exception of one mule, "all my property both real and personal" should go to his wife during her natural life, with remainder to her bodily heirs. After the death of the testator, the wife conveyed to one of her children one undivided half interest in the land lot. Ejectment was brought in the "John Doe" form against the grantee of the widow to recover one undivided half interest in the west half of the east half of the land lot. The defendant filed an answer, making a general denial of the allegations of the petition, and claiming title by prescription. A verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, and to the order of the court overruling his motion for a new trial the defendant excepted. Held:

(1) No attack being made on the validity of the deed of the testator conveying to the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs the land sued for, the will would not operate on the property previously conveyed by the deed; and such will could not, as to any of the land conveyed by the deed, be color of title under which the life tenant or the remaindermen named in the will could prescribe against the plaintiffs. See Williamson v. Tison, 99 Ga. 791, 26 S. E. 766.

2. DEEDS (§ 110*)—CONSTRUCTION—QUESTION FOR COURT.

The construction of an unambiguous deed, including the determination of the quantum of estate thereby conveyed, is a question of law for the court; and, no attack being made on the validity of the deed, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury what is its legal effect as determined by him.

3. TRUSTS (§ 23*)—DEEDS—VALIDITY—NECESSITY FOR RECORDING.

A deed creating a trust for the benefit of minors is not inadmissible in evidence because not recorded within three months after its execution. The provision contained in Civ. Code 1895, § 3149, declaring certain deeds void if not recorded within three months, has no application to trust deeds for the benefit of minors.

4. EVIDENCE (§ 347*)—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—CERTIFIED COPIES OF COURT RECORDS OF ANOTHER STATE.

The court committed no error in admitting in evidence a certified copy of letters testamentary issued by the court of another state where the testator died and his will was probated over objections of the opposite party that such certified copy has not been filed with the clerk of the court wherein the suit was pending, in order that the same might become a part of the record in the case. Civ. Code, § 3318, requiring certified copies of the proceedings therein referred to to be filed with the court before foreign executors shall be entitled "to use the processes and remedies prescribed by the laws of this state," does not relate to the admission in evidence of certified copies of letters testamentary of such executors.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1052*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Even if the evidence of admissions of the defendant claimed to have been made in the trial of another case was subject to the objections made, the admission of such evidence was not error requiring a new trial, as the defendant, upon the trial, delivered substantially the same testimony embraced in such alleged admissions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1052.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1052*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The court admitted testimony in behalf of the plaintiff that the defendant in this case was the defendant in a criminal case in the city court; that he was therein charged with trespass upon the property sued for; and that a named person, since deceased, testified upon the trial of such case. This testimony was objected to by the defendant on the ground "that parol evidence is inadmissible to show upon what property the indictment charged the alleged trespass was committed." If the testimony was subject to this objection, its admission was not error requiring a new trial, for the reason that the defendant delivered testimony substantially the same as that admitted by the court over the objection stated.

7. EVIDENCE (§ 580*)—EVIDENCE AT FORMER TRIAL.

Where one is charged with criminal trespass against the ownership of land, and defends by asserting ownership in himself, testimony of witnesses since deceased, which was introduced on the criminal trial, is admissible in evidence against him on a subsequent trial of an action of ejectment to recover from the defendant charged with trespass the land upon which it was claimed the trespass was committed, the plaintiffs in the ejectment suit being those who claimed to be the owners, or the successors in title of the owners, of the land at the time of the commission of the alleged trespass. See Gavan v. Ellsworth, 45 Ga. 283.

8. EVIDENCE (§ 324*)—COMPETENCY—REPUTATION—TITLE TO LAND.

It was error to admit testimony of a witness for the plaintiffs, "I always heard this land in question spoken of as the mining company's mountain, the Long Mining Company," over objection of the defendant "that the title to land cannot be proven by general reputation." This evidence was not sufficient to show general reputation in the community, if offered as tending to prove notice of a fact already shown to exist.

9. EJECTMENT (§ 110*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

The evidence shows that B. M. Long was successor in title to the grantees of the testator to an undivided one-half interest in the east half of the land lot. He conveyed to certain trustees a one-fourth undivided interest in the whole of the land lot. One demise was laid in the grantees under this trust deed, and another demise in the executor of B. M. Long, the latter, as appears from the record, being a foreign executor. Held: (a) Title could not be shown in the executor unless it was shown that the will had been duly probated in this state. Chidsey v. Brooks, 130 Ga. 218, 60 S. E. 529. This not being done, no recovery could be had on the demise laid in the name of the executor. The suit was pending at the time of the adoption of the act of the General Assembly approved August 17, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 85), and its effect is not in question. (b) Under the remaining demise, title was shown only to an undivided one-fourth interest in the west half of the east half of the land lot (the property sued for), and the recovery by the plaintiff of a greater interest therein was without evidence to warrant it. (c) Accordingly, it was error for the court to charge the jury: "Under the evidence in this case, I charge you that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the land sued for in this case, unless the defendant has shown some legal reason why a recovery should not be had."

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 67*)—ELECTION TO TAKE DOWER—EFFECT.

Where a widow of an intestate elects to take dower, she has no further interest in the realty of her deceased husband; but she is not thereby prevented from claiming a child's part in the personality of the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 202-205; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 195*)—OBTAINING YEAR'S SUPPORT—EFFECT ON RIGHT TO CHILD'S PART.

That a widow obtains a year's support to be set part to her does not prevent her claiming a child's part in the personal property not assigned as a part of such year's support.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. WORDS AND PHRASES—"DOWER."

Dower is the right of a wife to an estate for life in one-third of the lands, according to valuation, of which the husband was seised and possessed at the time of his death.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2188-2193; vol. 8, p. 7642.]

Error from Superior Court, Paulding County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Petition of E. C. Cole against W. A. Cole and others, administrators, for a child's part in an estate. A demurrer to the petition was sustained, and petitioner brings error. Reversed.

A. J. Camp and J. J. Northcutt, for plaintiff in error. A. L. Bartlett and W. E. Spinks, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. A widow filed her petition in the court of ordinary, alleging that her husband had died intestate; that out of his estate a year's support had been set apart to her; that out of the realty she had been assigned dower; and that, in addition to dower and a year's support, she was entitled to one-fifth part of the personality as a child's part. She prayed for a settlement. The case was carried to the superior court by appeal. A demurrer was filed on the ground that the petition set forth no cause of action, and that, having elected to take dower and having had a year's support assigned to her, the widow was entitled to no further interest in the estate of the intestate. The demurrer was sustained, and the petitioner excepted.

Dower is the right of a wife to an estate for life in one-third of the lands, according to valuation, of which the husband was seised and possessed at the time of his death. Civ. Code, § 4687. At common law the personal property did not descend by inheritance like the realty. By the act of 1804 (Cobb's Dig. p. 291) it was declared that: "When any person holding real or personal estate shall depart this life intestate, the said estate, real and personal, shall be considered as altogether of the same nature and upon the same footing, so that in case of there being a widow and child, or children, they shall draw equal shares thereof, unless the widow shall prefer her dower, in which event she shall have nothing further out of the real estate than such dower; but shall nevertheless receive a child's part or share out of the personal estate." In 1807 an act was passed, the title of which was "An act for the more effectually securing the probate of wills, limiting the time for executors to qualify and widows to make their election." Cobb's Dig. p. 227. This did not purport to amend or change the act of 1804, except by putting a limitation upon the time within which the widow should make her election. In the body of the act it was declared that: "It shall be the duty of all widows, within one year after the death of their husbands, to make their election or portion out of the estate of the deceased; and any such widow so failing to make her election shall be considered as having taken her dower or thirds, and shall forever after be debarred from taking any other part or portion of the said estate." The last words of this section of the act of 1807, standing alone, might indicate that the election to take dower prevented a widow from taking any portion of the realty or personality; but, when construed in the light of the title of the act and of the fact that it did not purport to repeal or amend the act of 1804, save as to the time allowed the widow to make her election, it was evidently not the legislative purpose to change the widow's right with regard to the personal estate, which was not affected by the assignment of dower. By the act of 1839 (Cobb's Dig. p. 230) the application for dower was required to be made within seven years after the death of the husband, and by the act of December 9, 1841 (Cobb's Dig. 230), the limitation of one year within which the widow was required to make her election was made to commence running from the granting of letters testamentary instead of from the death of the husband. In Odam v. Caruthers, 6 Ga. 39, Nisbet, J., said: "Now, according to our statute, the wife occupies the same degree with the children. She is not entitled to any portion of the estate independent of the children, and before distribution to them, but is made to draw an equal share with them. She is a distributee with them, entitled to an equal share of the personalty, if she takes her dower, and of the whole estate, if she elects to take a child's part of the realty." The question of the election to take dower as affecting the widow's interest in personalty was not directly involved; but what was said showed the view taken by the learned judge who wrote the opinion as the state of the law prior to the adoption of the first Code. He cited the portion of the act of 1804 already quoted as being of force. When the Code of 1863 was adopted, it contained language which clearly indicated that the election to take dower debarred the widow from claiming any further interest in the realty of her husband, but not in the personalty.

The sections of that Code on the subject have been carried forward into the Code of 1895, and there again adopted. By section 3355, par. 3, declaring the rules of distribution of estates, it is said: "If there are children, or those representing deceased children, the wife shall have a child's part, unless the shares exceed five in number, in which case the wife shall have one-fifth part of the estate. If the wife elects to take her dower, she has no further interest in the realty." In section 4639, par. 3, it is provided that dower may be barred "by the election of the widow, within twelve months from the grant of letters testamentary or of administration on the husband's estate, to take a child's part of the real estate in lieu of dower." The language of these sections implies that the election to take dower does not prevent a widow from claiming a child's part in the personalty left by her husband; and, when the history of these provisions above set out is considered, we have no doubt that such is the correct construction of the law.

By section 3465 of the Civil Code it is declared that "among the necessary expenses of administration, and to be preferred before all other debts, is the provision for the support of the family," which is to be set apart in the manner therein prescribed. If there are no minor children, she may obtain a year's support for herself. If there are children, it is for their benefit as well as hers. There is nothing in the law which excludes her from inheriting a child's part if she has a year's support assigned to her.

From what has been said it will appear that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition of the widow. In her petition she made a claim in regard to prorating debts. But this is not involved in the ruling now under consideration.

TUCKER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. GRAND JURY (§ 19*)—OBJECTIONS—TIME FOR MAKING.

After the passage of an act of the Legislature changing the time for holding the superior court in a certain county, court was held at the time formerly fixed therefor. Grand jurors were drawn to serve at the next regular term, and at such succeeding term a grand jury was impaneled, which was composed of a number of grand jurors thus drawn and talesmen summoned to complete a panel. Held, that a person accused of murder, and who was in jail awaiting indictment, but made no objection to the grand jury until after they had found an indictment against him and he had been put upon trial thereunder, could not have the indictment quashed by a plea in abatement because of the illegality of the time when the term of court was held at which the grand jurors were drawn; and this is true, although the plea in abatement was interposed before pleading to the merits, and the attorney for the accused stated that he had not been employed until after the indictment had been found, and that he and his client did not know of the irregularity until after it had been so found. Turner v. State, 78 Ga. 174; Lascelles v. State, 90 Ga. 347, 372, 16 S. E. 945, 35 Am. St. Rep. 218; Folds v. State, 123 Ga. 167, 51 S. E. 305; Parris v. State, 125 Ga. 777, 54 S. E. 751.

2. CASE DISTINGUISHED.

In Finnegan v. State, 57 Ga. 427, no question seems to have been made as to the time when the objection should have been raised. The decision was also rendered by two judges, with a strong dissenting opinion by the Chief Justice. If the opinion of the majority of the court in that case should be followed, rather than the dissenting opinion, so far as the ruling went, it does not control this case. Moreover, the reasoning of the dissenting opinion has been followed in later cases. Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 11 (5c), 27; Lee v. State, 69 Ga. 706; Roby v. State, 74 Ga. 812 (a).

BUTTS COUNTY v. HIXON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BRIDGES (§§ 41, 46*)—COUNTIES—ACTION FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS—PROXIMATE CAUSE—APPLICATION OF RULE.

The plaintiff sued the county of Butts to recover damages for injuries received on account of the defective condition of a public bridge built by the county authorities since December 29, 1888. She alleged that the insecure condition of a hand railing on the side of the bridge, upon which she placed her hand for support while crossing the bridge at night, caused her to move towards the center of the bridge, and in doing so her foot became entangled in the rotten and jagged end of a beam on the floor of the bridge, causing her, without fault on her part, to fall and sustain the injuries for which she brought suit. She further alleged that the defective condition of the bridge was due to the negligence of the county authorities in failing to repair it, after knowing, or being charged with knowledge, of its unsafe condition. The plaintiff obtained a verdict, and the defendant excepted to the court's refusal to grant its motion for a new trial. Held, where two acts of negligence concur in producing an injury, in the absence of either of which the injury would not have occurred, and both acts are chargeable to the same person, the doctrine of proximate cause is not applicable; and where acts charged as negligence consist in the failure to remedy two defects in a public bridge, which would not constitute negligence until the county authorities charged with the repair of such bridge had actual or constructive notice thereof, and both defects combine in causing an injury, which would not have occurred had either not existed, the fact that the county authorities are charged with knowledge of only one of such defects will not excuse the county from liability. 1 Thompson on Negligence, § 69; Kraut v. Frankfort, etc., R. Co., 160 Pa. 327, 28 Atl. 783.

(a) The following charge of the court: "In this case, if there was a defect in this bridge because of a beam placed there by authority of the county authorities, and it was suffered to decay and become rotten, and on that account it became dangerous, then if the county authorities, the county commissioners, had notice of it, or either of them, or if that condition remained for a sufficient length of time for them to discover it in the exercise of ordinary care, which would be notice to them, and if the plaintiff was injured on account of the defect, she would be entitled to recover"—was not subject to the criticism that it was error "for the reason that it is not adjusted to the issues in this case. The plaintiff alleges in her petition, and her proof tends to show, that she came in contact with two defects in the bridge, the loose railing and the beams of wood laid across the bridge, and that both these defects contributed to her injury." Nor was such charge subject to the criticism that it was error because it "in effect instructs the jury that it was not necessary that the county authorities should have notice, either actual or constructive, of the defective condition of the railing, which she alleges was defective, and which, according to her allegations and proof, contributed to her injury."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Dec. Dig. §§ 41, 46.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The refusal of the court to rule out the evidence of a witness for the plaintiff, "That bridge was rebuilt in 1891," upon objection of the defendant that it was an opinion of the witness, was not error requiring a new trial; it appearing that the same witness delivered other testimony substantially the same as that objected to, and it remained before the jury without objection. Southern Ry. Co. v. Ward, 131 Ga. 21, 61 S. E. 913.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 213*)—COMPETENCY—EFFECT TO COMPROMISE SUIT.

The defendant offered the following testimony of a witness sworn in its behalf: "Soon after Mrs. Hixon was injured, Mr. J. O. Gaston, chairman of the county commissioners, turned over to me a letter from W. F. Hixon, the plaintiff's husband, and a witness in the case. The letter was apparently written with a view of getting the commissioners to pay something in compromise for the injury. No amount was mentioned in the letter, but he said in that letter 'that it was a matter which ought to be compromised,' inasmuch as the county and Mrs. Hixon were both at fault in causing the injury. I have lost the letter." The court committed no error in refusing to allow such testimony, and in sustaining the objection of plaintiff's counsel to its admission on the ground that the letter was written with a view to a compromise.

4. DEPOSITIONS (§ 92*)—FAILURE OF OPPOSITE PARTY'S COMMISSIONER TO ACT.

The petition alleged that the plaintiff was a resident of Mitchell county. Interrogatories were sued out for her in behalf of plaintiff, in the caption of which it was stated that she resided in the county of Effingham. The word "Mitchell" was written under the word "Effingham," and erased. Counsel for the defendant signed a writing on such interrogatories, wherein he acknowledged service and notice thereof and waived copy of same, and consented that they might be executed "without formal commission," and nominated "Eugene Cox as commissioner to represent the defendant." Cox did not act as commissioner in the execution of the interrogatories, and counsel for the defendant in writing, before the case was submitted to the jury and after giving notice to the opposite party, objected to the execution and return of the interrogatories, on the ground that Cox did not act as one of the commissioners. It appeared before the trial judge that the witness resided in Effingham county and Cox resided in Mitchell county, "200 miles or more from where the witness resided, and for this reason he did not act as commissioner." Held, the court committed no error in overruling the objections made, and in allowing the interrogatories to be used upon the trial of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

The evidence supported the verdict, and the court committed no error in refusing a new trial.

If not executed agreeably to the convention, the interrogatories should be excluded from evidence.

JETER v. JONES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 51*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in a proceeding brought for the purpose of canceling a deed, the plaintiff sought to prove that the maker was mentally incompetent to contract, and also that undue influence was exercised in its procurement, there was no error against the plaintiff in charging as to both grounds; and although the judge dealt with each separately, and in charging as to one used expressions which, taken alone, might have indicated that the jury should find for the plaintiff or the defendant according as they should determine that issue, yet when he charged in regard to each ground as affecting the validity of the deed, and from the entire charge it does not appear probable that any harm was done to the excepting party, no reversal will result.

2. DEEDS (§ 203*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—MENTAL CAPACITY—EVIDENCE.

On an issue of whether or not a deed was procured by undue influence, evidence of statements of the maker of the deed to the effect that the grantee, who was her son, was worrying her a great deal, trying to get her to make him a deed to the land, and of a later statement that she had made the deed to him, and supposed that he was satisfied, were not admissible.

(a) It was contended that such statements were admissible as throwing light on the mental capacity of the maker; but it is not stated in the motion for a new trial that they were offered for that purpose, nor does it appear that they would have been admissible in this case in behalf of the plaintiff, had they been so offered.

3. TRIAL (§ 812*)—INSTRUCTIONS AFTER SUBMISSION OF CAUSE—SCOPE OF JUDGE'S AUTHORITY.

Where, after they had retired for consideration of the case, the jury returned and requested a recharge on a certain question, it was not error that the judge, after instructing them on that subject, did not strictly confine himself to it, but also charged on another issue in the case. Parker v. Georgia Pacific Ry. Co., 83 Ga. 539 (8), 10 S. E. 233.

B. C. KINARD & SON v. MANGHAM.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 866*)—REVIVAL—JURISDICTION OF COURT.

In 1893 the county court existing in Butts county was abolished, and the records of that court were directed to be delivered to the clerk of the superior court. Acts 1893, p. 372. In 1900 a special act was passed by the Legislature, creating a county court of Butts county. Acts 1900, p. 151. It declared that such court should have the powers mentioned in sections 4170 to 4217, inclusive, of the Civil Code of 1895. But it also contained a number of special provisions, naming the judge and solicitor who should first serve, providing salaries, etc. It made no reference to any succession to the business or records of the original county court. Held, that the new county court thus established by special act was not identified with the former, which had been abolished, either as a revival of it or as a successor of its business, and the latter court had no jurisdiction by scire facias to revive a judgment which had been rendered in the former. A judgment of revival, by the second county court, of a judgment rendered in the original county court, was a mere nullity, and a levy of an execution issued therein could be successfully met by an affidavit of illegality.

A mortgage on realty, which describes the land as "100 acres of land No. 173, known as the Jones place, in the Fifth district of Wilcox county," is not on its face void on account of defective description.

(a) Nor is the levy of an execution based on the mortgage, which describes the property in substantially the same language.

2. EXECUTION (§ 194*)—CLAIM BY THIRD PERSON—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

The mortgage was valid, and on the trial of a claim which was interposed against the levy, the mortgage and fi. fa. were admissible in evidence over the objection that the description of the property was insufficient; there being extrinsic evidence tending to show that at the time the mortgage was given the mortgagor (whose name was T. J. Jones), claiming it under a deed, had for a number of years resided on the property with his family, including the claimant, who was his wife.

OGLETREE v. BRAY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)DOWER (§ 99)—JUDGMENT—ENTRY NUNC PRO TUNC—PARTIES WHO MAY ENTER.

In 1908 J. F. Ogletree brought an action in the superior court of Meriwether county against Mrs. A. A. Bray; the substance of the petition being as follows: W. C. Bray, the husband of the defendant, died in 1880. Subsequently she applied to said court for dower, and in August, 1881, commissioners were appointed to assign it. In October, 1881, all the lands belonging to the estate of the deceased husband were sold at sheriff's sale, subject to the widow's (the defendant's) right of dower therein, and a deed thereto executed by the sheriff to the purchaser. In January, 1882, the commissioners, who had laid off and admeasured dower in such lands to the defendant, made their return to the court, accompanied by a plat of the survey made at their instance by the county surveyor. No further steps have ever been taken in the proceedings for dower, and the return of the commissioners has never been made the judgment of the court. The defendant, about the time that the return was made, went into possession as dowress of that portion of the land assigned to her as dower in the return. In 1889 and 1896 defendant sold and conveyed her life estate in certain described portions of the land so assigned her as dower to the purchaser at the sheriff's sale. Defendant has continuously remained in possession of the balance of the dower land since it was assigned to her. By reason of the fact that the return has never been made the judgment of the court, and because of her long possession, the defendant is setting up title in the dower land adverse to plaintiff, and is claiming that she has title to the same in fee by prescription. Only two of the five commissioners who laid off the dower, and who know that defendant went into possession thereof as dowress, are living, and they are old and infirm, and their testimony may soon be lost to the plaintiff. Among the prayers were the following: (1) That the return of the commissioners be made the judgment of the court; (2) that it be decreed that the defendant has only a life estate in such of the land as she is in possession of and which was assigned her as dower, and that, as against her, the plaintiff owns the fee therein; and (3) that defendant be enjoined from disposing of the fee in such land. Held: (1) that as the purchaser at sheriff's sale of the fee in the land in question by reason of his interest therein was a party to the dower proceedings, and as he, after the assignment of dower, purchased from the defendant, as dowress, her life estate in certain portions of the dower, he had the right, not only for the purpose of protecting his interest in fee in the dower land, but also for the purpose of protecting his interest in the life estate in so much of the land as he bought from the defendant, to have the dower proceedings perfected by having the return of the commissioners made the judgment of the court nunc pro tunc, and that the plaintiff who held under such purchaser had the same right—23 Cyc. 840 (F); Id. 841 (n. 29); Id. 844 (4, n. 43); Id. 846 (2, n. 57)—(2) that, as the plaintiff was properly in court to have the return made the judgment of the court, he was entitled in the same action to the other relief sought in the prayers above named; and (3) that the court erred in sustaining a general demurrer to the petition.

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. RELEASE (§ 52)—PLEADING—AMENDMENT—PROCUREMENT BY FRAUD.

In an action against a railroad company by an employé to recover damages for a personal injury, alleged to have been sustained by the employé while traveling as a passenger, where the railroad company pleads the employé's release upon a consideration of one dollar as accord and satisfaction, it is competent for the employé to amend his petition by alleging that the release was procured by fraud. An amendment which alleges that the employé was induced to sign the release upon the false representation of the agent that the company's surgeon pronounced his injury slight, and that he would be able to resume work in a few days, and upon the company's agent delivering to him at the time an order directing the employe's superior officer to restore him to his former situation, signing the superintendent's name, which order was issued without the superintendent's authority and repudiated by the company, and that as soon as he was refused employment he tendered the dollar to the agent who gave it to him, which tender was refused, is sufficient to raise the issue of fraud in the procurement of the release.

3. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 46*)—DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP.

Where in a joint action of negligence in the state court against three defendants a peremptory instruction is given on the trial in favor of the two defendants who are residents of the state, this does not entitle the other, although a citizen of another state, to remove the case to the United States court because of diverse citizenship.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 141*)—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court, after reading from Civ. Code 1895, § 2322, that "if the complainant and the agents of the railroad company are both at fault, the former may recover, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of default attributable to him," immediately added, "but in this connection I charge you that the plaintiff can in no event recover if he could by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence have prevented the injury," such instruction is not open to the criticism as authorizing a recovery, although the plaintiff's negligence may have been the preponderating cause of the injury.

5. CARRIERS (§ 328*)—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where it appeared that a passenger having plenty of time to get on a train while it was standing waited until it began to move, and in an attempt to get on board by seizing the railing of the car his projecting body came in contact with a pair of trucks left near the track on the station premises, and thus he was injured, he cannot recover damages on the ground that the railroad company was negligent in allowing the trucks to be placed near the track.

Error from Superior Court, Whitfield County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by J. E. Nichols against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

McDaniel, Alston & Black and Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, for plaintiff in error. Geo. G. Glenn and Westmoreland Bros., for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. James E. Nichols brought suit against the Southern Railway Company, R. C. Craig, its depot agent, and J. W. Walker, the agent of the Southern Express Company, to recover damages for personal injuries. He alleged that he was employed as an engineer on a freight train of the railway company; that he ran his train into Chattanooga, Tenn., where he boarded an outgoing passenger train for Atlanta, Ga.; that he had previously asked for and was expecting a telegraphic pass, authorizing him to be carried on the passenger train, and so informed the conductor; that the plaintiff inquired of the operator at Ooltewah, Tenn., at the office, and the pass not being there, he reboarded the train and informed the conductor that he had not received the pass, but that he would get it when the train reached Dalton; that the conductor assented to this; that, when they reached Dalton, the plaintiff left the train, went into the office, and inquired about the pass, and, learning that it was not there, he determined to reboard the train and pay his fare; that, before he had time to get on, the train, without warning, started off, and he had to run to catch it; that he caught the train safely, and, while in the act of swinging himself on the steps and platform, his body came in contact with a pair of trucks which had been left so close to the coach as to strike him, knocking him off the steps before he swung his body clear; that but for the trucks striking him he would have boarded, as it was not moving so fast as to be dangerous to do so, he frequently having boarded trains safely going at a higher speed; that Craig, the depot agent, was negligent, in that it was his duty to see that the trucks were not left so near the side of the coach as to endanger passengers or others in attempting to board the car, and he failed to perform this duty; that the trucks belonged to the Southern Express Company, and had been placed so near the side of the coach as to endanger passengers or others attempting to board the train, and the express agent either placed the trucks there or allowed them to be so placed, which was negligence on his part; and that the conductor was negligent in starting the train without giving him time to get back from the office to board the same. The railroad company filed its plea, and at the trial amended it by setting up an accord and satisfaction, in that the plaintiff had been settled with, and in consideration of $1 had signed a release covering the injuries sued for, whereupon the plaintiff amended his declaration, attacking the plea of accord and satisfaction, and alleging that the release was procured by fraud. The defendants demurred to the amendment, and the demurrer was overruled. At the conclusion of the evidence, the court announced that he would instruct the jury that there could be no recovery against Craig and Walker, whereupon the railroad company filed its petition to remove the cause to the United States court. The petition was in the form prescribed by the act of Congress, and was accompanied with a bond. The court refused to grant the order of removal, and exception was taken. Pending the argument, the plaintiff again amended his declaration, alleging an additional act of negligence. A verdict was rendered for the plaintiff. The defendants moved for a new trial, which being refused, they accepted.

1, 2. The demurrer to the amendment attacking the release set up by the defendant as a plea of accord and satisfaction was upon the grounds that it was not set out in orderly paragraphs, consecutively numbered; that the facts alleged were insufficient to constitute fraud; that it did not appear that the tender was a continuing one, or made to a person having authority to receive it; and that the amendment undertook to vary a written contract. The original petition set out that the plaintiff had received serious and permanent injuries. The amendment alleged that the plaintiff would not have settled with the company for the nominal sum of $1 except that the agent of the company had practiced an artifice to obtain the release. The device was a false representation by the agent that the surgeons of the defendant company, who alone had examined the plaintiff, pronounced his injuries of a trifling character, and the assurance that he would be allowed to resume his work as an engineer of the freight train. This assurance was in the form of an order purporting to be signed by the superintendent of the defendant company, afterwards repudiated by him and the company. If these be the facts, it is apparent that the plaintiff accepted a nominal sum in settlement of his injuries because of this artifice. A contract obtained under such circumstances is fraudulently procured. As soon as the plaintiff discovered that the agent's representations were false, and that the company would not allow him to continue in its employment, he tendered the money back to the company's agent from whom he received it. He properly tendered the money to the same person whom the company used as a means of obtaining the execution of the paper. The amendment related to only one subject-matter, and could properly be incorporated in a single paragraph.

3. The right to remove to the federal court a suit against three tort-feasors, one of whom is a nonresident, is dependent upon the case as made upon the pleadings, and is not contingent on the aspect the case may have assumed on the facts developed on the merits of the issues tried. The petition presented a joint cause of action against the resident and nonresident defendants. A peremptory instruction given upon the trial in favor of the two defendants who were residents of the state does not entitle the other, although a citizen of another state, to remove the case to the federal court because of diverse citizenship. Kansas City, etc., Ry. Co. v. Herman, 187 U. S. 63, 23 Sup. Ct. 24, 47 L. Ed. 76; 2 Foster's Federal Practice, § 384 (b).

4. The court charged the jury in the language of Civ. Code 1895, § 2322, that: "No person shall recover damages from a railroad company for injury to himself or his property when the same is done by his consent, or is caused by his own negligence. If the complainant and the agents of the company are both at fault, the former may recover, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of default attributable to him." This last sentence is said to be error, because it authorized a recovery if the plaintiff's negligence was equal to, or greater than, that of the defendant's. An inspection of the charge shows that immediately after reading this section the court added: "But in this connection I charge you that the plaintiff can in no event recover if he could by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence have prevented the injury." The qualification which the court put upon Civ. Code, § 2322, is that contained in Civ. Code, § 3830, which two sections are in pari materia; and neither did the court confuse the two sections, nor was the charge open to the criticism that the plaintiff was entitled to recover if his negligence was equal to, or greater than, that of the defendant's. Indeed, the charge was modeled after the form suggested in Americus, etc., Railroad Co. v. Luckie, 87 Ga. 6, 13 S. E. 105.

5. If a passenger is given ample time to get on a train before it starts from the station, and he needlessly waits until the train is in motion before attempting to board it, and is injured in his effort to get aboard, but not from any negligence of the company, the latter would not be liable in damages for the injury. Ricks v. Georgia Southern & Florida R. Co., 118 Ga. 259, 45 S. E. 268; Meeks v. A. & B. Railroad Co., 122 Ga. 266, 50 S. E. 99. However, if it may be inferred from the circumstances that the passenger was not lacking in ordinary care in attempting to board the car in motion, and would not have been injured but for some supervening negligent act of the railroad company, it should be left to the jury to determine the relative diligence of the company and the passenger. If the company was negligent in allowing an obstruction upon the depot premises so near the track, and the passenger in boarding the car exercised ordinary care, he would be entitled to recover. On the other hand, if the company was not negligent, or if the passenger failed to observe due care in boarding the train, he could not recover. It then becomes necessary, in reaching a conclusion in the case, to ascertain whether the evidence showed that the plaintiff's injury was caused by the failure of the railroad company to discharge any duty that it owed to him as a passenger. The plaintiff had been assured by the train dispatcher that he would be given a telegraphic pass, and was riding upon the car, with the consent of the conductor, expecting that the pass would be delivered at an intermediate station. When the train stopped at Dalton, the plaintiff left the car and entered the station house to inquire if his pass had been received. The telegraph operator informed him that he had not received it, but was wiring for it. According to the plaintiff's own testimony, after having received this information from the operator, he had ample time to return and board the train while it was stopped. Instead of doing this, he tarried in the station house to converse with a friend, and while thus engaged he saw the train moving off, and immediately ran to catch it. His purpose was to get aboard the forward end of the first-class coach, but a man was in his way, and he waited until the rear end of the coach reached him, when he seized the railing, and just as he placed his feet upon the steps for the purpose of drawing himself up he was struck by the trucks and knocked under the car. The plaintiff said the trucks which knocked him off were those employed by the company for handling the baggage. One of his witnesses declared that they belonged to the Southern Express Company, and were used in the express business. There was no dispute that the train stopped at the usual place sufficiently long to receive and discharge passengers. The train officers testified that the usual signals were given for the train to start. The plaintiff, who was in the station house talking with a friend, said he did not hear the signal. We do not think this negative testimony sufficient to raise a conflict on this point. The only act which the plaintiff by his testimony seeks to impute to the company as negligence is that contained in the amendment. There it was alleged that it was the duty of the railroad company to keep its depot premises in a reasonably safe condition, and free from obstructions so near its track as to endanger passengers in leaving or boarding its train, when in the exercise of ordinary care; that the railroad company failed to observe this duty when it permitted the trucks which struck the plaintiff to be placed dangerously near the track; that these trucks were an obstruction in plain view of the conductor in charge of the train, and it was negligent in him to move the train before the trucks had been moved to a safe way from the track, as passengers were in the habit of boarding the cars while in motion, and this was known to the conductor. In Central Railroad Co. v. Perry, 58 Ga. 463, it was said by Bleckley, J., that "ordinarily a railroad company has a right to expect that passengers will get on and off at the place provided for them, and there only. It cannot be stated as a proposition of law that it is its duty to keep the track clear for pursuers, or that a passenger has a right to chase a flying train. As a general rule, on the contrary, no such duty or right exists, and, for the sake of the public as well as of the company, it is better they should not exist." It is unquestionably true that a railroad company must use due care in providing a reasonably safe place at depots and regular stopping places, so as to enable passengers to get on the train with safety to their person, and not move its train until passengers are given a reasonable opportunity to get off and on the cars. When the railroad company discharged its duty in this respect, it did not owe to the plaintiff the further duty to provide means by which he could board the cars while in motion. Simmons v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 120 Ga. 225, 47 S. E. 570; Chicago & Northwestern Ry. Co. v. Scates, 90 Ill. 586. The plaintiff, therefore, failed to show that the railroad company was negligent, and his injury was the consequence of his own voluntary act.

We have discussed the case on the hypothesis that the plaintiff was injured by coming in contact with the trucks. It was the contention of the railroad company (and evidence was submitted tending to prove it) that the plaintiff was in an intoxicated condition, and was injured by slipping from the steps in his effort to board the train, and was not struck by the trucks at all. The evidence did not warrant the verdict; and some of the instructions were not altogether in harmony with the views expressed herein. The rulings on the exclusion and admission of evidence were not erroneous.

Judgment reversed.

EVANS, P. J. Charles Scott was convicted of the murder of Henry Harris, and sentenced to be hung. In his motion for new trial he complained that the court erred in failing to charge the law of voluntary manslaughter, and that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. The motion was overruled. The evidence discloses that the defendant entered a house where the deceased was sitting in a chair, reproached the deceased for slapping his little brother-in-law, and stated he was going to kill him, and simultaneously shot him with a pistol, inflicting a mortal wound. The evidence did not authorize an instruction on the law of voluntary manslaughter, and was amply sufficient to support the verdict.

BRANAN v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 347*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

The plaintiff brought suit for damages, alleging substantially as follows: After the train of the defendant, on which he was a passenger, blew for his station and began to slow up, he started to go into another coach to get a bundle he had left therein. The door of the car had been left open by defendant's agents, ready for passengers to get out. As he got to the door, a violent jerk of the train caused him, in order to steady himself, to place his hand against the door, which swung to and cut off his finger. The door was defectively constructed. Defendant's agents negligently failed to push it back far enough to catch, and allowed it to swing loose. The engineer negligently caused the jerk of the train just as plaintiff grasped the door, causing it to swing to and catch his finger. The roadbed at the point of injury was defective in specified particulars, which "contributed to said jerk of the train." Held, whether, after the train blew for his station and began to slow up, the plaintiff, in undertaking to get into another coach to get a bundle which he had left therein, was in this particular, or otherwise under the allegations of the petition, guilty of such negligence as would bar a recovery, was a question for the jury. Cotchett v. Savannah &c. R. Co., 84 Ga. 687, 11 S. E. 553; Augusta So. R. Co. v. Snider, 118 Ga. 146, 44 S. E. 1005; Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Forehand, 128 Ga. 547, 58 S. E. 44.

MORTGAGES (§ 534*)—FORECLOSURE—SALE SUBJECT TO DOWER—INTEREST OBTAINED.

A widow made application in March, 1867, for dower in a tract of land containing 237 acres, more or less, and in 1868 was assigned a dower estate in 62¼ acres thereof. After the application for dower was made, the tract was levied upon by the sheriff by virtue of a mortgage fi. fa., and in December, 1867, it was sold under such levy. The entry of levy and the deed to the purchaser described the tract as "containing 237 acres, more or less, widow's dower excepted." Held, that the sheriff's deed conveyed the fee in the entire tract to the purchaser, subject to the widow's right of dower therein, and after the death of the widow the purchaser was entitled to the 62¼ acres assigned to the widow as a dower estate. Hawkins v. 1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 245)—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 86*)—INDORSEMENT OF CHECK—LIABILITY AS SURETY.

Where a bank to which a check on another bank is presented for payment requires the payee to procure a third person to indorse the check, and this is done, and the bank to whom the check is presented then cashes it for the payee on the faith of this indorsement, which is neither necessary nor proper for the transmission of title to the check in the negotiation thereof, but is for the sole purpose of guaranteeing payment of the check, such indorser becomes a surety thereon. Sibley v. Bank, 97 Ga. 128, 25 S. E. 470; Atkinson v. Bennett, 103 Ga. 508, 30 S. E. 599; Buck v. Bank, 104 Ga. 660, 30 S. E. 872; Ridley v. Hightower, 112 Ga. 476, 37 S. E. 733.

(a) In order to bind a surety, it is not necessary to give him the notice of dishonor and protest provided for by Civ. Code, § 3688, in respect to indorsers of promissory notes and bills of exchange. Sibley v. Bank, supra.

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 114*)—UNAUTHORIZED ACT OF AGENT—RATIFICATION.

Even if the cashier who paid the check, as agent of the defendant in error, who was a banker, was without authority to pay it with the funds of his principal, his action in so doing was ratified by the defendant in error, who brought suit on the check in his own name.

GEORGIA ENGINEERING & CONSTRUCTION CO. v. HORTON & SMITH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DEMURRER PROPERLY OVERRULED.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the plaintiff's petition, based on the ground that the contract was one within the statute of frauds, and was not alleged to have been in writing. Mobley v. Lott, 127 Ga. 572, 56 S. C. 637.

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 513*)—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION—ACTION AGAINST CORPORATION.

Where a petition alleged that the plaintiffs sold lumber to a corporation of the county where the suit was brought at a certain price and to be delivered at certain times, and sought to recover damages on account of a breach of the contract arising from a refusal to receive the lumber sold, it was not subject to special demurrer on the ground that it did not allege the name of the officer or agent of the defendant with whom the contract was made. 5 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 92; Pierce v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 122 Ga. 664, 667, 669, 50 S. E. 468; Augusta Ry. Co. v. Andrews, 92 Ga. 706, 710, 712, 19 S. E. 718; 81 Cyc. 1226, and notes.

(a) In Cherokee Mills v. Gate City Cotton Mills, 122 Ga. 268, 50 S. E. 82, it was alleged that the plaintiff, a corporation, conducted certain negotiations "through its proper officers," and that the defendant called on the defendant corporation, "through its proper officers," to make good the contract, and the defendant's officers were charged with bad faith, and attorneys' fees claimed on that account. It was held that on special demurrer it should be stated what "proper officers" were meant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2018; Dec. Dig. § 513.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 332*)—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE IN OTHER CASE.

On the trial of a case in the superior court, it was error to admit in evidence, over objection, an extract from an original brief of evidence prepared by counsel and approved by the judge of a city court of the same county, and used on the hearing of a motion for a new trial in a case in that court between the same parties. Original records of one court are not ordinarily admissible in evidence in a different court as proof of their contents. A certified copy of such brief, not the original, was the proper evidence to show what a witness testified on that trial, if such evidence was otherwise competent. Civ. Code, § 5212; Belt v. State, 103 Ga. 12 (3), 29 S. E. 451; Cramer & Co. v. Truitt, 113 Ga. 967, 39 S. E. 459.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

There was no evidence requiring a new trial in rejecting by-laws of the defendant corporation declaring the general powers of the board of directors and the general duties of the president. The question in issue was whether an agent of the company, whose agency was recognized and not denied, had authority to bind the company by purchase of lumber on certain terms, and whether he made the trade contended; or, if he did not have such authority, whether, if he made the trade, his act was ratified. The evidence showed that the person who was president was also general manager.

5. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

If there were any inadvertences of expression in the charges complained of, they affect the accuracy of statement rather than the correctness of the principles announced. They will not probably occur again, and require no extended discussion. None of the other rulings in regard to the admission or rejection of evidence were such as to require a new trial, where considered in connection with the entire evidence.

BATEMAN v. BATEMAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 32)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION.

The following written contract was entered into: "This contract, entered into the date above written, between Chas. L. Bateman, party of the first part, and J. A. Goggins and O. C. Bateman, parties of the second part, witnesseth: That Chas. L. Bateman, party of the first part, agrees to sell J. A. Goggins and O. C. Bateman, parties of the second part, all pine timber down to (13) thirteen inches in diameter, and all oak and poplar timber that will square 15 inches, and all dogwood timber of merchantable size, on his plantation in the sixth district of Crawford county, Ga., for the sum of fifteen hundred ($1,500.00) dollars, and payments to be made and half of each bill of lumber as sold, except such bills as O. L. Bateman, party of the first part, may see proper to have sawed for himself, and price of such bills shall be one ($1.00) dollar per hundred for any class, and same to be credited on above account. J. A. Goggins and O. C. Bateman, parties of the second part, agree to pay $1,500.00 for timber as above stated and on terms as stated, and to furnish lumber for bills as stated above for O. L. Bateman, party of the first part." Signed by the three parties. The evidence disclosed that one of the purchasers agreed with the other to furnish the mules and log carts, that the other was to pay for the work, and that each was to have an interest in the proceeds, the amount of which was not distinctly disclosed. Held, that the purchasers were liable as partners, and the fact that one of them collected the proceeds of certain sales and ran away, without accounting to his partner, furnished no ground of defense to the latter, in a suit on the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 34; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—BREACH OF TIMBER CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Suit was brought by the vendor upon the contract set out in the preceding headnote. It was alleged that the vendees had cut, sawed, and sold more of the timber than was required to pay the plaintiff in accordance with the contract; that he had demanded of them one-half of the proceeds of each shipment of lumber made by them, and also one-half of the proceeds of the lumber sold by them to parties in the locality; that they had refused to pay him such sums, and also finally refused to cut and saw any more of the timber; that he had received only $818.36, leaving a balance of $681.64 still due. Held, that in such a suit it was erroneous to charge as follows: "As to the payment for lumber sold and delivered to other parties, the plaintiff contends that the truth of the case is that the defendants have never paid for lumber sold to other parties according to the terms of the contract, but that upon approaching Goggins and Bateman, that on every occasion when he tried to get any money out of them on their contract, that they complained that they were making no money, and used all of their receipts for sales to pay off their hands, and they could not give up to him one-half of the money. If you believe that to be the truth of the case, under the evidence, then that created a breach on the part of the defendants of their duty toward the plaintiff to pay to the plaintiff one-half; and I charge the jury that if a breach at that time occurred under the contract, because of a refusal of the defendants to pay the money due by the contract upon the sales of various bills of the parties from time to time of the lumber sawed from this place, and the defendants refused to make any statement showing what was the amount received from those bills, that constituted such a breach of the contract that entitled the plaintiff to claim that his entire bill was due for the amounts of timber sold, and the reason for that is that the knowledge of the quantity of lumber sawed and knowledge of the amounts of the bills, and the party by whom those bills were owed to the defendants, Goggins and Bateman, therefore, if, having that knowledge of the amount that they owed the plaintiff those sums, withheld from him the information upon which he would base his claim for that, the law would hold the entire sum was due at once. To illustrate what I mean, if you hire a man on a farm to work for $200 a year, and he stays six months and runs away, without any fault on your part, he is not entitled to recover a dollar, for he has made a breach of the entire contract. On the other hand, if you hire a man to work for $200 a year and he renders proper service, and without just cause he is run off from the place, he can wait until the end of the year and recover the whole 12 months' wages. Why? Because there is a breach of the contract without fault on his part."

3. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—BREACH OF TIMBER CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Under such a suit it was also error to charge as follows: "Where, however, a contract has no specified time within which the payments were to be made, but were to be made out of certain sales, and plaintiff shows the sales have been made, and there is nothing from the evidence in the case in consequence of the refusal of the defendants to make a disclosure, either from inability or other cause, but there is a breach of the contract in reference to that matter by the defendants in the case, so that the plaintiff has no way of ascertaining within what time his money is due, then the result of that breach on the part of the defendants is to give to the plaintiff the right of action for the entire amount due upon the contract for the purchase of the timber; and therefore I charge the jury in this case, if you believe that although Goggins and Bateman had a right under the contract not to be called upon to pay, except as there were sales of bills of lumber sawed on this land, the law holding they would have a reasonable time within which to saw the timber from the land and sell it, and that having that right they sawed the timber, or a considerable portion of it, and upon request of C. L. Bateman to make a showing and settle for such lumber as they had sawed, and they failed and refused to do it, so that he, Bateman, was left in ignorance, and without any means of ascertaining the amount of his timber they had sawed, and the prices at which they had sold it, so that he was not in a position of knowing from them, through their concealment of those facts, then as far as he is concerned the law would give him the right of action to recover the entire amount due, except as they were entitled to credit."

(a) The doctrine of anticipatory breach of contract, where one party to a contract involving mutual obligations repudiates it before the time of performance has arrived, was not involved in the case as laid by the plaintiff. Neither was the rule involved that one who enters into an entire contract, and abandons it after only part performances, is not entitled to recover on the contract at all.

(b) The fact that a plaintiff finds it difficult to prove his case as alleged, or to have an accounting and show the amount of timber which has been cut and sold by the defendants, because he is in ignorance of the actual amount cut and the prices thereof, and does not have the means of ascertaining it, will not authorize him to recover on a basis different from that on which he has sued.

1. DEMURRERS PROPERLY OVERRULED.

There was no error in overruling the demurrers to the sheriff's answer to the rule.

2. EXECUTION (§ 152*)—SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 118*)—CUSTODY OF PROPERTY—DELIVERY ON FORTHCOMING BOND—DUTY OF SHERIFF.

If personal property was levied on under an execution, and a claim thereto duly interposed and a forthcoming bond given, with proper security, it was the duty of the sheriff to leave the property in the possession of the claimant. If found subject, and not forthcoming on the day of sale, there was a remedy on the bond. The sheriff was not for that reason liable to rule for not having made the money. Civ. Code, § 4616.

3. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 93*)—LIABILITY FOR LOSS OF PROPERTY LEVIED ON.

Without special authority, attorneys cannot receive anything in discharge of a client's claim but the full amount in cash. Civ. Code, § 4418. But if the attorney for the plaintiff in fi. fa., in the effort to collect the money due thereon, and while representing his client, made an agreement as to leaving the property levied on at a certain place, and so directed the sheriff as to cause an illegal sale to be made by the latter without having the goods in possession, and the attorney bid them in for his client, and afterwards they were burned in a fire occurring at the place where they were left by consent, on a rule against the sheriff for not having realized the amount of the execution he would not be liable for damages resulting from the above-stated causes.

No formal traverse appears to have been made to the sheriff's answer. The pleadings and evidence were somewhat confused. The charges may not have been altogether free from inaccuracy. But, upon a review of the whole case, there was no error in overruling the motion for a new trial.

HOLDEN, J. The administrator of a deceased member of the "Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias of the State of Georgia," a mutual benefit society, sued the latter on a policy issued by it to the member on December 18, 1904, which policy provided that the order, "under the following express conditions, stipulations, and agreements now existing or that may hereafter be enacted by the grand lodge, will pay to the widow, legal heirs or representatives, at the death of" the member, a specified amount, provided that the member shall have complied with all regulations and laws of the lodges, and the following conditions that the member shall be in good standing in his lodge at the time of his death, and the records of the endowment bureau shall sustain the same, that the policy shall not be assigned or hypothecated by the member before his death, or by his widow, legal heir, or representatives after his death. A copy of the policy was annexed to the petition, which alleged a compliance by the member and the plaintiff "with all the terms, conditions, rules and regulations of the said grand lodge necessary or requisite to entitle the petitioner to collect the said sum of $300, which the defendant refused to pay." The defendant denied liability to the plaintiff, and pleaded and proved payment of the amount of the policy to the mother of the deceased, who testified that "she was dependent upon the deceased member." The evidence showed that the deceased was never married, and left surviving him his father, mother, and one sister. The defendant introduced in evidence the preamble to the by-laws and the by-laws of the Grand Lodge of Georgia in existence at the time the policy was issued and at the death of the member. The preamble to the by-laws states: "Whereas the supreme lodge * * * has granted unto the several grand lodges under its jurisdiction the right and authority to manage a beneficiary fund and establish bureaus of endowment for the benefit of the families and heirs of deceased knights in their respective jurisdictions." The first section of the by-laws provides: "A bureau of endowment is hereby created, whereby, upon satisfactory proof of the death of the sir knight, * * * a sum of money named in his certificate shall be paid to his widow, orphans, or dependent relatives, in accordance with the provisions hereinafter made." Another section declared: "Upon the receipt and proof of the death of a knight in good standing, the secretary shall make due publication of the same; and, when there has been sufficient proof of the identification of the legal heir or heirs, the board of control shall cause to be paid to the heir or heirs the sum of money from the endowment fund due upon the certificate of endowment." Other sections provided: "Each applicant shall have entered upon his application the name or names of the person or persons to whom he desires his benefits paid. * * * In the event of the death of a member of the order, and no person or persons shall be entitled to receive such benefits by the law of this order, one-half shall revert to the benefit fund of the endowment bureau and one-half to the lodge of which the deceased brother was a member. * * * Upon receipt of order from the board of managers, he [secretary and treasurer] shall immediately pay to the legal representatives of deceased knights, through the chancellor commander of deceased member's lodge, the amount due from the benefit fund, receiving therefor receipt, and cancel said brother's policy." The secretary and treasurer "shall issue monthly a circular containing the following: * * * 5th. The amount paid to legal representatives." Upon the conclusion of the testimony, the court directed a verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff excepted.

1. In view of the allegations of the petition that the deceased and the plaintiff (the administrator of the estate of the former) had complied "with all the terms, conditions, rules and regulations of the said grand lodge necessary or requisite to entitle the petitioner to collect the said sum of $300," and the stipulation in the policy sued on that the defendant, who issued it, will pay "to the widow, legal heirs, or representatives" of the deceased member the amount specified in the policy, there was no error in overruling a general demurrer to the petition, the by-laws of the defendant not appearing therefrom, and nothing appearing which would preclude a recovery on the part of the administrator as coming within the class "legal heirs or representatives" referred to in the policy. The order overruling such general demurrer did not preclude the defendant from showing that under its by-laws the "legal heirs or representatives" referred to in the policy did not include the administrator of the deceased member, and that such administrator could not recover on such policy. "A contract entered into by a benefit society with a member is executory, and its terms will be ascertained from the certificate issued to the member, in connection with the charter and laws of the society, subject to the law of the state under which it is created." Union Fraternal League v. Walton, 109 Ga. 1, 34 S. E. 317, 46 L. R. A. 424, 77 Am. St. Rep. 350; Civ. Code, § 2135. The words "representative" and "legal representative" of a person do not necessarily include the administrator or executor of such person; but such words are to be construed in connection with the context and the writings forming a part of the contract in which such words are used. 25 Cyc. 175; 5 Words & Phrases, 4070, 4076. The words above referred to, as employed in the policy and by-laws of the defendant, construed in the light of the objects and purposes which the order sought to accomplish, were not intended to include the administrator of the member referred to in the policy. See 1 Bacon on Benefit Societies and Life Insurance, § 262; Warner v. Modern Woodmen of America, 67 Neb. 233, 93 N. W. 397, 61 L. R. A. 608, 108 Am. SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. TOLLERSON.

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. NEW TRIAL (§ 162)—REFUSAL—REMITTANCE.

Where, in an action for damages to live stock which were shipped over a line of rail-ways, and some of which were alleged to have been injured by negligence in failing to properly care for, feed, and water them, the jury found for the plaintiff $500, and the presiding judge granted a motion for a new trial unless the plaintiff would write off from the verdict the sum of $100, which was done and a new trial refused; and where it did not appear from the evidence that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum thus reduced, or that a sum could be accurately ascertained to be written off from the verdict and leave the balance to stand as a lawful finding, such ruling was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 324-329; Dec. Dig. § 162.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 211*) — SHIPMENT OF LIVE STOCK—FAILURE OF SHIPPER TO FEED AND WATER—ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

If live stock were shipped under a valid written contract providing that the shipper or his agent should accompany the animals transported and should feed and care for them at his own expense, provided that, upon his failure to do so, the railroad company might feed and care for them at the expense of the owner, a failure on the part of the shipper to comply with such contract was a default on his part, and he could not recover for damages arising therefrom; nor could the consignee, who relied on such contract as having been made for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 926-928; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 219*) — SHIPMENT OF LIVE STOCK—FAILURE OF SHIPPER TO FEED AND WATER—ACTION AGAINST CARRIER.

If such animals were shipped from one state to another, and, on default of the owner or shipper to comply with a valid special contract of shipment of the character indicated in the preceding headnote, it was necessary for one of a line of connecting railroads to feed and water the stock, under section 4397 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2996), the fact that this was done, and that the last of the line of connecting carriers presented a bill for the amount of expenses so incurred to the consignee, who paid it, did not constitute a waiver of the provision of the contract in regard thereto.

Error from Superior Court, Henry County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by H. M. Tollerson against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

H. M. Tollerson brought suit against the Southern Railway Company, and alleged in brief as follows: Through his agent he had delivered a car load of live stock to the defendant at Shelbyville, Ky., to be shipped to McDonough, Ga., on December 12, 1905. The stock consisted of mules and horses, and when delivered to the railroad company they were in good condition, but, when delivered to the plaintiff at McDonough, they were famished, depleted, exhausted, and damaged by reason of a lack of food, water, and proper care while en route. The jury found for the plaintiff $500. The defendant moved for a new trial. The court overruled the motion provided the plaintiff would write off from the verdict $100. This the plaintiff did, and the defendant excepted.

N. E. & W. A. Harris, for plaintiff in error.
Brown & Brown, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. When this case was before the Supreme Court on a former occasion, it was held that the stipulation in the contract for the shipment of live stock, requiring "that, as a condition precedent to any right to recover any damages for loss or injury to said live stock," written notice of a claim therefor shall be given "before said live stock is removed or is intermingled with other live stock," was reasonable and valid, and that the evidence failed to show that the shipper complied with such stipulation. The judgment in favor of the plaintiff was accordingly reversed. Southern Railway Company v. Tollerson, 129 Ga. 647, 59 S. E. 799. When the case was again tried, some additional evidence was introduced. It is not necessary to discuss the meaning of the expression "before said live stock is removed," whether this means a removal from the custody of the railroad, or a removal from the place of destination, as in Southern Railway Company v. Adams, 115 Ga. 705, 42 S. E. 35; or whether an agreement requiring written notice before removal of stock from a car would be reasonable, at least as applicable to injuries not patent and discoverable before such removal. The suit was for $830, and the jury found a verdict for $500. The presiding judge refused a new trial, provided the plaintiff would write off from the verdict $100, which was done, and a new trial was thereupon denied. We have not ascertained from the evidence how the presiding judge arrived at the sum of $100 which should be written off from the verdict, or why the verdict was improper for that amount, and not as a whole; nor have the briefs of counsel shown us how this amount was arrived at. Seaboard Air-Line Railway v. Randolph, 129 Ga. 796, 59 S. E. 1110; Seaboard Air-Line Railway v. Bishop, 132 Ga. 71, 63 S. E. 1103.

The special written contract made in regard to shipment of the live stock contained the following provisions: "That he [the shipper] will load and unload said animals at his own risk, and feed, water, and attend the same at his own expense and risk while they are in the stockyards of the railway company awaiting shipment, and while on the cars, or at feeding or transfer points, or where they may be unloaded for any purpose, whether arising from accident or delay of trains, or otherwise, and to that end he or his agent in charge of said live stock shall pay regular published passenger fare when proper under rules governing transportation of live stock, and shall ride upon the freight train in which said animals are transported; and, in case the railway company shall furnish laborers to assist in loading and unloading or caring for said live stock, they shall be subject to the orders and shall be the employes of the party of the second part while so assisting; provided, however, that, in the event that the party of the second part shall fail to properly care for, feed, or water the said live stock during transportation, the railway company may itself care for, water, and feed the same at the expense of the owner thereof, and shall and may have a lien upon the said live stock for the amount of its expenditures in that respect." The damages sought to be recovered were claimed to have arisen from lack of proper care, feeding, and watering of the stock during transportation. It did not appear that the plaintiff or his agent or any one representing him accompanied the stock or sought to feed and water them, or that the railway company did not furnish ample facilities and opportunities for that purpose. It has been held in this state that such a contract, based on a reduced rate, is valid. Central Railroad v. Bryant, 73 Ga. 722; Cincinnati, etc., Railway v. Disbrow & Co., 76 Ga. 253; Boaz & Co. v. Central Railroad Co., 87 Ga. 463, 13 S. E. 711; Central Railway Co. v. James, 117 Ga. 832, 45 S. E. 223. There was nothing to show that the contract was not valid where made.

By section 4386 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2995) it was declared that in interstate shipments of live stock they should not be confined in the cars for a longer period than 28 consecutive hours (by amendment changed to 36, upon written request of the owner or person in charge [Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594] 34 Stat. 607 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1178]) "without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding, for a period of at least five consecutive hours, unless prevented from so unloading by storm or other accidental causes." Section 4387 reads as follows: "Animals so unloaded shall be properly fed and watered during such rest by the owner or person having the custody thereof, or in case of his default in so doing, then by the railroad company or owners or masters of boats or vessels transporting the same at the expense of the owner or person in custody thereof; and such company, owners, or masters shall have a lien upon such animals for food, care, and custody furnished, and shall not be liable for any detention of such animals." By section 4388 it was declared that animals, who knowingly and willingly fails to comply with the provisions of the two preceding sections," shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $100 or more than $500. It will be noticed that these sections seem to contemplate that the owner or person having the custody of the live stock may be under a duty to feed and water them, and that the railroad company must do this "in case of his default in doing so." If by a valid contract the shipper undertakes to accompany the stock himself or have some person accompany them as his agent, and to feed and water them, and the railroad company furnishes him with facilities and opportunities for that purpose, he cannot violate his contract, and yet claim not to be in default. 4 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) 1554; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 41 Fed. 913; Ft. Worth, etc., Ry. Co. v. Daggett, 87 Tex. 322 (6), (7), 28 S. W. 325. This shipment was prior to the act of Congress of 1906, commonly called the "Hepburn Act" (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, 34 Stat. 584 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1149]), and it is therefore unnecessary to consider whether it would have affected the case.

The presiding judge recognized the general principle here announced, but charged the jury as follows: "That part of the contract, gentlemen, requires that Mr. Tollerson or his agent look after, feed, and water and care for the stock en route, and to that end he should have accompanied them, riding on the same train on which they were transported. If they failed to do that, and the stock was damaged by reason of that failure to feed and water them, then he would not be entitled to recover at all, unless you find that stipulation in the contract was waived by the railroad company." There was no evidence from which the jury would have been authorized to find that there was such a waiver, or on which to submit that question to them. The Revised Statutes of the United States, above cited, required the railroad company to feed and water the stock in default of the owner's doing so, and at his expense. This was a shipment from Kentucky to Georgia. At some point along the line of connecting railroads, it was claimed that an expense was incurred for feeding and watering the animals shipped. Upon their arrival, the defendant presented to the plaintiff a bill for such expense, which the latter paid. It did not appear that the plaintiff complied with his contract in respect to the matter of having the stock accompanied and cared for, but, on the contrary, it is plainly inferable from all the evidence that he did not do so. If by his own default he rendered it necessary for one of the connecting lines of railroad to feed the stock en route, and paid the expense so incurred, this did not amount to a waiver of that provision of the contract on the part of each of the railroad companies constituting the through line.

From what has been said, it is apparent that, under the evidence, the jury erred in their finding, and that the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment reversed.

ROME MACHINE & FOUNDRY CO. v. DAVIS FOUNDRY & MACHINE WORKS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1910.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 49*)—CORPORATE NAME—RIGHT TO EXCLUSIVE USE.

A corporation has an exclusive right to the use of its own name, and it will be protected by a court of equity, by injunction, against the use of such name by another corporation. The corporate name is a necessary element of the corporate existence, and the right to its exclusive use will be protected upon like principles to those under which persons are protected in the use of trade-marks. Creswill v. Knights of Pythias, 133 Ga. 837, 67 S. E. 188; Clark on Corp. (2d Ed.) 64; Hopkins on Unfair Trade, § 54; Paul on Trade-Marks, § 168.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 137; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

2. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES (§ 9*) — NAMES SUBJECT OF OWNERSHIP.

Generally geographical names are not the subject of exclusive appropriation as trade-marks or trade-names. But such names, in connection with other words, may sometimes acquire a secondary signification, indicative not only of the place of manufacture, but of the name of the manufacturer or producer, or of the character of the product, so that the name or title thus employed, including the geographical word, may be the subject of protection against unfair competition in trade. Paul on Trade-Marks, § 241 et seq; Elgin National Watch Co. v. Illinois Watch Co., 179 U. S. 665, 21 Sup. Ct. 270, 45 L. Ed. 365; French Republic v. Saratoga Vichy Spring Co., 191 U. S. 427, 24 Sup. Ct. 145, 48 L. Ed. 247.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trade-Marks and Trade-Names, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

3. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES (§ 25*)—CORPORATIONS (§ 49*)—USE BY CORPORATION OF OTHER THAN CORPORATE NAME—RIGHT BY USER.

A corporation may, by user, acquire a right to a trade-name other than its corporate name in connection with goods manufactured and sold by it, and as descriptive of them; but such name is not a corporate name. Paul on Trade-Marks, § 169.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trade-Marks and Trade-Names, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 25; Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 137; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

4. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES (§ 32*)—ABANDONMENT—RIGHT OF ANOTHER TO APPROPRIATE—REAPPROPRIATION.

A trade-mark, whether it consists of a symbol or a name, may be abandoned; and if it is, it may be appropriated by any one who by so doing adopts it as his own. If a trade-mark or trade-name has been abandoned, it may be resumed and readopted by the original proprietor, if in the meantime it has not been taken possession of by another. Paul on Trade-Marks, § 101.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trade-Marks and Trade-Names, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 47*)—CORPORATE NAMES—RIGHT TO CHANGE.

Where a corporation was chartered under the name of the "Davis Foundry & Machine Works," it might obtain an amendment to its corporate name, if there were no legal objection to the amendment sought to be made. But there is no law which authorized a corporation, by way of obtaining an amendment to its charter, to file a petition setting out that some of its stockholders had previously been conducting a business similar in character to that done by the corporation, which was known as the "Rome Foundry & Machine Works," and which had been practically continuous and "under the same personal influence and control"; that the Rome Foundry & Machine Works spent considerable money and labor in advertising its business and was succeeded by a firm known by the petitioner's name; that the petitioner took over the business of such firm and adopted its name, and a part of the property was the advertisement of the "Rome Foundry & Machine Works"; that that name was liable and likely to be adopted by some other firm or corporation, or a name so similar that the petitioner would be injured thereby; and that it desired its charter to be so amended that the corporation might use the "Rome Foundry & Machine Works," in connection with its corporate name, upon its stationery and whenever it saw fit, preceding such name with the word "formerly"; but that it did not desire its name to be changed as thus set out for the purpose of suing or being sued, or for other corporate purposes, but so that petitioner might receive the benefit of a business done under the former name. Nor is there any provision of law by which a judge of the superior court is authorized to grant such an amendment to the charter. A corporate name may be amended, but under an application to amend the charter a judge of the superior court cannot grant the right to use, or omit to use, at will, some name in addition to the corporate name, so as to form no part of the corporate name, but to pre-empt it against use by other persons or corporations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 134, 135; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

The powers conferred on the trustees of Winthrop Normal and Industrial College by its charter (Civ. 3. CONTRACTS (§ 10*)—MUTUALITY.

Where a contract had been made with the trustees of a college by the trustees of a school district to sell a piece of land to the college, in a suit to prevent the sale, brought by the minority of school district trustees, who had voted against allowing such sale, they could not complain that there was a lack of mutuality in that the college trustees did not have the funds with which to make the purchase.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 95*)—CONTRACT—LACK OF MUTUALITY—WAIVER.

If the lack of funds with which to purchase certain land would be a ground for the seller's rescinding the contract to sell, yet the defense may be waived and the contract completed.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1041*)—HARMLESS ERROR—AMENDMENT OF ANSWER.

A contract had been made with the trustees of a college by the trustees of a school district to sell a piece of land to them, to prevent which a suit was brought by the minority of the school district trustees, who had voted against allowing such sale. Held, that such minority trustees were not prejudiced by an amendment of the answer of the college so as to allege its readiness to pay the purchase price requesting specific performance on the money being tendered, where the answer of the school district and the original answer of the college both prayed specific performance.

ed by the circuit court, unless it involves the jurisdiction of the court.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of York County; Geo. W. Gage, Judge.

Suit by Alex Long and others against Ira B. Dunlap and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Wilson & Wilson and Stanyarne Wilson, for appellants. Witherspoon & Spencers, Dunlap & Dunlap, and J. E. McDonald, for respondents.

HYDRICK, J. The trustees of Winthrop Normal and Industrial College, desiring to build and equip a model practice school building in connection with the college, applied to the Legislature for an appropriation of $20,000, stating that such a building, properly equipped, would cost $45,000, but that they could raise $25,000 of the amount needed. By an act, approved February 13, 1907 (25 Stat. at Large, p. 831) the sum asked for was appropriated on condition that the trustees raise $25,000 additional for that purpose. The additional sum was raised and deposited in bank, whereupon, by the terms of the act, the appropriation became available.

Under the terms of the act, the said sum of $45,000 was to be expended in erecting and equipping the building. Therefore, no part of it could be used for purchasing a site. It appears, however, that a friend of the college offered to give $25,000 for this school on condition that the trustees raise $30,000 more—making in all $100,000. It does not appear that any other condition was attached to this offer—such as that the money should be used only in erecting and equipping the building, as was the condition of the appropriation. The trustees of the college reported this offer to the Legislature, in 1908, and stated that they expected to raise the additional sum of $30,000. It appeared, however, that at the time of the trial before the referee, they had not succeeded in doing so. As there was no suitable place on the college property for the location of the practice school, negotiations were commenced with the Rock Hill school district for the purchase of a lot of eight acres, lying near the college, which had been conveyed to the school district by the Catawba Military Academy. The negotiations resulted in an agreement between the trustees of the college and the trustees of the school district for the sale of the property to the college for $20,000 cash. The trustees of the school district, seven in number, were sharply divided as to the wisdom and expediency of selling the property—four being in favor of it, and three opposed to it. To prevent the consummation of the agreement, this action was brought by the minority of the trustees of the school district, as such and in their own right as citizens and taxpayers, with whom Alex Long, as chairman of the board of trustees of the Catawba Military Academy, and as a citizen and taxpayer, was joined as a plaintiff, against the majority of the trustees of the school district, the trustees of the college, as a corporation, the school district, as a corporation, the Catawba Military Academy, as a corporation, and Ira B. Dunlap, as secretary of the board of trustees of the Catawba Military Academy, to reform the deed of the Catawba Military Academy to the trustees of the school district, and to enjoin the sale of the property to the college.

Reformation of the deed was prayed for on the allegation that it should have contained a covenant running with the land that it should never be sold, but should be held by the grantees in perpetual succession for the purpose of conducting a high school thereon. The cause of action for reformation was abandoned on circuit, and the facts are mentioned merely to explain the presence of some of the parties to the action.

Injunction against the sale by the school district was prayed for on the allegation that the price agreed upon was grossly inadequate, and that the sale of the property, under the circumstances alleged, was an abuse of discretion so gross as to amount to a breach of trust; and against the college, injunction was prayed for on the allegation that there was no necessity for the acquisition of the property by it, and that it was without power and authority under the statutes to make the contract. The alleged want of power was predicated upon the grounds that the college was prohibited by the statutes from making the contract, and that, having no funds with which to pay for the property at the time of making the contract, it was void for want of consideration and mutuality.

As stated above, the cause of action for reformation was abandoned, and the grounds upon which injunction against the school district was sought were also abandoned on circuit. The point presented for the decision of the court is thus stated by appellants' attorneys in their argument: "The complaint contained several allegations and matters which were not insisted upon before the trial judge, and the relief was sought before him only upon one ground, to wit, that the Winthrop trustees were without funds with which to purchase the property when they made the offer of $20,000 therefor; and that, in consequence, the contract, or agreement, between them and the district trustees was void and not enforceable for want of mutuality."

After the case had been argued on circuit, but during the term and before the decision was filed, an order was submitted to the court by the attorneys for the college, upon which the consent of the attorneys for the school district was indorsed, allowing the college to amend its answer, by alleging its readiness to pay the purchase price of the property, and praying that, upon its doing so, the trustees of the school district be required to execute and deliver to the trustees of the college a proper conveyance thereof. Notice of the presentation of this order was given attorneys for plaintiffs, and it was granted over their objection, on the ground that it was consented to by the parties directly interested, and none of the other parties to the action could be prejudiced thereby. In the prayer of the original answer, the college had asked that the trustees of the school district be required to specifically perform their agreement; and in the prayer of the original answers of the majority of the trustees of the school district and of the school district, as a corporation, the court was asked to compel specific performance of the agreement by the college. The circuit court found that there was no evidence that the college was not able to pay for the property, without using the funds appropriated specifically for the erection and equipment of the school building, and that there was no evidence of any intention on the part of the trustees of the college to misapply any of the funds of the college, and dismissed the complaint for injunction; and decreed that, upon payment by the college of the purchase price of the property, the school district execute and deliver to the trustees of the college a proper conveyance thereof. The court further decreed that the trustees of the college should not use any of the money appropriated by the Legislature, or any of the amount raised as a condition of obtaining that appropriation in paying for the property.

The grounds of appeal present the following questions: (1) Was the college prohibited by statute from making the contract? (2) If not, was the contract void for want of consideration, and, therefore, for want of mutuality, because the college did not have in hand, at the time it was made, funds sufficient to pay for the property; and, if so, could the plaintiffs take advantage of it, and have the contract annulled, even though the college was, at the time of the hearing on circuit, able and willing to buy and pay for the property without using any funds in which the plaintiffs, as citizens and taxpayers, were interested? (3) Were the plaintiffs prejudiced by the amendment allowed and the decreeing of specific performance between the contracting parties? (4) Can plaintiffs now, on this appeal, raise the point, for the first time, that it does not appear that the consent of the county board of education had been given to the sale of the property by the district trustees, as required by the provisions of section 1213 of the Code of 1902?

Among the powers conferred on the trustees of the college by the act of incorporation, it is provided (section 1288, Code 1902) that they shall have "the right * * * to contract and be contracted with, and may own, purchase, sell and convey property, both real, personal and mixed, and are authorized and empowered to receive and hold donations, devises, bequests and legacies for the use and benefit of said institution: Provided, that all property purchased under the authority of this article shall be free from liens and incumbrances, and title to the same as well as to any donations that said board may receive shall be taken in the name of the trustees in their corporate capacity and shall become the property of the state of South Carolina. * * * They shall possess all the power necessary for the accomplishment of the trust committed to them, viz., the establishment, conduct and maintenance of a first-class institution for the thorough education of the white girls of South Carolina, the main object of which shall be (1) to give to young women such education as shall fit them for teaching; (2) to give instruction to young women in (numerous branches of education specified). Said trustees shall have authority to add, from time to time, such special features to the institution, and to open such new departments of training and instruction therein as the progress of the times may require."

It seems clear that the powers conferred by the parts of the act of incorporation above quoted are ample to sustain the making of the contract in question. In fact, we do not understand appellants to deny, but, on the contrary, to admit that the college had power and authority to make the contract in question, under the terms of its original charter. But they contend that the powers therein granted have been abridged or taken away by subsequent acts of the Legislature, which repealed, by implication, the above-quoted provisions of the charter, at least to the extent of denying to the college the power of making the contract in question. The acts relied upon by appellants as effecting this result are, first, "An act to provide for the economical completion of Winthrop Normal and Industrial College of South Carolina, now in process of erection at Rock Hill, and to appropriate money for the same," 21 Stat. at Large, p. 869; and, second, the supply bill of 1896 (22 Stat. at Large, p. 285). The first of said acts had reference to the completion of the main college building, and certain other buildings, which were then in process of construction. It provided that the labor of convicts should be furnished by the superintendent of the penitentiary, appropriated $20,000 for the purchase of material and payment for additional labor, and provided that said sum should not be available or drawn from the treasury, until the board of trustees had satisfied the State Treasurer that the buildings could be completed and made ready for occupation by the expenditure of that amount. In the same act, another appropriation was made for the payment of "outstanding liabilities, contracts already made, as set forth in the report of the board of trustees." The last section of the act appropriated a certain amount for the purchase of machinery for the laundry, and the furnishings for the main building, the kitchen, dining room, and dormitories, and provided that the said amount should be spent for said purposes and no other. The last sentence of the section reading: "That the board of trustees are hereby prohibited from incurring any obligations without consent of the General Assembly beyond those herein contemplated."

In the supply bill for 1896 (22 Stat. at Large, p. 265) after an appropriation for "running expenses, equipment and permanent improvements," another is made "for the payment of back indebtedness and existing liabilities" with this proviso: "That no new contracts or new liabilities in excess of the amounts herein appropriated shall be made or incurred, either directly or indirectly, in behalf of said college."

A consideration of these acts in all of their purposes and provisions shows clearly that the intention of the Legislature in the first of said acts was merely to limit the board of trustees in their contracts and expenditures in completing and furnishing the buildings then in process of construction to the amounts therein appropriated; and in the second, to limit their contracts and expenditures to the appropriations therein made for the purposes therein specified. No intention to limit or take away any of the general powers conferred upon the board by the charter is expressed, and none can be implied from the language used. On the other hand, the construction contended for by plaintiffs would long since have completely stopped the operations of the college. The fact that, since the adoption of the acts above referred to, the original charter of the college has been re-enacted in the Code of 1902 without change, shows, beyond controversy, that there was no intention on the part of the Legislature by said acts to annul or abridge any of the powers therein granted. When these acts are read in the light of the circumstances therein mentioned, there is no repugnancy whatever between them and the original charter of the college and therefore no room for the application of the doctrine of repeal by implication.

But, as the trustees of the college are public officers (Sanders v. Belue, 78 S. C. 171, 58 S. E. 762), the general power conferred upon them by the charter to contract is limited by the provisions of section 606 of the Civil Code of 1902, which reads: "It shall be unlawful for any public officer state or county, authorized by law to so contract, to enter into or (any?) contract, for any purpose whatsoever, in a sum in excess of the tax levied, or the amount appropriated for the accomplishment of such purpose." The manifest intention of that section was to protect the state and counties against either legal or moral obligations incurred by state or county officials in excess of the taxes levied, or the amounts appropriated for the purposes specified by the levy or appropriation.

It does not follow however, that the college had no power to make the contract in question. Because, under the general power, the trustees could make a valid contract to apply to any particular purpose funds in their hands, or funds which they expected to receive from donations or bequests, and the courts should compel the performance of such contracts, provided such use of the funds would be within the terms of the appropriation, donation or bequest. The contract contemplated performance on condition that donations which could be applied to the payment of the purchase money should come into the hands of the trustees. The court decreed performance on that condition.

We do not see what right the plaintiffs have to complain of the alleged want of mutuality in the contract. That is a matter of which only the other party to the contract, and the state, from which the trustees derive their powers, may complain. To be sure, the plaintiffs, as citizens and taxpayers, had the right to prevent any misappropriation of the funds of the college. But the referee and the circuit court have found, and we concur in that finding, that there was no evidence of intention on the part of the trustees to misapply any funds of the college. They have been forbidden by the circuit decree from doing so. This is all the plaintiffs had the right to ask. Even if the contract was wanting in mutuality because the college did not have funds with which to pay for the property at the time of the purchase, and even if the school district could have successfully resisted performance of the contract on that ground, it does not follow that it could not waive that defense and voluntarily complete the contract. That is what it virtually asked to do in the prayer of its answer, and by consenting to the amendment of the answer of the college. We cannot see that any rights of the plaintiffs have been prejudiced by the amendment. It does not matter that neither of the contracting parties excepted to the report of the referee, recommending that the complaint be dismissed. By their consent, a decree for specific performance has been made, and it stands as their contract.

As to the last ground, it is too well settled to require citation of the cases that this court will not consider any point which was not presented to and considered by the circuit court, unless it involves the jurisdiction of the court.

1. TRIAL (§ 194*)—INSTRUCTIONS—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

The requests to charge, in effect, instructed the jury that certain acts and conduct on the part of the plaintiff would constitute negligence and prevent a recovery by him, and were therefore properly refused.

2. TRIAL (§ 295*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

Although a particular portion of the charge of the court excepted to, when considered by itself, may not have stated the rule of relative or contributory negligence with clearness and precision, yet as the general charge correctly instructed the jury on this subject, and the part to which exception was taken, when considered in connection with the whole, was not calculated to mislead the jury or to injure the excepting party, no cause for a new trial existed in consequence of the instruction alleged to be erroneous.

MOSLEY v. FEARS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 474*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

Where a question of testamentary capacity was involved, it was not error to allow a witness to testify as follows: "I knew [the testator]. I was present the night he made his will. I formed an opinion as to the condition of his mind. I based that opinion on what he did and what he said; in my opinion he was of sound mind. I considered him of sound mind from what he said and the way he acted"—the objection being that the witness was not shown to be an expert, and that he did not sufficiently state the facts on which he based his opinion by testifying to what the testator said and how he acted. don v. State, 111 Ga. 178, 33 S. E. 634 (2); Proctor v. Pointer, 127 Ga. 134, 56 S. E. 111. [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 474.*]

2. WILLS (§§ 53, 164*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 204*)—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW—PROCEEDING FOR PROBATE—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Where a will was propounded for probate in solemn form, and a caveat was interposed thereto, under which it was sought to show that the testator did not have testamentary capacity, and that the will was procured by undue influence on the part of his second wife, resulting in cutting off, without any bequest, his children by a former marriage, it was competent to show that the testator recited in his will that he had settled with all his children by his former marriage and held their receipts, except that of a daughter, as to whom he made a certain provision, and to introduce the receipts given to the testator by such children.

(a) A ground of objection to the admission in evidence of one of the receipts, not made or passed upon in the trial court, cannot be raised here for the first time.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. et al. v. HAMES. (Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1910.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§§ 1, 17*)—ESTABLISHMENT—PRESCRIPTION.

A road may become a public road by prescription. Evidence that the public had used the road continuously for 20 years, and that the proper county authorities during that time have recognized it as a public road by having the same worked, will be sufficient to authorize an inference that such road is a public road.

(a) In determining whether a road used by the public for the period of 20 years has been accepted by the authorities of the county, evidence that a public road overseer had caused it to be worked, and that, after complaint of a citizen to the ordinary of the county to take charge of the road, it had been worked by the road hands, is relevant and admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. §§ 1, 17.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 346*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—PRESUMPTION AGAINST COMPANY—APPLICATION OF STATUTE.

Civ. Code 1895, § 2321, which provides that a railroad company shall be liable for any damage done to persons by the running of the cars, unless the company shall make it appear that their agents have exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, the presumption in all cases being against the company, has no application to a servant of the company, who is sued with the company as a joint tort-feasor. Where the engineer is jointly sued with the railroad company, it is error to charge that upon proof that the plaintiff has sustained his allegations that he was injured by the running of the cars of the railroad company, then the law would raise a presumption against the company and the defendant engineer that they were negligent, and that the burden would be upon them to show either that they were not negligent, or that the plaintiff by the exercise of ordinary care could have avoided the consequences to himself of their negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 324*)—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS—CARE REQUIRED IN APPROACHING RAILROADS.

A traveler upon a public highway, in approaching a railroad crossing, is bound to exercise ordinary care and diligence for his own safety; yet, though he may not observe that amount of care and diligence which would be exercised under like circumstances by an ordinarily prudent person, he is not necessarily precluded from recovering for injuries to his person, received on the crossing, if, after it is apparent that the engineer of the company is disobeying the provisions of section 2222 of the Civil Code of 1895, he then exercises ordinary care and diligence in endeavoring to escape the consequences of the company's negligence.

4. RAILROADS (§ 313*)—NEGLECTANCE PER SE—VIOLATION OF PENAL STATUTE.

Civ. Code 1895, § 2224, denounces the failure of the engineer to comply with the blow-post law to be a misdemeanor. The violation of a penal statute proximately causing an injury is negligence per se, and the court may so instruct the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1002, 1004, 1005; Dec. Dig. § 313.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 347*)—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS—EVIDENCE.

It not being alleged that the community where the injury happened was populous, and there being no allegation of negligence as to the running of the train through a thickly populated community, testimony that the engineer had knowledge that the place where the plaintiff was injured was in a populous community is irrelevant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 347.*]

6. CHARGES NOT ERRONEOUS.

The other charges complained of were not open to the criticisms made against them.

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Action by J. S. Hames against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

Tye, Peeples & Jordan, J. G. Roberts, and D. W. Blair, for plaintiffs in error. Clay & Morris, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. 1. J. S. Hames obtained a verdict against the Louisville & Nashville

Railroad Company and J. L. Latimer, its engineer, because of certain injuries sustained by the plaintiff in the running of the cars of the defendant company. It was alleged that the plaintiff, while walking upon a public road, in the exercise of due care, was struck by a passenger train of the company as he was about to cross the railroad track, and suffered certain injuries. The collision is alleged to have resulted from the failure of the engineer when he reached a distance of 400 yards, to blow the whistle of the locomotive and check the speed of the train as it approached the public crossing, and because the cars were running at the high and dangerous speed of 40 miles per hour in approaching and passing over the crossing. The scene of the collision was a place where the railroad traversed a road which connected the Bell's Ferry and the Cassville public roads; and it was contended by the plaintiff that this cross-road was a public road. In support of such contention the court allowed him to introduce evidence tending to show that the Bell's Ferry road was a public road. This evidence was offered as preliminary to the proof that the same road hands which repaired the Bell's Ferry road also worked the cross-road. He was also allowed to introduce evidence that the road was open and in use at the time of the construction of the railroad, and that the railroad company built the bridge leading to the crossing; and also that a witness who resided on the road complained to the ordinary, in 1867, of the condition of the road, and that, after such complaint was made, certain hands of the county worked the road. This evidence was admissible. Civ. Code 1895, § 2222 et seq., which requires railroad companies to erect blow posts 400 yards from any public crossing, and for the engineer to blow the whistle and check the train as he approaches such crossing, is applicable not only to roads that have been laid out by legislative act or by order of the proper county authorities or by dedication, but also to roads which have become public roads by prescription. Southern Ry. Co. v. Combs, 124 Ga. 1004, 63 S. E. 508. Twenty years' use by the public is insufficient to establish the public character of a road, unless some act is shown to have been done by the proper authorities of the county, indicating its recognition as a public road. McCoy v. Central Ry. Co., 131 Ga. 378, 62 S. E. 297; Penick v. County of Morgan, 131 Ga. 385, 62 S. E. 300. This testimony tended to show that the public authorities had recognized the road by having the same worked by the road hands.

2. The negligence charged against the defendant was a failure to observe the blow-post law, and running the cars, in approaching and passing over the crossing, at a high and dangerous rate of speed. After charging that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of evidence that he was injured as described in the declaration; that the road upon which he was traveling at the time he was injured was a public road; that the defendants failed to observe the blow-post statute; that the engine and train run over the crossing at a high and dangerous rate of speed of about 50 miles per hour—the court instructed the jury as follows: "In this connection, the law is that if the plaintiff has sustained his allegations that he was injured by the running of the cars or train of the defendant company, then the law would raise a presumption against the defendant company, and against the defendant J. L. Latimer, that they were negligent, and the burden would be upon the defendants to show either that they were not negligent in so far as the particulars charged against them are concerned, or else that the plaintiff by the exercise of ordinary care on his part could have avoided the consequences to himself of the defendant's negligence, if that appears." Proof of the allegation that the plaintiff was without fault and was injured by the conduct of the engineer in running the train over the crossing at a high and dangerous rate of speed, even though the crossing may not have been a public road crossing, might make a case against the railroad company, by force of Civ. Code, § 2321, which raises a presumption of negligence against the railroad company upon such proof. But this section is not applicable to a servant of the company. Southern Ry. Co. v. Cash, 131 Ga. 537, 62 S. E. 823. It was therefore error to instruct the jury in the language of the excerpt to which exception is taken.

3. After charging the jury that the law requires of the plaintiff the exercise of ordinary care to protect himself against the consequences of any negligence that may have existed on the part of the defendant, otherwise he would not be entitled to recover, the court charged as follows: "Now, this rule means that he is not required to exercise ordinary care to protect himself against any negligence of the defendants until such negligence arises, or is impending over himself; such negligence as a reasonable man in the situation he was placed ought to have apprehended." This excerpt from the charge does not accurately state the rule of law, but, when considered in connection with its context, would not require a new trial. The court charged the jury that he was bound to exercise ordinary care in approaching the track, and if he failed to exercise this care he could not recover; and with respect to the phase of the case as to whether or not the plaintiff, after reaching and just before going on the track, exercised the proper care, the court gave the charge complained of, which, when considered in connection with its context, in effect states the principle enunciated in the case of Comer v. Bartsfield, 102 Ga. 485, 31 S. E. 89, that though a traveler upon a public highway, in approaching a railroad crossing, is bound to exercise ordinary care for his protection, yet, although, he may not have observed that amount of care and diligence which would be exercised under like circumstances by an ordinarily prudent person, he is not necessarily precluded from recovering for injuries to his person, received on the crossing if, after it is apparent that the engineer of the company is disobeying the provisions of section 2222 of the Civil Code, he then exercises ordinary care and diligence in endeavoring to escape the consequences of the company's negligence.

4. The rulings announced in headnotes 4 and 5 do not require discussion. Other than as indicated, there was no error in the charges complained of.

1. CARRIERS (§ 37*)—REGULATION—RULE OF RAILROAD COMMISSION—CONSTRUCTION.

Storage rule No. 9, of the Railroad Commission of Georgia, adopted under authority of the act of 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 120), reads as follows: "Railroad companies are required to furnish cars promptly upon request therefor. When a shipper files with a railroad company written application for a car or cars, stating therein the character of freight to be shipped, and its destination, such railroad company shall furnish same within four days (Sundays and legal holidays excepted) from seven o'clock a. m. of the day following the receipt of such application. For a violation of this rule the railroad company at fault shall, within thirty days after demand in writing is made therefor, pay to the shipper so offended the sum of one dollar per car per day, or fraction of a day, after expiration of free time, during which such violation continues." Held, that such rule applies where cars are intended to be used for intrastate shipments, and also where it is intended that cars are to be used for the shipment of freight from a point in this state to a destination in another state.

2. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—FAILURE TO FURNISH CARS—ACTION FOR FORFEITURE.

Prior to the repeal of the third section of the act of 1905 by Laws 1907, p. 78, § 11, a shipper filed with the Railroad Commission a complaint, setting forth a violation of rule 9, above quoted, and giving the details of such violation by a named railroad company. Thereupon the secretary of the Commission addressed a letter to the manager of the railroad company, who handled claims and demurrage complaints, inclosing a copy of the complaint, and adding, "You will please show cause at the earliest practical time, if any you had [can?], why this claim should not be paid." The manager replied, acknowledging the receipt of the letter, and setting up that he had investigated the complaint, and that his investigation had developed that all orders for cars were promptly filled, that no discrimination was practiced in the distribution of cars, that shippers were furnished all cars that the railroad company had for loading, that he understood that suit had been brought on the claim, and that he did not suppose that it was worth while for him to undertake to answer the complaint in detail. Held, that this gave the Railroad Commission sufficient jurisdiction to authorize that body, on the next day after the receipt of the reply from the railroad manager, without further hearing, to pass an order declaring that the Commission was of the opinion "that sufficient cause had not been shown to relieve said railroad company of the penalty claimed," and thus to leave the complainant free to bring suit against the railroad company under the act of the Legislature and the rule of the Commission.

3. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—FAILURE TO FURNISH CARS—RIGHT OF ACTION FOR FORFEITURE.

Under the third section of the act of August 23, 1905 (prior to its repeal, August 23, 1907 [Acts 1907, p. 78, § 11]), a decision of the Railroad Commission that a railroad company had not shown sufficient cause to relieve itself from liability did not conclude the company as to the question of such liability, upon a suit by the complaining shipper for the amount claimed by him against the company for a failure to furnish cars on written demand within four days, as provided by the rule of the Commission.

4. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—REGULATION—RULES OF RAILROAD COMMISSION—REASONABLENESS.

Storage rule No. 9, of the Railroad Commission of this state, quoted in the first headnote, properly construed in the light of the act of the Legislature authorizing its adoption, is a reasonable rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 181*)—CONSTRUCTION—PRESUMPTIONS—INTENT OF LEGISLATURE.

In the construction of a statute the courts will not generally attribute to the Legislature the intention to punish the failure to do an impossible thing, if another construction can legitimately be given to the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 259, 263; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—FAILURE TO FURNISH CARS—ACTION FOR PENALTY—DEFENSES.

In a suit brought by a shipper against a railroad company for the amount specified in the rule of the Railroad Commission to be paid to him for failure by the company to furnish cars upon demand, if the carrier shows the existence of conditions for which it is not responsible, preventing the discharge of the duty, it will not be held liable.

(a) Questions of admissibility of certain evidence and of the sufficiency of certain particular defenses determined.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

7. CARRIERS (§ 10*)—REGULATIONS—RULES OF RAILROAD COMMISSION—REASONABLENESS—QUESTION OF LAW.

The reasonableness of a rule of the Railroad Commission is a question of law for the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

8. CARRIERS (§ 40*)—DUTY TO FURNISH CARS.

It is the duty of a railroad company to provide cars sufficient to transport goods offered in the usual and ordinary course of business, but it is not bound to anticipate and prepare for an exceptional and extraordinary press of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 120-122; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

9. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—DUTY TO FURNISH CARS—ACTION FOR PENALTY—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for a penalty for failure to furnish cars for freight tendered, mere proof that the railroad did not have sufficient cars to comply with the demands made upon its services when cars were ordered from it, would be no defense, but if it had complied with its duty to furnish facilities for the transportation of goods, in the ordinary conduct of its business, it would be relevant to prove that at the time of the demand, the general movement of freight through the country traversed by the company's lines, was unusually large and more than was normally to have been expected, and that therefore it could not comply with the demand for cars.

10. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—DUTY TO FURNISH CARS—ACTION FOR PENALTY—EVIDENCE.

Mere proof that there is a strike on a railroad is no defense to an action for failure to furnish cars on demand, since strikes may include only an insignificant number of employes or those engaged in some department in no substantial way interfering with the furnishing of cars or upon the happening of a strike, the company may without sufficient effort, fail to conduct its business, but if a strike is of such magnitude and character as to render the company unable, by the use of proper effort, to furnish cars on demand, it will be a good defense to a suit under Railroad Commission Storage Rule No. 9, prescribing a penalty for failure of a railroad company to furnish cars after written application therefor.

11. CARRIERS (§ 13*)—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—DISCRIMINATION IN FURNISHING CARS.

Where there is a press of business, perishable goods, or goods the inherent character of which is such as to render them peculiarly liable to serious injury from delay, have been considered of such exceptional character as to authorize a reasonable preference, as to expedition in hauling them, over freight not of such a character, in absence of express statutory regulations on the subject, but such rule cannot be invoked as a cloak for making illegal discriminations for one shipper or class of shippers as against another without real ground for its application.

Action by the Atlanta Sand & Supply Company against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brought error to the Court of Civil Appeals, which certified the case to the Supreme Court. Questions answered.

The Court of Appeals certified to the Supreme Court the following questions:

(1) Does storage rule 9 of the Railroad Commission of Georgia, adopted under authority of the act of 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 120), commonly known as the "Steed act," apply to cars intended to be used for the shipment of freight from a point in this state to a destination in another state; i. e., is the rule applicable to interstate transactions? Said rule is as follows: "Railroad companies are required to furnish cars promptly upon request therefor. When a shipper files with a railroad company written application for a car or cars, stating therein the character of freight to be shipped, and its destination, such railroad company shall furnish same within four days (Sundays and legal holidays excepted) from seven o'clock a. m. of the day following the receipt of such application. For a violation of this rule the railroad company at fault shall, within thirty days after demand in writing is made therefor, pay to the shipper so offended the sum of one dollar per car per day, or fraction of a day, after expiration of free time, during which such violation continues."

(2) Where, prior to August 23, 1907 (the date on which section 3 of the Steed act was repealed [Laws 1907, p. 78, § 11]), the shipper filed with the Railroad Commission a complaint setting forth a violation of the said rule 9 referred to in the preceding question, and giving the details of the violation by a named railroad company, was it necessary for the Railroad Commission to cause formal notice to be served upon the railroad company, requiring it to show cause on a named day, before any lawful order could be passed by the Railroad Commission upon the complaint? Was a letter addressed by the secretary of the Railroad Commission to the manager of the railroad company, who handled freight claims and demurrage complaints, enclosing him a copy of the papers filed by the complainant, and adding, "You will please show cause at the earliest practical time, if any you had, why this claim should not be paid," a sufficient notice under said act? If not, did a letter written by this manager to the secretary of the Railroad Commission, acknowledging receipt of the letter just referred to and setting up that he had investigated the complaint, and that his investigation had developed that all orders for cars were promptly filled; that no discrimination was practiced in the distribution of cars; that shippers were furnished all the cars which the railroad company had for loading; that he understood that the suit had been brought on the claim; and that he did not suppose that it was worth while for him to undertake to answer the complaint in detail—operate as a waiver of further notice? Did the foregoing correspondence give the Railroad Commission jurisdiction of the defendant, so as to authorize the Commission on the next day after the receipt of the letter last mentioned, without further hearing, to render a judgment "that sufficient cause had not been shown to relieve said company of the penalty claimed?"

(3) Prior to August 23, 1907, did a judgment or decision of the Railroad Commission (under section 3 of the act approved August 23, 1905, commonly known as the Steed act) that a railroad company, complained of as having violated said rule 9 of the Railroad Commission, had not shown sufficient cause to relieve itself of liability, conclude the parties, and especially the railroad company, as to the question of the company's liability to the complainant for the amount of demurrage claimed by the complainant and allowed by the Railroad Commission?

(4) Is said rule 9 of the Railroad Commission quoted above, a reasonable rule?

(5) In a suit by one who claims to have been damaged by reason of a railroad company's failing to furnish him cars as required by said rule 9, quoted above, and whose claim was presented to the Railroad Commission under the third section of the Steed act cited above, and was allowed by the Commission after a hearing prior to August 23, 1907, is it permissible for the defendant to show by testimony that the rule operated unreasonably as against the railroad company in the particular transaction in controversy? Can the railroad company show, in defense to the suit, that it did not own sufficient cars to comply with the demands made upon its service at the time when the plaintiff ordered the cars of it? Is it relevant to prove that at that time the general movement of freight throughout the country traversed by the defendant's lines of railroads was unusually large and more than was normally to have been anticipated, and that therefore the defendant could not comply with the plaintiff's demand for cars? Is it permissible in such a case for the defendant company to show that at the time when the plaintiff was demanding the cars in controversy its operatives were "on a strike," and that for that reason it was not able to comply with the plaintiff's demand? Would it be a sufficient defense to an action of the nature indicated for the defendant to show that it distributed its cars fairly and proportionately to its patrons throughout the several divisions of its railroad lines, and that it did not have and could not have gotten enough cars to fulfill all demands upon it? If the foregoing question is answered in the affirmative, how would the question be affected if it appeared that in the distribution of the cars the defendant company had given preference to the traffic paying the highest rate of freight; how far by the fact that it gave preference in the furnishing of cars for the hauling of those classes of commodities which were of greatest value or which would have been damaged the most if delayed?

LUMPKIN, J. 1. The Constitution of the United States (article 1, § 8, par. 3) declares that Congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." In the English language few clauses can be found which have had a more far-reaching effect than that comprised in the seven words, "to regulate commerce * * * among the several states." If these words have a rival, it is to be found in those other four words in the fourteenth amendment of the same Constitution, "due process of law." On the first-quoted clause has been built up a vast structure of legislation and litigation, the appearance of which may, with some degree of aptness, be compared to a gigantic, inverted pyramid, with its apex resting on the brief clause mentioned, and its body stretching away into legal space—its limits or base being yet undefined. First was involved commerce in the sense of traffic between the states; then followed questions as to instrumentalities for carrying on commerce; then regulations in regard to certain things being prepared or manufactured to be put into interstate commerce; then as to other matters and legal relations and liabilities. At each step the police power of the individual states has been contested, and litigants have claimed that it was in part annulled or curtailed either by the Constitution or the act of Congress. We are not contesting the doctrine, which has been declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, that under the federal Constitution Congress has plenary power to enact laws on the subject of interstate commerce, and that state laws must yield to those of Congress within the realm of its power on that subject. But it must not be forgotten that the powers of the federal government are delegated, while those of the individual states are inherent; that the police power of the states has been well compared to the right of self-protection; and that a state without police power would be a state paralyzed. In determining, therefore, how far its inherent police power on a subject of great importance to its citizens has been superseded, destroyed, or withdrawn under the delegated powers of the federal government—either by the language of the Constitution itself or by the acts of Congress under it—the far-reaching effect upon the state's power to protect its citizens and those within its borders is not to be lightly overlooked. At least, the conflict between the law of the state and the Constitution of the United States, or acts of Congress passed in pursuance of it, ought to be clear, before the former is nullified. Armour & Co. v. City Council of Augusta, 134 Ga. 178, 67 S. E. 417. It must also be borne in mind that where it has been held that the Constitution of the United States, proprio vigore, excluded legislation on the part of the state, it was in cases where it was declared that the subject was one essentially "national" in character; and that in many other cases state legislation has been upheld unless superseded by federal legislation, although affecting in some measure interstate commerce or its instrumentalities, or corporations engaged in it. We have dealt with rule 9 of the Railroad Commission as applicable to intrastate shipments, in Southern Railway Co. v. Melton, 133 Ga. 277, 65 S. E. 665. The first question in the present case inquires as to its application to cars intended for use in interstate shipments.

In Louisville & Nashville R. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 702, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849, a provision of a state Constitution prohibiting consolidation by common carriers was involved. It was held to be a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. In dealing with the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States as affecting the subject in hand, Mr. Justice Brown, on behalf of the court, said: "It has never been supposed that the dominant power of Congress over interstate commerce took from the states the power of legislation with respect to the instruments of such commerce, so far as the legislation was within its ordinary police powers." In Lake Shore & Mich. South. Ry. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 43 L. Ed. 702, the Supreme Court had under consideration a statute of Ohio which required that each railroad company should cause three of its regular daily trains carrying passengers to stop at a station, city, or village containing over 3,000 inhabitants. Mr. Justice Harlan filed an elaborate and able opinion citing and discussing numerous authorities. He said (at page 297 of 173 U. S., at page 470 of 19 Sup. Ct. [43 L. Ed. 702]): "But in our opinion the power, whether called police, governmental, or legislative, exists in each state, by appropriate enactments not forbidden by its own Constitution or by the Constitution of the United States, to regulate the relative rights and duties of all persons and corporations within its jurisdiction, and therefore to provide for the public convenience and the public good. This power in the states is entirely distinct from any power granted to the general government, although when exercised it may sometimes reach subjects over which national legislation can be constitutionally extended." Again he said (at page 303 of 173 U. S., at page 472 of 19 Sup. Ct. [43 L. Ed. 702]): "We perceive in the legislation of Ohio no basis for the contention that the state has invaded the domain of national authority or impaired any right secured by the national Constitution. * * * It has not unreasonably obstructed the freedom of commerce among the states. Its regulations apply equally to domestic and interstate railroads. Its statute is not directed against interstate commerce, but only incidentally affects it." In Atlantic Coast Line v. Wharton, 207 U. S. 328, 334, 28 Sup. Ct. 121, 52 L. Ed. 230, the ruling in the case last mentioned was recognized as sound; but it was held that the order of the state Railroad Commission then being considered directly and unreasonably burdened interstate commerce. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 16 Sup. Ct. 934, 40 L. Ed. 1106, the question was whether a state statute requiring telegraph companies with lines of wires wholly or partly within the state to receive telegrams and on payment of the charges thereon to deliver them with due diligence, was a regulation of interstate commerce when applied to interstate telegrams. It was held that such an enactment did not in any just sense regulate interstate commerce. It was said: "While it is vitally important that commerce between the states should be unembarrassed by vexatious state regulations regarding it, yet, on the other hand, there are many occasions where the police power of the state can be properly exercised to insure a faithful and prompt performance of duty within the limits of the state upon the part of those who are engaged in interstate commerce. We think the statute in question is one of that class, and, in the absence of any legislation by Congress, the statute is a valid exercise of the power of the state over the subject." We need not discuss subsequent congressional enactments in regard to telegraph companies. The principle remains the same, whether state legislation in the particular instance has been superseded by congressional legislation or not. In County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238, an act of the state of Alabama, entitled "An act to provide for the improvement of the river, bay, and harbor of Mobile" (Laws 1866-67, p. 507), was held not to be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Justice Field said (at page 702 of 102 U. S. [26 L. Ed. 238]): "Perhaps some of the divergence of views upon this question among former judges may have arisen from not always bearing in mind the distinction between commerce as strictly defined, and its local aids or instruments, or measures taken for its improvement." So state laws regulating pilots have been declared to be valid. Cooley v. Board of Wardens, etc., 12 How. 319, 13 L. Ed. 906. So, also, certain state laws in reference to bridges over navigable streams have been upheld. Wilson v. Blackbird Creek Marsh Co., 2 Pet. 245, 252, 7 L. Ed. 412; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. 713, 18 L. Ed. 96. Other instances might be mentioned, some of which will be found referred to in the cases above cited. It will thus appear that it is a mistaken conception to suppose that whenever a railroad engages in interstate shipments, the Constitution of the United States by its own force in all respects inhibits the police power of the state from dealing with such railroad. As to matters relating to interstate commerce which essentially and exclusively appertain to the federal government the power of the states to directly regulate them may be inhibited; but there is a large class of subjects which may be dealt with under the police power of the individual states, although its exercise may touch instrumentalities of interstate commerce, and indirectly to some extent affect such commerce. No catalogue can be made setting forth exactly what falls within the one class or the other. But the fact that a distinction between the two exists is well established.

In regard to the subject of statutes or rules of Railroad or Corporation Commissions of states, requiring the furnishing of cars, and providing for a penalty or amount which may be recovered for failure to so furnish them in accordance with the requirements made, and the application of such enactments or rules to cases where cars are desired for use in interstate shipments, the decisions are not many, but they vary widely in the views which they express. They may be grouped about the case of Houston & Texas Central Railroad Co. v. Mayes, 201 U. S. 321, 26 Sup. Ct. 491, 50 L. Ed. 772. A statute of the state of Texas provided, that, upon written application, it should be the duty of a railroad company to supply the number of cars required, at the point indicated in the application, within a reasonable time thereafter, not to exceed six days from the receipt of such application; and that if the railroad company should fail to furnish such cars, it should forfeit to the party so applying the sum of "twenty-five dollars per day for each car failed to be furnished," and all actual damages sustained, provided "that the provisions of this law shall not apply in cases of strikes or other public calamity." Other provisions of the act are immaterial here. The Court of Civil Appeals of Texas held that this law was a proper exercise of the police power of the state as applied to interstate shipments, and was valid. Houston & Texas Central R. Co. v. Mayes, 86 Tex. Civ. App. 606, 83 S. W. 53. An application for a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the state was overruled, and the case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States. There it was held (201 U. S. 321, 26 Sup. Ct. 491, 50 L. Ed. 772, supra) that "An absolute requirement that a railroad engaged in interstate commerce shall furnish a certain number of cars on a specified day, to transport merchandise to another state, regardless of every other consideration except strikes and other public calamities, transcends the police power of the states and amounts to a burden upon interstate commerce. * * * Such a regulation cannot be sustained as to interstate commerce shipments as an exercise of the police power of the state." In the opinion, after referring to the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, it was said (at page 328 of 201 U. S., at page 492 of 26 Sup. Ct. [50 L. Ed. 772]): "That, notwithstanding the exclusive nature of this power, the states may, in the exercise of their police power, make reasonable rules with regard to the methods of carrying on interstate business, the precautions that shall be used to avoid danger, the facilities for the comfort of passengers and the safety of freight carried, and, to a certain extent, the stations at which stoppages shall be made, is settled by repeated decisions of this court. Of course, such rules are inoperative if conflicting with regulations upon the same subject enacted by Congress, and can be supported only when consistent with the general requirement that interstate commerce shall be free and unobstructed, and not amounting to a regulation of such commerce. As the power to build and operate railways, and to acquire land by condemnation, usually rests upon state authority, the Legislatures may annex such conditions as they please with regard to intrastate transportation and such other rules regarding interstate commerce as are not inconsistent with the general right of such commerce to be free and unobstructed." Again it was said, referring to the Texas statute (at page 329 of 201 U. S., at page 493 of 26 Sup. Ct. [50 L. Ed. 772]): "It makes no exception in cases of a sudden congestion of traffic, and actual inability to furnish cars by reason of their temporary and unavoidable detention in other states, or in other places within the same state. It makes no allowance for interference of traffic occasioned by wrecks or other accidents upon the same or other roads, involving a detention of traffic, the breaking of bridges, accidental fires, wash-outs or other unavoidable consequences of heavy weather. The dereliction of a road in this particular, which may have occurred from circumstances wholly beyond the control of its officers, is made punishable not only by damages actually incurred by the shipper in the detention of his stock, but in addition thereto by an arbitrary penalty of $25 per car for each day of detention." Finally it was said (at page 331 of 201 U. S., at page 494 of 26 Sup. Ct. [50 L. Ed. 772]): "While railroad companies may be bound to furnish sufficient cars for their usual and ordinary traffic, cases will inevitably arise where by reason of an unexpected turn in the market, a great public gathering, or an unforeseen rush of travel, a pressure upon the road for transportation facilities may arise, which good management and a desire to fulfill all its legal requirements cannot provide for, and against which the statute in question makes no allowance. Although it may be admitted that the statute is not far from the line of proper police regulation, we think that sufficient allowance is not made for the practical difficulties in the administration of the law, and that, as applied to interstate commerce, it transcends the legitimate powers of the Legislature." The Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Harlan, and Mr. Justice McKenna dissented, evidently believing that the statute was valid. Mr. Justice White did not take part in the decision.

In St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. State,

85 Ark. 311, 107 S. W. 1180, 122 Am. St. Rep. 33, certain sections of the digest of that state and an order of the Railroad Commission were under consideration. By the statutes of that state carriers were required to "receive, load, unload, transport, store, and deliver to the consignee thereof all property tendered for shipment," and to furnish cars for shipments; and a violation of these requirements was declared to furnish a cause of action in favor of the shipper. Power was conferred upon the Commission to make rules on the subject. They made a rule providing that, upon application by the shipper, giving not less than five days' notice, cars should be furnished. The Supreme Court of Arkansas held that the statutes were valid as applied to interstate shipments, and that the defense set up to an action to recover the penalty was insufficient. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States where it was decided April 4, 1910 (217 U. S. 136, 30 Sup. Ct. 476, 54 L. Ed. —). After an analysis of the decision of the Supreme Court of Arkansas, and of its effect in excluding the defense offered in relation to interstate shipments, Mr. Justice White declared that, as thus construed, the law of that state excluded a certain defense, and operated to unlawfully burden interstate commerce. He said: "Coming to the merits, we think it needs but statement to demonstrate that the ruling of the court below involved necessarily the assertion of power in the state to absolutely forbid the efficacious carrying on of interstate commerce, or, what is equivalent thereto, to cause the right to efficiently conduct such commerce to depend upon the willingness of the company to be subjected to enormous pecuniary penalties as a condition of the exercise of the right. * * * If it be that the court below was right in its assumption that the rules of the American Railway Association, governing, as was conceded by the court, 90 per cent. of the railroads, and hence a vast proportion of the interstate commerce of the country, are inefficient to secure just dealing as to cars moved by the carriers engaged in interstate commerce, that fact affords no ground for conceding that such subject was within the final cognizance of the court below, and could by it be made the basis of prohibiting interstate commerce or unlawful burdening the right to carry it on."

We have quoted at some length from these two recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, in order to show that in neither of them was it declared that a state Legislature, or a Railroad Commission under its authority, could not make a rule requiring cars to be furnished within a reasonable time, although they were to be used for interstate shipments, unless such rule or act excluded legitimate defenses. To say that all of the discussion in the Mayes Case, which has been set out above, meant merely to declare that the states could not make such rules, regardless of the defenses permissible in suits brought thereunder, would be to attribute to that high court the employment of a large amount of needless circumlocution, and the basing of its opinion upon the illegal restriction of defenses made by the Texas statute, when in fact the extent of the defenses allowed thereby had nothing to do with the case. We cannot suppose this to be the fact in regard to a decision of that great court. And while the decision in the case of St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. did not refer to the Mayes Case or deal as specifically with the limitation of defenses under the state statute, the analysis of the decision of the state court and the conclusion drawn therefrom apparently proceed on the ground of the exclusion of a lawful defense, and not upon the ground that the state could enact no such law in any event. Nor do we think that this position is altered by the last sentence in the opinion, which reads as follows: "In the nature of things, as the rules and regulations of the association concern matters of interstate commerce inherently within federal control, the power to determine their sufficiency we think was primarily vested in the body upon whom Congress has conferred authority in that regard."

As already indicated, the line of demarcation between the authority of Congress and that of state Legislatures is not one which has been defined with mathematical exactness. It has rather been determined as a concrete question on which side of the line a particular case fell. As the Supreme Court of the United States have mentioned reasonableness as a guide in determining the extent to which a state law may affect interstate shipments without being invalid, and as reasonableness or unreasonableness is a matter for which no absolute standard can be prescribed, but a thing sometimes appears reasonable to one mind yet unreasonable to another, and even the same person may change his view as to what is reasonable with age, experience, and reflection, the determination of questions like that now before us involves no small difficulty. We believe, however, that the effect of the rulings above mentioned is that the states are not absolutely precluded from making rules of the character of that here involved, either as to cars to be used in intrastate shipments, or those to be used in interstate shipments; but that the exclusion of proper defenses as to cars to be used in interstate shipments would render the act or rule ineffectual as to that class of business. As to intrastate shipments, the interstate law would have no application; but as to them the question would remain whether the act or rule was in conflict with the clause of the Constitutions, both state and federal, guaranteeing due process of law.

After the decision in the Mayes Case, the Court of Civil Appeals of Texas held that the sections of the Revised Statutes of that state imposing a penalty on carriers for delay in furnishing cars for shipments were invalid under the federal Constitution, as an interference with interstate commerce. Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Allen, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 331, 98 S. W. 450. That court treated the state statutes as applying to interstate shipments, and as excluding all defenses save those enumerated. In Kansas the statute on the subject was very similar to that of Texas, except that where the Texas statute provided that it should not apply "in cases of strikes or other public calamity," the Kansas statute permitted no excuse to be set up except "strikes, unavoidable accidents, and other public calamities." The Supreme Court of the latter state distinguished the two statutes on the ground that the Texas law provided the heavy penalty of $25 per car per day, while that imposed by the Kansas statute was $1 for each car per day, which was reasonable, and the same amount as was allowed as demurrage to the railroad companies for a failure on the part of shippers to promptly unload cars; and also on the ground that the addition in the Kansas law of the words "unavoidable accidents," to the excuses allowed by the Texas statute, made a material difference. It was said: "If, therefore, as said in the opinion in the Mayes Case, the Texas statute 'is not far from the line of proper police regulation,' we are justified in concluding that the car service act of 1905 in question is well within that line."

In Virginia the Corporation Commission, in pursuance of an act of the Legislature, made a rule that when a shipper should make verbal or written application to a railroad company for a car or cars, the company should furnish the same within four days; and that for a failure to comply with this rule the company so offending should forfeit and pay to the shipper $1 per car per day. In Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 102 Va. 509, 46 S. E. 911, it was held that the state could make valid enactments, in the exercise of its police power, to promote the welfare and convenience of its citizens, though such laws, in their operation, might incidentally interfere with interstate and foreign commerce; and that the rule of the Corporation Commission was not void because in its operation it affected incidentally interstate and foreign commerce. It was further said that the validity of the rules prescribed by the Commission, so far as they in their operation might unlawfully interfere with interstate and foreign commerce or deprive transportation companies of their property without due process of law, might be determined in any particular case in which the question should be raised. After the decision of the Mayes Case, it was held by the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia that the rule was unreasonable and void as applied to shipments to points outside the state. Southern Railway Co. v. Commonwealth, 107 Va. 771, 60 S. E. 70, 17 L. R. A.

(N. S.) 364. No change in the former decision as to the reasonableness or the rule in regard to intrastate business was made; but the severe arraignment of the rule of the Commission and its operation contained in the opinion of Cardwell, J., would seemingly point to the result that as to any class of business it was contrary to the provision of the Constitution in regard to due process of law. Two of the judges, in concurring specially, said: "Their reasoning, if followed to its logical result, as we understand it, would not only render the rule in question invalid, but would make it impossible for the State Corporation Commission to make any valid rule in the subject."

In North Carolina an act was passed requiring a railroad company to pay a penalty for a failure to ship goods promptly. In Branch v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 77 N. C. 347, the act was held to be valid. It was said: "That the regulation in question is within the scope of the police power of the state seems clear to us. * * * The Legislature considered the common-law liability as insufficient to compel the performance of the public duty. * * * The penalty in the case provided for is superadded. The act merely enforces an admitted duty." Similar statutes have several times been before the Supreme Court of North Carolina. Section 2631 of the Revisal of 1905 of that state provides that transportation companies "whose duty it is to receive freight for shipment" shall, for refusing to receive all freight, "whenever tendered" to its agent, etc., forfeit and pay a penalty of $50 for each day it refuses to receive said freight, together with actual damages sustained. The validity of this statute came before the court in Garrison v. Southern Ry. Co., 150 N. C. 575, 64 S. E. 578. It was held that, "when a carrier shows the existence of conditions for which it is not responsible, preventing or rendering impossible the discharge of the duty, it will not be liable for the penalty. The court will not attribute to the Legislature the intention to punish the failure to do an impossible thing." It was held that the statute which imposed a penalty for a carrier's refusal to receive freight for shipment, as applied to a shipment between points within the state, was valid, and that as applied to shipments to other states, in the absence of specific action by Congress or the Interstate Commerce Commission, it was not invalid as a regulation of interstate commerce, though it might indirectly affect interstate commerce. In the opinion, referring to the application of the rule to interstate as well as intrastate shipments, it was said (at page 592 of 150 N. C., at page 585 of 64 S. E.): "We do not think that, in the light of the authorities, it is material whether the shipment is interstate or, as in this case, intrastate." See, also, Michigan Central R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6; Houston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Campbell, 91 Tex. 551, 45 S.

W. 2, 43 L. R. A. 225, and note. In the present case it was said by counsel that there was no common-law duty to furnish cars. Of course, at the time of the separation of this country from England, there were no railroads and no cars. But, even without a statute, such duty has been held to exist in this country. 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1470. This will be dealt with more fully later.

While some of the reasoning of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and the references made to certain statutes, may not be entirely applicable to the statutory law of this state, we think that the general conclusion arrived at is sound. We apprehend that some of the courts, in the effort to escape from collision with the Scylla of the interstate commerce laws, are in danger of rushing into the Charybdis of violating the constitutional provision in regard to due process of law.

The act of this state of August 23, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 120), does not in terms provide how the shipper is to obtain payment of the "forfeitures or penalties" prescribed in the second section thereof. This being so, impliedly he must resort to the courts and bring suit therefor. Did the Legislature intend that the amount fixed by the rule of the Railroad Commission adopted under authority of the act should be absolutely recoverable, and that in a suit therefor no possible defense should be available? Suppose, for instance, that before the cars arrived at the place where they were to be furnished, an earthquake, a cloudburst, or other similar convulsion of nature should wreck the track and destroy the cars, did the Legislature intend that the company should nevertheless be compelled to pay the forfeiture or penalty, though entirely without fault? Suppose that there should be a hostile invasion of the state, or such an insurrection as to require the declaration of martial law, and that the cars and track of the railroad company should be destroyed, or the company should be prevented by armed force from furnishing the cars at the time required, did the Legislature mean that the company should nevertheless be held liable under this act and the rule passed in pursuance of it? We cannot think so without attributing to a co-ordinate branch of the government an unreasonable and unconstitutional intent. If the act and rule were so construed, and the carrier was allowed no opportunity for exculpation, there could be little doubt of its unconstitutionality. We hold that it does not do so. The difference between this act and the Texas statute was suggested in Southern Railway Company v. Melton, 133 Ga. 277, 298, 65 S. E. 665. Certain language from the opinion of the majority of the court in that case was cited by counsel for the railroad company in the present case, in support of the contention that the rule of the Railroad Commission under consideration was a regulation of commerce, and, as applied to cars to be used in transporting freight to another state, it would be a regulation of interstate commerce. We do not think that such an interpretation of the language employed in that opinion is correct. The main point then discussed was whether the act of 1905, which authorized the making of the rule of the Commission, was an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. In the opinion of the majority of the court (the Chief Justice dissenting) the writer endeavored to show that the Legislature could constitutionally authorize the Railroad Commission to make the rule. What was said on that subject must be considered in the light of the point then under consideration. It was not held, nor do we now hold, that the act of 1905 or the rule of the Railroad Commission constituted a regulation of interstate commerce in any such sense as to be obnoxious to the Constitution of the United States, or to acts of Congress authorized thereby. Nor do we think that Congress has specifically dealt with the matter covered by the act of the Legislature and the rule of the Commission, so as to render them ineffective in respect to cars to be used in shipping goods to another state. In our opinion neither the provision in section 3 of the act of Congress, entitled "An act to regulate commerce" (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 379 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3154]), which declares it to be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of the act "to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever," etc., nor section 23, which authorizes the circuit and district courts of the United States to issue writs of mandamus in certain cases, is such a specific dealing with the matter covered by the act of 1905 and rule 9 of the Railroad Commission as to render them invalid in respect to applications for cars intended to be used in shipments to points beyond the limits of the state. Mandamus is a remedy which does not exclude other statutory rights to sue for penalties or common-law rights to sue for damages. We have not had brought to our attention any act of Congress of such a character as to exclude the exercise of the police power of the state.

From the foregoing discussion it follows that storage rule No. 9 of the Railroad Commission of this state, adopted under authority of the act of 1905, applies to applications for cars intended to be used for the shipment of freight between points within the state, and also to applications for cars intended to be used for the shipment of freight from a point in this state to a destination in another state; that the act and rule, correctly construed, are not invalid as an unlawful interference with interstate commerce; but that in a suit by a shipper, based thereon, the railroad company may plead and prove sufficient excusing cause for non-compliance.

2, 3. It must be admitted that there is some doubt as to the exact meaning of the third section of the act of 1905. By the second section the Legislature provided that, in order to require cars to be furnished, there must be a written application, and that the Railroad Commission should, by reasonable rules, provide the time within which a car or cars should be furnished "and the penalty per day per car" recoverable by the shipper for a failure on the part of the company to furnish them. In that section such amounts were also referred to as "forfeitures or penalties." The third section declared that before any railroad company "is subject to the penalties provided by this act" the Railroad Commission "shall require it to show cause therefor; and, if sufficient cause is shown, then the company shall be relieved from any further liability under this act." Next followed section 4, which prescribed a public penalty of not exceeding $250 for a violation of any of the rules, orders, or regulations of the Commission, to be recovered by suit in accordance with existing laws on the subject. The third and fourth sections have been eliminated by amendment. But they were not repealed in time to relieve the courts from the task of dealing with section three in this case. It is not quite clear why, before a railroad company should be subjected to penalties, it should be required to show cause "therefor"; not what was meant by relieving it from "further liability under this act." If the third section had followed the fourth, it might with much reason have been construed as applying only to the public penalties dealt with in the latter section. But wedged, as it is, between sections 2 and 4, it may have been intended to operate in both directions. It could not have been the legislative purpose to provide for the obtaining by a shipper of a conclusive judgment against a railroad company, before the Commission. That body could not, like a court, render conclusive money judgments between parties. The shipper would have to go to the court finally and seek to recover by suit. The section did not in terms provide for any notice to the shipper or for any hearing on his part. It declared that "if sufficient cause is shown," the company "shall be relieved from any further liability under this act;" but it said nothing as to what would happen if sufficient cause were not shown. It would seem that the shipper could then go ahead and sue. Treating the third section as relating to both the second and fourth, it apparently provided for a hearing of the company's reasons, ex gratia, a species of breakwater, or, as it might be termed, "breaksuit," interposed between the railroad company and an unwarranted action in court. The act provided for certain penalties or forfeitures. Suit would have to be brought for their recovery. The statutory right to sue was coupled with a statutory requirement or condition. Section 3 provided for a preliminary step to be taken before any such suit should be brought, namely, that the Railroad Commission should afford to the railroad company an opportunity to present its excuses or causes; and, if that body deemed them sufficient, the company was relieved from "any further liability under this act." In that event no suit could be brought; otherwise suit could be instituted. But if it were brought, the courts, not the Railroad Commission, must determine the sufficiency of the defenses or excuses set up. The preliminary investigation by the Railroad Commission was not a judicial inquiry in any such sense as to make their finding conclusive on the company in a suit against it. This may be a somewhat unusual provision to prevent useless, unfounded, and harassing suits against the carrier. But in some of the states it has been provided that the Railroad or Corporation Commission may suspend the operation of a rule at any time; Congress made the findings of the Interstate Railroad Commission prima facie evidence; and one or more states have made a similar provision as to the prima facie effect of findings of their Commissions. If there is a legitimate choice between constructions of an act, one of which would render it constitutional, and the other unconstitutional, the former will be preferred. Holding, as we do, that the hearing provided before the Railroad Commission was of the character indicated, and not a conclusive adjudication of liability on the part of the company, the letter of the secretary of the Railroad Commission (which we infer was sent by authority) and the reply of the agent of the company, mentioned in the second question of the Court of Appeals, authorized the Commission to declare that the company had not shown sufficient cause to relieve itself, so as to prevent a suit.

4. From what has been said above, it will appear that rule 9 of the Railroad Commission, properly construed in connection with the act of 1905, is reasonable.

5. The fifth division of the questions propounded includes several questions, some of which cannot be readily answered categorically, because, taken separately, each does not cover the whole field in regard to the subject mentioned. It may be said generally, that, in a suit by a shipper or consignor to recover from a railroad company the amounts provided by rule 9 of the Railroad Commission, the defenses held to be proper by the Supreme Court of the United States in Houston & Texas Central R. Co. v. Mayes, 201 U. S., 26 Sup. Ct., 50 L. Ed., supra, and St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. State, supra, are open to the company as excuses for non-compliance with the rule; and evidence is admissible to sustain such defenses. The reasonableness of the rule of the Commission is a question of law for the court, not of fact for the jury. As construed by us, we have held it to be reasonable.

It is the duty of a railroad company as a common carrier to provide cars sufficient to transport goods offered in the usual and ordinary course of business; but it is not bound to anticipate and prepare for an exceptional and extraordinary press of business. 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1470, supra; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 167, 168; Michigan Central R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich., supra. Merely to show that a railroad did not have enough cars to comply with the demands made upon its services, at the time when cars were ordered from it, would not alone suffice. It may have been negligent in providing for the ordinary conduct of its business; and its own negligence would be no defense to it. But if it complied with its duty in this respect, evidence of a want of cars may be admissible, as tending to show that the company was not at fault. If it complied with its duty in regard to providing facilities for the transportation of goods, it would be relevant to prove that, at the time of the demand, the general movement of freight throughout the country traversed by the defendant's lines of railroads was unusually large and more than was normally to have been expected, and that therefore it could not comply with the demand for cars, without fault on its part.

Mere proof that there is a strike of hands on a railroad, without more, does not furnish a defense for failure to discharge its duty as a common carrier. Strikes may include only an insignificant number of employees, or those engaged in some department of the work which in no substantial way interferes with the furnishing of cars; or, upon the happening of a strike, the company may, without sufficient effort or reason, cease or fail to conduct its business. The word "strike" does not necessarily describe the entire situation. But if a strike of operatives on a railroad is of such magnitude and character, and under such conditions, as to render the company unable, by the use of proper efforts, to furnish cars on demand, it will be a good defense to a suit under rule 9 of the Railroad Commission. There is some difference between what will excuse the failure of a common carrier to deliver goods received by it for transportation, and what may excuse delay in furnishing cars. Evidence on the subject just mentioned is admissible.

One of the questions propounded by the Court of Appeals was as follows: "Would it be a sufficient defense to an action of the nature indicated for the defendant to show that it distributed its cars fairly and proportionately to its patrons throughout the several divisions of its railroad lines, and that it did not have and could not have gotten enough cars to fulfill all demands upon it?" We answer this question in the affirmative, if the railroad company has complied with its duty as to providing sufficient cars for the conduct of its business. This does not mean that a railroad company can arbitrarily scatter its cars over its line, and refuse to furnish cars to a shipper on application, at its mere will. Nor does it mean that a failure in duty to supply itself with cars sufficient for the transaction of its ordinary business, naturally to be expected, can be excused merely by showing that it has scattered insufficient equipments at different points along its track.

The company could not legitimately give a preference to the traffic paying the highest rate of freight. To so hold would be to say that discrimination might be made for extra compensation. Nor would the mere fact that certain classes of commodities were more valuable than others authorize a preference in shipment to be made in favor of the former. Where there is a press of business, perishable goods, or goods the inherent character of which is such as to render them peculiarly liable to serious injury from delay, and which must be transported promptly or else lost or greatly damaged, have been considered as of such exceptional character as to authorize a reasonable preference, as to expedition in hauling them, over freight not of such a character, in the absence of express statutory regulation on the subject. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 253; Peet v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 20 Wis. 294, 91 Am. Dec. 446; Tierney v. New York Central, etc., R. Co., 78 N. Y. 305. This does not, however, authorize preferences on account of mere slight differences in commodities; nor can the rule be invoked as a cloak for making illegal discriminations in favor of one shipper or class of shippers as against another, without real ground for its application. Ocean Steamship Co. v. Savannah Supply Co., 131 Ga. 831, 839, 63 S. E. 577, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867, 127 Am. St. Rep. 265.

We think what has been said answers all of the questions propounded. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

THOMAS et al. v. LYNCH et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 1, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1217*)—LOSS OF JURISDICTION—REMITTITUR.

Where the remittitur has been properly sent to the lower court, the Supreme Court loses jurisdiction, so that thereafter neither it nor a justice thereof can make an order in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4717, 4718; Dec. Dig. § 1217.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1218*)—MOTIONS—NOTICE.

Even if the Supreme Court or a justice thereof had jurisdiction after the remittitur had been sent to the lower court, a motion to recall it could not be entertained; notice of motion and the affidavits on which it is based not being served on the opposite party, as required by Supreme Court Rule 19.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4719; Dec. Dig. § 1218.*]

Action by B. C. Thomas and another against Z. C. Lynch and another. Defendants, whose appeal was dismissed, move to recall the remittitur. Motion dismissed.

See, also, 85 S. C. 529, 67 S. E. 1135.

J. W. Ragsdale, for the motion.

HYDRICK, J. During the April term of the Supreme Court, a motion was made to dismiss the appeal herein on the ground, amongst others, that appellants had failed to file with the clerk the printed copies of the "case" within the time required by the statutes and rules of the court. By an order filed April 20, 1910, the court refused the motion on terms, amongst others, that the attorneys for appellants should have the case ready for hearing by June 1, 1910, so that it might be heard at that term and at such time after June 1st as the court should direct. Thereafter the court set the case for hearing on June 2d. Upon the call of the case, on June 2d, the attorneys for appellants failed to appear, and it having been made to appear to the court that they had failed to file with the clerk their printed points and authorities, as required by rule 8, an order was passed dismissing the appeal on the ground that the former order of the court had not been complied with, and for want of prosecution. The remittitur was sent down on June 16th. The court adjourned for the term on June 17th.

This is an ex parte application made to me at my chambers on August 23, 1910, for an order recalling the remittitur, and reinstating the appeal, and enjoining the sheriff of Florence county from enforcing the execution until the appeal can be heard on its merits. Rule 20 (19 S. E. v) of the Supreme Court provides that the remittitur shall not be sent to the court below until 10 days after the final determination of the cause, unless the court direct otherwise; and, when a decree or order shall be affirmed or an appeal dismissed by default of appearance by appellant, the remittitur shall not be sent to the court below, unless the court direct otherwise, until 10 days after notice of the affirmation or dismissal shall have been served on the attorney of the party in default, and that, upon application to either of the justices at chambers, an order may be granted for a further stay of the remittitur for such time as he may deem proper, not beyond the third day of the next ensuing term. The manifest purpose of these provisions is to give parties and their attorneys ample time and opportunity to examine the orders and opinions of the court, and the grounds upon which they are based, and bring to the attention of the court any errors or omissions therein, before the court has lost jurisdiction of the cause by sending the remittitur to the court below.

It is to be regretted in any case when a party loses the opportunity afforded by the law and the rules prescribed for the administration thereof to present his cause on the merits. But it must always be remembered that the other party to the cause has the right to the orderly disposition thereof, and that his rights must be respected, and that it is essential to the due and orderly administration of the law that the methods of procedure prescribed by the statutes and rules of court be complied with. Otherwise, there would be no end to litigation. It has frequently been decided that, when the remittitur has been properly sent to the court below, the Supreme Court loses jurisdiction, and thereafter neither the court nor any justice thereof can make any order in the case. Carpenter v. Lewis, 65 S. C. 400, 43 S. E. 881; State v. Adams, 83 S. C. 149, 65 S. E. 220, and cases cited therein. See, also, State v. Keels, 39 S. C. 553, 17 S. E. 802, a case very much like the one under consideration.

There is another reason why the motion could not be entertained, even if I had jurisdiction; because the notice thereof and the affidavits upon which it is based were not served upon the opposite party, as required by rule 19 of the Supreme Court.

The motion is therefore dismissed.

ZEIGLER v. SHULER et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 25, 1910.)

1. DEEDS (§ 196*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—PRESUMPTION—RELIEF.

While a court of equity will not protect those who make improvident or even reckless contracts, yet it will set aside a deed given to a party by his half-brother, who was mentally weak; undue influence being presumed from the relationship of the parties, and the inadequate consideration for the land.

2. CONTRACTS (§ 96*) — VALIDITY — MENTAL WEAKNESS OF PARTY—UNDUE INFLUENCE.

The contract of a person of weak understanding, and who is thereby liable to imposition, will be held void in a court of equity, if the nature of the contract justify the conclusion that undue influence has been practiced.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Orangeburg County; Ernest Gary, Judge.

Suit for partition by Lawrence M. Zeigler against D. Weston Shuler and Govan A. Shuler. From a decree for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the decree of the trial court:

"This is an action, as appears from the complaint for partition of certain real estate in the county of Orangeburg, which the plaintiff alleges is owned by him and the defendant D. Weston Shuler as tenants in common in equal proportions. The defendant D. Weston Shuler answers the complaint, denying the allegations thereof, and alleges that the plaintiff has no interest in the said real estate as a tenant in common or otherwise, but that the said real estate was owned by himself and his brother, Govan A. Shuler. He further alleges that his brother, the said Govan A. Shuler, was confined in the hospital for the insane of this state; he having been declared insane and incapable of managing his affairs. The case was referred to Robert E. Copes, Esq., as special referee, to take the testimony on the issues raised by the pleadings herein and report his conclusions of law and fact thereon.

"The special referee states in his report that at a reference held before him it appeared that Govan A. Shuler, who made the deed under which the plaintiff claimed his interest in the said real estate, had twice prior to the execution of the said deed been committed to the State Hospital for the Insane, having been adjudged a lunatic, and that, after the execution of the said deed, he had been again committed to the said hospital for the insane, where he was still confined, and that he was a necessary party to the final determination of the issues raised in the pleading, and he thereupon made an order directing that the said Govan A. Shuler be made a party defendant to the action, and that the summons and complaint be amended accordingly. This was done. After Govan A. Shuler had been served with the amended copy of the summons and complaint, a guardian ad litem was duly appointed and directed to appear and defend the action on his behalf. The guardian ad litem interposed a formal answer to the complaint. The case came on to be heard before me at the October term, 1909, of the court of common pleas for Orangeburg county, upon the pleadings, evidence, and exceptions to the report of the special referee on behalf of the defendants.

"The basis of plaintiff's claim to the said real estate and his right to the partition thereof is the deed executed to him by his half-brother, the defendant Govan A. Shuler. The special referee found, among other things, that, while it has been shown by the evidence that Govan A. Shuler was of unsound or weak mind, and that twice prior to the execution of the said deed he had been committed to the State Hospital for the Insane, having been adjudged a lunatic in ex parte proceedings, neither of which had ever been traversed and that shortly after the execution of said deed he was again committed to the said hospital having been adjudged a lunatic in ex parte proceedings which had never been gainsaid or traversed and is now an inmate of that hospital still the evidence also shows that at the times he was not confined in the hospital his unsound or weak mind did not render him incapable of transacting business and of knowing the nature and consequences of his acts. The testimony abundantly sustains the special referee in his finding that the defendant Govan A. Shuler was found of unsound and weak mind, and that twice prior to the execution of said deed he had been committed to the State Hospital for the Insane, having been adjudged a lunatic, as he states, and that very soon after the execution of said deed he was again committed to the Hospital for the Insane, having been adjudged a lunatic and was then an inmate in that hospital.

"The special referee further held that at the moment Govan A. Shuler executed the said deed to Lawrence M. Zeigler, which was recorded in the office of the clerk of court for Orangeburg county aforesaid, on April 4, 1903, in book 43, at page 64, whereby he conveyed his interest in the real estate, which is described in the complaint, to the plaintiff, he was in the enjoyment of a lucid interval, and that, although the deed was largely voluntary, yet he was under no undue influence, and no fraud was practiced on him, and that, when he made the deed, he put into effect what he had predetermined during former lucid intervals, and concluded that the said deed was a valid conveyance of the interest of Govan A. Shuler in the said real estate to the said Lawrence M. Zeigler, and that the same should not be set aside.

"I am not prepared to assent to the finding of the special referee that the defendant Govan A. Shuler was in the enjoyment of a lucid interval when he executed the deed, in the face of the testimony of Dr. A. S. Hydrick, corroborated by other testimony, that he could not have lucid intervals, as his injury was a permanent one, and he was satisfied from his mental condition that he was absolutely incapable of managing his business.

"But, aside from that, after a careful review of the testimony, I am satisfied that the deed cannot be sustained. The special referee seems to have entirely overlooked the fact that this is a case in which the court of equity is asked to set aside a deed of conveyance between persons sustaining to each other the confidential relations of half-brothers; the one being extremely weak mentally, if not entirely non compos mentis, and in failing to apply the rules governing such cases.

"The defendant Govan A. Shuler at the time of the execution of the deed and long prior thereto was, to say the least, as shown by all the testimony, a person of an extremely weak mind, and incapable in my opinion of comprehending the nature and consequences of his act. The deed was almost wholly voluntary. The plaintiff testified that the tract of land was worth from $6,000 to $7,000. He stated that he paid him no money on the day the deed was executed, but that he, the plaintiff, bought him some clothing about six or eight months before the execution of the deed, and otherwise the deed was wholly voluntary. Mr. Henry Zeigler, cousin of the plaintiff, testified that he went to an attorney and had the deed prepared, and afterwards he, with the plaintiff, went to Branchville where the deed was executed. Under these facts, even if the defendant Govan A. Shuler was a person of strong mind, the inadequacy of price was so gross as to shock the conscience, and furnish satisfactory evidence of fraud sufficient for canceling it. But here we have a very feeble-minded person on the one side, without any competent or independent adviser, and on the other a half-brother, who, the deed states, has been his most staunch and constant friend, procuring from his feeble-minded half-brother an absolute conveyance of all his property for the nominal consideration of $5, which was not paid, and a few clothing, which he had given him six or eight months prior to the execution of the deed. While a court of equity is not intended to protect those who make improvident or even reckless contracts, it will always interpose to shield a helpless and weak-minded person from his half-brother, such as Govan A. Shuler is shown to be, who would take his all, and pauperize him for practically nothing.

"The court in the case of Willie v. Willie, 57 S. C. 413, 35 S. E. 804, quoting from Allore v. Jewell, 94 U. S. 506, 24 L. Ed. 260, says: 'It is not necessary in order to secure the aid of equity to prove that the deceased grantor was at the time insane, or in such a state of mental imbecility as to render her incapable of executing a valid deed. It is sufficient to show that from her sickness and infirmity she was at the time in a condition of great mental weakness, and there was gross inadequacy of consideration for the conveyance. From these circumstances imposition or undue influence will be inferred.'

In the case of Harding v. Wheaton, reported in 2 Mason, 373, Fed. Cas. No. 6,051, a conveyance executed by one to his son-in-law for a nominal consideration, and upon verbal arrangement that it should be considered as a trust for the maintenance of the grantor, and after his death, for the benefit of his heirs, was after his death set aside, except as security for actual advances and charges upon application of his heirs, on the ground that it was obtained from him when his mind was enfeebled by age and other causes. 'Extreme weakness,' said Mr. Justice Story, in deciding the case, 'will raise an almost necessary presumption of imposition, even when it stops short of legal incapacity; and, though a contract in the ordinary course of things reasonably made with such a person might be admitted to stand, yet if it should appear to be of such a nature that such a person could not be capable of measuring its extent or importance, its reasonableness or its value, fully and fairly, it cannot be that the law is so much at variance with common sense as to uphold it.' The case subsequently came before this court; and in deciding it Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, speaking of this, and it would seem of other deeds executed by the deceased, said: 'If these deeds were obtained by the exercise of undue influence over a man whose mind had ceased to be a safe guide of his actions, it is against conscience for him who has obtained them to derive any advantage from them. It is the peculiar province of a court of conscience to set them aside. That a court of equity will interpose in such a case, is among the best-settled principles. Harding v. Handy, 11 Wheat. 125, 6 L. Ed. 429. The same doctrine is announced in adjudged cases almost without number; and it may be stated as settled law that whenever there is great weakness of mind in a person executing a conveyance of land arising from age, sickness, or any other cause, though not amounting to absolute disqualification, and the consideration given for the property is grossly inadequate, court of equity will, upon proper and reasonable application of the injured party, or his representatives or heirs, interfere and set the conveyance aside.'

"The court in the case of Banker v. Hendricks, 24 S. C. 1, and Gaston v. Bennett, 30 S. C. 473, 9 S. E. 515, approved the principles as stated in 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 238, that 'the acts and contracts of persons who are of weak understandings and who are thereby liable to imposition, will be held void in courts of equity, if the nature of the act or contract justify the conclusion that the party has not exercised a deliberate judgment, but that he has been imposed upon, circumvented or overcome by cunning artifice or undue influence.' See, also, case of Way v. Insurance Co., 61 S. C. 501, 39 S. E. 742. Mr. Pomeroy says (2 Pom. Eq. § 957): 'This principle is applied with great emphasis and vigor to gifts, whether they are simple bouties or purport to be the effects of liberality based upon antecedent favors or obligations.' The special referee also finds that there was no undue influence and no fraud was practiced on the defendant Govan A. Shuler. This finding is based upon the misconception of the rule applicable to a case like this, which presumes undue influence from the relationship of the parties, and the absence of an adequate consideration. When the testimony is viewed in the light of these well-settled principles of law, the deed cannot be sustained.

"It is further ordered and adjudged that the deed of conveyance herein involved is set aside and canceled, and that the plaintiff, Lawrence M. Zeigler, do deliver up the same to the clerk of court, to be canceled by him, and on the record of the same on the clerk's office, and that the complaint be dismissed.

"It is further ordered that the plaintiff pay the costs of this action."

P. T. Hildebrand, Thos. F. Brantley, and M. E. Zeigler, for appellant. Raysor & Summers, Wolfe & Berry, and Jas. F. Izlar, for respondents.

WOODS, J. The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed for the reasons therein stated.

WHITE et al. v. HEWITT et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 19, 1910.)

1. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 8*)—VALIDITY—MISREPRESENTATION—EFFECT.

A compromise settlement may be invalidated by false representations as to material matter made to induce, and which did induce, the other party to make the contract while ignorant of the truth, and reasonably relying upon the representations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 17-31; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

2. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 8*)—CONCEALMENT OF FACTS—EFFECT.

Equity will not allow a party to a compromise to conceal facts which the other party has a right to expect to be disclosed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 17-31; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 8*)—MISREPRESENTATIONS—EFFECT.

In a compromise, equity will not allow a party to whom facts have been misrepresented to be injured thereby, whether the misrepresentation was made innocently or designedly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 17-31; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

4. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 8*)—CONCEALMENT—EFFECT.

Where, on the death of an intestate, plaintiffs and defendants sought to effect a compromise as to the settlement of the estate, defendants should have disclosed certain proceeds of the estate obtained from the sale of personalty, and their use of such proceeds to pay for land conveyed to defendants under the settlement was a fraud on plaintiffs, which invalidated the settlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 17-31; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

5. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 8*)—CONCEALMENT—INVALIDATION—NEGLIGENCE.

In a compromise settlement of the estate of an intestate, where plaintiffs' representative knew of certain personalty having been sold, and then inquired of defendant's representative if there was any money in the estate, to which he replied in the negative, he was not guilty of negligence in failing to use available means to discover that the proceeds of such sale belonged to the estate, so as to prevent plaintiffs from impeaching the settlement for concealment of such proceeds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

6. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 18*)—SUIT TO INVALIDATE—RETURN OF MONEY—NECESSITY FOR.

Where, in the compromise settlement of the estate of an intestate, plaintiffs had received money for their release of property of the estate under the settlement, but were entitled to it without the settlement, they were not bound to tender it back before attacking the settlement on the ground of the fraudulent concealment of money belonging to the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 509*)—SUIT TO INVALIDATE—ACCOUNTING BY ADMINISTRATOR.

In a suit to set aside a compromise settlement of the estate of an intestate because of certain money belonging to the estate having been concealed by defendants, the administrator to whom the money had been given should not be required after his discharge by the probate court to make a further accounting; there being no evidence that he was aware of the concealment.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Florence County.

Suit by Theodosia White and David White against Minnie R. Hewitt and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

W. F. Clayton, for appellants. J. W. Ragsdale, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. This action was brought to set aside a compromise settlement of the estate of Henry White, deceased, upon the ground of concealment, misrepresentation, and fraud, and for an accounting. The appeal is from a decree of Judge Purdy dismissing the complaint.

Henry White married plaintiff Theodosia on October 27, 1879, and about 10 days after the marriage the plaintiff David, their son, was born. Henry and Theodosia lived together at the home of Theodosia's father, William Hill, near Timmons ville, S. C., six months, and then separated, although Henry continued to visit her as husband for several years. On May 12, 1889, the husband and wife entered into a written agreement to live apart, and in consideration of $50, Theodowia agreed to make no further claim or demand upon her husband or his estate. At that time Henry was very poor. Theodosia and her son thereafter made no claim or complaint whatever against Henry White during his life, and lived about from place to place in toil and poverty, and at his death were living in Brooklin, S. C., David being employed in a cotton mill there at 75 cents a day. In July, 1889, Henry White married the defendant Minnie R. Simpson, now Hewitt, and had four children by her, the defendants Ann, Ralph, John, and Henry. Henry White died intestate on October 7, 1901, and left an estate consisting of two tracts of land in Florence county, one containing 25 acres, and the other 80 acres, and personal property including chases, which, according to the returns of the administrator, the defendant Duncan McKensie realized $4,087.38, against which there were debts and charges amounting to $2,088.48. In response to a telegram from his uncle, Jesse L. Hill, announcing the death of Henry White, the plaintiff David arrived at Timmons ville on the night of October 8, 1901, and with his uncle had an interview with Dr. J. A. Cole in reference to the claim of himself and mother to the estate, and all thought that it would be best to agree upon a compromise. Accordingly, on the next morning Jesse L. Hill, representing the plaintiffs, Dr. J. A. Cole, representing defendants Minnie and her children, and Jeff McLendon, selected by both sides, met at Henry White's residence as a committee or arbitrators with a view to arrange a compromise based upon a valuation of the estate. David White had proposed to divide the estate equally. The committee valued the personal property, stock, etc., upon the farm at about $500 and the 80-acre tract at $2,000, and recommended a settlement on that basis, and that plaintiffs execute deeds to the land and release claim to the personal property upon the receipt of $1,250. This included making a deed to George White for the 25-acre tract. Both parties agreed to this, and accordingly, on October 10, 1901, at Columbia, S. C., plaintiffs executed a deed to George White for the 25-acre tract and to Minnie R. and her children for the 80-acre tract, and signed a receipt in full of all claims to the real and personal estate of Henry White.

The main ground upon which it is now sought to set aside this settlement is that there was fraudulent concealment and misrepresentation as to the property of the estate by which plaintiffs were misled. The testimony shows beyond all doubt that on the evening of the funeral of Henry White, and in anticipation of his arrival, cotton and tobacco belonging to the estate amounting to $703 were carried off with haste and sold or disposed after dark in the name of others, and the money placed in the hands of defendant McKensie, and was used in paying the $1,250 to the plaintiffs. Baxter White testified that his wagon was used in moving the cotton at the request of defendant Minnie. George White, who lived on the premises and was managing the farm for Henry White, testified that the cotton was hauled off from Henry White's on the day of the funeral about 7 o'clock p. m.; that the cotton was sold in Frank Lee's name and the tobacco in Baxter White's name; that defendant Minnie knew he was hauling the cotton, and it was done with her consent; that she expected David would come and claim it. Defendant Minnie testifies that the cotton and tobacco were not sold by her direction; that she had nothing to do with it; that George White had charge of the crop and place during the illness of Henry; that they had raised George; that she did not attempt to conceal anything from plaintiff; that she did not ask Baxter White for his wagon; and that she did not tell George White that she wanted the property moved, and did not tell him she was afraid David would get it. Nevertheless the conclusion cannot be resisted that, if she did not directly cause the removal and disposition of the cotton and tobacco, she must have had reason to know of it and acquiesced in it. It was done in her interest by George White, then in charge of the premises, and she used the proceeds in making settlement with plaintiffs. Although this money was in the hands of McKensie at the time of the compromise settlement, nothing was said about it, and plaintiffs were wholly ignorant of it. Furthermore, Dr. Cole himself testified that he owed Henry White $400, and paid it to defendant McKensie on the day of the funeral to be used in the settlement. So that, at the time of the valuation of the estate by the committee or arbitrators, there was the sum of $1,103 belonging to the estate in the hands of one who afterwards became administrator and charged himself with these sums as collections, and was credited with the payment of the $1,250 paid to the plaintiffs in settlement.

The testimony shows that during the consideration by the committee Jesse L. Hill inquired if there was any money belonging to the estate, and that Dr. Cole answered that there was none. Jesse L. Hill and Jeff McLendon so testify. David White testified that Dr. Cole made a similar declaration to him the night before. We do not hesitate to treat Dr. Cole as representing the defendant Minnie in effecting the compromise settlement. He so professed by his acts, was so dealt with by the others, and defendant Minnie testified that she "ratified what Dr. Cole did about the settlement." Dr. Cole testified that he made no misrepresentation as to the property of the estate. He doubtless did not know of the clandestine disposition of the cotton and tobacco the night before, and he may have considered that his payment to McKensie after the death of Henry White could not be technically considered money left by Henry White, still the fact is he knew at the time of the compromise negotiation, when inquiry was made as to money, that he himself had paid to Duncan McKensie for the estate the sum of $400 in anticipation of some settlement, no doubt the compromise settlement he was largely instrumental in effecting. The representation to plaintiffs that there was no money was further shown by the testimony of Jesse L. Hill, who stated that, when the proposition was made for Mrs. Hewitt to pay plaintiffs $1,250, something was said about not having money, and that George White said "she would have to mortgage her property." At that time George had reason to know that the money realized from the sale of cotton and tobacco, which he has caused to be removed, was in the hands of McKensie, and Dr. Cole knew that $400 had been placed there by himself. It further appears by the testimony of Mrs. Hewitt and Duncan McKensie that on the day the deeds were executed Mrs. Hewitt sent to McKensie by the hand of George White something over $200 for the purpose of paying the $1,250.

A compromise settlement may be invalidated by false representations as to a material matter which were made to induce and did induce the other party to make the contract, while ignorant of the truth and reasonably relying upon the representations. See text and cases cited in 8 Cyc. 528, 529, 530. So also an unfair concealment of facts may constitute ground for relief against a compromise. The principle is well stated in Mills v. Lee, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 91, 17 Am. Dec. 125: "Courts of equity will hold the one party or the other responsible for the truth of the representations made in their communications relative to the contract, and if the facts be unfairly or untruly represented, whether innocently or designedly, the party to whom the representation is made shall not be injured by it. So, also, it holds a party contracting to abstain from fraud or deceit by concealment of facts which in fair dealing the one party has a right to expect to be disclosed, and which the other party is bound to disclose. It may be difficult at all times to discern the true line between that which a party may lawfully forbear to disclose and that which he cannot withhold without incurring the guilt of fraud or deceit. The circumstances not disclosed must always be compared with the object and the end in view by the contracting parties." Here the end in view of the contracting parties was a compromise of their claims to the estate based upon a valuation of the estate.

Jeff McLendon, accepted as arbitrator by both sides, testified: "We consulted over the matter and put on the appraisement. We came to terms as to valuation. There was nothing brought up except the 80 acres and the stock supposed to be plantation stock. We appraised it at $2,500. We then called in Baxter White, and told him what we valued it at. Mr. Jesse Hill (one of the arbitrators) asked about money. The proposal was then made to the two parties, David and Minnie, and they accepted; that is, that Minnie was to give $1,250 to David and his mother, and she and her children were to take the property and pay laborers' bill and doctor's bill, and I think other indebtedness. I know nothing only of stock and plantation. We did not know of the property. It was in a sense a sort of pig in the bag. We settled as far as matters were brought to our attention. I regarded this as a settlement between the two families to avoid any litigation. * * * It was my opinion that the settlement reached was a final settlement of Henry White's affairs between these parties. It was an estimate of the property that we had before us. I did not understand that any of the property was excluded or excepted. So far as we were concerned, it was a complete settlement of the estate. This settlement was desired, as I understood it, on account of the peculiar circumstances of each family. I consider that we put a fair valuation on the property. It was a compromise settlement on valuation. It was a compromise settlement in a nutshell on property in sight. We did not enumerate the property. We did not know what the debts were, except doctor's bill and labor bill. It was not predicated on Minnie's legal rights. To a certain extent it was predicated on the fact that both parties claimed it. We made the proposition to give or take. We proposed, if there were any debts, Minnie was to pay them. We did not know exactly what the personal property was. There were two estates consisting of real and personal property, and the proposition was made to David to give or take, and David said he would take $1,250 for self and mother. Minnie was to take estate and pay debts. Nothing was shown us by Minnie. She was not present until we went in and made the proposition. * * * Jesse L. Hill asked about money; don't think David was there then and Minnie was not. There was reply that there was no money. Dr. Cole made the reply. It was put before the two. That is, David proposed before we went in to divide the estate equally."

The defendant claimant in possession had superior knowledge of the property of the estate, and plaintiffs were entirely ignorant with respect thereto, except as to the matters brought into the appraisement. If plaintiffs had been told that they could have the entire estate upon payment of $1,250, and that there were $1,103 belonging to the estate in the hands of McKensie which they might use to make the payment, there would have been something like equality of knowledge and situation. The parties were not upon an equal footing as to knowledge or ignorance of the situation, and the circumstances called for a disclosure of the money in the hands of McKensie. Concealment of this fact impeaches the settlement as unfair.

The circuit judge based his decree dismissing the complaint upon the ground that plaintiffs had a partial knowledge of the situation and the means at hand at any time by any sort of inquiring to ascertain the true situation, and the contract was the result of their own improvident conduct. The court further stated: "They had knowledge at the time that part of the property of the deceased was being hauled off and disposed of and no question from their standpoint was made of that; so that it really appears that they were willing to give up the situation and all benefits accruing from it for the sum of $1,250, and having so elected they are bound by it."

We think this conclusion clearly against the testimony. The plaintiff Theodosia was never present and knew nothing. Plaintiff David, who was acting for himself and mother, testified that he had no knowledge of the disposition of the property until a short time before the suit, that he relied upon the information received through Dr. Cole, acting as agent for Minnie White. Jeff McLendon, who represented plaintiffs on the committee of arbitrators, testified: "The night before I saw George White have cotton at depot, weighing cotton. He had Henry's team, Baxter White's team, and maybe others. * * * I knew that the cotton had been hauled. I knew that Henry had made a crop. I tried to get some information. Dr. Cole said he knew about the estate. I asked about money. Dr. Cole said there was no money. I did not see cotton." If McLendon knew the cotton had been disposed of, the natural inquiry would be whether there was any money, and, when assured there was none by the representative of Mrs. Hewitt, his suspicions, if any, would naturally be lulled into a belief that the proceeds of the cotton had been rightfully used for the benefit of the estate. There was no such negligence on the part of plaintiffs or their representatives in using available means of information as should prevent plaintiffs from impeaching the settlement for concealment of material facts.

No question was raised on circuit as to whether plaintiffs should have made tender back of the money received by them before they could proceed to set aside the settlement. As plaintiffs received only what belonged to them without the settlement, they were not bound to tender it back. Du Pont v. Du Bos, 52 S. C. 244, 29 S. E. 665. We hesitate, however, as to the extent of the relief which justice and equity demands under all the circumstances of the case. With respect to the deed for the 25-acre tract to the defendant George White, we are disposed to sustain the settlement. The plaintiffs were fully informed that Henry White had bought that tract for George White his half-brother who lived with him and whom he partly raised, and set it apart for him and intended to make him a deed, but neglected it until it was too late. It does not appear that there was any misrepresentation or concealment. This was a case of the compromise of a doubtful right fairly made between the parties. Durham v. Wadlington, 2 Stro. Eq. 258. With respect to the deed to Mrs. Hewitt and the infant children, we are disposed to permit the settlement to stand conditionally, as hereinafter mentioned, because there was no misrepresentation or concealment with reference thereto and plaintiffs with equal opportunity for information have voluntarily conveyed the same, and justice may be done to plaintiffs by compliance with the judgment of the court hereafter rendered.

The same conclusion has been reached with respect to the personal property on the farm, stock, household furniture, etc., which was appraised at $500 in the compromise settlement and subsequently appraised at $505 in the administration proceedings. All the testimony shows that this property was intended by both parties to be embraced in the settlement. We reach the same conclusion with respect to the choses in action, not including the account against Dr. Cole paid at the time of the compromise, because the settlement was intended to be a full settlement of the estate, and plaintiffs made no inquiry concerning the same, and there is no evidence that Mrs. Hewitt or any representative had any knowledge concerning the same. The choses were discovered by Duncan McKensie in the Bank of Timmons ville after his appointment as administrator.

This leaves the settlement impeached only because of the misrepresentation and concealment with reference to the $1,103 that were in the hands of McKensie. The evidence leaves no room to doubt, if this fund had been fairly brought into the settlement, plaintiffs would have executed the deeds and receipt upon the payment of one-half thereof in addition to the estimated one-half of the remainder of the estate, which has been received, and the settlement may be carried out justly towards plaintiffs by compelling further payment to them of $551.50, with interest from October 10, 1901. Further accounting from Duncan McKensie, the administrator, is not deemed necessary or proper. He was discharged by the probate court in 1903. While he permitted himself to become the custodian of funds of the estate before administration, there was no evidence that he was aware of the misrepresentation and concealment with respect to the fund in effecting the compromise. The debts of the estate all appear to have been paid. He had no reason to doubt the validity of the receipt of plaintiffs acknowledging full settlement with respect to their claims to the estate, and in good faith he has disbursed the funds of the estate going into his hands. From his accounts it appears that he not only paid the $1,250 in the compromise settlement, an additional $1,250 for indebtedness of Henry White incurred in buying for Mrs. Hewitt a short time before his death a tract of land deeded to her by G. C. McEachern, and the further sum of $768.90 was paid to Mrs. Hewitt for herself and her children, the balance of the estate in the administrator's hands after debts and expenses. This settlement included the personal property on the farm appraised at $505.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court dismissing the complaint be reversed, and that the defendant Mrs. Minnie Hewitt for herself and children within 60 days from the filing of the remittitur herein pay to the plaintiffs or their attorneys the sum of $551.50, with interest from October 10, 1901, and that, upon compliance herewith, the compromise settlement shall not be further disturbed, but, upon failure to comply herewith, then that the deed of the 80-acre tract and the settlement receipt with respect to the personal estate given by plaintiffs to Mrs. Hewitt and her children be set aside.

WILSON v. ALL et al.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 167*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—EFFECT OF CONSENT.

Where a temporary injunction was issued against defendants, and, upon their motion to dissolve it, was continued, and they then agreed that they would give bond for a certain amount, provided the injunction be dissolved, and an order was made to that effect, the right of appeal from such order was waived by the agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1008-1014; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; T. S. Sease, Judge.

Suit by Mrs. Z. I. Wilson against Daisy J. All and F. D. Bessinger. From an order requiring defendants to give bond in lieu of an injunction, they appeal. Appeal dismissed.

James A. Willis, for appellants. James M. Patterson, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages from defendants for wrongful and wanton flooding of her land and injury to same and the crops thereon by draining water from defendants' land onto plaintiff's land by means of a ditch, and for an injunction to prohibit continuation of such trespasses. A temporary injunction was granted by Judge Sease, and upon motion of defendants to dissolve the same he stated that he would continue the injunction, and at the request of defendants declared that he would require plaintiff to give bond in the sum of $1,000, whereupon plaintiff's attorney offered that if the defendants would give plaintiff a bond of that sum, with two sureties, the plaintiff would not insist upon the injunction being enforced, and would allow the water to continue to be discharged through said ditch. Defendants' attorney agreed to this, and the bond was given by the defendants. Provision was made for this in the order of Judge Sease, from which defendants now appeal. The terms of the order, dated April 9, 1910, were: "That said injunction be and the same is hereby continued pending the trial of the cause on the merits, but on the defendants entering into a bond to plaintiff in the sum of one thousand dollars with two sureties who shall justify, to be approved by the clerk of the court, the said injunction shall not issue; that the condition of said bond shall be that the defendants will pay to the plaintiff any damages she may sustain by reason of said injunction not being enforced."

The exceptions are to the refusal of the motion to dissolve the injunction, on the grounds (1) that the verification of the complaint upon which the injunction was granted was so defective as to render the complaint unverified; (2) that the complaint fails to allege irreparable injury, and shows that plaintiff has a complete and adequate remedy at law. We do not regard the exceptions as properly before the court. The temporary injunction has in fact been dissolved by acceptance of and compliance with its terms by appellant. The order is in effect a consent order adjusting the situation pending the litigation in accordance with the agreement of the parties. The right of appeal from such order must therefore be regarded as waived. Clement v. Dean, 51 S. C. 317, 28 S. E. 942; State v. Scarborough, 56 S. C. 53, 33 S. E. 779.

The appeal is dismissed.

8. TRIAL (§ 217*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

It is not reversible error for the trial judge merely to call to the attention of the jury the gravity of the issues involved in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 483, 485; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

9. CONSPIRACY (§ 20*)—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

Where, in an action by an employé for blacklisting, a conspiracy between the employer and other employers was relied on, punitive damages were recoverable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. § 27; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

10. CONSPIRACY (§ 20*)—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

The refusal of an employer to withdraw the name of an employé from a blacklist, after becoming aware of the fact that the employé was not a striker, and that he could not get employment from others while his name remained on the blacklist, proved malice on the part of the employer justifying punitive damages in favor of the employé suing the employer for blacklisting him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. § 27; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

11. CONSPIRACY (§ 8*)—COMBINATIONS—ILLEGALITY.

A combination of employers to furnish to each other the names of striking employes and other persons whose employment for any cause is undesirable is not unlawful, so long as it is formed and used for promoting the legitimate business of the employers, but, when the combination is made an instrumentality of injuring others through malice or threats of intimidation, a right of action for resulting injuries arises, and where more than one of the parties to the combination agree to use it for an illegitimate purpose a conspiracy arises, and, when one against whom the conspiracy is directed suffers injury in consequence thereof, he may sue either one or all of the parties to the unlawful agreement, charging them as conspirators, and such action does not fail because there is no evidence of a conspiracy between two or more of the employers, for one of the parties to a legitimate combination gives a cause of action by using maliciously such a combination as a means of injuring another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-11; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

12. CONSPIRACY (§ 19*)—BLACKLIST—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show an agreement between employers to furnish to each other a list of striking employes, and not to employ strikers, and that an employer after knowing that his employé was not a striker willfully persisted in representing him to be one, preventing him from obtaining employment, authorizing a recovery.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by Olin M. Rhodes against the Granby Cotton Mills. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following are the exceptions of defendant:

"(1) Because, counsel for defendant having previously objected to testimony along the line, his honor against the objection of defendant allowed the witness J. C. Kirby to testify as follows, to wit: 'Mr. Edmunds: Q. Who furnished you the list? A. Mr. Wallace, superintendent of the mill at that time (meaning the Columbia Mills). The Court: It will be relevant to show that he refused him employment on account of having received that list, if you can show the Granby Cotton Mills is connected with it. Mr. Edmunds: We expect to connect it. The Court: If you do not connect it, it will be stricken out. Mr. Edmunds: Q. Was it as a result of the strike at the Granby Mill and your receiving that list that employment was refused? Mr. Shand: We object to that. The Court: State whether or not. Mr. Edmunds: State whether or not the strike at the Granby Mill and his name being on that list, that employment was declined him? A. Yes, sir—it being error to allow such witness to testify that he was refused employment in said Columbia Mills because of a strike at the Granby Mills, and because plaintiff's name was on an alleged list of strikers at the Granby Mills, when there was no testimony showing that such list of strikers had been furnished by the Granby Mills.

"(2) Because his honor, the presiding judge, did not upon motion of defendant's counsel at the close of the testimony for the plaintiff strike out the testimony of the witness J. C. Kirby, there having been up to that time no testimony showing any connection between the Granby Cotton Mills, and the list testified to by the said J. C. Kirby.

"(3) Because his honor erred in allowing the witness C. S. Green, against the objection of the defendant, to testify to a tacit courtesy recognized by the Columbia Mills in 1900 with reference to the giving of information upon the request of the superintendents of other mills without connecting the defendant with it then and without showing that such a tacit courtesy existed in 1907.

"(4) Because his honor did not, upon the motion of the defendant's counsel at the close of plaintiff's testimony, strike out the testimony of the witness C. S. Green as to any tacit understanding or tacit courtesy practiced by the superintendent of the Columbia Mills when there had been no testimony to connect the defendant or its superintendents with such tacit courtesy or understanding, and there had been no testimony to show that such tacit courtesy or understanding existed in 1907.

"(5) Because, against the objection of the defendant, his honor allowed the witness C. S. Green to testify that the Columbia Mills or the said C. S. Green would make use of such tacit understanding or courtesy to which the said witness had testified when it had not been shown that the defendant company was in any wise a party to such tacit understanding or courtesy.

"(6) Because his honor erred in permitting the plaintiff, against the objection of defendant, to testify that he sent messages to mills in other states and received no response thereto without testimony to show that the messages so sent were ever received, or that a failure to receive a favorable response was in any wise due to any act or communication of the defendant.

"(7) Because his honor erred while the plaintiff was on the stand as a witness in ruling as follows: 'I rather think the court is satisfied that there is some evidence prima facie of conspiracy between these mills to prevent these people getting work and sending around lists, making it impossible for them to get work, that there is some prima facie evidence showing combination and conspiracy between them'—when, first, there was no prima facie evidence of agreement or combination between any mill for any purpose touching the subject-matter of this action; and, secondly, even if there was prima facie evidence of some combination or agreement between some mills, the defendant Granby Mills had not been connected with it; and, thirdly, even if there was some prima facie evidence to show a combination or agreement between certain mills to do some act in connection with the subject-matter of this suit, it was not to do any unlawful act or any lawful act by unlawful means; and, fourth, even if there was some evidence as to a combination between certain mills to do an unlawful act, the defendant, Granby Mills, had not been connected with it.

"(8) Because under the erroneous ruling complained of in exception 7 his honor erred in admitting, against the objection of the defendant, the testimony of plaintiff, and thereafter of witnesses L. E. Rhodes, Dozier Rhodes, and A. L. Knight as to declarations as to defendant's acts and statements made to them, or in their hearing, by persons in no wise connected with the defendant.

"(9) Because his honor erred in ruling: 'The combination having been testified to being established to some extent, the declaration of parties connected with and in furtherance of that combination are admissible,' when no such combination had been to any extent established or testified to, and in pursuance of such ruling in admitting as testimony the declarations of Wallace and others who were in no wise connected with the defendant, and which declarations were in no wise binding on defendant.

"(10) Because his honor erred in permitting the witness Knight to testify against the objection of the defendant as to the contents of a list seen by him at the Palmetto Cotton Mills, when there was not sufficient to show that said list was made by the defendant or authorized by it.

"(11) Because his honor erred as matter of law in permitting the witness Knight to testify, against the objection of the defendant, as to the contents of a list alleged to have been seen by him at the Palmetto Cotton Mills, when no sufficient proof had been made of the loss of the original according to the rules of law.

"(12) Because his honor erred in holding sufficient proof to have been made of the loss of the original of the letter referred to in the preceding exception, and in admitting secondary evidence of its contents as upon sufficient proof when the last custodian, the former Superintendent Bagwell, had not been examined as to his disposition of the letter, and the facts failed to show that a bona fide and diligent search had been unsuccessfully made for the original in the place where it was most likely to be found, and thus all sources of information and means of discovery had not been exhausted in a reasonable degree.

"(13) Because the defendant, upon notice to produce served by the plaintiff, having produced in court an original list of strikers, written in ink and indelible pencil, which had never been out of the possession of the defendant or exhibited to any one else until so produced, and also having produced in court a document which consisted of a typewritten letter, a typewritten list and a printed slip, all three fastened together as one document, stating expressly the terms of the production, namely, stating that 'this is the only letter we have in our possession containing a copy of that list, with such additional names as were given to the president, etc.,' his honor erred in permitting such typewritten list to be used as a list furnished by defendant on demand, without submitting the letter and printed exhibit at the same time, when there was nothing else than such production by the defendant to show that such typewritten list had been sent out by defendant.

"(14) Because his honor erred in ruling that a part of a letter might be introduced in evidence by plaintiff with the privilege to defendant of introducing the other parts and in permitting the plaintiff so to introduce said list detached from the entire letter; whereas, the letter having been produced as a whole and the list only as a part of it, all the parts were admissible in evidence as a whole, or none of them.

"(15) Because the production having been made simply as a letter in the possession of the defendant, containing a list, etc., without any statement on the part of counsel as to the nature of the letter or the character of the reference in the letter to the list, and more particularly without any statement on the part of counsel that the said list had been sent out, his honor erred in permitting a part of the said letter to be introduced in evidence by plaintiff as a list which had been sent out by defendant, when there was no evidence that such part had been sent out by the defendant or that it had been set out as a list of strikers, or that it had come from the defendant at all, except as might be explained by the letter.

"(16) Because his honor erred in not granting, upon motion of the defendant, a nonsuit, because (a) there was no competent testimony of any conspiracy, agreement, or combination between the defendant and any other mills as to nonemployment of strikers at other mills, or as to any other unlawful act, or lawful act to be accomplished by unlawful means; (b) the communication of the names of strikers to other mills, if legally proved, was a confidential communication and gave to plaintiff no cause of action; (c) it was an entire failure to prove the material allegations of the complaint to a wrongful act by the defendant.

"(17) Because his honor erred in the opening general remarks of his charge in conveying to the jury his impression that the defendant had done wrong to the plaintiff and that such wrong was of a grave nature, thereby expressing his opinion on the facts, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution.

"(18) Because, the case being one between employer and employe, between a corporation and a laborer, the issue being an alleged unlawful combination between the corporations to prevent the defendant from pursuing the labor of his hands, and the testimony having been introduced for the plaintiff in the effort to show that he was driven from his home into enforced exile, his honor erred in addressing to the jury the opening remarks of his charge, the said remarks having the effect of applying the statements of Holy Writ to the facts of this case, and so applying them, both in the substance of the quotations and the manner of their introduction, as to inflame the prejudices of the jury and to play upon their sympathies, thus tending naturally to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jury, and to lead to a capricious verdict without regard to the facts of the case.

"(19) Because his honor violated the provisions of the Constitution in charging that, upon the issues raised by the pleadings in this case, 'it appears to me to be one of the most serious and far-reaching in the principle involved of any which has come under my observation'—thereby indicating punitive damages being involved, that the charge was of a serious nature, and indicating his opinion to the jury.

"(20) Because his honor erred in refusing defendant's request to charge numbered 5 (11), which was as follows: 'That if defendant, a cotton mill corporation, was reflected upon for its conduct in the matter of a strike, in a published article in a newspaper, with the names of those who helped to break the strike also published, a reply by said corporation defending its course and giving the names of those concerned in the strike, sent only to other cotton mill corporations, engaged in the same line of business, is a privileged communication and in itself furnishes no cause of action for resultant cause or damage to those whose names are properly on such list'—it being a correct proposition of law, not a charge on the facts, and asked of him a construction of a written document.

"(21) Because his honor erred in refusing, upon request of the defendant, to charge that the jury could not find punitive damages in this case.

"(22) Because his honor erred in refusing, upon request of defendant, to charge that the jury must find a verdict for defendant.

"(23) Because his honor erred in refusing defendant's motion for a new trial, he having charged that plaintiff could not recover unless plaintiff established 'a combination, or conspiracy, or agreement among these mills to which the Granby Mills was a party,' and there being no legal evidence to sustain such allegation of the complaint.

"(24) Because, his honor having charged, in effect, that plaintiff could not recover unless he established a conspiracy between these mills to which the Granby Mills was a party, a conspiracy being an agreement to do an unlawful thing or a lawful thing by unlawful means, there was no competent evidence of such agreement between Granby Mills and any other mill, and his honor erred in refusing a new trial on this ground.

"(25) Because his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'If it (that is, the act of the defendant) was merely a wrong on their part, you could only give him actual damages, such actual damages as he may be sustained by reason of the violation of his legal right to get work, but, if you found that there was (a) willful, wanton, malicious conduct on their part, * * * why, you go into the question of punitive damages also' again, after charging plaintiff's fifth request, 'If the act was merely wrongful, only actual damages can be recovered; if willful or malicious, punitive damages'—the error being that such charge ignores the quasi privilege of a communication between those engaged in the same business, and ignores the justification of honest mistake and reasonable grounds for belief, even where the publication was in fact wrong.

"(26) Because his honor confuses in his charge throughout conspiracy—that is, an agreement to do an unlawful act or a lawful act by unlawful means—with mere agreement or combination to an act which may become unlawful when done beyond and outside of the scope of agreement.

"(27) Because the uncontradicted testimony of the witnesses Parker, Beaty, Black, Duncan, Praddy, and Wallace that there was no such agreement or combination as was charged in the complaint was not overcome by the statement of the witness Green that as a matter of courtesy, existing several years before, information would be given to an inquiring mill superintendent of the reasons why an applying employé had been discharged by the mill of whom such inquiry was made, and there being no other legal testimony on this point.

"(28) Because his honor in his order refusing a new trial erred in stating that the list referred to in defendant's thirteenth ground for a new trial 'was not one and the same paper as the others which defendant had attached to it, but was the list which plaintiff referred to in his complaint,' and upon such misapprehension, clearly shown by the record, he erred in refusing a new trial."

Shand & Shand, Lyles & Lyles, and W. H. Parker, for appellant. Clark & Clark and Logan & Edmunds, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action for damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff as the result of a conspiracy between the defendant and other like corporations, whereby a number of such mills refused to give employment to the plaintiff, after being notified by the defendant that it had black-listed him. The answer to the complaint was a general denial. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $2,000 actual and $3,000 punitive damages. The defendant's attorneys made a motion for a new trial, and his honor, the presiding judge, ordered that it be granted, unless the plaintiff remitted upon the record $3,000 of the amount awarded for punitive damages, which was done, and the defendant appealed upon exceptions, which will be set out in the report of the case.

We proceed to the consideration of the exceptions.

First exception:

The objection to the testimony was too general, as it failed to specify the ground thereof. Norris v. Clinkscales, 59 S. C. 232, 37 S. E. 821. It would be unjust to the plaintiff, as well as to the presiding judge, to consider the ground of error assigned by the exception, when the presiding judge was not requested to rule thereon. There is, however, another reason why the exception must be overruled. The following statement appears in the record: "Before any witness was sworn Mr. Edmunds, plaintiff's attorney, inquired of defendant's attorney what response they would make to their notice to produce. Mr. Shand, defendant's attorney, produced and handed to Mr. Edmunds a paper, which he said was the original list of strikers, and had never been out of the possession of defendant until this moment. This paper is the one hereinafter printed as the paper introduced in testimony numbered 1. Mr. Shand also at the same time produced and handed to Mr. Edmunds the three papers attached together by a pin, which were afterwards taken apart by plaintiff's attorneys, and the one below, numbered 3 of the documentary testimony, was offered in evidence by plaintiff's attorneys, and the two hereinafter referred to in documentary evidence numbered 5 were offered in evidence by defendant."

J. H. M. Beaty, a witness for the defendant, thus testified: "Q. When this strike took place, do you know whether or not a list of the strikers was furnished other mills? A. I didn't personally. Q. Just whether you knew it? A. Well, I know it was done, but I was going to say I didn't see it done, and a copy of it was not furnished me, but I know it was done. Q. Did you see any of those lists? A. I afterwards did; yes. Q. Whereabouts, Mr. Beaty? A. I had to get a copy of what was sent out from Mr. Parker in Greenville. The original list that he used, of course, was made up at the mill. Q. The original list was sent out from Greenville? A. Sent out from Columbia. Mr. Parker was in Columbia at that time."

Mr. Lewis W. Parker, president of the Granby Mills, testified as follows: "Mr. Shand: Now, here is the typewritten list of the weavers containing a good many names, and among others is O. M. Rhodes, L. E. Rhodes, Hoyt Rhodes, Harley Rhodes, and Sally Rhodes, and about a dozen or so of loom fixers. We offer that in evidence. You sent that to the Palmetto Mills, to the manager of the mills and to some others? A. Some other mills in the state. I sent none outside of the state, but to a certain number of mills in the state where my personal relations were pleasant. * * * Q. Were the ones you sent out all alike? A. Exactly alike, manifold copies. The lists were manifolded, and this is one of the manifold copies, and the list of strikers so attached to the letter was the manifold list. Q. If all were in the courthouse, they would look like that and read that way? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Where did you get the list that you attach to the letter? A. That list was furnished me by the office at the Granby Mill. Q. On your demand? A. On my request." Thus showing that the list of strikers was furnished by the Granby Mills.

Second exception:

The testimony just set out shows such connection.

Third, fourth and fifth exceptions:

Even conceding that there was error, it has not been made to appear that it was prejudicial to the rights of the appellant.

Sixth exception:

The statement and the testimony reproduced in considering the first exception show that the question presented by this exception is without merit.

Seventh exception:

The error assigned by this exception will be determined when the court comes to consider the exceptions, assigning error in refusing to direct a verdict and grant a new trial on a similar ground.

Eighth exception:

This exception fails to point out the specific ruling which the appellant seeks to bring in review, and is therefore too general for consideration.

Ninth exception:

Previous rulings on other exceptions dispose of this question.

Tenth, eleventh and twelfth exceptions:

What was said in considering the first exception shows that, even if erroneous, these rulings were not prejudicial.

Thirteenth and fourteenth exceptions:

The following ruling of the presiding judge shows that this exception cannot be sustained: "As to the ground which seeks to charge error in admitting the list in evidence, and not requiring plaintiff at the same time to introduce and read to the jury other papers, which had been attached to the list in response to plaintiff's notice to produce said list, the report of the case will show that the list was not one and the same paper as the others, which defendant had attached to it, but was the list which the plaintiff referred to in his complaint. He did not consider the other attached matter relevant to prove his case. I gave defendant permission to introduce said other papers whenever he saw fit, and as a matter of fact, when introduced, they furnished most effective evidence for plaintiff, and were constantly read and referred to in his behalf, and sought to be explained away on behalf of defendant in the arguments."

Fifteenth exception:

What has already been said disposes of this exception.

Sixteenth exception:

When the defendant produced the list of strikers, it did not object to its introduction on the ground that its communication to other mills was confidential; so that, even if it could be regarded as a privileged communication, the exception cannot be sustained. The other assignments of error mentioned in this exception will be determined when the court shall consider whether there was error in refusing to direct a verdict or grant a new trial on the ground that there was no testimony tending to prove a conspiracy.

Seventeenth and eighteenth exceptions:

These exceptions are too general for consideration, but, waiving such objection, they cannot be sustained, as the appellant has failed to satisfy this court that such rulings were prejudicial.

Nineteenth exception:

It is not reversible error for the presiding judge merely to call to the attention of the jury the gravity of the issues involved.

Twentieth exception:

What was said in considering the sixteenth exception shows that this exception must be overruled.

The consideration of the twenty-first and twenty-fifth exceptions will be postponed until it is determined whether there was any evidence of a conspiracy.

Twenty-eighth exception:

What has already been said shows that this exception cannot be sustained. We next come to the consideration of the seventh, sixteenth, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-sixth, and twenty-seventh exceptions, which, in the language of appellant's attorneys, raise the question whether there was "error in holding that there was some evidence of a combination, conspiracy, or prior agreement between the defendant and other cotton mills, and in failing, because of such erroneous rulings, to grant a nonsuit, direct a verdict, and grant a new trial."

J. C. Kirby, an overseer of weaving in the Columbia Mills, thus testified as a witness for the plaintiff: "Q. Do you remember whether or not the name of Olin M. Rhodes was on that list? A. As well as I remember, it was. * * * Q. Did he apply to you for employment? A. Yes, sir. Q. Was it given to him? A. No, sir. * * * Mr. Edmunds: State whether or not the strike at Granby Mills, and his name being on that list, that employment was declined him? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. What was your objection to taking him? A. The objection was with me. In the first place, Mr. Wallace instructed me not to employ any one of the strikers. * * * Q. You had need for labor in the mill at that time? A. I do not remember. We generally do. Q. You cannot say whether you would have employed him or not, if he had not been reported as a striker? A. I rather think I would have. Q. If he had come and told you he had struck at Granby, and wanted employment in your mill, would you have employed him? A. No, sir. Q. When was that, that he applied to you; how long after the strike at Granby? A. Probably two or three days. I can't tell you. Q. Did he tell you he had not struck? A. Yes, sir. Q. He said so? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did he tell you his family had not struck? A. No, sir; he told two of his family had struck, as well as I remember. Q. But that he had not? A. Yes, sir. Q. And the other two had not? A. I think that is the way it was, as near as I can remember now."

C. S. Green, an employé of the Columbia Mills, testified as a witness for the plaintiff as follows: Q. Do you know as a fact whether or not there is any agreement or understanding, written or verbal, between the various mills about the employment of labor, help, leaving one mill and going to another? * * * Q. If there is any verbal understanding, please state it? A. There is a tacit understanding, commonly known as 'mill courtesy,' whereby one superintendent has information from the other superintendent as to help leaving one mill, and seeking employment in another mill. * * * Mr. Edmunds: Is that agreement and understanding, tacit understanding, does that exist with your mill and the Granby Mill and other mills here? A. It is entirely within the jurisdiction of the superintendent. Q. But as a matter of fact do you know whether or not these superintendents of these mills are in that agreement? A. There is no agreement. Q. Well, tacit understanding? A. Courtesy. I expect they would extend the courtesy to us, if we were to request it. We would, I know. Q. So, Mr. Green, if one applies to the Columbia Mills, and your inquiry showed that they had left the Granby Mill in a manner that was displeasing to it, raised any disturbance, left owing money, or like matters, then, in view of that mill's courtesy, state whether or not the Columbia Mills would give such a one employment? A. I would say not. * * * The Court: Ask whether that would apply to the Granby Mill? A. It would apply to any mill that chooses to give us the courtesy. No understanding, simply over the phone, we ask if certain people left there regularly. * * * Q. Who in the mill is held responsible for the employment and discharge of the help? A. The superintendent primarily, and the overseer secondarily. Q. Then I ask you, that being true, if whether or not it is true that the superintendent of the Granby, Columbia Mills, and other mills of Columbia are in that understanding? Mr. Shand: Speak of your own knowledge and confine yourself to 1907, please. A. I cannot confine myself to 1907. I was in New York at that time. * * * Q. I mean this: You say that a tacit understanding existed prior to the time you left here? A. Yes. Q. Is that tacit understanding still—is it still in effect? A. I cannot say it is or not. No occasion has arisen to make a necessity to use it, or to make a necessity to raise the question. Mr. Edmunds: Q. If a case should arise, state whether or not from your position as agent of the Columbia Mills Company, or the agent here at the Columbia Mills Company, you would make use of that understanding? A. I certainly would. Mr. Parker: We object. He is asking the conclusion of the witness on a hypothetical question. The Court: I think that admissible. The charge is that the Granby Mill blacklisted this man, and the charges are also that by that blacklist he was unable to secure work at other mills. This testimony tends to show, if it be true, that he was blacklisted, and that he could not secure employment at other mills. It is competent. * * * Q. You say that, when you left here, there was this tacit understanding on the part of superintendents of the mills? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. This tacit understanding between the superintendents, was it anything more than an agreement to stop that practice, of trying to get the help from other mills. Is not that what you are thinking about? A. No; it was more of a mutual protection from undesirable employes. We advanced, and I suspect other mills did the same thing, money to help them when they needed it, and we required them to give notice two weeks' duration before ceasing term of service with us. If they left before serving out the notice, they often left owing money, and we would have no chance of collecting it. This understanding, tacit understanding, we had with other superintendents. * * * Q. What do you mean by tacit? A. I think I explained that more fully in stating mutual courtesy. Q. It was not one mill agreeing with another mill, but each particular superintendent did not care to take hands from other mills that had been discharged from those mills for what reason? A. Did not care to get undesirable help. Q. It was the habit more than a tacit understanding? A. I prefer to call it courtesy. Q. Just a courtesy of one mill to another? A. One superintendent extending it to another. It was purely a mutual arrangement between the superintendents. Q. The courtesy consisted of your informing other mills, and asking information of other mills, and on that information to act upon it? A. Or not, as we see fit. Q. And it was courtesy on the part of other mills to give you information? A. Yes, sir; and which we reciprocated on like occasions. Q. If they had heard there was a strike, would they have asked whether the party applying was in that strike or not? A. They would not have waited to ask. They would instruct that nobody from that mill should be employed.

* * * Q. Well, now, when you would instruct those parties who had been on strike, or anything of that sort, should not be employed, would that instruction be in the interests of your own mill and for your own protection, or by reason of courtesy to other mills? A. Absolutely for our own protection. Q. And you could have employed them if you wanted to? A. Might, taking chances. Q. And, if you did not employ, it was entirely with an eye to your own interests? A. Yes, sir; absolutely. Q. And there was no agreement or understanding to the contrary? A. None whatsoever. Mr. Edmunds: Q. But the courtesy existed, and was a practice? A. The courtesy was to give information. Q. And it was practiced, was it not? A. I don't think I can answer that point, as I do not practice it myself. I can answer from hearsay. Q. You can answer from general custom? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well? A. Practice. Q. Mr. Green, the mill itself is a body corporate, and does not undertake to employ weavers, loom fixers, and truckers? A. We hold the superintendent responsible for the mill help. Q. Those matters are left in charge of them? A. Absolutely. Q. And the mills recognize their authority to do these acts? A. They hold them responsible for doing these acts."

O. M. Rhodes, the plaintiff, thus testified: "Q. After seeing Mr. Wallace, where did you go? A. I went back home, and then to the Granby Mills office, to see Mr. Black. Q. State what conversation took place between you and Mr. Black, at the Granby Mills office, when you returned after having seen Mr. Kirby, and after having seen Mr. Wallace? * * * A. I asked if he would not give Dozier and Hoyt work, if he would not give Harley and myself work, that we had nothing to do with the strike, wouldn't he give us work back. Q. You asked if he would not give you work, if he would not give you and your boys work? A. Yes, sir. Q. What response did he make to that? A. He would not do it. Q. Did any further conversation take place between you at that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. Please relate it. A. Then I asked him if he would not do that to give me a pass to the Columbia Mills, that Mr. Wallace would give me work, if he would release our names off the list, and if he would hold no claim over us; and his remark was: 'I could not do that, if I was ever so willing. You are in the hands of the American Cotton Association.' Q. At that time did you tell him the result of what had taken place between you and Mr. Wallace? A. Only I told him that Mr. Wallace said he would give me work, would be glad to have us, if he would give us the pass. Q. State whether or not at that time you said anything to Mr. Black, the superintendent of the Granby Mill, about your name being on any list furnished to Mr. Wallace? A. I told him if he would release our names off of that list, Mr. Wallace would give us work.

* * * Mr. Edmunds: Q. Coming back to the time when you went to see Mr. Wallace, please state to the court and jury exactly what took place between you and Mr. Wallace, what you said and what he said. * * * A. I told him we had nothing to do with the strike at the Granby Mills, that two of my boys was in that went out with the weavers, but my daughter and myself had nothing to do with it, and asked couldn't he give us work under the circumstances. Q. What did he say? A. He said if I would go back to the Granby Mill and work that he would be glad to hire us, or if Mr. Black would give me a transfer, stating that he would release our names from off the list, and that they held no claims over us whatever, that he would be glad to hire us, but otherwise he could not do it. * * * Q. You did not get any work from that time until you went to Danville, Va.? A. That is the only place that I applied for a job that I could get. That happened to be an independent company that did not belong to the American Cotton Association, and therefore they had the right to hire when they pleased."

L. E. Rhodes, a witness for the plaintiff, testified as follows: "Q. Did Mr. Wallace give Mr. Rhodes any reason which related to any act of the Granby Cotton Mill why he could not give him employment? A. He did. Q. Please state it. * * * A. Mr. Wallace said that Mr. Black informed him on the morning of the strike, and told him he had trouble, and not to hire any of the help, and about three days later he sent him a list of names of loom fixers, known as blacklist, and later he sent him a list that was known as an additional list, and he told father, if he would get Mr. Black to release his name off the list, that he would give him employment, for him and his whole crowd, and be glad to get them. That was pretty much the words Mr. Wallace used."

Dozier Rhodes thus testified in behalf of the plaintiff: "Q. Now, after this strike took place, did you have any conversation with Mr. Black, the superintendent of the Granby Cotton Mill, about going back to work, about your going back to work, and about your father and his people going back to work? A. I had a little conversation with him, about giving me a pass to the other mill, and he said: 'I have got nothing to do in giving you a pass. I did not tell you all to quit, and I would not give a pop of my finger to keep you from getting work, but, if the president should find out you is working, you will be turned right off.' He said this American Cotton Mill business has got money. And I went to the Capital City Mills, after he would not give me a pass. I went to the Capital City Mill and I asked Mr. Ed. Thomas for work, and he said, 'Where are you from?' Mr. Shand: We object, he is not the plaintiff. (Objection sustained.)" The objection to the testimony had reference to the last question, as the defendant had permitted similar evidence to be introduced during the examination of L. E. Rhodes as a witness without objection.

T. B. Wallace, superintendent of the Watts Mills, thus testified in behalf of the defendant: "Q. If one comes to you as a striker, as one who has struck, would you consider him as a suitable employé? A. Not in my business. Q. Would you wish to employ such a person? A. No, sir. Q. Is it or not the interest of the mill that such a person should not be employed? A. That is my position. Q. Is that generally recognized among mills? A. That is recognized among mills. Q. If one comes to you as a striker, and you are satisfied that the cause of striking is unjustifiable, and that he is an unsuitable employé, would you employ that man? A. Most emphatically no. Q. Suppose you heard there was a strike, would you or not pursue the inquiry as to what it was about, who were the strikers and how many? A. Yes, sir; I think we would. Q. If you were to get that message, what was the natural thing for you to do, when you got the message that there was a strike? A. To protect my own interest, I would try to find it out who the strikers were. Q. If you had their names, if the names were given to you, in response to the request, what would you do? A. I would instruct my overseers not to employ them. Q. Do you remember receiving a list of the strikers at the Granby Mill, being handed to you at any time? A. If my memory serves me right, there was a list that came to the Duck Mill, and I think that list fell into the hands of Mr. Ball, but I was acquainted with the facts before I received that list. Q. Was that on the day of the strike, or after the strike? A. That was on the day of the strike. I do not know what day the list came in, but I was in possession of the facts of the strike before receiving the list. Q. As soon as you were in possession of the facts, did you or not give orders about it? A. I did. Q. Did you or not give orders before you received the list? A. I had. Q. What were the orders? A. I gave instructions to the overseers not to employ any of the strikers of the Granby Mill. Q. Were those orders given of your own discretion in the course of your duty or not? A. They were."

W. A. Black, superintendent of the Granby Mills, testified in behalf of the defendant, as follows: "Q. If you knew a man was a striker, and had struck for an unjustifiable cause, would you or not employ that man? A. I would be afraid to employ a man who had that reputation. * * * Q. Did you sometimes have a request from mills to give a list of employés who had struck? Did you or not have such requests; and, if you knew of a strike, would you or not wish to know who were the strikers? A. Well, yes, sir."

J. H. M. Beaty, general manager of the Granby Mills and a witness for the defendant, thus testified: "Q. How long after the strike before these lists were prepared? A. I couldn't say positively. I don't think it was over three or four days. Q. You know as a matter of fact that a number of people who were on these lists were refused employment on that account, do you not? A. I can't say that I do positively."

It will be observed that the foregoing testimony is of two kinds—direct and circumstantial. Even though it be conceded that the direct testimony only tended to prove that the defendant and other mills sustained towards each other a relation denominated a courtesy or understanding, but that it did not tend to show an agreement that they would not employ those blacklisted by any of said mills, still it does not follow that there was error in refusing to grant a nonsuit, direct a verdict, or order a new trial. If the circumstantial evidence tended to show that the relation which the mills sustained towards each other was so intended and did have the direct effect of preventing those who were blacklisted by one mill from getting employment at the others, then it would make very little difference whether such relation was called a courtesy, or an understanding or an agreement, as it is the result which is expected to follow from the relation, and not the name by which it is called, that characterizes it. Blackwell v. Mtge. Co., 65 S. C. 105, 43 S. E. 395. In other words, a person is presumed to intend the natural consequences that may reasonably be expected to result from his act. State v. Chemical Co., 71 S. C. 544, 51 S. E. 455. Therefore, if the plaintiff was prevented from getting employment at the other mills as the direct or proximate result of being blacklisted by the defendant, then it could reasonably be inferred that there was such an understanding or agreement between the mills as naturally to cause such result, and such understanding or agreement would in effect constitute a conspiracy; the name by which it was called being immaterial.

In considering the circumstantial evidence, even if no single fact is sufficient to establish prima facie a conspiracy, nevertheless, when the several circumstances are considered together, they may have such effect. The rule is thus stated in Dantzler v. Cox, 75 S. C. 334, 55 S. E. 774: "The ninth exception assigns error in overruling the motion for a new trial on the ground that there was no testimony to support the verdict. While there was no direct and positive testimony sustaining the defenses set up in the answer, still there were facts and circumstances from which the jury might properly have drawn the inference in favor of said allegations. The rule is thus stated in Railroad v. Partlow, 14 Rich. Law, 237: 'It may be that no one of the facts would of itself warrant the inference, and yet, when taken together, they may produce belief, which is the object of all evidence.' In 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 51a, it is said: 'It is not necessary that the evidence should bear directly upon the issue. It is admissible if it tends to prove the issue, or constitutes a link in the chain of proof, although alone it might not justify a verdict in accordance with it. All the circumstances mentioned in this ground may be regarded as links in the chain of proof, from which the jury might deduce the inference of the defendants' privity and direction in the acts of trespass. This is usually the case where an issue depends on circumstantial evidence.' This principle is affirmed in Wertz v. Railway, 76 S. C. 388, 57 S. E. 194. The circumstances tending to show a conspiracy are (1) the keeping of a blacklist by the mill discharging the employe, not only as a matter of information for itself, but also for the benefit of those mills with which it sustained a certain relation denominated a courtesy or understanding; (2) the fact that as a result of such courtesy or understanding a discharged employe was prevented from getting employment at any of the other mills. These facts at least tended to establish an implied agreement which was in effect a conspiracy, and the exceptions raising this question are overruled. As the appellant's attorneys concede that the charge of the presiding judge upon the question of conspiracy was free from error, it is unnecessary to discuss the law upon that phase of the case.

Having reached the conclusion that there was testimony tending to show a conspiracy, we proceed, lastly, to consider the twenty-first and twenty-fifth exceptions, which assign error on the part of the presiding judge in refusing to charge when requested by the defendant's attorneys that the plaintiff was not entitled to punitive damages. There are two reasons why the request to so charge was not erroneous: (1) The conspiracy alleged in the complaint imports an intentional wrong, and for such wrong punitive damages are recoverable. Pickens v. Railway, 54 S. C. 498, 32 S. E. 567. (2) The refusal of the defendant to withdraw the name of the plaintiff from the blacklist after becoming aware of the fact that he was not a striker, and that he could not get employment at the other mills while his name remained upon the blacklist, tended to prove malice.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

WOODS, J. I concur in the result. It was not necessary that the evidence should show that the defendant had formed with other mills a conspiracy—a combination to do an unlawful thing or a lawful thing in an unlawful manner—and had injured plaintiff by acts done in furtherance of such conspiracy. Had the court instructed the jury to that effect, the defendant would be entitled to a new trial, for there was no evidence of conspiracy between the defendant and other mills. There was evidence of an agreement or combination among the mills to furnish to each other the names of strikers and other persons whose presence at the mills would for any cause be undesirable. But such a combination of employers is no more unlawful than similar combinations of laboring men not to work for certain persons regarded as unfair in their dealings with their employes. As long as such combinations are entered into and used for promoting the legitimate business purposes of those concerned, others have no cause of action on account of the combination, although the effect of it may be to injure them; but, when the combination is made an instrumentality of injuring others through malice or threats of intimidation, a right of action arises for the resulting injury. When more than one of the parties to the combination agree to using the combination for such illegitimate purposes, a conspiracy arises; and, when one against whom such conspiracy is directed suffers injury in consequence of it, he has a right to action against one or all the parties to the unlawful agreement charging them as conspirators. The plaintiff's action does not fail because there was no evidence of such a conspiracy between two or more of the mills, for one of the parties to a legitimate combination or agreement gives a cause of action by using maliciously such a combination as a means of injuring another person. These principles are now generally recognized by the courts of this country. Wabash Ry. Co. v. Young, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091, note; Gray v. Building Trades Council, 108 Am. St. Rep. 477, note; 1 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 172, note.

The main question involved in the trial of this case was whether defendant's officers had willfully perverted a lawful combination between itself and other mills so as to inflict injury on the plaintiff. Stated more specifically, Did the defendant, with knowledge that the plaintiff was not a striker, put his name on a list of strikers sent to other mills, or with such knowledge refuse to take plaintiff's name off the list, and thus willfully prevent his employment by other mills? The court did not charge that proof of a conspiracy was necessary to a recovery, but that the case was stated on an alleged combination or conspiracy between the defendant and other cotton mills. The jury might well have found a verdict for the plaintiff upon reaching the conclusion that there was no conspiracy with other mills, but a lawful combination with them perverted by the defendant in the way above indicated, to the injury of the plaintiff. The court charged, in effect, that it was not sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that he was injured by a combination not to employ strikers, because such a combination was lawful, but that the plaintiff must go further, and show that the defendant maliciously perverted such combination to the injury of the plaintiff. The language of the charge in this connection was: "As a matter of law the right of employers to combine for blacklisting purposes or of an employer to circulate a blacklist among its various employing agents seems to be in the absence of malice undoubted. But the presence of that element, according to the trend of the decisions, gives the injured employé a right of action." The testimony quoted in the opinion of Mr. Justice GARY, while not tending, as it seems to me, to show a conspiracy, was evidence from which the jury could infer that there was a lawful combination not to employ strikers, and that defendant, after knowledge that plaintiff was not a striker, willfully persisted in representing him to be one with the resulting injury that he was unable to obtain employment.

It follows that the plaintiff's contention that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the charge of the court cannot be sustained.

HARRIS v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 30, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1186*)—REVIEW—REVERSAL ON CONFESSION OF ERROR.

A judgment of conviction will be reversed on the commonwealth's confession of the trial court's error in refusing to allow the foreman of the grand jury to testify to statements made by a witness before the grand jury at variance with the same witness' testimony at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1186.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Fauquier County.

One Harris was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Reversed.

Richard E. Byrd and Marshall McCormick, for plaintiff in error. Wm. A. Anderson, Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

No opinion was delivered, but the following order was entered:

PER CURIAM. This day came as well the plaintiff in error, by counsel, as the Attorney General on behalf of the commonwealth. Whereupon the said Attorney General, being of opinion that this court would be compelled to reverse the judgment of the circuit court of Fauquier county, rendered on the 2d day of October, 1909, upon the ground that the said circuit court erred in refusing to allow W. B. G. Shumate, foreman of the grand jury which found the indictment upon which the accused was tried, to be called as a witness on behalf of the accused to testify to statements made by Irvin Maxheimer when called as a witness before the grand jury, which were in direct conflict upon a material point with the testimony of said Maxheimer when he was called and examined as a witness for the commonwealth on the trial of the case, on the ground that the proceedings of the grand jury were privileged, and that a member of the grand jury should not be allowed to testify as to any statements made before the grand jury by any witness called to testify before it, and the Attorney General and his assistant also being of the opinion that the rule indicated by Judge Moncure in Little's Case, 25 Grat. 921, and approved in Massachusetts and other states, is the correct rule, deemed it their duty to confess error in this case upon that ground alone.

Therefore it is considered by the court that the said judgment be reversed and annulled, the verdict of the jury set aside, and a new trial awarded the plaintiff in error, which is ordered to be forthwith certified to the said circuit court of Fauquier county.

Reversed.

GRESS et al. v. KNIGHT et al. (six cases).

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*) — SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—RESCISSION FOR FRAUD.

As between a stockholder and the corporation, unless special circumstances alter the case, the general rule that contracts obtained by fraud may be avoided by the party defrauded applies to a stock subscription induced by the fraud of the company through its authorized agents, and so likewise where only the rights of other shareholders are affected, the company being solvent and "a going concern."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 244-265; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*) — SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—RESCISSION FOR FRAUD.

If a person subscribes for stock in a corporation, and thereupon the company proceeds to do business upon the basis of the stock subscribed, and incurs indebtedness, the subscriber cannot, after insolvency of the company and the appointment of a receiver, obtain relief on the ground of fraudulent representations, as against creditors thus obtaining rights, or a receiver representing them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 264; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*) — SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—RESCISSION FOR FRAUD.

Where a subscriber for stock in a corporation seeks to set aside the subscription on the ground of fraud in its procurement, after a receiver has been appointed for the company, in determining whether he can do so, it is to be considered what length of time has elapsed since the subscription was made; whether the subscriber has actively participated in the management of the affairs of the corporation; whether there has been any lack of diligence on his part, either in discovering the fraud, or in taking steps to rescind after its discovery; and whether any considerable amount of corporate indebtedness has been created since the subscription was made which remains outstanding and unpaid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 262, 264; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*) — SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—RESCISSION FOR FRAUD—SUFFICIENCY OF INTERVENTIONS.

The interventions did not show on their face such facts of the character indicated in the preceding headnote as to render them subject to general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 262, 264; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*) — SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—PROCEEDINGS TO RESCIND FOR FRAUD—SUFFICIENCY OF INTERVENTIONS.

None of the grounds of the special demurrer were properly sustained, except those which objected to the allegation that the bank owed "an item of about twenty thousand dollars of accrued interest," without stating to whom it was due or showing any sufficient reason for the failure to do so, and the allegation that at least $75,000 of the loans and discounts set out in its statement were worthless, without any further specification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 264; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

Error from Superior Court, Ware County; Paul E. Seabrook, Judge.

Proceedings for the appointment of receivers for the Bank of Waycross. A. M. Knight and others were appointed receivers, and M. C. Gress and others intervene, praying for a rescission of their subscription to the stock of the bank. Demurrers to the interventions were sustained, and interveners bring error. Reversed, with directions.

On November 23, 1907, the Bank of Waycross made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors. Later receivers were appointed. Certain persons intervened, alleging in brief as follows: The bank had long had an authorized capital stock of $50,000, of which $25,000 had been issued and fully paid up. On July 11, 1907, the capital stock was increased from $50,000 to $150,000. All of this was sold to or divided among the original stockholders, except about 250 shares of the par value of $100 per share. These shares were sold to new subscribers, including the interveners. False and fraudulent representations were made by the bank and its agents to induce the taking of these shares, some being printed, some written, and some oral, each intervention stating those on which the intervener relied. The dates of these purchases of stock ranged from August 1st to September 4th. Each of the interveners alleged reliance on the representations in taking the stock, and each intervention contained an allegation of this character: "Petitioner has never participated in any meeting of stockholders of said bank, that he has never been an officer thereof, and has never received or accepted any benefit of any character whatsoever from said bank or by reason of his ownership or possession of the said stock thereof." Some of them also alleged that they proceeded immediately upon the discovery of the fraud, and one set out specifically certain reasons why he could not have known of the fraud before the assignment. Some had paid for the stock, some had given notes therefor. The prayers were for a rescission and other equitable relief. General and special demurrers were filed. They were sustained and the interventions dismissed; and the interveners each excepted.

Shelby Myrick and Toomer & Reynolds, for plaintiffs in error. Bennet & Conyers. Myers & Parks, S. W. Hitch, Wilson, Bennett & Lambdin, Lankford & Dickerson, Adams & Adams, and J. L. Sweat, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. 1. In England it is settled that after the commencement of winding up proceedings against a corporation an application to be relieved from liability as a shareholder on the ground of fraud practiced upon him by agents of the company in procuring the subscription comes too late. Oakes v. Turquand, L. R. 2 H. L. 325; Stone v. City & County Bank, 3 C. P. Div. 282. By the companies act of 1862 (Statutes at Large; 25 & 26 Vict. 434, §§ 23, 26, 37, 38) every company was required to keep a register of members or shareholders, showing the name and address of each, and the date of becoming a member and of ceasing to be a member, and a penalty was provided for a failure so to do. Once a year a list was required to be made up and forwarded to the public registrar. The register of members was made prima facie evidence of what it was required to contain. On winding up every present and past member who had not ceased to be a member for a year was liable to contribute to the payment of debts. How far the English decisions may have been affected by the requirements of that act need not be considered. In this state there is no similar law. The courts must determine the question by applying general principles of equity. A stockholder occupies a threefold relation: First, to the corporation itself; second, to other stockholders; and, third, to creditors of the corporation. Fraud does not render a contract absolutely void, but voidable. It remains valid until repudiated or avoided. As between a stockholder and the corporation, unless special circumstances alter the case, the general rule that contracts obtained by fraud may be avoided by the party defrauded applies to a stock subscription induced by the fraud of the company through its authorized agents. So also where only the rights of other shareholders are affected; the company being solvent and "a going concern." These matters are of comparatively easy solution. But, where the rights of creditors are involved, the question is one of greater difficulty. Some American decisions have announced in general terms the rule laid down by the English courts; but in most of them additional circumstances existed, such as receiving benefits after knowledge or notice of the fraud, acts done, after notice or knowledge, inconsistent with a disaffirmance, laches, estoppel, the intervening of rights of innocent third parties, or the like. Thus in Chubb v. Upton, 95 U. S. 685, 667 (24 L. Ed. 523), Mr. Justice Hunt said: "It has been several times adjudged in this court that in an action by such assignee to recover unpaid subscriptions upon stock in such an organization the defense of false and fraudulent representations inducing such subscription cannot be set up, especially when the subscriber has not been vigilant in discovering such fraud, and in repudiating his contract." It cannot be easily determined just how far a rule laid down in general terms would be applied in the absence of the facts added to it under an "especially." In the case just cited Chubb was sued by an assignee in bankruptcy of the company. He sought to set up irregularities and informalities in the increase of capital stock to which he became a subscriber, and also fraud in the procurement of his subscription. It appeared that he was president of a branch of the company, took part in its meetings, paid money on his stock, and at one time gave a proxy to another person to attend and vote at a stockholders' meeting at the main office. He made no effort to cancel his subscription. The company incurred liabilities, and was adjudicated a bankrupt about 15 months after his subscription. Clearly he should not have been relieved. In Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. Ed. 203, the shareholder had delayed repudiating his subscription for three years and until an assignee in bankruptcy had been appointed, and there were other circumstances showing laches. Discussions of the subject will be found in 2 Thompson on Corporations, §§ 1440, 1449; Upton v. Englehart, 3 Dill. 496, Fed. Cas. No. 16,800; Farrar v. Walker, 3 Dill. 506, Fed. Cas. No. 4,679 (reported unofficially); Newton National Bank v. Newbegin, 74 Fed. 135, 20 C. C. A. 339, 33 L. R. A. 727, and note; Parker v. Thomas (Ind.) 81 Am. Dec. 385, 401, note. A number of American decisions are to the effect that where one subscribes to stock and the company proceeds to do business, incurs liabilities and later fails and is adjudged a bankrupt, or its assets are placed in the hands of a receiver for the purpose of winding it up, no rescission will be allowed, unless under exceptional circumstances. Thompson, Corporations, § 1450.

Turning now to the decisions in this state, in Grangers' Insurance Co. v. Turner, 61 Ga. 561, a subscriber proceeded by attachment to recover of the company the amount paid by him on his subscription before discovering the fraud. It was alleged that the stock was worthless. The defendant demurred to the declaration in attachment. The demurrer was overruled, and defendant excepted. It was held that the action would lie; that if the fraud had been condoned by acquiescence or otherwise, or if such legal or equitable rights had attached in favor of creditors of the corporation as that the plaintiff could not, on that account, recede from his subscription, these matters could be shown, but that, as they did not appear on the face of the declaration, it was not demurrable. In Turner v. Grangers', etc., Ins. Co., 65 Ga. 649, 38 Am. Rep. 801, it was held that, though a subscription to stock may have been induced by fraud, the subscriber could not recover the amount paid by him, if there were creditors to an equal or larger amount on debts contracted after his subscription. In that case it was alleged that the stock was worthless, and that the defendant, a foreign corporation, had made an assignment. In Hamilton v. Grangers', etc., Ins. Co., 67 Ga. 145, the ruling was approved. In Stewart v. Rutherford, 74 Ga. 435, the plaintiff had been induced by fraudulent means to join in obtaining a charter, entering into a venture and putting in money. He filed an equitable petition against the other members (who were alleged to be conspirators) and the company. It was held that equity would grant him relief, whether the company was insolvent or not. It was said: "Of course, if innocent parties have been affected by the corporation during its operation, the court will protect them." In Beck v. Henderson, 76 Ga. 360, it was held that where a corporation had held itself out to the world and contracted debts on the faith of its organization, and a stockholder had stood by and interposed no objection he was bound, and in a suit by the receiver, on a promissory note given for the amount of his subscription to the capital stock, he could not successfully defend by showing fraud in procuring his subscription. In Howard v. Glenn, 85 Ga. 233, 11 S. E. 610, 21 Am. St. Rep. 156, it was held that if one became a stockholder in a corporation, though his subscription was obtained by fraud, he would be liable to its creditors for so much of his unpaid subscription as in connection with the amounts due by other corporators might be necessary to pay its debts. The defendant, however, was an original corporator and subscriber, and whatever debts were incurred were made after his subscription.

When a person becomes a stockholder of a corporation, he becomes a part of it. Its agents are in a sense his agents. They go out and deal with the public. If through their dealings debts are incurred, assuming both the stockholder and the creditor to be innocent and that one must suffer, the former, who put it in the power of the agents to do the wrong, should suffer rather than third parties who dealt with such agents. Civ. Code 1895, § 3940. As to creditors whose claims arose after the stockholders became such, their rights are superior to any right of rescission. The status of a stockholder relative to creditors who became such after he took the stock is not in all respects identical with that relative to antecedent creditors. As to creditors whose debts were created before he took the stock, questions of laches, acts inconsistent with rescission, estoppel, etc., might arise. The new stockholder may have permitted the increase of indebtedness and the lessening of the assets with which to pay. It does not affirmatively appear in this case whether debts were created after the interveners became stockholders, or their amount. There was originally an allegation in each intervention on information and belief that all the creditors were the same as those existing before the new stock was issued; but this was stricken by amendment. We do not think that it can be said as matter of law that such laches or conduct on the part of the interveners affirmatively appears on the face of the respective interventions as to authorize us to declare that no rescission could be had, whatever may be developed by the evidence. It was error to sustain the general demurrers. If the interventions were not otherwise demurrable, they did not become so by reason of failing to negative the existence of any debts incurred after they took their stock. That was matter of defense to the intervention under the facts alleged. Most of the special demurrers were not meritorious. These were not original suits, but interventions in the main suit, where the assets, books, and memoranda were in the hands of the receivers. The special demurrers, if they were all sustained, would have required the attaching to each intervention of a large part of the items from such books, in order to show insolvency, or that the representations that there were no overdrafts and that there was a large surplus; etc., were false. We do not think this was necessary. When the facts are shown, it can be made to appear whether a fraud was really perpetrated on each of the interveners, whether there was any lack of diligence in discovering such fraud or unreasonable delay in seeking relief after its discovery, whether there was any active participation by the interveners in the management of the corporation, or whether debts had been incurred after the intervener became a stockholder, which either gave corporate creditors superior equitable rights or estopped the intervener from denying that he was a stockholder, and generally whether his conduct was such as to prevent relief.

In three of the interventions (those of Mrs. Rigby, Knox, and Hay) it was not alleged in terms when the interveners discovered the fraud. But the special demurrers, though containing 13 grounds each, and making a variety of points, do not distinctly raise any question upon that ground. Under the allegations in the interventions, and in view of the short time from the taking of the stock to the assignment, less than four months in one instance, and still less in others, we do not think that for this reason they were subject to general demurrer. Some of the grounds rested upon the idea that, though it was alleged that the interveners were induced by false and fraudulent published statements of the bank and oral statements of its officers (which were set out) to subscribe for the stock, and also that the interveners had no other means of knowing the condition of the bank, the interventions were demurrable for not alleging that the interveners demanded an inspection of the books and papers of the bank before taking the stock, or immediately afterward. Such allegations were not necessary.

Two grounds of the special demurrers only do we think should have been sustained. It was alleged that the bank owed "one item of about $20,000 of accrued interest." A ground of the demurrer made the point that it was not stated to whom this "item" was due. The point was well taken. It appeared to be a single item, and no reason is apparent why it should not have been described more definitely. But this should not have caused the sustaining of all the other grounds of demurrer, general and special, and the dismissal of the interventions. Another ground of special demurrer attacked the general allegation that at least $75,000 of the loans and discounts were worthless, with no specification as to them. This was well taken. Opportunity should be given to amend as to these points before dismissing any portion of the interventions for that reason.

Judgment in each case reversed, with direction. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

BROWDER, MANGET & CO. et al. v.
BLAKE & MADDEN et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTION (§ 5007)—DISTRIBUTION OF PROCEEDS.

A firm bought certain mules, and gave to the vendors a purchase-money note in which it was provided that the title should remain in the latter until payment. This was duly attested and recorded. Later common-law judgments were obtained against the purchasers, and the executions issued on them were levied on the mules. None of the purchase money had been paid. The vendors attempted to foreclose their note by affidavit, as in case of a chattel mortgage or bill of sale given as a security for a debt not exceeding $100 (Civ. Code 1895, § 2753; Acts 1899, p. 82), and placed the execution issued upon such foreclosure in the hands of the sheriff in order that they might claim the fund arising from the sale. The mules were sold under the common-law executions, and brought their full value. The debtors were insolvent. One of the holders of the note containing the provision for the retention of title was present at the sale and bid thereat, and bought one or more of the mules. A money rule was brought to distribute the fund arising from the sale. Held that, although the note could not be foreclosed by affidavit, like a chattel mortgage (Berry v. Robinson & Overton, 122 Ga. 576, 50 S. E. 378), yet on a rule to distribute money equitable principles are applied (Civ. Code, § 4776); and, under the facts above cited, there was no error in ordering the proceeds of the sale to be paid to such vendors (Winter v. Garrard, 7 Ga. 183; Green & Colwell v. Hill, 101 Ga. 258, 28 S. E. 692; Civ. Code, § 3974).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

2. CASE DISTINGUISHED.

The ruling here made does not conflict with the decision in Rich v. Colquitt, 65 Ga. 113. That case involved only the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage (which in this state conveys no title, but only creates a lien), and an effort to claim funds under an execution issued upon a void foreclosure. Likewise the facts do not make a case falling within Civ. Code 1895, § 2759.

SHACKELFORD et al. v. ORRIS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 11, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 419*)—CONSIDERATION—SUBJECT OF INQUIRY.

Certain heirs at law of an intestate brought a statutory complaint to recover an undivided interest in a described tract of land against the grantee of the husband of the intestate. The intestate had made a deed to the land to her husband, reciting as a consideration the love she bore him and $10, and containing words of conveyance applicable to both a gift and a sale. Upon the trial of the case, the plaintiffs contended that the deed was one of bargain and sale from the wife to the husband, not authorized by an order of court, and therefore void; and further contended that if the deed was one of gift, it was void because a wife could not make to her husband a valid gift of property belonging to her separate estate. Held:

The consideration of a deed may always be inquired into when the principles of justice require it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1912-1917; Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 210*)—NATURE OF CONVEYANCE—INTENT OF PARTIES.

Whether a deed which expresses as a consideration love for the grantee and a small sum of money is a voluntary conveyance depends upon the intention of the parties; and this intention is to be ascertained by an inquiry into all the facts and circumstances at the time of its execution which will throw light upon the question as to whether the deed was executed as the consummation of a sale or as the evidence of a gift. Martin v. White, 115 Ga. 866, 42 S. E. 279.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 635, 636; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 49%*)—CONVEYANCE FROM WIFE—GIFT.

A wife may give property to her husband, but a gift will not be presumed. The evidence to support it must be clear and unequivocal, and the intention of the parties must be free from doubt. Civ. Code 1895, § 2491; Brooks v. Fowler, 82 Ga. 329, 9 S. E. 1089.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 260; Dec. Dig. § 49%.*]

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 49%*)—CONVEYANCE BY WIFE—GIFT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence having been submitted tending to show the deed to be one of gift, the court committed no error in admitting it in evidence, over objections that it showed on its face that it was a deed of bargain and sale of the wife's private property, and it did not appear that it had been allowed by the superior court of her domicile.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 260; Dec. Dig. § 49%.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 278*)—HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 49%*)—CONVEYANCE BY WIFE—DECLARATIONS BY GRANTOR.

As the plaintiffs claimed to own the property as heirs at law of the wife, evidence that the latter stated subsequently to the execution of the deed, that it was one of gift, and that she had given the property to her husband, was admissible in behalf of the defendant, who purchased from the husband, for the purpose of showing that the deed was one of gift, and not of bargain and sale. Civ. Code 1895, § 5181; 2 Wigmore on Ev. §§ 1080-1082; 1 Enc. Ev. 523.

(a) Evidence of such statements made at the time of the execution of the deed from the wife to the husband were likewise admissible.

(b) Such evidence was not rendered inadmissible because it was not shown that the statements were ever communicated to the defendant, the purchaser of the land from the husband.

(c) Evidence of such statements was admissible whether they were made in the presence of the husband or when he was not present.

(d) Testimony of one who witnessed the deed from the wife to the husband that "I did not see any money pass in my presence and it was right before me" was admissible as a circumstance to show that the deed was one of gift.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1137, 1138; Dec. Dig. § 278;* Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 260; Dec. Dig. § 49%.*]

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 49%*)—GIFTS BETWEEN—ACTION TO VACATE—PLEADING.

One plea of the defendant averred that she employed an attorney to examine the title, and that the wife represented to him that the deed made by her to her husband was a deed of gift, and not one of sale, and that he was induced thereby to recommend to the defendant that the husband had a good title to the property, and that the defendant was induced by such recommendation to make the purchase from the husband, and that the plaintiffs, who claimed the land as heirs at law of the wife, were estopped from setting up title thereto on the ground that the deed to the husband was void because it was one of bargain and sale, and had not been allowed by the superior court of the wife's domicile. Held, that the court committed no error in refusing to strike this plea and in admitting testimony in support thereof.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-260; Dec. Dig. § 49½.*]

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 49½*)—GIFTS BETWEEN—ACTION TO VACATE—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

The attorney referred to in the preceding headnote testified that at the time the defendant bought the land from the husband the wife stated to him that her deed to the husband was one of gift, and that he relied upon such statement in recommending to the defendant that the title of the husband was valid, and would have recommended the title without the paper herein-after referred to, and would not have so recommended if the wife had not said that her deed to her husband was one of gift. He testified, "I wanted to make doubly sure of it, and I also fixed up the consent deed," which was a paper signed by the wife reciting that she consented to her husband deeding the property to the defendant, and relinquished "any and all right, title, and interest that I may have to the within-described property." Held, that the court committed no error in admitting in evidence such paper signed by the wife, over objection that it evidenced a contract of sale by her "as to her separate estate with her husband, * * * and it not appearing that said sale was allowed by the superior court of the county of the wife's domicile."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-260; Dec. Dig. § 49½.*]

8. NEW TRIAL (§ 104*)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Even if the alleged newly discovered evidence of statements made by the wife was such as to be admissible upon a trial of the case, it was cumulative in its nature, and the judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing a new trial because of such newly discovered evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 218-220; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

9. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The charge was clear and full, and fairly presented to the jury every material issue in the case; no error of law requiring a new trial was committed, and the evidence supported, if it did not demand, a verdict in favor of the defendant.

BELOHER v. CRAINE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where on the trial of an action brought by a married woman against an executor, for the recovery of the value of her services rendered to his testator, the judge instructed the jury to the effect that a husband generally is entitled to the earnings of his wife, but he may by an express or an implied agreement waive his right to them, and consent that they may be paid to and retained by her as her separate estate, and, where the judge subsequently in his charge correctly made a concrete application of the law as above stated to the controlling issue in the case, it was not cause for a new trial that, prior to such concrete application of the rule, he used language from which it might be inferred that plaintiff would be entitled to recover for her services if her husband merely consented for her to enter into a contract with such testator to perform them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4219, 4221; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 206*)—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—SCOPE OF RECOVERY.

The court did not err in giving to the jury the following instruction: "If you believe that the contract was made between the plaintiff and [the testator]; that she was to go to his home and care for him and wait on him; and if you believe that the cooking of his meals and the serving of the same was part of her duty under the contract, if it was contemplated by both parties that [such] was to be a part of the taking care of him and waiting on him—then she would be entitled to recover for that, and that would be taken into consideration in fixing the worth of her services, if you find she is entitled to recover." Under the hypothesis stated by the judge, the cooking and serving of the meals by the plaintiff could not fairly be considered as the mere boarding of the testator by the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 733; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 451*)—ACTION FOR COMPENSATION—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court also charged that the defendant "pleads that he does not owe the plaintiff anything, for the reason that she has been paid. I charge you, * * * if you believe that the contract was made and services rendered, then the burden would be on the defendant to prove payment." This entire extract was excepted to on the ground that it "in effect instructed the jury that the defendant admitted the contract and filed a plea of payment," whereas there was no such plea, "but simply a plea setting up that plaintiff had been paid more money than any services she rendered were worth, if she could recover on quantum meruit." Such exception was without merit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1880; Dec. Dig. § 451.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 206*)—ACTION FOR COMPENSATION—SCOPE OF RECOVERY.

The court did not err in instructing the jury to the effect that if they should find that plaintiff was entitled to recover at all, she could not recover for anything she may have furnished for "the support of the family," if she, her husband, and their children lived in the house with the testator, nor would she be chargeable in such circumstances for anything consumed by herself, her husband, and children, as it was his duty to support them; nor would she be chargeable with anything that she may have received as a gift from defendant's testator, but would be chargeable with whatever he may have paid her for her services in taking care of and waiting on him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 733; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 141*)—COMPETENCY—PERSON INTERESTED AGAINST REPRESENTATIVE OF DECEDENT.

The court did not err in permitting the husband of the plaintiff, over the defendant's objections, to testify as follows: "He [defendant's testator] came up after her [the plaintiff] a number of times and wanted her to move back in the house with him to help take care of him and wait on him, that he was feeble and could not take care of himself. He wanted her to move back over there and wait on him. I did not want her to go, but finally I consented for her to go. I moved back with her, and helped her to look after her grandfather." The objections urged against this testimony were that the witness "was the husband and entitled to the wife's services and was her agent, and would be interested in anything she might get for her services; * * * that it was a transaction between him and her that would disqualify him, on the ground that [defendant's testator] is dead, and he could not testify in this case as to any transaction or communication with [the testator] and his wife and himself, and * * * that he appeared to be acting as her agent."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 576-579; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—ACTION FOR COMPENSATION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Nor was it error for the court to refuse to permit the plaintiff's husband to testify, on cross-examination, over the objection of her counsel, that the witness got $100 from a named bank during the time plaintiff was at the house of defendant's testator, on a note signed by witness and the testator, and that this money was used for the benefit of the family of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 902, 1865; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—ACTION FOR COMPENSATION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

It was not error for the court to refuse to permit the defendant to testify that plaintiff's husband "made no crop and that he did not support his family, and that [defendant's testator] had the family to support."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 902, 1865; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—ACTION FOR COMPENSATION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

The court properly declined to permit a witness for defendant to testify that defendant's testator told the witness, not in the plaintiff's presence, "that he did not owe plaintiff anything, and this was after she came back the last time and was living with him, and that she did not wait on him, and that he declared that he owed the plaintiff nothing."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 902, 1865; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

9. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The second item of the will of defendant's testator was as follows: "I desire my executor to pay my granddaughter, Lula Craine [the plaintiff], for her services for staying and waiting on me as long as I live, whatever she charges in the bounds of reason." There was sufficient evidence to authorize the verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

ATTACHMENT (§ 180*)—LIEN—PRIORITIES.

"The lien of an attachment is created by the levy," and as between themselves the attachment first levied takes precedence. This applies to the amount claimed under the original attachment. As to this amount the lien of the attachment is not lost by an amendment to the attachment lawfully made subsequent to the levy. If, by amendment, an additional sum is added to that claimed by the original attachment as levied, the lien as to this additional amount will not take precedence of an intervening attachment or intervening lien creditor.

Error from City Court of Richmond; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by E. S. Cleckley and S. H. Ransom against the Mutual Fidelity Company of Delaware. Judgment for plaintiffs in attachment, and, from an order granted for the distribution of the funds claimed by attachment, Cleckley brings error. Reversed.

W. K. Miller, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Fleming, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Emily S. Cleckley and Susie H. Ransom each brought separate attachment suits against the Mutual Fidelity Company of Delaware on the ground of nonresidence, these attachments being levied by serving summons of garnishment on the same garnishee, and they were returned to the same term of court. The attachment of Emily S. Cleckley was for $350 and was levied November 7, 1901. That of Susie H. Ransom was for $375, and was levied December 4, 1901. Declarations in attachment were duly filed, and judgments thereon subsequently taken. The questions in the present case arise on the distribution of the fund which the garnishee had paid into the court. The case was heard on an agreed statement as to the facts, and the court awarded precedence to the attachment of Susie H. Ransom, and the correctness of this judgment is challenged by the writ of error sued out by Emily S. Cleckley.

It is admitted that the lien of the judgment dates from the levy of the attachment. Civ. Code, §§ 4578, 4524, 4564. And it is also admitted that the attachment of Emily S. Cleckley was levied by service of summons of garnishment before that of Susie H. Ransom. It is insisted, however, in support of the judgment of the court below that this prior attachment lien of Emily S. Cleckley had been lost by an amendment which she had made to her declaration before she took judgment, that this amendment rendered void the attachment as against that of Susie H. Ransom or that of any other intervening lien creditor. It appears that M. T. Cleckley had sued the insurance company on a cause of action identical in legal import with that of Emily S. Cleckley, and, to meet the judgment of the Supreme Court in that case, Emily S. Cleckley amended her declaration before taking judgment. In the M. T. Cleckley Case the Supreme Court held that, as it appeared that the plaintiff had received from the defendant company in dividends on the contract more than he had paid the company, before he could ask for a rescission of the contract on the ground of fraud, he should have tendered back the amount which he had received in dividends, and, as there was no offer to restore, a nonsuit should be granted as to this branch of the case. Cleckley v. Mutual Fidelity Company, 117 Ga. 466, 43 S. E. 725. When the case of Emily S. Cleckley was called for trial on June 8, 1903, the plaintiff, in order to meet this decision of the Supreme Court, amended her declaration by electing to rescind the contract between her and the insurance company on the ground of fraud, and tendered back to the insurance company on that day the amount of $210 which she had received from the company in dividends. Thereupon the insurance company withdrew its answer, and consented that judgment be taken by the plaintiff for the principal sum of $560, being the aggregate amount of the sum which the plaintiff had paid to the insurance company under the contract and the premiums which she had received. It cannot be doubted that the plaintiff had the legal right to amend her declaration in attachment so as to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court in the other Cleckley Case. By this amendment she did not change her cause of action, but amplified it and made it a good cause of action under the ruling of the Supreme Court. Her original suit was for money had and received for her benefit by the insurance company, and her amendment amplified this cause of action by electing to have a rescission of the entire contract under which the money had been paid to the company; but, before she could have a rescission of the contract, she was compelled, under the law, to restore the status quo between herself and the defendant company, and this she could only do by offering to pay back the amount of dividends which she had received from the company. We think it clear that she had the right to make this amendment. C. & W. Railway v. Lyons, 5 Ga. App. 668; 63 S. E. 862; Dolvin v. Hicks, 4 Ga. App. 653, 62 S. E. 95; Boyce v. Day, 3 Ga. App. 276, 59 S. E. 930; High v. Padrosa, 119 Ga. 649, 46 S. E. 859; City of Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785, 48 S. E. 318. If she had the right to make the amendment, it would be illogical to hold that by the exercise of this right she lost her existing right of priority of lien arising from the priority of the levy of her attachment. We think that she did not lose priority of lien as to the original amount of her suit, which amount is included in the judgment rendered in her behalf. We do not think, however, that she would have a priority of lien as to the amount which she added to her suit by amendment. The lien as to this amount would date only from the date of the judgment. Getting down to the substance of the case, it seems to us that Emily S. Cleckley had only a legal right as against the company to a judgment for the amount of money which she had paid to the company, less the dividends which she had received from the company, and that, therefore, she could not have any lien on the fund paid into court by the garnishee for a greater amount than that for which she was entitled to have a judgment against the company. But the learned judge of the trial court held that the attachment of Susie H. Ransom was entitled to precedence over the attachment of Emily S. Cleckley. He gives no reason for this decision, but, in support of it, it is submitted by counsel for defendant in error that this precedence was lost because of the amendment which had been made to her attachment suit by Emily S. Cleckley. As above stated, we do not concur in this opinion of learned counsel. Under the statute, the lien of the attachment dates from the levy of the attachment for the amount on which the attachment is based. The lien on this amount is not lost because of an amendment which plaintiff in attachment has a right to make, but would remain as a valid existing lien on the amount of the attachment as originally sued out. This lien would not attach in favor of any increase added to the amount of the attachment by amendment as against subsequent lien attachments or intervening creditors.

Judgment reversed.

LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS' MUT. LIFE & ACCIDENT INS. ASS'N v. BOBO.

(No. 2,357.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. July 5, 1910.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 6, 1910.)(Syllabus by the Court.)1. INSURANCE (§ 750)—BENEFIT INSURANCE—DEFAULT IN ASSESSMENTS.

Where in a policy of life insurance issued by a benefit association and in the by-laws of the association it is expressly provided that "any member of this association neglecting or refusing to pay any assessment, when ordered as provided in the by-laws, * * * shall forfeit all right and title to membership, and be debarred from further participation in the insurance or benefits arising from the same," the nonpayment of assessments, when so ordered, will, in the absence of any waiver by the association, forfeit the policy and all benefits thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 750.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 817*)—BENEFIT INSURANCE—DEFAULT IN ASSESSMENTS.

A benefit association sued by the beneficiary of a policy cannot successfully defend on the ground that the policy was forfeited by nonpayment of assessments, unless proof is made that the assessments in question were ordered or levied, and notice thereof given to the insured, in accordance with the by-laws of the association.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1909-2002; Dec. Dig. § 817.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 819*)—EVIDENCE.

In this case the evidence clearly and satisfactorily shows that the insured had neglected and failed to pay assessments against his policy made in accordance with requirements of the by-laws of which he had due notice, and it does not appear that the forfeiture of the policy resulting from the nonpayment was in any manner waived by the association. The verdict against the association is without evidence to support it, and must be set aside as contrary to law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 819.*]

Russell, J., dissenting.

Error from City Court of Polk; F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Action by Laura Hutchings Bobo against the Locomotive Engineers' Mutual Life & Accident Insurance Association. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Lipscomb, Willingham & Wright and J. A. Wright, for plaintiff in error. Trawick & Ault, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Laura Hutchings Bobo brought suit against the Locomotive Engineers' Mutual Life & Accident Insurance Association as the beneficiary in a policy of insurance on the life of her brother, W. H. Hutchings. A demurrer to the petition was overruled, and exceptions pendente lite preserved. The jury found a verdict in her favor for the full amount of the policy, and the defendant's motion for a new trial was denied. We may dispose of the exceptions arising on the judgment overruling the demurrer by the statement that they were without merit, and that the judgment was correct. Besides the usual general grounds in the original motion for a new trial, there are numerous assignments of error in the amended motion. Omitting, as a useless consumption of the valuable time of this court, any discussion of many immaterial questions raised by the numerous assignments of error, we come directly to the essential and controlling issues in the case. The evidence elucidating and illustrative of these issues will appear in the course of the opinion.

1. The insured was killed by the explosion of a boiler in August, 1907. Was the policy in force at the time of his death? The defendant claims that it was not, that it had been forfeited by the failure of the insured to pay the assessments made by the company against the policy for the months of April, May, June, and July, 1907. This makes the first issue of fact. On this issue the only evidence that the insured had kept his policy in force by the payment of the assessments thereon is found in two letters or reports made by the secretary of a subdivision of the insurance company located at Cedartown, Ga. After the death of the insured, this secretary wrote to the company at its principal office that the insured had paid his assessments up to the date of his death, and that the failure to mention that fact to the company in his monthly report "was an error of mine." Acting on this statement, the insured was entered upon the general register of the company as having paid his assessments. On the trial of the case this local secretary at Cedartown testified that the report which he had made out and sent to the home office that the insured had paid his monthly assessments up to the date of his death was untrue; that, in fact, the insured had not paid the assessments for April, May, June, and July; that he had been induced to make this false report after the death of the insured for the following reasons: That just before the death of the insured early in the month of August he had a conversation with the insured at Cedartown, when he called his attention to the fact that his assessments had not been paid; that, on that occasion, the insured promised to pay the assessments on the following pay day, which was the 18th of August, and that in the same conversation the insured informed him that he wanted to change the name of the beneficiary in the policy from that of his sister to that of his wife, he having married subsequently to the inception of the policy, and that he then requested the agent to write out the proper transfer, changing the name of the beneficiary in the policy, and for this purpose he delivered to the agent his policy. The widow was very poor, the agent states, and he had been informed by the husband of the sister named as beneficiary that his wife did not desire to make any claim on the proceeds of the policy, and, wishing to secure the money for the widow, he himself wrote out the statement changing the beneficiary, signed the name of the insured thereto, and sent this transfer along with the proof of loss to the company, with a statement that the assessments had been duly paid, and from his own money remitted the amount of the assessments. The agent testified that all of these things were done by him after the death of the insured, and that he was prompted solely by the motive to secure the insurance for the benefit of the penniless widow of a brother engineer. It is contended that the jury had the right to believe the report made by the agent to the company notwithstanding his testimony on the subject. It must, however, be conceded that this report by the local secretary or agent possesses little evidentiary value, in view of the sworn explanation made by the agent on the trial of the case. But other evidence shows that the insured during his life and just before his death stated that his insurance had lapsed, and was not in force; and there is no evidence whatever in the form of receipts or vouchers that the assessments had ever been paid, nor was there any record of the fact in the office of the company either at the local office at Cedartown or at the home office, except the record which was made at the home office, based upon the untrue report of the agent after the death of the insured. Taking all these facts and circumstances into consideration, and giving to them due weight, the conclusion is irresistible that the insured had not paid the assessments on his policy during the months of April, May, June, and July, prior to his death in August, and that, if the verdict of the jury was based on the finding that these assessments had been paid, it was without evidence to support it. If the assessments had not been paid under the terms and conditions of the policy and according to the constitution and by-laws of the company, the contract of insurance was forfeited. The policy provides that: "Any member of this association neglecting or refusing to pay any assessment when ordered as provided in the by-laws, * * * shall forfeit all right and title to membership, and be debarred from further participation in the insurance or benefits arising from the same." The constitution and by-laws of the association provide, in section 15, that "the secretary of each subdivision shall keep a list of the members of the association connected therewith, and forward their names to the general secretary-treasurer as soon as possible after placing them on the list. He shall also erase the names of those who fail to pay any assessments within the specified time, and report the same to the general secretary-treasurer, that they may be erased from the general register." Section 28 provides that "any member failing to pay the assessments when ordered as provided in the by-laws, or within the prescribed time, shall forfeit his membership, and shall forfeit all right and title he or his beneficiaries may have to any benefits or claims in or against this association." It follows from the provisions of the contract and the constitution and by-laws quoted that the insured and his beneficiary forfeited all right to any benefit or claim arising from the policy upon the failure of the insured (or some one for him during his life) to pay the current assessments made by the company against the policy.

2. To avoid this result, it is contended by learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that it was not satisfactorily shown that any assessments had been levied or declared against the policy which had not been paid by the insured. It is contended that the burden was on the association to show that the assessments had been duly levied or declared. This court is unreservedly committed to the proposition that no presumption will be indulged in favor of forfeitures, and especially of forfeitures of contracts of insurance; and, where a beneficial association sued upon a policy seeks to escape liability upon the ground of a failure to pay premium or assessments, or upon any other ground of forfeiture, the burden would be upon the association to prove the fact relied upon as establishing the forfeiture; and we hold that the association cannot successfully defend upon the ground that the policy lapsed by nonpayment of assessments, unless proof is made of the levy of the assessments, and that notice of such assessments was duly given to the insured, in accordance with the requirements of the policy, or of the constitution and by-laws of the association. 29 Cyc. 246; Tourville v. Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, 54 Ill. App. 71. Section 26 of the constitution and by-laws of the association is as follows: "The assessments and all notice pertaining to the business of the L. E. M. L. & A. I. A. as printed in the B. of L. E. Monthly Journal shall be deemed or taken to be lawful, sufficient, and the only notice thereof to all the members." It is insisted by the defendant in error that this provision applies only to the notice of the assessments, and not to the levy of the assessments; and, if the provision quoted was the only provision on the subject, this might be well contended. It is insisted by counsel for the plaintiff in error that the levy or declaration of the assessments on the policy is made in no other way than by the publication of the assessments in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' Journal; and, in proof of this assertion, attention is directed to the following extract from the Journal: "Locomotive Engineers' Mutual Life & Accident Insurance Association. Official notice of assessments 1037-1041. Series G. Office of Association, Room 808, Society for Savings Building, Cleveland, Ohio, March 1, 1907. To the Division Secretaries L. E. M. L. and A. I. A.: Dear Sirs and Bros.: You are hereby notified of the death or disability of the following members of the Association. Five assessments for the payment of these claims are hereby levied and Secretaries ordered to collect $1.25 from all who are insured for $750, $2.50 from all who are insured for $1,500, $5 from all who are insured for $3,000, and $7.50 from all members insured for $4,500, and forward same to the General Secretary and Treasurer. Members of the Insurance Association are requested to remit to Division Secretaries within thirty days from date of this notice, * * * on penalty of forfeiting their membership." Section 45 of the by-laws provides that, when the general secretary-treasurer shall receive from the secretary of the subdivision a report of a loss under a policy by death or accident, the president and general secretary-treasurer "shall issue a notice through the Journal, stating the age and date of admission and date and cause of death; also name of party to whom his insurance is payable, and order an assessment, to pay the same, of not less than fifty cents for each $1,500 policy held, upon each assessable member." Construing all these sections together, we are clearly of the opinion that the publication of the assessments in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' Monthly Journal constituted a levy or declaration of such assessments. Section 28, above quoted, provides that the assessments as printed in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' Monthly Journal shall be deemed or taken to be "lawful and sufficient," and that the notice of such assessments published in this monthly journal shall be "the only notice thereof to all members." We think the words "lawful and sufficient" apply to the levy of the assessments, and not to the notice of the assessments, for it is further provided that the notice as published shall be the only notice thereof to all members; and the language of the notice quoted from the Journal distinctly declares that "five assessments for the payment of these claims [those specified in the notice] are hereby levied." The levy consists in the publication of the assessments in the Journal. In other words, the only provision that the by-laws contain with reference to the levy of an assessment is that which relates to the publication of this assessment in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' Monthly Journal, and the provisions from the by-laws which we have quoted deal not only with the notice of the assessments, but also with the declaration or levy of the assessments. Usually the by-laws of similar organizations provide that the levy shall be made and entered on the minutes, or made and entered on a book kept for that purpose; but the only provision for the assessment and the levy and the notice thereof in the by-laws of the present association introduced in evidence is that relating to publication of the assessments in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' Journal. When the president and the general secretary-treasurer receive from subdivision secretaries information of losses under the policies, it is made their duty, under the by-laws, to order assessments through the Journal. It is not provided that the assessments so ordered shall be spread on the minutes of the association, or kept in the book for that purpose, but that they shall be published in the journal, and it is distinctly declared that this publication shall be "deemed lawful and sufficient," both as to the levy of the assessments and as to the notice of the assessments to the members. Any other method of levying, declaring, or ordering the assessments is entirely imaginary and speculative. But, even if the argument based upon the provisions of the constitution and by-laws of the association be not conclusive of this question, it would seem not unreasonable to hold that the publication by the association in its monthly journal of assessments against its policy holders would be sufficient to raise a presumption that such assessments had been levied and declared by the association. In other words, it would seem to be unreasonable to say that the assessments against policy holders had not been levied or declared, although such assessments had been published. The publication of the assessments presupposes their levy or declaration. "Acts done by a corporation, which presuppose the existence of other acts to make them legally operative, are presumptive proof of the latter." Demings v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 131 N. Y. 522, 30 N. E. 572. "The record of an assessment of a mutual insurance association reciting that the resolution ordering the assessment 'was unanimously adopted by the directors as a body, and by the executive committee,' is prima facie evidence against the members of the association." Van Frank v. Association, 158 Ill. 560, 41 N. E. 1005; Anderson v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, 171 Ill. 40, 49 N. E. 205. It would seem from these authorities, as well as on principle, that when the association published in its monthly journal, recognized and treated as its official organ, the assessments to pay losses, the presumption would follow, in the absence of an attack on the legality of the assessments otherwise, that all necessary steps preliminary to making the assessments had been duly taken by the association.

3. Did the association under the evidence in this case waive the forfeiture of the policy by the failure to pay the monthly assessments? It is contended by counsel for the defendant in error that the forfeiture was waived first by the conduct of the secretary of the subdivision at Cedartown in ignoring the provisions of the by-laws and the terms of the contract relating to the payment of assessments due by members. It is claimed that this agent or secretary had a very loose way of conducting his business; that he permitted the members to pay their dues whenever they saw fit, not insisting upon prompt payment; and that, therefore, the fact that the agent failed to collect the assessments when due, this being his general custom and practice, was sufficient to lull the members into inactivity on the question of prompt payment. The evidence does not show that the association itself approved of such slack methods of business on the part of the agent at Cedar-town, but shows that the nonpayment of assessments by the members as required by the by-laws was excused only when the secretary himself assumed the payment. The evidence on this subject was positive by the agent himself. He testified: "It is not true that the policy of this organization and the general custom is to accept dues from these members after they are delinquent. I did not do it regularly at this place; only in a few instances, and the company always accepted them when I took it on my part." Even admitting that the business methods of the secretary permitted a delay in the payment of assessments, such delay was in the very teeth of the by-laws on the subject which declared in positive terms that the members of the association should remit to the division secretaries within 30 days from the date of the publication of the notice in the monthly Journal on penalty of the forfeiture of their membership. If a member, therefore, delayed in paying his assessments in accordance with the by-laws, he took the risk of forfeiture, but, if, after the delay, he did in fact pay the division secretary the assessment, and the division secretary accepted the payment and afterwards forwarded it to the association, his failure to pay according to the by-laws would not be attended with the penalty of forfeiture, for the company would not have known whether the delay was due to the member or its agent; but this advantage to the member could accrue only during his lifetime. The assessments which had not been paid during his life could not be paid after his death so as to amount to a waiver. The beneficiary in the policy or any one else after the death of the insured could not by paying the assessments due by the insured which he had failed to pay during his lifetime avoid the forfeiture. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Ruse, 8 Ga. 545. In this case the division secretary testifies (and it is not controverted) that the insured did not pay the assessments for April, May, June, and July, and that after the death of the insured, for the purpose of securing the money for the penniless widow of the insured, he himself remitted the money to cover the assessments, and untruthfully reported to the company that the insured had paid them. In other words, the secretary, forgetful of his fiduciary relationship to the company, and actuated by sympathy for the widow of the deceased, attempted to restore the forfeited policy after the death of the insured, and knowingly made this attempt by means of untrue statements. Under section 2063 of the Civil Code of 1895, this conduct clearly made him guilty of a misdemeanor, and, by the same section, any certificate or renewal so secured was made absolutely void.

In the next place, it is said that the company issued a policy to the wife, in accordance with the direction as to change of beneficiary, signed by the insured; but surely this could not be construed as a waiver of the forfeiture under the uncontroverted fact. The association did not at that time know of the forfeiture. It had a report from its secretary that the policy with the sister as the beneficiary was in force, and, believing these things to be true, it accepted the money in payment of the assessments, which the agent had sent, and issued the new policy to the wife. If these facts proved anything, they proved payment of the assessments, and not a waiver of the forfeiture on account of their nonpayment. As they were accepted in ignorance of the true situation and in reliance upon the false statement made by the agent, and as the evidence shows that the money was returned to the agent on the discovery of his false representations, we think the evidence did not show either payment or waiver, but that the policy issued to the wife by virtue of the false statements was expressly void under the code section cited, supra. But, if not void under this code section, it would be void because the insured was at the time of its issuance not in an insurable condition, but dead.

In the third place, it is insisted that the company waived the forfeiture by demanding the payment of assessments after the insured had failed to pay them, and after the policy had lapsed thereby. There are several reasons why this contention is unsound. The publications of the assessments in the journal for the four months was directed to all the members of the association. It was not a notice sent to one who had ceased to be a member by reason of the lapse of his policy, nor was it a demand made on any one member for the payment of his assessment after notice of previous nonpayment and a forfeiture resulting therefrom. This court has held that subsequent demand of assessments or premiums is a waiver of the forfeiture of the policy and an acknowledgment that the delinquent policy holder is still entitled to the benefits conferred by his contract with the association. Farmers' Mutual Life Protective Association v. Elliott, 4 Ga. App. 342, 61 S. E. 493. But we do not think that this principle is applicable to the facts of this case, for the assessments called for in the publication of the monthly journal were a demand on the members of the association, members who held policies for certain amounts. It was not a demand on those who had ceased to be members because of a failure to pay their assessments.

It is contended in the next place that the general register kept at the home office showed that the association had received the assessment from the insured for the month of July on his policy. The local secretary at Cedartown testified positively that the insured had not paid the July assessment; that he himself had paid it after the death of the insured, and it was placed upon the general register after the false report of the payment by the insured had been received by the company from its agent at Cedartown. In the light of this evidence it cannot be rationally assumed that the insured did in fact pay the July assessment.

We have thus considered what we think are the material issues under the evidence in this case. There may have been inaccuracies in some of the instructions given by the court in his charge to the jury, though the charge as a whole seems to have been full and explicit as to the material issues in the case. There may be some merit in some of the numerous assignments of error, but, on the main questions which should control, we are convinced from an examination of all the facts that the forfeiture of the policy set up by the defendant was clearly and most satisfactorily shown, that the levy of the assessments which were not paid by the insured was made according to the by-laws of the association, and that there was no evidence whatever of any waiver by the association of the forfeiture of the policy which resulted from failure on the part of the insured or the beneficiary to pay the assessments lawfully made. Under the view we entertain of the law applicable to these controlling questions, the facts demanded a judgment for the defendant.

T. O. Hathcock and Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson, for plaintiff in error. Moore & Branch, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The Liberty Fruit Products Company brought a suit against S. Maloof to recover the purchase price of certain kegs of cider. The defendant pleaded payment, and set up that an unknown man came to him, and at his solicitation the defendant bought $60 worth of cider; that, shortly after the cider was delivered, the same man came and presented a bill, and requested the defendant to pay the bill, offering to discount it at 10 per cent. for cash; and that he paid him the amount of the bill, less the discount. The plea also set up that the defendant is an ignorant man and a foreigner, who could neither read nor write the English language. The defendant also pleaded that he dealt with the person who sold him the cider, and to whom he paid the money, as the owner of the goods. There was also a plea of failure of consideration, and the defendant testified that the cider had soured and was worthless. Exceptions taken to the charge of the court are all based upon the idea that the court should not have instructed the jury that, if the agent had authority to collect for his principal, the principal would be bound by the payment made to him.

It is well settled, of course, that a mere salesman, clothed only with the authority to take orders, is not, by reason of that fact, authorized to collect accounts for his principal; but it is equally well settled that the principal is bound by collections made in his behalf by a general agent clothed with authority to collect. Although one of the plaintiffs testified by interrogatories that Huddleston, who sold the cider, had no authority to collect, we think the circumstantial evidence in behalf of the defendant was sufficient to rebut this testimony, if the jury saw proper, as they evidently did, to prefer it to the testimony for the plaintiff. It is undisputed that Huddleston presented to the defendant an account for the identical cider which he had sold, written upon a printed bill head of the plaintiff, and we think the jury were authorized to infer from this that the account had been sent by the plaintiff to Huddleston for collection; and the lapse of time before they insisted upon payment from the defendant confirms the suggestion that they only disavowed Huddleston's authority after his disappearance with the money. Furthermore, the verdict can be sustained upon the proof in support of the plea of failure of consideration, and is likewise sustainable upon the ground that the evidence shows that this foreigner, who could not read or write English, and did not know the salesman, or whom he represented, and was not informed in regard to it, dealt with the salesman as the agent of an undisclosed principal, and as if he were the owner. Upon any one of these grounds we think the judgment of the court in refusing a new trial was fully authorized.

1. QUESTION FOR JURY.

As to the element of the defendant's negligence, there was ample evidence to make a case for submission to the jury.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

As to the element of the contributory negligence of the deceased: He and other laborers were employed in unloading gravel from a ship. The buckets of gravel, as they were filled in the hold by the deceased and his collaborators, were being hoisted by a donkey engine. The laborers had been instructed to stand clear of the hatches through which the buckets were being hoisted. The clutch on the engine slipped, and one of the buckets fell as it was being hoisted through the hatch, and struck and killed the deceased as he was working in the hold below. Held, that if the deceased voluntarily, and without the exigencies of his work so necessitating, assumed a position under the hatch while the bucket was being hoisted through it, the plaintiff should not recover. On the other hand, if the gravel was so piled in the hold that the deceased could not do the work he was expected to do without standing under the hatch, the question of his contributory negligence would be for solution by the jury. There was enough evidence tending to sustain the latter theory to prevent the granting of a nonsuit on this ground.

The certiorari was dismissed, and the prisoner surrendered himself into custody and served out the chain gang portion of the sentence, but did not pay the fine. Held, that the condition of the bond was complied with by the prisoner's having duly surrendered himself into custody, and that no action could be maintained on the bond for the purpose of collecting the fine.

POWELL, J. The headnote states enough of the facts for an understanding of the case. The bond is an appearance bond. Tucker v. City of Moultrie, 122 Ga. 160 (4), 50 S. E. 61. The words, "to abide the final order," etc., operate to limit, not to extend, the liability of the obligors. For instance, if the sentence had imposed a fine only, either directly or as an alternative to some other punishment, the bondsman could have discharged his liability either by the production of the prisoner or by paying the fine. The liability might be different if the condition of the bond were that the prisoner should appear and abide the sentence.

The prisoner having personally appeared and surrendered himself into custody for punishment in accordance with the sentence, the bondsman was discharged from further liability. The other obligor, the prisoner, remains liable for the fine, and the city may yet collect it from him by any authorized method.

While this general statement may be subject to exceptions, it is not apparent in the present case that there would or should have been a finding in favor of the plaintiff even if the trial judge had charged the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of rental which he lost by reason of the defendant's failure to abate the nuisance complained of; and he who assigns error must show not only error, but material injury in consequence thereof.

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Action by T. J. Carstarphen against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. From ejectment in favor of defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Miller & Jones and J. C. Morcock, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Hall and Wimberly & Jordan, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The plaintiff brought suit in the city court of Macon against the Central of Georgia Railway Company for $25,000 damages. He alleged that in consequence of the discharge of steam and water discharged under his building by the defendant through a drainpipe from the defendant's premises the building itself had been damaged $3,000, and, in addition thereto, he had sustained a monthly loss of $125 in the way of rent. According to the allegations in the petition, the presence of the pipe or sewer was unknown to him at the time he erected his warehouse, and the steam and water were surreptitiously discharged. The proof in behalf of the plaintiff tended to show that he (and his associates and predecessors in title) had no knowledge of the existence of this pipe or sewer at the time the warehouse was erected, and that from the appearance of the lot on which the building was erected the presence of the sewer could not have been detected by ordinary care and prudence. On the other hand, testimony in behalf of the defendant was introduced to the effect that the sewer was built in 1873, several years prior to the erection of the plaintiff's building, and that the brick bulkhead stood in plain view of every one, and was used as a seat and resting place by some of the witnesses. There was testimony in behalf of the plaintiff that no water or steam was discharged through it until after the plaintiff's building was erected. But, on the other hand, at least one witness for the defendant, Ben Goodyear, testified to seeing water flowing through it prior to the erection of the building. The testimony abounds with material conflicts, especially as to the plaintiff's knowledge of the sewer prior to the erection of the building, or at least as to knowledge of such facts that as an ordinarily prudent man he ought to have known of its existence and use. The suit was filed February 6, 1904. The evidence is undisputed that the first notice to abate the nuisance was given in December, 1903. The evidence is likewise undisputed that the sewer was not constructed by the present defendant, but by its predecessor in title—the Central Railroad and Banking Company—and the condition of the sewer, so far as appears from the record, was unchanged from what it was in 1896, when the Central of Georgia Railway Company purchased the property. It is therefore apparent that, allowing the defendant a reasonable length of time in which to comply with the notice to abate, the period for which there could be a recovery of lost rental, as against it, would in any event be only a little over one month. It matters not, however, how small the amount may be. If the plaintiff was entitled to it under the evidence, he should receive it. For that reason we have made a very exhaustive examination and a second review of the voluminous record in this case.

We are convinced that the court erred, as insisted by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error, in not presenting to the jury the proper measure of damage, representative of the plaintiff's allegation of damage arising from loss of rentals due to the condition of his building, caused by the alleged nuisance. The court gave the jury only one measure of damage which was the difference between the market value of the building before the injury and its market value thereafter. The jury should have been specially instructed that, if the defendant was liable, they should also consider any depreciation in the rental value, or, in other words, any loss in diminution of rents suffered by the plaintiff in consequence of the nuisance maintained by the defendant. But, conceding this error to exist as insisted by counsel for the plaintiff in error, it is not apparent that it affected the result or that the error was harmful to the plaintiff. In Conant v. Jones, 120 Ga. 568, 48 S. E. 234, following the rule in several earlier cases, the Supreme Court distinctly held that, in an action for damages where the jury found for the defendant, it was not reversible error that the measure of damage was incorrectly charged. We think perhaps that this general rule is subject to exceptions. For instance, in a case like the one now before us, if the judge had told the jury distinctly that the only measure of damage was the difference in the market value of the property before and after the notice to abate the nuisance was given, in the opinion of the writer this would perhaps have misled the jury into believing, even if there had been a loss of rentals to the plaintiff, that he could not recover it in the action then pending. However, the ruling of the Supreme Court in the Conant Case, supra, makes no exception; and it would seem to be sound, because in natural sequence the jury should always consider first whether the defendant is liable. If the defendant is found not liable, that is an end of the matter, and the verdict must be for the defendant. Only after the jury has determined that the defendant is liable does it become necessary for the jury to consider and determine the amount of the defendant's liability.

Upon a review of the evidence in the case at bar, while the testimony in behalf of the plaintiff might have authorized the conclusion that the plaintiff did not know of the existence of the sewer at the time the building was erected, nor thereafter, until a short time before he gave the defendant notice to abate the nuisance, the evidence in behalf of the defendant and the very circumstances of the case are so strong to the effect that the plaintiff was bound to have known of the existence of the sewer, and that he consented to its use, that the plaintiff in error has not borne the burden which devolves upon him at law of showing that the jury did not find, or they were not authorized to find, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover at all, and therefore that the error of the court as to the measure of damages was harmful to him. From the nature of the evidence it can only be inferred that the jury resolved the conflict therein in favor of the witnesses for the defendant, and reached the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to nothing. Especially is this true because diminution in rental value is so universally evidence itself of diminution of the market value. In this, the logical view of the case, the failure of the judge to give the jury the correct measure of damages, was immaterial because the instruction given, whether correct or not, could not be applied.

Judgment affirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 977*)—REVIEW—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

Where facts are involved, the first grant of a new trial will not be disturbed; and, even where the first grant of a new trial depends upon the legal construction of the evidence, the judge's view of the law will not be closely scanned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860-3865; Dec. Dig. § 977.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 854*)—REASONS FOR DECISION.

Where a wrong reason is assigned for the grant of a new trial, and yet it is apparent that there was good reason why a new trial should have been granted, the discretion of the trial judge will not be controlled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3408; Dec. Dig. § 854.*]

Error from City Court of Dublin; El. W. Jordan, Judge.

Action between J. W. Martin and J. W. Carter. From an order granting a new trial, Martin brings error. Affirmed.

Jas. B. Sanders, for plaintiff in error. W. C. Davis, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

CABANISS v. STATE. (No. 2,252.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. June 14, 1910. On Rehearing, Sept. 6, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1163*)—TRIAL FOR MISDEMEANOR AS FOR FELONY.

Prima facie, a person charged with a misdemeanor suffers no prejudice from having his case tried as if it were a felony, provided the court sentences him as for a misdemeanor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1163.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 62*)—ILLEGALLY DECLARING A DIVIDEND—NATURE OF OFFENSE.

The offense of a president or director of a bank declaring a dividend from funds of the bank other than the legitimate profits is a several rather than a joint offense; and, in an indictment against the president or one of the directors, it is not necessary to set out the names of other directors not indicted, though they may have participated in the declaration of the dividend.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

3. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 61*)—DIVIDEND FROM FUNDS OTHER THAN PROFITS.

It is criminal for the president and directors of a bank to declare a dividend from funds

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes other than profits, whether the bank in question be a bank of issue or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 278*)—PLEA IN ABATEMENT—GROUNDS.

The alleged disqualification of grand jurors propter affectum is not valid ground for plea in abatement to an indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 640; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

5. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 15*)—PLEA IN ABATEMENT—GROUNDS.

The fact that there is another indictment pending in court against the defendant charging him with the same offense affords no ground for plea in abatement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 83; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

6. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 137*)—MOTION TO QUASH—GROUNDS.

It is no ground for quashing an indictment that the oath was administered to the regular grand jurors, who served during the term, by a judge of the superior court who happened to be disqualified from trying the case arising on the particular indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 480-482; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

7. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 62*)—ILLEGAL PAYMENT OF DIVIDEND—EVIDENCE.

The evidence shows, practically without dispute, that during the defendant's incumbency as president of a bank it suffered losses through taking papers that proved to be insolvent and worthless; that these bad debts and worthless papers were not charged off, but were allowed to accumulate until they were sufficient not only to offset all surplus and undivided profits, but also seriously to impair the original capital of the institution; that while this state of affairs existed, and at a time when the defendant in all human probability knew it existed, he joined with the board of directors in declaring a dividend. Held that, irrespective of the defendant's motives in the matter, the transaction was a violation of the penal statutes of this state, and that these main facts are so strongly established as to preclude the granting of a new trial for slight errors in the admission or rejection of testimony relating to collateral issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 923*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

It is not sufficient ground for new trial that the court caused a disqualified juror to be put upon the defendant, where it appears that the juror was stricken, especially where it does not appear that the defendant was thereby caused to exhaust his peremptory challenges.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2225-2235; Dec. Dig. § 923.*]

9. JURY (§§ 41, 110, 149*)—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR—AGE—WAIVER.

In a criminal case it is ground of challenge that a juror is over 60 years of age. If the fact is known in advance, the right of challenge is waived by his being accepted as a juror. But if the fact of his being over age is discovered after he has gone into the box, but before the state has begun the introduction of testimony, either party may call the attention of the court to the matter, and it thereupon becomes the duty of the court to cause him to be removed from the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 246, 507; Dec. Dig. §§ 41, 110, 149.*]

10. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 62*)—ILLEGAL DIVIDEND—PROSECUTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In the prosecution of a bank president for illegally declaring a dividend on a given date, evidence going to show that the conditions which made the declaration of the dividend illegal had existed for some time prior thereto is relevant, as tending to establish the condition of the bank's affairs on the day in question, as well as to show the president's opportunities for knowledge of these conditions. Proof of the fact that while this condition of affairs was in existence prior dividends had been declared is relevant, as showing that the profits of the bank, instead of having been used to restore the bank to such a condition as would justify the declaration of a dividend, had been distributed to the stockholders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 400*)—EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY.

Though the charter and by-laws of a bank may be the highest evidence as to who should control its affairs, yet it is competent for a witness to testify that a designated person in fact controlled it; that is, had personal charge and direction of its business and affairs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 879-886; Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

12. WITNESSES (§ 240*)—EXAMINATION—LEADING QUESTIONS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Whether a party shall be allowed to ask a witness a leading question is a matter addressed solely to the discretion of the trial judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 795, 837-839, 841-845; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 400*)—IDENTIFICATION OF DOCUMENTS.

Where only the existence or identification of documentary evidence is involved, or where the contents of the writing is not the thing material to the inquiry, it is permissible for a witness to refer to the papers in question and to describe them in a general way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 879-886; Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 400, 1169*)—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—CURE OF INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE—SUMMARY OF BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

Where facts can be ascertained only by an examination of a large number of details on books of account, it is permissible for an expert accountant, who has made an examination of the books and figures, to testify as a witness and to give a summarized statement of what the books show, provided the books themselves are made accessible to the court and to the parties. Moreover, any error in the admission of evidence of this kind is cured where the books themselves are introduced in evidence, and it is admitted that they show the same facts testified to by the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 879-886, 3146; Dec. Dig. §§ 400, 1169.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 921*)—NEW TRIAL—ERROR IN EXCLUDING TESTIMONY.

Though the court may have been guilty of abstract error in refusing to allow the defendant's counsel to ask the state's witnesses, especially the expert accountants, as to how long it would have taken the defendant to have ascertained the bank's condition by an examination of the bank's books, still, under all the facts of the case, the error was immaterial and not of sufficient importance to justify the granting of a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2209; Dec. Dig. § 921.*]

16. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 62*)—DECLARING ILLEGAL DIVIDEND—PROSECUTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

There was no error in the court's allowing one witness to testify as to the correctness of a list of insolvent papers carried among the bank's assets (though he was ignorant of the fact of the solvency or insolvency of the papers), and in allowing another witness, who could not swear to the correctness of the list, to testify as to the solvency or insolvency of the particular papers mentioned. The testimony thus connected was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

17. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 460*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—SOLVENCY OR INSOLVENCY.

Solvency or insolvency is a matter admitting of opinion evidence under the general rules on that subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 460.*]

18. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 433*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

There was no error in admitting the correspondence referred to in the eighteenth division of the opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1022; Dec. Dig. § 433.*]

19. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 434*)—PROSECUTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

There was no error in admitting in evidence the books of the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

20. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 918*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

Colloquies between court and counsel as to the validity of objections to evidence do not usually afford cause for new trial. The incident complained of in the present case, as explained by the trial judge, falls within the general rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2182; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

21. EVIDENCE PROPERLY ADMITTED.

The testimony as to the transactions had with the bank by an alleged partnership was admissible in connection with other testimony, which, while disputed, tended to show that the defendant was a member of that partnership.

22. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 597*)—CONTINUANCE.

The action of the trial judge in overruling defendant's motion for a continuance in the light of all the circumstances does not warrant the grant of a new trial by this court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1831, 1832; Dec. Dig. § 597.*]

23. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 283*)—PLEA IN ABATEMENT—GROUNDS.

Even if it be valid ground for plea in abatement to an indictment that a qualified grand juror was discharged from the body, the fact that he was not for some cause disqualified or otherwise entitled to be relieved from service must affirmatively appear. Especially is this true where 18 qualified grand jurors remain after the juror in question had been excused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 654; Dec. Dig. § 283.*]

24. NEW TRIAL PROPERLY DENIED.

No sufficient cause for the granting of a new trial appears.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

J. W. Cabaniss was convicted of declaring a dividend out of funds of a bank other than profits thereof, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Jos. Hill Hall, W. D. Nottingham, Roland Ellis, M. Felton Hatcher, Warren Roberts, Custis Nottingham, and Henry C. Peeples, for plaintiff in error. W. J. Grace, Sol. Gen., and T. S. Felder, for the State.

POWELL, J. It will be necessary to extend this opinion to an unusual length in order to cover the case as presented in this court. The record contains about 400 pages of typewritten matter. Nevertheless we will attempt to deal with the case as briefly as is possible with due regard to the number of points presented and their importance. The indictment (omitting the formal parts) charges: "On the thirty-first day of December in the year nineteen hundred and six, in the county aforesaid, [the defendant] did then and there unlawfully, being president of the Exchange Bank of Macon and a director of said bank and a member of the board of directors thereof, said bank being a banking corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Georgia and having its principal office and place of business located in the city of Macon in said county, declare, in connection and conjunction with the board of directors of said Exchange Bank of Macon and a majority of said board of directors, a dividend of three per centum upon the capital stock of said Exchange Bank of Macon, and did then and there, in pursuance of said declaration of said dividend of three per centum as aforesaid, pay over said dividend to the stockholders of said Exchange Bank of Macon, said payment of said dividend as aforesaid being then and there made from the capital stock of said Exchange Bank of Macon and from other funds of said bank and not from the net profits arising from the business of said Exchange Bank of Macon, said declaration of said dividend and said payment thereof not being then and there authorized by the net profits arising from the business of said corporation. And the grand jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further say that the aforesaid offense herein alleged was unknown until the sixth day of July in the year nineteen hundred and seven."

To this indictment the defendant filed a demurrer, presenting in substance the following grounds: That the indictment fails to allege that the Exchange Bank of Macon was a bank of issue; that it does not allege the names of the person with whom this defendant acted in connection or conjunction, or show that they were unknown to the grand jurors, the offense being one which under the public law of this state could not be committed by one person alone, and therefore being a joint offense; that the indictment fails to allege any offense under the laws of this state. While the demurrer contains other grounds, the above statement practically covers them all.

The defendant also filed a plea in abatement. The first ground sets up that nine of the grand jurors impaneled at the term of the court at which the presentment was returned were not legally qualified to act as grand jurors in the investigation of the case, because they were drawn by Judge W. H. Felton (Judge of the superior court of the county in which the prosecution was pending), together with Robert A. Nisbet, clerk of said court, and George W. Robertson, the sheriff, and these persons were disqualified to act in the drawing of the grand jurors by reason of their being depositors in the Exchange Bank, and for other disqualifying causes. The second ground of the plea in abatement sets up that the precept containing the names of the grand jurors objected to was turned over by Judge Felton to Mr. Nisbet, the clerk, and that the latter was disqualified to handle the precept. The third ground sets up that Mr. Robertson, the sheriff, was disqualified to serve the grand jurors. The fourth ground sets up that Judge Felton was disqualified in causing these jurors to be impaneled to act as grand jurors. This ground also contains a subdivision setting up that 10 other persons were held to be qualified jurors by Judge Felton, but we are unable to ascertain exactly what is meant by this objection, as these persons do not appear in the list of grand jurors which is set out in the bill of indictment in the case. The fifth ground of the plea in abatement sets up that one of the grand jurors who participated in the return of the bill of indictment was related within the prohibited degrees to a stockholder in a corporation which was a depositor in the Exchange Bank, and was for that reason disqualified. The sixth ground sets up that one of the grand jurors was a stockholder in the Union Savings Bank & Trust Company, which was a depositor in the Exchange Bank, and for that reason was disqualified. The seventh ground sets up that nine of the grand jurors who participated in the return of the bill of indictment were disqualified to act as grand jurors in the investigation of the case, for the reason that they were drawn after the opening of the term by Judge Whipple, who presided in this case in lieu of Judge Felton, and were drawn by him in connection with Mr. Nisbet, the clerk, and Mr. Robertson, the sheriff, the latter two being disqualified from participating in the drawing of the grand jurors. The eighth and ninth grounds set up the disqualification of Mr. Nisbet, the clerk, to issue summons for the grand jurors, and of Mr. Robertson, the sheriff, to serve the precept. The tenth ground of this plea complains that the grand jurors were not properly purged by Judge Whipple, because none of them were asked as to their relationship to depositors in the Exchange Bank at the time of the failure, and that, as a result of his failure to ask this question, two who were either depositors or related to depositors served upon the grand jury returning the bill of indictment. The eleventh ground makes substantially the same complaint. If we understand the twelfth ground, the point is that when Judge Whipple purged the original grand jury so as to remove disqualified persons, for the purpose of taking up for consideration the present case, and as a result caused a number of tales jurors to be placed upon the grand jury, he caused the oath to be administered to the tales jurors only, and did not require the remaining members of the body to be resworn. The thirteenth ground complains that one of the grand jurors, after being impaneled, was excused from service improperly, for the alleged reason that no legal cause for his discharge as a grand juror was shown by the minutes of the court or known to the defendant. The fourteenth ground sets up that the present bill of indictment should be quashed because there was already pending against the defendant in court one special presentment for the same offense. The fifteenth ground sets up that the defendant had not been given sufficient time to investigate or challenge the qualifications of the grand jurors impaneled for the purpose of considering the special presentment against him—the defendant having been given one hour after the impaneling of the grand jurors in which to ascertain whether the grand jurors were qualified or not.

While the special presentment denominated the crime as "a felony," the jury recommended that the defendant be punished as for a misdemeanor, and the judge approved the recommendation and imposed sentence accordingly. After the conviction, the defendant filed a motion for new trial and a motion in arrest of judgment. The grounds of the motion for new trial will not be stated here, but the facts upon which they depend will be discussed in the course of the opinion. The motion in arrest of judgment was based upon substantially the same grounds as those set out in the demurrer, and upon the further ground that the law upon which the special presentment was returned had been repealed, and was not existing at the time of the alleged offense.

1. Taking up the points in somewhat inverse order, we will consider the question as to whether there was in existence at the time of the alleged offense any criminal statute covering the crime; for, if there was no statute covering the transaction, it would be needless to consider the other points presented. Section 210 of the Penal Code provides: "No dividends shall be made by any bank, except from the net profits arising from the business of the corporation; and if any president and directors shall declare, or pay over any dividend from the capital stock, or any other funds of the bank, except the net profits thereof, such president and directors shall, severally, be punished by confinement and labor in the penitentiary for not less than four years nor longer than ten years." Section 691 of the Penal Code provides: "No joint-stock company, corporation, or other association, shall declare any dividend, or distribute any money among its members as profits, when such dividend, or money, is not the legitimate proceeds of its investments. Any president, director or other officer or agent of any joint-stock company, corporation, or other association, violating the provisions of this section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The particular point made by counsel for plaintiff in error is that the statute codified in section 210, supra, was repealed by the enactment of the statute of 1887, codified in section 691, supra, the latter being the last legislative enunciation on the subject, except in so far as section 691 has been amended in an immaterial respect by the act of December 16, 1902. Acts 1902, p. 58. We recognize the rule that, where there are two conflicting sections of the Code and both are derived from legislative acts, that section prevails which is derived from the later act; it being considered the last expression from the lawmaking power on the subject. Berry v. Jordan, 121 Ga. 537 (1), 49 S. E. 607; Lamar v. Allen, 106 Ga. 158, 165 (top page), 33 S. E. 958. However, we deem it unnecessary to decide whether section 210 of the Penal Code is still in force, or whether it has been repealed by the act codified in section 691. If section 691 applies to banks, then so far as the present transaction is concerned its only effect was to make the crime charged against the defendant a misdemeanor instead of a felony. It would still be unlawful for the president and directors to pay dividends from the capital stock or any other funds of the bank, except its net profits legitimately derived from its investments; and the present indictment would be adequate to charge that offense. The writer may personally express the view that the argument in favor of the proposition that banks are included within the provisions of section 691, supra, is very strong, and that there is much in the history of the legislation on this subject tending to support counsel for the plaintiff in error in their contention that the latter act had operated to repeal the former; but, as we have said, this is immaterial for the defendant has received a misdemeanor sentence. It does not appear from the record that the defendant was in any wise prejudiced by the fact that the grand jury in returning their presentment spoke of the offense in general terms as a felony. The rule is too well recognized to require even the citation of authority that it is immaterial by what language an indictment styles the offense charged, if it in fact charges an offense. Nor is there any complaint that at any time during the progress of the trial the defendant was in any wise prejudiced because the court may have had in mind that he was trying the defendant for a felony. Indeed, so far as the record is concerned, we are not able to say that the court treated the matter as a felony further than to allow the defendant to challenge the jurors as if he were on trial for a felony; and he does not complain of this fact and could not well complain of it. He received a misdemeanor sentence. This is the controlling fact. Practically the same point was involved in Ayers v. State, 3 Ga. App. 305, 59 S. E. 924, and it was held there that "where, by an erroneous conception of court and counsel, a misdemeanor case is tried as if it were a felony, but the error is discovered before sentence, so that no harm in this respect results to the defendant, the error is prima facie harmless to the defendant."

2. The court is of the opinion that the point raised by the demurrer that the indictment should have set forth the names of the other directors is not well taken. The indictment is substantially in the language of the statute, and the statute itself (whether section 210 or section 691 be recognized as the proper statute) seems to contemplate that the offense shall be several rather than joint in such a sense as to require that all who participated should be named in the indictment. We do not think that decisions in riot cases holding that the other participants must be named, if known, are either applicable or controlling in a case like this.

3. The point that the indictment should have alleged that the Exchange Bank was a bank of issue is not well taken, irrespective of the question as to whether the indictment was under section 210 or section 691. Certainly such an allegation would not be required under section 691; and following Youmans v. State, 7 Ga. App. 101, 66 S. E. 383, it would not be required under section 210. We find, therefore, no error in overruling the demurrer and the motion in arrest of judgment. The Thornton Case, 5 Ga. App. 397, 63 S. E. 301, did not touch this question.

4. As to the plea in abatement: It was held by this court in Hall v. State, 7 Ga. App. 115 (1), 66 S. E. 390, that "alleged disqualification of grand jurors propter affectum is not valid ground for plea in abatement to an indictment." Even if this did not fully cover the points made, the well-recognized rule that, where the disqualification of the grand jurors is known prior to the return of the indictment, the objection must be made at that time or it will be considered waived, would control. We think, however, that the whole question is decided in the Hall Case, supra, and the reasons there given.

5. The plea in abatement contains the ground that there was another presentment pending in court against the defendant for the same offense. It is well settled in this state that in criminal cases a former indictment or former arraignment constitutes no defense, except in cases where there has been former jeopardy. Gray v. State, 6 Ga. App. 428 (1), 65 S. E. 191, and cases cited.

6. The fact that Judge Whipple did not reswear the grand jurors who remained on that body after the disqualified jurors were removed affords no ground for abating the indictment. The grand jurors take the oath severally, even though they be sworn in a body. Even though Judge Felton was disqualified in the case at bar, and though it became necessary for Judge Whipple to reorganize the grand jury to a certain extent, still Judge Felton was not disqualified to administer the oath to the grand jurors who were to serve generally during the term. It would not be reasonable to hold that a judge of the superior court could not perform the usual acts incident to organizing the court if he happened to be disqualified in some case that was likely to come up during the session, or to hold that if, as happened in the present case, it became necessary during the progress of the term to present to the grand jury some matters in which he was disqualified, the grand jurors would be absolved from the oaths which he had previously caused to be administered to them.

7. Coming now to the motion for new trial: As is usual, the first ground is that the verdict is without evidence to support it. The point is not stressed in the argument, but we may take this as a suitable heading for stating certain matters which will, in a greater or less degree, be relevant in the consideration of other points presented in the motion for new trial; for there is no complaint made upon the charge of the court, and the motion for new trial relates largely to rulings upon matters depending upon the evidence. The proof is overwhelming that at the time the dividend in question was declared the Exchange Bank was hopelessly insolvent, and had been so for some time. It is likewise very clear from the testimony, and practically undisputed, that this bank had been carrying upon its books as live assets stocks, notes, and accounts which for a long period of time had been so utterly and hopelessly insolvent as to render them absolutely worthless. These items amounted to at least $240,000. They were sufficient, if they had been charged off, to have more than consumed not only the undivided profits, but the surplus fund of the bank, and to have impaired the capital. The testimony of the expert accountant showed that as far back as June 30, 1905, the capital stock of the bank, which was $500,000, had been impaired nearly $140,000. But it takes no expert accountant to see that if such items as stock in defunct banks and corporations, old notes and overdrafts on persons who had been insolvent for a long time—according to the undisputed testimony, hopelessly insolvent—had been written off the books, there would have been no profits from which to declare a dividend. It is beyond question that these items far exceeded the sums legitimately earned by the bank's investments during the dividend period immediately in point.

The Code sections in question do not contain any express provision relieving a president or director from criminal liability where he declares a dividend in good faith, believing that the bank has earned it, yet it seems to be the correct view that such an exception does exist by implication; but, if it does exist, there must run with it the corollary that, before the offending official can claim the benefit of any such exception, it should appear that he has not acted recklessly, that he has not willfully or in gross negligence shut his eyes to the situation.

The president of a bank is, of course, charged by law with knowledge of what is contained upon its books, and with a knowledge of the condition of its financial affairs, but, in a criminal trial of the character now before us, this is only a prima facie inference, and we can readily see that in a bank of the size of the Exchange Bank at Macon the president would have to rely for his information, more or less, upon the bookkeeping of his subordinates and upon reports made to him by them. And if he acted in good faith upon such reports and was really deceived as to the conditions of affairs, and if, thus honestly but ignorantly acting upon the belief that the bank had really earned a dividend, he joined in declaring it, it would be hard indeed, if not contrary to law, to hold him criminally responsible for doing what any other reasonably prudent man would have done under the circumstances. But under the facts of the present case it is hardly conceivable that the defendant, who, even according to his own statement on the trial, practically controlled the bank, so far as its general management was concerned, who had spent a long number of years in its service in the respective positions of cashier and president, who himself says, "I usually remained in the bank, engaged in the duties devolving upon the president, from 10 to 12 hours a day, going to the bank about 8 o'clock in the morning, taking only about one hour for dinner, and then remaining at the bank from after dinner until late in the afternoon, and often returning at night," who was absent from its service during the whole period of his incumbency only once, when he took a 10 days' vacation—it is hardly conceivable that he could have failed to know that the bank was carrying as live assets this large amount of paper which was long since hopelessly dead. It was not necessary for this defendant, situated as he was, to have any accurate knowledge of what was contained upon the books of the bank, for him to have known that these dead items should have been charged off before dividends were declared. We can readily see how the defendant could have excused himself in his own conscience from the painful duty of embarrassing his bank by charging off these dead items. He doubtless conceived that it would be best in the long run not to make the bank's embarrassment public, as it would have been made through the fact that it had failed to declare a dividend. But motives of this kind, exculpatory as they are in a certain sense, do not afford any legal excuse for a plain violation of the law.

It is fair to the defendant to state (especially in the light of what we have felt it our duty to say above) that his personal interest in the matter of declaring dividends was somewhat small, for he owned no very great amount of the bank's stock. The dividends for the most part went to others. We think it is plain that he committed the crime charged against him in an effort to conceal the bank's embarrassments for the purpose of tiding over them, and to shield the directors, stockholders, depositors, and the public from the losses which usually follow when the credit of a big banking institution becomes impaired or questioned in the public mind; for it is a critical thing for a bank's credit to become questioned or for knowledge of its embarrassments to become public. Such things are so easily exaggerated in the public mind. The point is that it is wholly unnecessary to impute to the defendant corrupt or malign motives in order to say that the record before us shows plainly and practically unequivocally that he violated the law in regard to the dividend in question. His bare statement to the contrary is all that stands opposed to the overwhelming proof; and even in his statement, specific as it is to many matters, he does not attempt to deny (to any great extent at least) the things which to our minds make his guilt the plainest.

We have said this much as a basis for the proposition that it would take some error of more than minor importance to justify a reversal of the case. The fact of the long and useful life of the defendant and of the exceeding high character which the proof on both sides of the case shows that he bore has caused us to hesitate to make the statement which we have just made as to the evidence, for no court should forget that high character and good name are entitled to some consideration, when facts are being placed upon perpetual record; but, after all, it is perhaps fairer to him and to the public that the full facts should be known and understood, and that we should plainly state that what he has been convicted for is that, instead of charging off from the bank's assets notoriously bad debts and applying whatever profits there were to restoring the bank's capital, he retained these insolvent items as live assets, and from this basis declared a dividend when the dividend should not have been declared, though not he, but others, received the chief benefit from his violation of that strict law which governs, and should govern, the officers of banks.

8. The amended motion for new trial originally contained seventy grounds, numbered from 1 to 70 consecutively. Of these the following were either stricken or withdrawn at the hearing: Grounds 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 26, 34, 35, 42, 44, 46, 49, 51, 53. Grounds 1 and 6 were practically emasculated by explanatory notes of the trial judge. Grounds 8, 30, 66, 55, and 69 are not adequate on account of formal deficiencies to present any question for adjudication. Grounds 9, 14½, 24, 25, 37, 39, 40, 45, and 54 may be disposed of with the statement (without going into detail) that the errors complained of were, even if well founded, too slight to justify a reversal, or else were cured by what subsequently took place in the trial, or were rendered harmless by the admissions of the plaintiff in error himself. So these grounds will be eliminated in advance before we proceed to take up for discussion the other matters presented in the motion.

In the second ground of the motion, complaint is made that the court refused to put a juror named Cane on the court as prior, on the ground that said Cane was a depositor at the time of the failure of said Exchange Bank and at the time of the declaring of the dividend in question. It appears, however, that Mr. Cane did not serve upon the jury; and it does not appear that the defendant exhausted his strikes or was caused to exhaust his strikes by reason of challenging him. This exception, as well as the one contained in the fifth ground of the motion on a kindred point, are practically controlled against the plaintiff in error by the decisions in the cases of Carter v. State, 106 Ga. 372 (6), 32 S. E. 345, 71 Am. St. Rep. 262, and Cochran v. State, 113 Ga. 736 (3), 39 S. E. 337.

9. In the third and fourth grounds exception is taken to the fact that the court on objection of the state's counsel excluded from the jury a Mr. Long who had been accepted by both sides of the case, on the ground that he was over 60 years of age. It appears that the juror had been called to the box in ignorance of the fact that he was over 60 years of age. The court's attention was called to the matter before the jury was sworn, and he ordered the juror to step aside. In section 973 of the Penal Code it is made a cause for challenge that a juror is over 60 years of age. It is further provided in the same section that if the objection "be true in fact, but the fact is unknown to either party, or the counsel for such party, at the time the juror is under investigation, and is subsequently discovered, such objection may be made, and the proof heard at any time before the prosecuting counsel submits to the jury any of his evidence in the case." In the case before us it appears that state's counsel did not know at the time the juror was first examined that he was over 60 years old. It was therefore proper for the court to remove him from the jury prior to the beginning of the introduction of the testimony. See Doyal v. State, 70 Ga. 142 (2); Robinson v. State, 109 Ga. 506 (2), 34 S. E. 1017; Cf. Albany Phosphate Co. v. Hugger Bros., 4 Ga. App. 771 (5), 780, 62 S. E. 533.

10. Grounds 7, 10, 11, 32, 43, 52, 65, 68, and 69 may be considered together, as they all present substantially the same point. They except to the fact that the court allowed witnesses to testify as to the declaration of dividends and the condition of the bank and as to other transactions relating to its affairs at dates other than December 31, 1906, the time when the alleged illegal dividend in question was declared. The testimony was relevant, especially in the light of the contention of the defendant that even though the declaration of the dividend was not justified by the conditions as they existed at the time, he thought that it was, and honestly believed that it was. This testimony tended to show that the conditions which forbade the declaration of the dividend in question had been in existence or coming into force for so long a time that the defendant by reason of his actual and presumptive knowledge of the bank's affairs must have been cognizant of the conditions which did exist at the particular time in question. Further, the defendant was attempting to show as one of the reasons why he did not know the condition on December 31, 1906, that the books were kept by subordinates and that many of the transactions of the bank which led to its failure as well as to its insolvency on the particular date in question were not known to him, and much of the testimony objected to tended to show either directly or circumstantially that he did know and participated in these transactions as to which he directly or indirectly professed ignorance. To rebut this contention of the defendant, the evidence objected to had a direct relevancy.

11. The thirteenth and fourteenth grounds of the motion present exception to the fact that the court allowed one of the directors of the bank to state that Mr. Cabaniss controlled the bank, and that the other directors joined in declaring the dividend upon his statement that the affairs of the bank authorized the declaration of it. The point counsel make is that the control of the bank was determined by its charter and by-laws, and that the written statement upon which the dividend was declared was prepared by the cashier of the bank. It is plain, however, from all that the witness said upon the subject that he was speaking of who actually controlled the bank, and not upon the subject as to where the control was located by the charter and by-laws, and as to what statements Mr. Cabaniss made in addition to the written statement that had been made by the cashier. The charter and the by-laws of the bank would be the highest evidence as to who should have controlled the bank's affairs, but not as to who did in fact control and direct them. Even if it were a violation of the charter and by-laws that the directors should have allowed one man to control absolutely the bank's affairs, yet it was competent to show by parol testimony that the charter and by-laws were violated to the extent that the defendant did in fact control them—the word "control" being used in a concrete sense.

12. The twelfth ground makes complaint that the court allowed the Solicitor General to ask a witness for the state a leading question. The decisions holding that this is a matter solely within the discretion of the trial judge are too numerous and uniform to require citation.

13. Grounds 15, 20, 22, 31, and 47 present the point that the court allowed witnesses for the state to testify as to lists of notes, overdrafts, etc., giving names, also dates and maturity, on the ground that the notes themselves were the highest and best evidence of the transaction. These witnesses were not attempting to state the contents of the notes further than to give the names and dates by which the particular papers could be identified. For instance, an expert accountant in testifying as to the condition of the bank would call off a list of the notes that had been charged off as being insolvent and worthless. This did not involve any going into the contents of the notes in such a way as to make it a violation of the rule which forbids parol evidence as to the contents of written documents. It is uniformly held that where notes and other writings are only collaterally involved, where their existence or identification rather than their substance is material, a witness may testify as to the papers and may give for the purpose of identification such things as the names of the makers, the dates, amounts, etc. See Wigmore, Evidence, §§ 1242, 1244, 1253. We will later in the opinion touch upon the point that these witnesses in some cases were allowed to testify that these notes were classed as worthless or insolvent, though the witness himself had no personal knowledge or information as to their value or solvency. Central R. Co. v. Wolff, 74 Ga. 664 (2); Henderson v. Central R. Co., 73 Ga. 718 (2); Sasser v. Sasser, 73 Ga. 275 (5); Kelly v. Kauffman Milling Co., 92 Ga. 105 (2), 18 S. E. 363; Fisher v. Jones Co., 93 Ga. 717 (2), 21 S. E. 152; Merchant's Nat. Bank v. Vandiver, 104 Ga. 165 (1), 30 S. E. 650.

14. The sixteenth ground presents the point that the court erred in permitting the expert accountant, Mr. Lukenbill, to testify as to what were the net earnings of the bank during certain periods on the ground that the books themselves were the highest and best evidence, and for the reason that the witness was testifying as to matters of which he had no independent knowledge. In the brief of the evidence there is an admission of counsel that the books themselves were introduced and showed the same facts that this witness had testified to. Even if it could be said that this testimony was inadmissible, the admission in the brief of the evidence prevented the plaintiff in error from complaining. Some of the other grounds which we have classed above as presenting matters of harmless error only fail for the same reason. However, the rule seems to be that, where the documentary evidence consists of books of account containing multifarious details, expert accountants may summarize their contents and testify as to the result of the examination; provided the books themselves are made accessible to the court and the parties. See Wigmore, Evidence, § 1230.

15. In grounds 27, 28, 29, 33, and 41 complaint is made that the court erred in refusing to allow the state's witness, and especially the expert accountant, to testify on cross-examination as to their opinion as to how long it would take a person situated as the defendant was to have examined into the condition of the bank and to have ascertained its exact condition at the time of the alleged illegal dividend, or at any period four years prior thereto; the stated object of the testimony being to show that it would have been physically impossible for the defendant (on account of the volume of the matter he would have had to examine) to have obtained an accurate knowledge of the bank's affairs within any reasonable length of time. As an abstract question of practice, we think that the court should have allowed these witnesses, especially the expert accountant, to have expressed an opinion on this subject, and, if the case were close and doubtful upon the salient facts involved in this inquiry, we would probably grant a new trial for this error, but, when it is remembered that the books themselves were before the jury and their volume was a matter of mere ocular inspection, it is hardly conceivable that any juror of ordinary intelligence would have believed that the defendant or any other man could have been personally informed as to the details of all of these transactions, or that he could have been cognizant in more than a general way of the ins and outs of all the bank's bookkeeping. We do not suppose that state's counsel or any one else ever insisted before the jury that the defendant personally knew every transaction that occurred in the bank, or that it was physically possible for him to have done so. But, as we have said in a previous portion of this opinion, it is also inconceivable that the defendant could have failed to know of the important fact that the bank was carrying as live assets such a large number of dead papers as to wipe out all margin of profits and to forbid the declaration of a dividend. If we believed that the defendant was harmed or prejudiced before the jury by the exclusion of this testimony, we would give the error of the court a different effect, but, in light of the whole case, it would be a violation of the established rule forbidding new trials for harmless error to grant a reversal on this ground.

16. The thirty-sixth and forty-eighth grounds illustrate each other, and for that purpose will be considered together. One witness was allowed to testify that he had made a memorandum of insolvent papers listed as live assets of the bank, after admitting his ignorance as to whether the papers were in fact insolvent or not, and another witness was allowed to testify that the papers listed as insolvent on the memorandum were in fact insolvent, without knowledge as to whether the memorandum was correct or not. In other words, one witness testified as to the memorandum and the other as to insolvency. The testimony of either of the witnesses unsupported by the testimony of the other would probably have been objectionable, but, so far as we know, it has never been considered objectionable that one witness might supplement and support the testimony of another witness. Each testified as to the extent of his own knowledge, but the two taken together present a state of facts supported by the several credibility of the two witnesses.

17. In the thirty-eighth ground exception is taken to the fact that the court allowed a witness to state that in his opinion the bank was insolvent at a designated time. However, the witness had detailed to the jury the state of facts upon which he based his opinion. The testimony was admissible under section 5283 of the Civil Code. Solvency or insolvency is a matter admitting of opinion evidence under the general rules on that subject. Crawford v. Andrews, 6 Ga. 244 (2); Moore v. Dozier, 128 Ga. 90 (4), 98, 57 S. E. 110.

18. Coming to the fiftieth ground: The court admitted in evidence a letter addressed to the defendant by Mr. Orr, who had been a former cashier of the bank, containing certain language which indicated that there had been between the two certain communications which would tend to discredit the defendant's contention in the present case as to his ignorance as to certain of the bank's transactions. This letter was admitted in connection with another letter, signed by the defendant's initials, and which from its internal contents seemed to relate to the same matters, and to have been intended for Mr. Orr. The objection to this letter was that it was improperly obtained by the officers of the court, and because Mr. Orr having claimed the privilege of not testifying in the case, on the ground that his testimony would tend to criminate himself, the defendant was unable to cross-examine him upon the matter, and upon the further ground that it was not proved that Mr. Cabaniss had knowledge of the existence of this letter. This letter was found by the receivers of the bank in a drawer labeled with the defendant's initials, in which he kept both his private papers and papers relating to the bank. As against the objection that it had been improperly obtained, there is no doubt as to its admissibility. The circumstances connected with its being found, the place where it was kept, and its being accompanied by the other letter, identified by the defendant's signature by initials, authorized the court to admit it to the jury; and it was for them to say whether the defendant had ever personally received it or not.

19. Grounds 58, 59, 60, 61, and 62 relate to the admission in evidence of the various books of the bank; the contention being that they were not properly proved. However, they were identified by different witnesses as being the bank's books, and were brought in to court by the receivers of the bank, under instructions from the court, at the request of defendant's counsel. The court did not err in admitting them. Lowry Nat. Bank v. Fickett, 122 Ga. 490, 50 S. E. 396.

20. The fifty-seventh ground relates to a colloquy between court and counsel. As explained in the ground itself, the transaction affords no reason for reversing the judgment.

21. Grounds 63, 64, and 67 assign error upon the court's admitting in evidence papers relating to certain transactions had with the bank under the name of C. M. Orr & Co.; the chief objection to this testimony being that the defendant was not shown to have been connected with the transaction. However, there was some evidence before the court from which the jury might have inferred that the defendant himself was a partner of this firm of C. M. Orr & Co. This being true, it was relevant for the state to go into the transaction.

22. The last ground of the motion assigns error upon the court's refusing to continue the case on account of the absence of a material witness, an expert accountant who, according to the showing, would have testified that the examination of the bank's books showed that the president and directors would have been justified from the books in declaring a dividend on the date alleged in the indictment. Taking all together the combination of circumstances presented by this motion, we would be very hesitant to say that, if we had been in the position of the trial judge, we would not have given the defendant even additional time in which to get ready for trial, though the trial judge did grant him a number of extensions; yet, as a court of review, vested with no original discretion, we are unable to say as a legal proposition that the trial judge abused his discretion. Moreover, there is one matter which seems to control this exception. In the brief of the evidence the plaintiff in error made the admission that the books introduced in evidence "fully corroborate the testimony of the witness as to the condition of the Exchange Bank of Macon at the different periods testified about by the several witnesses for the state. The said books also showed the correctness of all other facts testified about by various witnesses for the state as purporting to come from said books and as to information gathered from said books." It appears that counsel for movant were allowed to insert this statement into the brief of the evidence in lieu of inserting into it an abstract of the books themselves. This was a hard alternative with which counsel were confronted—either incorporate into the brief of the evidence all the volume of writing necessary to abstract the wagon load of books, or else admit by general statement that the books showed what the state's witnesses testified they showed. We are not prepared to say that counsel confronted with this proposition made an unwise choice. And yet we do not see how we can reverse a case because the court refused to allow the defendant time in which to get a witness to prove what he afterwards solemnly in judicio admitted not to exist, even though the admission in judicio was induced by circumstances almost amounting to duress. Our law, especially our criminal law, is full of technical hardships, but they present propositions that must be dealt with as they are, and not as they should be.

23. Checking up to see if we have covered the points presented in this voluminous record, we find that we have overlooked one ground of the plea in abatement. It was based on the reason "that L. B. Calhoun, after being impaneled and sworn as a [grand] juror to pass upon said special presentment, was improperly discharged, there being no legal cause for his discharge as grand juror shown by the minutes of this court or known to the defendant." We know no rule which requires the judge to record upon the minutes the grounds upon which he discharges a juror, and certainly it is no reason for quashing the indictment that the defendant did not know of any disqualification of the juror. A very similar point was overruled by this court in Parish v. State, 6 Ga. App. 163, 64 S. E. 489. The ground does not unequivocally allege, as it should, that the juror was not excused for any good and valid reason. We doubt that this is a matter of which the defendant could complain, as 18 men were left upon the grand jury at the time the indictment was returned, and this constituted a full and legal grand jury in this state. If Calhoun had been present and had voted against returning the presentment, it would not have affected the result.

After a close, careful, painstaking review of the whole case, we have found no sufficient reason to reverse the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

On Rehearing.

The rehearing is denied. However, counsel insist that the judge in sentencing the prisoner treated the case as a felony involving moral turpitude. We are not sure as to what view the judge held as to this: If the offense is a felony, it does not involve moral turpitude. It is purely statutory. Under the national banking act, for instance, the things charged against the defendant would not constitute any crime at all. There is so much doubt as to whether the acts charged constitute a felony, also whether a misdemeanor convict (not a female) can be sentenced to the state farm, that we have decided to grant the request of counsel that we give direction that the trial judge may in his discretion resentence the defendant at or before the time he makes the judgment of this court the judgment of the superior court. We are not sure that the trial judge needs the assistance of this court's direction in order that he may have the power to modify the sentence, but, to avoid any question as to this, we give the direction (as we have previously done in several similar cases) authorizing the judge to do so in his discretion.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION OF CHARGE AS A WHOLE.

When the excerpts from the charge to which exceptions are taken are considered in connection with the instructions of the trial judge as a whole, the assignments of error are not meritorious, and afford no ground for reversing the judgment refusing a new trial.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—TRIAL (§ 296*)—HARMLESS ERROR—CONSTRUCTION OF CHARGE AS A WHOLE.

While one of the instructions to which the defendant excepted in reference to latent defects was not exact in the abstract, it presented the defendant's contentions concretely more favorably than it was entitled to have them presented, and was adjusted to the undisputed evidence in the case. The specific objection made becomes immaterial and valueless in view of the explicit instruction that if the jury believed that, after the defendant received the goods, it discovered latent defects and notified the plaintiff of their existence, and insisted that the same should be remedied or taken account of, then and in that event any partial payments made by the defendant to the plaintiff would in no sense be a waiver or an estoppel as to the rights of the defendant to insist upon its plea of partial failure of consideration.

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Action by the Drexel Furniture Company against the L. McManus Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Hardeman, Jones & Johnston, for plaintiff in error. T. E. Ryals, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The Drexel Furniture Company brought a suit upon an account for the unpaid balance of the purchase price of certain furniture sold by it to the L. McManus Company. By amendment the plaintiff asked judgment for certain extra pieces alleged to have been sent to the defendant in lieu of certain pieces which were to be returned by the defendant and which had not been so returned. The jury, however, seems not to have sustained the plaintiff's claim as set forth in the amendment. The defendant pleaded two items of freight as partial payments upon the plaintiff's account, and also pleaded partial failure of consideration, alleging that the furniture delivered was worth only 75 per cent. of the value of the furniture to be delivered under the contract. By way of further amendment to its plea of partial failure of consideration, the defendant averred that it did not accept the goods sued for, but immediately notified the plaintiff that they were not such as were purchased, and that thereafter the plaintiff changed some of the goods first shipped and supplied some pieces in place of others. In the amendment it was alleged that the defects were latent, and were not discovered when the goods were first delivered to the defendant, and could not have been discovered by reasonable diligence on its part, but since the delivery of the goods to the defendant it had discovered other defects, including deficiency in putting together the goods and in workmanship. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff for the unpaid balance of the account as originally sued for and interest thereon, and found that this amount should be reduced by the claim of the defendant for freight, and judgment was entered accordingly. The defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled and exception is taken to that judgment.

So far as the general grounds of the motion for a new trial are concerned, it is only necessary to say that, while there was conflicting evidence as to every point material to the issue, the jury were authorized to find that the defendant had failed to establish its plea of failure of consideration. All of of believing those witnesses who had the least inducement to swear falsely or the best opportunity of knowing the facts. If the court had said that the jury must believe them, it would have been error. However, this part of the charge followed instructions which gave the jury even fuller liberty to weigh for themselves and pass upon the testimony.

Counsel for the defendant requested the court to charge the jury that, to constitute robbery, there must have been an intention on the part of the defendant to steal, and that if the $10 was accepted by the defendant on a bona fide claim of right, in payment of a debt which he claimed the prosecutor owed him, he would not be guilty. The judge, after giving the charge requested, added the following instruction: "I charge you that provided that you do not find that he (the prosecutor) paid it over by intimidation," and followed this by saying: "The words 'with intent to steal' mean to wrongfully appropriate to their own use; and if they, by intimidation, forced him, or he, from intimidation, paid over the money and they took it, intending to use it or keep it, then they would be guilty, otherwise they would not be, as I have charged you heretofore." The court did not err in these additional instructions.

Judgment affirmed.

1. EVIDENCE (§ 314*)—HEARSAY EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Hearsay evidence is generally inadmissible. When it is inadmissible, it has no probative value. But, in exception to the general rule, hearsay may be primary evidence of value. "It is no objection to the evidence of a witness, testifying as to market value, that such evidence rests on hearsay." 1 Wharton, Evidence, (1), § 449.

2. EVIDENCE (§§ 498½, 501, 601*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—MARKET PRICE.

A witness who is not an expert may, after having stated facts from which he has formed an opinion, express such opinion. The admissibility of such opinion evidence is for the court; its probative value is for the jury. The market price of an article, when expressed by a witness, is at last but the opinion of that witness, derived from his information of actual sales; and the value or market price of an article may be shown either by direct or circumstantial evidence. Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company v. Harris, 1 Ga. App. 667, 57 S. E. 1030.

MILLER v. O'NEAL (No. 2,777.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 6, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1094*)—REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The case involved such a controlling issue of fact as to make the verdict of the jury, as approved by the judge of the superior court on certiorari, final; there being no error of law complained of, and there being some evidence to support the verdict.

WATTS v. STATE. (No. 2,488.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 6, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSTRUCTIONS.

There was no error in the instruction of the court to the jury, nor any intimation or expression of an opinion as to the defendant's guilt by the trial judge, either in the charge or in the rulings upon evidence.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTION.

The request to charge, so far as pertinent, was covered by the instructions given by the judge in his general charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

3. LARCENY (§ 45*)—CRIMINAL LAW (§ 656*)—EVIDENCE.

It was not error to admit in evidence certain money taken from the possession of the accused, and other money testified to have been taken from the possession of the defendant's brother. The identity of the money with that alleged to have been stolen was a question for the jury, and the remark of the court, "Let me see the half-cent piece; this is the first half-cent piece I have ever seen in my life," was not objectionable as expressing an opinion, nor otherwise prejudicial to the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 135, 136; Dec. Dig. § 45; * Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1524-1533; Dec. Dig. § 656.*]

4. LARCENY (§ 19*)—LARCENY FROM THE PERSON—EVIDENCE.

The offense of larceny from the person may be committed, although the person from whom the property is taken may be, or become almost contemporaneously with the larceny, aware that the larceny has been committed; and it was not error to inform the jury to this effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

5. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the conviction of the defendant, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Martin Watts was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Affirmed.

1. DEMURRER TO PLEA.

Under the instructions of the Supreme Court in response to the certified questions, there was no error in overruling the defendant's demurrer or in striking his special plea in abatement.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

The relevant evidence authorized the conviction of the defendant, and, though some of the testimony admitted was irrelevant, it does not appear that the irrelevant circumstances were prejudicial, or could have affected the result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 825*)—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

The charge of the court fairly presented the issues submitted in the case; and, if more specific instructions had been desired, they should have been properly requested. There was no error in refusing to sanction the petition for certiorari.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 95*)—DEFENSES—PROTECTING FELLOW OFFICERS.

In the main the trial was fair and free from error, but the court erred in limiting the defendant's right to strike the prosecutor to his own personal self-defense. It appearing that the defendant was a member of a posse attempting to arrest the prosecutor and that the prosecutor was making, or attempting to make, a general attack upon the posse, and that the defendant's superior officer ordered him to strike the prosecutor at a time when, as the jury would have been authorized to find, the prosecutor was manifesting a present purpose to do violence to one or more of the arresting parties, the defendant should have had his right to strike in defense of his fellow officers submitted to the jury.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 961*)—NEW TRIAL—DISMISSAL OF MOTION.

There was no error under the facts recited in the opinion in the order dismissing the motion for a new trial, nor in refusing thereafter to reinstate the motion.

Error from Superior Court, Irwin County; W. V. Whipple, Judge.

J. P. Mauldin was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

H. J. Quincey and John R. Cooper, for plaintiff in error. W. F. George, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. The only question involved in this case is made by the assignment of error that the trial judge erred in dismissing the motion for a new trial and in refusing to reinstate it. The facts are as follows: A motion for a new trial was made during the term of the trial, and by an order then passed the hearing of the motion was set for a day in vacation, and it was provided therein that the movant should have until the hearing to prepare and present for approval a brief of the evidence. On the day designated the hearing of the motion was postponed until a subsequent date in vacation, and on this latter date it was postponed until a still later date in vacation. On this last date neither the movant nor his counsel appeared, and no brief of the evidence was presented or filed in the office of the clerk. The court thereupon passed an order dismissing the motion for a new trial, and this order was entered on the minutes of the court. A few days subsequently the movant's counsel appeared and requested the court to reinstate the motion, and this the court consented to do, provided the movant would prepare a brief of the evidence and submit the same to the court for its inspection and approval on a day fixed. The movant's counsel appeared on the day fixed, but had not prepared a brief of the evidence, and then expressly assented to an order dismissing the motion, and stated to the court that he would not further press the motion. During the March adjourned term, 1910, the movant's counsel presented to the court a brief of the evidence in the case, and asked that the motion be reinstated. Several terms of the court intervened between the filing of the motion for new trial and the presentation of the brief of evidence for the approval of the court and the motion to reinstate, and no reason was shown for the laches of the movant's counsel. The court refused to reinstate the motion.

Under these facts, the judgment of the court dismissing the motion for new trial was not error, and his refusal to reinstate the motion was not an abuse of discretion. Pen. Code 1895, § 1063; Dozier v. Owen, 63 Ga. 539; Brantley v. Hass, 69 Ga. 748; Howard v. State, 115 Ga. 245, 41 S. E. 654.

BROWN v. STATE. (No. 2,725.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 67)—LABOR CONTRACT ACT—FRAUDULENT PROCUREMENT OF MONEY.

The purpose of the "labor contract act" of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90) is not to enforce the contract to perform services, but to punish the fraudulent procurement of money, or other thing of value, under the contract, and, in a prosecution for a violation of this act, the question as to the validity of the contract under the statute of frauds is not material, and a conviction could be had for a fraudulent procurement of money under the contract, although it might not be civilly enforceable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 67*)—LABOR CONTRACT ACT—EVIDENCE.

Before one can be lawfully convicted of a violation of the labor contract act, several things essential to constitute the offense defined by that act must be proved, among which is that the laborer refused and failed to perform his contract of service without good and sufficient excuse.

Error from City Court of Sparta.

Glade Brown was convicted of violation of a labor contract, and brings error. Reversed.

Hines & Vinson, for plaintiff in error. R. L. Merritt, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Glade Brown was convicted of cheating and swindling under the act of 1903, commonly known as the "Labor Contract Act" (Acts 1903, p. 90), and his motion for a new trial was overruled. The evidence for the state, briefly stated, is as follows: The prosecutor testified that about ten days or two weeks before Christmas, 1909, the defendant made a verbal contract with him to work for him for the year 1910, beginning on the 1st day of January, for monthly wages of $12; that at the time this verbal contract was made he gave the defendant an order for flour, sugar, tobacco, nuts, bananas, and oranges, aggregating the amount of $2.10, and also advanced to him $2.25 in money. The defendant did not pay back any of the money so advanced, nor pay for any of the articles, did not do any work for the prosecutor, and did not offer to do so. On cross-examination he testified that the defendant had worked for him 10 or 12 years previously, and had been owing him an indebtedness of $9 or $10 for three or four years; that before he issued the warrant against the defendant he told him he would settle the case against him for $14. He denied that the prosecution in this case was for the purpose of collecting the old indebtedness of $9 or $10. The defendant made no statement to the jury, but proved by his then employer that the latter had offered the prosecutor $5 for the defendant, which the prosecutor had refused to accept. This offer was denied by the prosecutor, but the prosecutor admitted that he would not have prosecuted the defendant if the $14 had been paid to him.

The plaintiff in error makes no question of law, but claims that the contract alleged to have been made with the defendant by the prosecutor was void under the statute of frauds, since it was not to be performed within a year, and no performance of it had ever taken place. Civ. Code 1895, § 2693 (5); section 2694. We do not think that this contention is sound for several reasons. In the first place, if the evidence of the prosecutor was the truth, there had been such part performance by him of the contract in the advance of the money and other articles as would take it out of the statute of frauds. In the second place, this was a criminal prosecution for a fraudulent procurement of money, and was not an effort to enforce a contract. There is a great distinction between the fraudulent procurement of money under a contract and an effort to enforce a contract. In the one case the question of the validity of the contract is not necessarily involved, but in the second case it is. It has been held by the Supreme Court that a minor whose contract was voidable could nevertheless be convicted for a fraudulent procurement of money under a contract of service made by him, although such contract was not civilly enforceable. Vinson v. State, 124 Ga. 19, 52 S. E. 79. And in this case Mr. Justice Lumpkin, speaking for the court, says: "The offense created by that act (referring to the act of 1903) was not merely a breach of contract, but the fraudulent procurement of money, or other thing of value, on the contract to perform services. The gist of the offense is such fraudulent procurement. The contract of a minor is voidable, but, unless he is under the age at which he is declared by statute to be incapable of committing a crime, he is subject to prosecution and conviction. A minor who has arrived at the age of criminal responsibility is as capable of committing a fraud as one of full age." We think the evidence in this case did not authorize a conviction. The act provides that "satisfactory proof of the contract, the procuring thereon of money or other thing of value, the failure to perform the services so contracted for, or failure to return the money so advanced with interest thereon at the time said labor was to be performed, without good and sufficient cause and loss or damage to the hirer, shall be deemed presumptive evidence of the" fraudulent intent. The burden is on the state to prove all of these facts before the presumption arises. In the present case it was shown by the state that the contract was made; that the money or other thing of value was procured thereon; that the defendant failed to perform the contract, and failed to return the money so advanced, with interest thereon but there was no evidence that he refused to carry out his contract without good and sufficient cause; and, under the express words of the statute, this fact must be shown before any presumption of guilt arises. *Johnson v. FLORENCE WAGON WORKS v. SALMON.

(No. 2,377.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 6, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 76*)—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES OR PENALTY—NATURE OF CONTRACT.

Whether a fixed sum designated in a contract to be paid in the event of a breach thereof is to be considered as penalty or as stipulated damages depends upon the nature of the agreement and upon the intent of the parties as evidenced by the agreement construed in the light of its subject-matter and of the circumstances under which it was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 154, 155; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 79*)—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES OR PENALTY—PURPOSE OF AGREEMENT.

Where a designated sum is inserted into a contract for the purpose of deterring one or both of the parties from breaching it, it is penalty. Where it is inserted as the result of a bona fide effort of the parties to liquidate in advance and agree upon the sum that should represent the damages which would be actually sustained in the event of a breach, it will be upheld and enforced (unless unconscionable or oppressive), especially in cases where the damages cannot be readily estimated according to some legal standard or measure of damage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 164-169; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 76*)—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES OR PENALTY—REFERENCE TO TIME OF BREACH.

Where, to secure the performance of the terms of a contract, there is a stipulation for the payment of a fixed, unvarying sum upon the breach thereof by one of the parties, irrespective of the time of the breach, and it appears that the amount of the damages which would result from a breach would be controlled mainly by the time at which the breach occurred, the stipulation is prima facie penalty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 154, 155; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

Error from City Court of Floyd; Harper Hamilton, Judge.

Action by the Florence Wagon Works against J. W. Salmon. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Lipscomb, Willingham & Wright, for plaintiff in error. G. E. Maddox, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. On March 24, 1908, Salmon, the defendant, gave an order to the plaintiff through its traveling salesman for certain wagons at the price of $1,247.90. The written order contained a printed condition that, "in case this order is countermanded, a payment of fifteen per cent. of the amount of the order shall be made by you [referring to the purchaser], as agreed, and as liquidated damages." The wagons were at that time made up and in the stock of the wagon works, and were to be shipped to Salmon on the 15th of the following July. On April 6th, Salmon notified the wagon works to cancel the order, and the wagons were never delivered. Plaintiff brought suit to recover the 15 per cent. referred to as liquidated damages. The evidence showed that, though the defendant signed the order and thereby subscribed to the agreement to pay 15 per cent. as liquidated damages for a countermand of the order, he was not in fact aware of such a condition in the order. After hearing the evidence, the court directed a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff has excepted.

The main point at issue in this case is whether the 15 per cent. stipulated as a forfeit for the cancellation of the contract is to be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages. It is called in the contract "liquidated damages." However, "no form of words is controlling. But the fundamental rule so often announced is that the construction of these stipulations depends in each case upon the intent of the parties as evidenced by the entire agreement construed in the light of the circumstances under which it was made." Sutherland, Damages, 717. See, also, Newman v. Wolfson, 69 Ga. 764; Allison

v. Dunwoody, 100 Ga. 51, 28 S. E. 651; Sutton v. Howard, 33 Ga. 536; Mayor and Council of Brunswick v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 4 Ga. App. 722, 62 S. E. 475; 13 Cyc. 90. From this it is seen that there is no hard and fast rule for the determination of such cases, but that each case must be decided independently upon its own merits, and considered in the light of the circumstances surrounding it.

In determining whether a designated sum that is to be paid to one party in the event that the other breaches the contract is a penalty or not, we must look to the question as to whether it was inserted for the purpose of deterring the party from breaching his contract and of penalizing him in the event he should do so, or whether it was a sum which the parties in good faith agreed upon as representing those damages which would ensue if the contract should be breached. If A. borrows $100 from B., agreeing that, if he does not repay it by October 1st, he will pay $1 per day as liquidated damages for the detention thereof, this is plainly a penalty, an attempt to coerce prompt performance of the contract, rather than an attempt to estimate what the legal damage to B. will be; for the law fixes the legal damages in such a case at the lawful rate of interest. On the other hand, if A. agrees to furnish B. a particular piece of property or a commodity by a particular time for some special use, and the parties know and understand that, if the property or commodity is not furnished promptly by the date named, B. will suffer a damage which it would be difficult to estimate and which could not be reasonably measured by merely allowing him the difference between the contract price and the market price of the property, and they should in advance attempt to estimate what this damage would be and should agree upon a certain sum reasonable in amount, not for the purpose of deterring A. from breaching the contract, but for the purpose of fully compensating B. for the damage he would sustain, the contract would be upheld as an agreement for liquidated damages. Again, a person being solicited to make a contract may foresee that he may not be able to perform it, or may be unwilling to make the contract, if by so doing he would place himself in a position where, upon his failure to comply, the opposite party would be able in law to hold him to a large sum of money on account of the breach. In such cases the parties may agree that, in the event the promisor fails to comply with his promise to the opposite party, the latter shall not hold him to the payment of all ordinary damages legally estimable, but will hold him only for some stipulated, designated amount; and in such a case the amount so agreed upon would not be a penalty, but would be stipulated or liquidated damages.

Where the contract relates to a subject as to which the law has a fixed or reason-bly definite rule for the ascertainment of damages, and the parties in advance attempt to stipulate the amount, especially where the amount is in excess of what the damages ordinarily would be when estimated according to the law's measure, the stipulated amount is generally held to be penalty. In a contract for the purchase of merchandise, the law has a reasonably definite measure of damage to apply in the event of a cancellation. Consequently, where the parties agree that, if the purchaser cancels the contract, he will pay a designated sum, the courts incline to the view that this provision is inserted into the contract for the purpose of deterring the purchaser from canceling, rather than to compensate the seller for the damages which he would sustain. We do not, however, regard the ease or certainty with which the damages in such cases may be measured as conclusive of the proposition that the stipulated sum to be paid in the event of a cancellation of the contract would be penalty.

Let us consider the nature of the present contract with a view of ascertaining whether the parties inserted this stipulation for the purpose of deterring the purchaser from cancelling, or for the purpose of compensating the seller for the damages that would ensue in the event of a cancellation. It can readily be seen that, if the purchaser had given notice of his intention to cancel on the day after the contract was made, the damage to the seller would in all probability have been less than if he had waited until the seller had gone to the trouble and expense of getting the wagons together and of packing them and preparing them for shipment, and yet the contract makes no difference between the effect of a cancellation received at one time, and the effect of the cancellation received at a time when in the nature of things the damages would have been wholly different. As a matter of fact, in the present case the notice of the cancellation was received at a time when the plaintiff had suffered no damage at all—at a time when there was no difference between the contract price and the market price of the wagons, and when the plaintiff had taken no action on the order further than to enter it upon his books; and yet the plaintiff says that he should be allowed to recover on account of the anticipatory breach thus made as if the cancellation had not been received until there had been a sharp falling off in the market price of wagons, or until after he had gone to great trouble and expense toward getting the shipment ready for delivery. The principle, therefore, which in this case declares the stipulation to be a penalty, rather than liquidated damages, is akin to that mentioned in the case of Mayor and Council of the City of Brunswick v. Aetna Indemnity Co., supra, that: "Where, to secure the performance of the terms of a contract, there is a stipulation for the payment of a fixed, unvarying sum, upon the breach of any of several promises of varying degrees of importance, * * * the sum named will be construed to be a penalty." In that case the stipulation was for the payment of a fixed sum for the breach of any one of several promises of varying degrees of importance, while in the present case the fixed sum was to be paid upon the breach of a single promise, without regard to the date of the breach when in the nature of things the date of the breach would be all-important in determining the element of actual damage which would ensue. The Supreme Court of the plaintiff's own state has recognized this principle of construction in the case of Mansur Co. v. Tessler Co., 136 Ala. 597, 33 South. 818, a case involving a stipulation for the payment of a fixed sum upon the purchaser's countermanding an order for vehicles.

The contention of the plaintiff that the sum designated in the contract can be regarded as an agreed compensation to be paid to them on account of the cancellation as compensating them for the expense which they incurred in procuring the order through their traveling salesman is not well taken. The expense which a seller incurs in inducing a prospective purchaser to make an offer to buy is not a part of the damage, in the event the purchaser makes the contract, and then fails to take the goods. It will readily be seen that in such cases the sums expended in inducing the contract of purchase are not a part of the damages, when we consider the fact that, if the purchaser had refused to make the contract, the seller would nevertheless have incurred the same expense.

Having held that the contract on its face apparently calls for a penalty, and there being nothing in the evidence to contradict this, the fact that the court admitted evidence on behalf of the defendant to corroborate this theory becomes immaterial. The defendant was entitled to a judgment in his favor, irrespective of the oral testimony which the court allowed him to introduce.

As an abstract proposition the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover nominal damages on account of the defendant's breach, but, as he did not sue upon any theory admitting of such recovery, the court did not err in directing the verdict against him. Christophulos Café Co. v. Phillips, 4 Ga. App. 819, 62 S. E. 562.

1. AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY—TRAVERSE—PROCEEDINGS.

There was no error in overruling the motion for a new trial upon the issue submitted on the traverse, nor in thereafter sustaining the demurrer to the affidavit of illegality.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. GARNISHMENT (§ 96*)—SUMMONS—RETURN—PETITION.

A deputy sheriff's return of service of summons of garnishment on the "Albany & Northern Railway" is sufficient, though the name of the company is in fact the "Albany & Northern Railway Company."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 189-195; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

3. GARNISHMENT (§ 95*)—SUMMONS—SERVICE.

A justice of the peace in one county can issue a summons of garnishment, and the same may be served by a proper officer in another county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 181-188; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

4. GARNISHMENT (§ 194*)—VACATING—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In proceedings under an affidavit of illegality of garnishment proceedings, witness' testimony that an employé of the garnishee came to him with some papers and stated that these papers were "garnishee papers," and had been served on him, and he did not know what to do with them, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In proceedings under an affidavit of illegality of garnishment proceedings, where a ground of illegality was practically disposed of by the finding of the jury upon the traverse adversely to the garnishee, the garnishee was not harmed by sustaining the demurrer thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4089-4105; Dec. Dig. § 1040.*]

6. GARNISHMENT (§ 194*)—VACATION—CONSTRUCTION.

Grounds of illegality of garnishment proceedings alleging that the garnishee had not been served with notice or summons of garnishment, and that the return of the deputy sheriff showed on its face that no legal summons of garnishment was served, are subject to demurrer where the affidavit does not set up that there has been a traverse of the officer's return, or that he has been made a party to the proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

7. GARNISHMENT (§ 96*)—SUMMONS—RETURN OF SERVICE.

A return of service of summons in garnishment showing service on the garnishee by delivering a copy to one P., an agent in charge of a place of business of the garnishee in Worth county, was sufficient without more specifically designating the agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 189-195; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

8. GARNISHMENT (§ 95*)—SUMMONS—SERVICE.

A summons of garnishment issued by a justice of the peace in Bibb county in a case pending in the city court of Sylvester is properly served by a deputy sheriff of Worth county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 181-188; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

9. GARNISHMENT (§ 194*)—VACATION—PROCEEDINGS.

Grounds set up in an affidavit of illegality of garnishment proceedings that the defendant was adjudicated a bankrupt are insufficient where there is no showing that any action was taken by the bankruptcy court with reference to the suit brought by the plaintiff against defendant, nor as to the garnishment sued out, nor that there was any liability on the part of the garnishee to be bankrupt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

10. BANKRUPTCY (§ 195*)—ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATE—LIEN—GARNISHMENT.

Where a garnishment summons was served April 24th, and bankruptcy proceedings against the defendant were not commenced till October 12th, the bankruptcy could not relieve the garnishee from the judgment rendered against it.

Error from City Court of Sylvester; J. B. Williamson, Judge.

Action by the Dunlap Hardware Company against Rouse & Williams as defendant, and the Albany & Northern Railway Company as garnishee. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the garnishee brings error. Affirmed.

J. H. Tipton and Maynard & Hooper, for plaintiff in error. Hardeman, Jones & Johnston, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The Dunlap Hardware Company filed a suit in the city court of Sylvester against Rouse & Williams, and at the same time made affidavit and bond before a justice of the peace in Bibb county upon which summons of garnishment was issued. Return of the garnishment affidavit and bond was made by J. L. Giddens as deputy sheriff of Worth county upon April 24, 1907, to the city court of Sylvester, with the entry that he had served summons of garnishment upon an agent of the railroad company as garnishee. The entry of service of the summons of garnishment was as follows: "Georgia, Worth County. I have this day served summons and garnishment issued on within affidavit and bond, personally, on the Albany & Northern Railway by handing said summons to Pitts, its agent in charge of its office and place of business in Worth county, Georgia. This 24th day of April, 1907. J. L. Giddens, Dept. Sheriff." No answer was filed by the garnishee in the city court of Sylvester, and after the plaintiff obtained a judgment against the defendants, Rouse & Williams, judgment was duly entered against the garnishee. The judgment against Rouse & Williams was obtained at the August term, 1907, while judgment was entered by default against the garnishee at the September term, 1907, of the city court of Sylvester. Execution issued on the judgment against the garnishee which was levied on January 8, 1908, upon certain property of the plaintiff in error, and on January 27, 1908, the defendant company filed its affidavit of illegality as follows: "And now comes the defendant, garnishee, the Albany & Northern Railway Company, garnishee, in the above case, and files this, its affidavit of illegality, and says that the execution issued in the above-stated case, at the September term, 1907, of said court, in favor of the plaintiff, the Dunlap Hardware Company, against the Albany & Northern Railway Company as garnishee for the sum of $706.98 principal, and $32.75 interest, $30.80 attorney's fees, and $13.50 costs, is a proceeding illegally against this defendant for the following reasons: (1) Because this defendant has never been served with any summons of garnishment in the above-stated case, nor has it ever acknowledged service upon any such summons, nor has it appeared and pleaded to any such summons, nor did it have knowledge or notice of any kind of a pendency of such case, or that any garnishment had been issued against it, at the time said judgment was taken; nor did it have any notice of any kind that such judgment was taken until the execution based thereon was on the 9th day of January, 1908, levied upon certain of its property in the town of Warwick, said county, consisting of its depot, roadbed, and right of way, running one-half mile each way from depot, which levy was made on the 9th day of January, 1908, by J. H. Jones, deputy sheriff of Worth county, Ga., and notice that day given by the said Jones to the agent of this defendant of said levy, and that the said property would be advertised to be sold on the first Tuesday in February, 1908. Defendant says that the service of this notice by said deputy sheriff was the first notice of any kind conveyed to it in any manner that there existed such a case or judgment, and therefore it has never had its day in court nor any opportunity to make its answer to such summons of garnishment. Defendant further says that neither at the time of this issue of said summons nor at any time since then was it indebted in any way to said Rouse & Williams, the said J. M. Rouse, or the said W. O. Williams, nor did it at any time have, nor has at any time since had, any money, goods, property, or effects at any time of either of the above parties; and, had this defendant been served or had knowledge of the issuance of any summons of garnishment directed to it, it would have made answer as required by law and set up these facts. (2) That the only entry of service of said summons of garnishment purporting to have been made upon this defendant is as follows: 'Georgia, Worth County. I have this day served summons of garnishment issued on within affidavit and bond personally on the Albany & Northern Railway by handing same summons to Pitts, its agent in charge of its office and place of business in Worth county, Georgia. This 24th day of April, 1907. J. L. Giddens, Deputy Sheriff.' Defendant says that the above entry shows upon its face that no legal summons of garnishment was served or attempted to be served upon it, because: (a) The corporate name of this defendant is the Albany & Northern Railway Company, and by this name alone is it known and has it power to sue and to be sued. (b) Because the entry of service of said summons of garnishment does not allege upon what agent of this defendant it was served, or what office said Pitts was in charge, only alleging one ——— Pitts, and its office and place of business to be in Worth county, Georgia, not alleging that that was its only office or place of business in said county, while in truth defendant has more than one office and place of business in said county, and at different points in said county, nor does said entry with sufficient certainty identify said Pitts, either by name, description, or otherwise, nor does it allege his given name was unknown or could not be ascertained. (3) Because it does not appear from the face of the record that any garnishment was issued by any officer authorized to issue such garnishment and summons."

On November 18, 1908, the issue raised by the first ground of the affidavit of illegality was submitted by way of a traverse of the sheriff's entry of service of summons of garnishment. The finding of the jury was against the traverse, the garnishee's motion for a new trial was overruled, and the judgment of the court in this regard was brought to this court for review. Albany & Northern Ry. Co. v. Dunlap Hardware Company, 6 Ga. App. 17, 63 S. E. 1124. This court at that time dismissed the writ of error as being prematurely brought, for the reason that the traverse was really a part of the first ground of the illegality; but we gave the plaintiff in error permission to file the bill of exceptions as exceptions pendente lite. A considerable portion of the brief of the counsel for the defendant in error in the present case is addressed to the right of this court to order the bill of exceptions to be filed as exceptions pendente lite. We pretermit any discussion of this question at this time because it is immaterial to the conclusion in the case. If the exceptions pendente lite were not filed in time, the judgment of the city court of Sylvester is final, and cannot be reversed. If the former writ of error was properly filed as exceptions pendente lite, then we find no error in the judgment of the trial judge in overruling the motion for a new trial upon the traverse.

Upon an examination of the exceptions pendente lite, we find that the motion for a new trial which was overruled assigns error upon five grounds in addition to the general grounds that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, etc. The first of these grounds is that the court erred in sustaining the objection of the plaintiff's counsel to the introduction of the charter of the defendant company, because the entry of the deputy sheriff as to the service of summons of garnishment designated the party served as "Albany & Northern Railway," when, in fact, the name of the company is Albany & Northern Railway Company, and the charter would show this fact. We are of the opinion that the two names are idem sonans, and, even if a plea of misnomer had been filed and the evidence then excluded, the error would not be so material as to warrant a new trial.

In the second special ground of the motion for a new trial, it is complained that the court erred in overruling the movant's objections to introduction of the affidavit and bond for garnishment; that the affidavit and bond appear to have been made before a justice of the peace in Bibb county, Ga., and that, under the act creating the city court of Sylvester, "the justice of the peace in Bibb county, nor any other county, has the right to return a summons of garnishment or a process to the city court of Sylvester." Perhaps the statement of this ground of the motion, as made, is true, but if the point sought to be raised, as we apprehend, is that the justice of the peace in Bibb county could not issue a summons of garnishment as was done in this case, and the same be served and returned by a proper officer in Worth county, then the contention of the movant is without merit. The act creating the city court of Sylvester expressly provides that the court may have jurisdiction of the summons of garnishment.

The third ground of the motion for a new trial complains of the admission of the evidence of a witness, Harris, to the effect that Pitts, an employé of the Albany & Northern Railway Company, came to him with some papers, and stated that these papers which he called "garnishee papers" had been served on him, and he did not know what to do with them. We think this evidence was properly admitted by the court. If the witness saw the papers in Pitts' possession, as he testified he did, this was a substantive fact. Pitts' own evidence in the case demonstrates that he was an agent of the company in Worth county upon whom service upon the company might be perfected and the statement made by him seems to us admissible, not only as a part of the res gestæ of the physical fact of showing the papers to Harris, but also upon the ground that the admission was made dum fervet opus, because they were still in his hands and the duty was still upon Pitts of taking some action in regard to them in behalf of his principal.

Upon the return of the case to the city court of Sylvester, the trial judge finally disposed of the case sustaining demurrers to the affidavit of illegality and exception is taken to this judgment. Having approved of the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial upon the traverse, we come to consider whether the judge erred in dismissing the affidavit of illegality as insufficient. In addition to the grounds of illegality, which we have quoted above, the garnishee amended by setting up the fact that Rouse & Williams were adjudicated bankrupts on November 1, 1907, and insisted that by reason of that fact the judgment entered against the garnishee on October 12, 1907, was void; also that the summons of garnishment was void because the justice of the peace in Bibb county has no right to issue a summons of garnishment, and make the same returnable to the city court of Sylvester. The latter ground of the affidavit of illegality is but a clearer statement of one of the original grounds to which we have already adverted. The first ground of illegality was practically disposed of by the finding of the jury upon the traverse adversely to the garnishee, and for that reason the garnishee was not harmed by sustaining the demurrer thereto, which was of itself good because the affidavit did not set up that there had been a traverse of the officer's return, or that he had been made a party to the proceeding. The same reason applies to the second ground of the original affidavit of illegality in so far as the entry of service is concerned. As to that portion of the affidavit which related to the corporate name of the garnishee, the omission of the word "company" was at best but a misnomer and amendable. The entry of service showing that Pitts was an agent in charge of a place of business in Worth county rendered worthless that portion in the affidavit in which it was insisted that he should be more specifically designated. The service was good if it was effected on any agent of the garnishee within the jurisdiction of the city court of Sylvester; that is, one agent who was the proper person to be served in Worth county was just as good as any other through whom service might be properly effected. As we have already stated, there can be no question that a justice of the peace in Bibb county could take the affidavit and bond and issue the summons of garnishment which might thereafter be served by any proper officer in the county of Worth. As the case was pending in the city court of Sylvester, the deputy sheriff of Worth county was such a proper officer.

There is no merit in the ground of the affidavit of illegality which attempts to set up the adjudication of Rouse & Williams as bankrupts. In the first place, there is no statement of illegality to show any action taken by the bankruptcy court with reference to the suit brought by the Dunlap Hardware Company against Rouse & Williams or as to the garnishment sued out or that there was in fact any liability at all on the part of the Albany & Northern Railway Company to bankrupt Rouse & Williams. But, even if the affidavit had contained statements to this effect, the garnishment was served April 24, 1907, and from that time the Dunlap Hardware Company had an inchoate lien on whatever amount the Albany & Northern Railway Company might be indebted to Rouse & Williams or on any property of Rouse & Williams that might be in possession of the railway company. The petition in bankruptcy was not filed until October 12, 1907, and the adjudication was had on November 1, 1907. The bankruptcy could not relieve the garnishee from the judgment rendered against it. In Re Maher (D. C.) 169 Fed. 997, Judge Newman says: "More than four months prior to the filing of a bankrupt's petition, claimant sued the bankrupt on open account and garnished certain debtors of the bankrupt, who held sufficient funds to cover any judgment that might be rendered in the main suit. The bankrupt gave a bond dissolving the garnishment depositing with the sureties one thousand dollars to secure them against loss. Held, that claimant acquired a lien as against the garnishees, under the express provision of the Laws of Georgia 1901, p. 55." The trustee in bankruptcy, if any one, could alone raise the point which the affidavit of illegality in this case seeks to prevent, or, as we held in National Surety Co. v. Medlock, 2 Ga. App. 665, 58 S. E. 1131, the effect of section 67(f) of the national bankruptcy act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 565 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450)), is not to avoid the levies and liens therein referred to against all the world, but only as against the trustee in bankruptcy and those claiming under him in order that the property may pass to and be distributed among the creditors of the bankrupt. McKenney v. Cheney, 118 Ga. 337, 45 S. E. 433.

In our judgment, the demurrer to the affidavit of illegality was properly sustained. Judgment affirmed.

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v.
DUNCAN. (No. 2,227.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 6, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 205*)—REVIEW—CERTIORARI—RECORD.

The exception which assigns error on the refusal of the justice of the peace to allow the defendant in the court below to amend its plea by adding an affidavit to the same could not be considered by the judge of the superior court because the untraversed answer of the magistrate contradicted the averments of the petition for certiorari as to this point.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 798, 799; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§§ 96, 183*)—REVIEW—CERTIORARI—HARMLESS ERROR.

The judgment is controlled by the rulings in Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Coursey, 1 Ga. App. 662, 57 S. E. 968, and Coffee v. McCaskey Register Co., 7 Ga. App. 425, 66 S. E. 1032, and there was no error in overruling the certiorari. Where the plaintiff's account is proved by affidavit as provided in Civ. Code 1895, § 4130, and the defendant has filed a general denial, not sworn to, the case, so far as the defendant is concerned, is in default, and the direction of a verdict by the magistrate is harmless error. If an offer to amend the defendant's plea by adding the required affidavit had been made before any testimony was offered, the amendment should have been allowed and the right of supporting the defense by testimony would have followed. Coffee v. McCaskey Register Co., supra. But in response to a suit on account verified by an affidavit as provided by Civ. Code 1895, § 4130, the defendant must likewise swear to his answer; and, failing thus to answer, the defendant is not entitled to introduce any evidence for the reason that he has no plea.

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 100*)—PROCEDURE—PLEADING—VERIFICATION.

Unless the defendant in response to a suit on account which has been verified by affidavit as prescribed in Civ. Code 1895, § 4130, swears to his defense, he is not entitled to introduce any testimony for the reason that he has no plea. Brierton v. Smith, 7 Ga. App. 69, 66 S. E. 375.

COUNTIES (§ 113*)—POWERS OF COUNTY BOARD—INSTALLATION OF TELEPHONES.

The county authorities in this state have the power to install telephones or to cause them to be installed in the courthouses, jails, pauper farms, and other places where they may be needed in the conduct of such matters and things as the counties are authorized to support and maintain by taxation.

Error from Superior Court, Dooly County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

Action by the Vienna Telephone Company against B. M. Wood, treasurer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Busbee & Busbee, for plaintiff in error. W. F. George, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. The question is whether telephone service for the courthouse, jail, and pauper farm of a county is a legitimate and constitutional charge for which the county authorities may appropriate money from the county treasury. We think that it is. It is true that he who asserts a county's power to contract for anything or to pay for it from county tax money must be able to show the authority, either expressly given or arising by necessary implication. By the Constitution (article 7, par. 2 [Civ. Code 1895, § 5892]) the taxing power, and consequently the contracting power, of counties, is limited as follows: "The General Assembly shall not have power to delegate to any county the right to levy a tax for any purpose, except for educational purposes in instructing children in the elementary branches of an English education only; to build and repair the public buildings and bridges; to maintain and support prisoners; to pay jurors and coroners, and for litigation, quarantine, roads, and expenses of courts; to support paupers and pay debts heretofore existing." So far as the courthouse itself is concerned, only the power to "build and repair" is given; and yet who would say that the county authorities had exhausted their power in this respect when they had erected a building with floors, walls, ceilings and roof? There must be necessary tables, chairs, and other legitimate furnishings. Will it be insisted that a county cannot buy handcuffs? Yet, in a strict and literal sense, this would not be "to support and maintain prisoners." As the Supreme Court pointed out in the case of Pennington v. Gammon, 67 Ga. 456, 459, there is no law expressly authorizing the county authorities to purchase spades, shovels, hoes, axes, and other things needed in working the county chain gang; yet it was held that not only these things, but also expensive improved machinery, might lawfully be bought. Cf. Wright v. Floyd County, 1 Ga. App. 582, 58 S. E. 72. Telephone service is no longer a luxury. It is a modern business necessity. When it is needed in connection with the matters and things which the county authorities are authorized to maintain and to tax for, they may lawfully contract for it. It then becomes a part of the maintenance and equipment of the public buildings, a part of the expense of courts, of prisoners, of paupers, etc. It becomes a part of the machinery by which the county authorities carry on the legitimate county business; and the authorities may lawfully pay for it out of the county funds.

WALKER v. STATE. (No. 2,786.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 6, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 260*)—CERTIORARI—WHEN LIES.

The superior courts of this state have jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution to correct errors in all inferior judicatories by writ of certiorari. A judgment of the city court overruling a motion for a new trial in a criminal case is a final judgment, from which certiorari will lie to the superior court; and this is true, although the act creating the city court provides that a writ of error may be sued out directly from that court to the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 804*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARGING STATUTE.

Where there is a timely request to the judge to charge the jury in writing, he must copy into his charge any statute which he submits to the jury, or he must read to the jury the statute verbatim, "noting accurately in his written charge the statute so read." If the notations made in the written charge leave in doubt what statute the judge did read to the jury, or what portion of the statute was so read, the mandatory requirements of the law are not complied with, and if the evidence does not demand the verdict a new trial will be granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 804.*]

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Jack Walker was convicted of selling whisky, and brings error. Reversed.

Doyle Campbell, for plaintiff in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Jack Walker was convicted in the city court of Monticello of selling whisky. He filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled. He then petitioned the superior court for a writ of certiorari, the judge of the superior court refused to sanction the petition, and he brings error. Two questions are made in the record: First, did certiorari lie from the judgment of the city court overruling the motion for a new trial? And, second, did the judge of the city court comply with the statute requiring him on a written request by defendant's counsel to reduce his charge to writing?

1. Counsel for the state insists that, as the plaintiff in error had filed a motion for a new trial in the city court, he could not also sue for a writ of certiorari in the case; that the right of having the judgment of an inferior court reviewed on certiorari does not give the right to review a judgment refusing a new trial, and especially so where the act creating the city court, as in this case, provides for a writ of error from the city court directly to the Supreme Court; and he contends that the contrary view will greatly delay the final adjudication of criminal cases. The right of certiorari is a constitutional right. The Constitution expressly confers upon the superior court the power "to correct errors in inferior judicatories, by writ of certiorari." Article 6, § 4, par. 5, codified as section 5846 of the Civil Code of 1895. See, also, section 4634 of the Civil Code. In the case of Archie v. State, 99 Ga. 23, 25 S. E. 612, the defendant filed a motion for a new trial in the city court, where he was convicted, and subsequently dismissed his motion for a new trial, and petitioned for the writ of certiorari; and the question in that case was whether the remedy of certiorari could be invoked without first moving for a new trial in the city court. The Supreme Court held that, "the right of certiorari being a constitutional one, the privilege of moving for a new trial is merely cumulative; and a complaining party could avail himself of that in the first instance, or not, as he chose." See, also, Harvey v. Jewell, 84 Ga. 234, 10 S. E. 631; Winn v. State, 126 Ga. 419, 55 S. E. 178.

It cannot be questioned that the judgment of the city court in overruling the defendant's motion for a new trial in that court was a final judgment, and it seems to be equally clear that any final judgment of an inferior judicatory, such as the city court, may be reviewed by the superior court upon certiorari. We think, therefore, that under the act creating the city court the defendant in this case could have brought the decision of the judge of the city court, overruling his motion for a new trial, directly to this court by bill of exceptions, or he had the right, under the Constitution and the law and the decisions of the Supreme Court, to have the judgment of the city court first reviewed by the superior court upon certiorari, and, if his petition for the writ of certiorari was denied, a writ of error would lie from the judgment of the superior court to this court. It is true that this construction of the law may result in some delay in final adjudications in criminal cases; but, if any remedy is needed for this result, the Legislature, and not the courts, is the proper source from which it must come.

2. The trial judge, complying with the request of counsel, reduced his charge to writing. In noting the law under which the indictment is framed, he made the following statement: "The defendant has been charged and indicted with the offense named in the indictment under provisions of Georgia Laws, 1907, which read as follows: Acts 1907, page —, through words 'in section 1089,' p. 82." In other words, instead of writing out the statute under which the indictment was framed, he read it from the Acts of 1907. The charge as written out was not sent up with the record, and the judge says, in his verification of the grounds of the amended motion for a new trial, that the annotations set up in the motion are correct. These annotations are: "Acts 1907, page —, through words 'in section 1089,' p. 82." It is contended by plaintiff in error that this was not a compliance with the statute; that the notations contained in the record as to what the judge read are not accurate, in that it is not distinctly stated what "provisions of the Georgia Laws of 1907" the court read, or, even assuming that he read the prohibition law, under which the indictment was framed, it does not appear what part of the law he read to the jury, in that it is not stated where he commenced to read; that, although it is stated where the quotation concluded, it is not stated where the quotation commenced.

We think the charge is subject to the criticism. While it is probable that the judge did read the prohibition act from the beginning, and through the words "in section 1089," as contained in Acts 1907, p. 82, yet he does not clearly so state, nor does it clearly appear from the notations that he did so. In Burns v. State, 89 Ga. 527, 15 S. E. 748, the Supreme Court holds that "it is no failure to comply with a request to charge the jury in writing for the judge, instead of copying into his charge sections of the Code which he submits to the jury, to read these sections verbatim from the Code itself, noting accurately in his written charge the sections so read." We are not willing to give to the imperative statute requiring the judge to reduce his charge to writing any more liberal or extended construction than was given by the Supreme Court in that case. Not only the Supreme Court, but this court, has repeatedly held that the trial judges are required to obey both in letter and spirit the statute which declares that they must write out in full, when a timely request is made, the charge to the jury. Fry v. Shehee, 55 Ga. 208; Wheatley v. West, 61 Ga. 401; Forrester v. Cocke, 6 Ga. App. 829, 65 S. E. 1063. When we consider that the reason for this requirement, as announced by the Supreme Court and this court, is to remove all possibility of dispute between the court and counsel as to what in fact was charged, we think that any interpretation of the statute which permits a substantial compliance with its terms cannot be upheld. The statute demands literal compliance. We hold that the annotations are not sufficiently accurate or definite to show what was in fact read by the court in the charge to the jury in the present case.

The evidence in the record, while sufficient to support the verdict, does not demand it, and, following the decision of this court in the Forrester Case, supra, we are constrained to grant another trial because of the failure of the trial judge to comply with the statute requiring him to reduce his charge to writing. We think that for this reason the judge of the superior court should have sustained the certiorari.

Judgment reversed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 757*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—OPINION AS TO EVIDENCE.

After instructing the jury that it was their duty to reconcile the evidence of the different witnesses, if it could be done without imputing perjury to any, the court charged that, "when witnesses agree as to important facts testified to, slight discrepancies as to the collateral attendant facts afford no ground to discredit either of them." Held, this was not an intimation of an opinion by the court that any discrepancies existed, or that the discrepancies, if any, were slight, and therefore not sufficient to discredit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 757.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 758*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—EFFECT OF EVIDENCE—STATEMENT OF DEFENDANT.

After instructing the jury in the language of the statute that they were authorized to believe the defendant's statement in preference to the evidence in the case, the judge added: "But you are not under any obligation to do so, or not to do so. The law simply gives you the power to do so, if you believe it is the truth." Held not error, because "it was a disparagement of the statement, and impressed the jury with the idea that they were under no obligation to believe the defendant's statement." The addition to the language of the statute, while not material, was entirely superfluous, and against the repeated rulings of this court and of the Supreme Court that trial judges, in their instructions on the effect or weight of the statement, should confine themselves to the language of the statute. The statute is full enough and clear enough, and any effort to make it more explicit is apt to lead to error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1786-1789; Dec. Dig. § 758.*]

3. CONSPIRACY (§§ 23, 47*)—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

The court, in charging the jury, properly defined a conspiracy as "a combination or agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act," and properly charged that "the existence of a conspiracy may be established by proof of acts and conduct, as well as by proof of an express agreement." The charge on the subject of a conspiracy was based on the evidence in the case, and was well adjusted to the issues.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1454-1461; vol. 8, p. 7613.]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SELF-DEFENSE—APPLICABILITY TO ISSUES.

Where, on a trial for murder, the sole defense relied upon is that the defendant did not kill the deceased or participate in the homicide, the law of justifiable homicide in self-defense is not applicable, and there is no error in not instructing the jury on that subject, unless the evidence otherwise presents the issue of justifiable homicide in self-defense. In this case no such issue was presented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614-632; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—INSTRUCTIONS—MUTUAL COMBAT.

The evidence demanded a charge on the law of homicide as the result of mutual combat, and the court did not err in giving in charge section 73 of the Penal Code.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

6. INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The charge as a whole was a clear and accurate submission of the issues made by the evidence. No error of law was committed, and the evidence fully supports the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Worth County; Frank Park, Judge.

Clarence Stevens was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 6, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 348*)—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The verdict is not without evidence to support it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 348.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*)—RAILROADS (§ 348*)—QUESTIONS FOR JURY—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

The charge construed as a whole was fair, lucid, and correct, and was not misleading.

(a) The existence of negligence is essentially a fact for solution by the jury.

(b) Proof that the injury was received by the plaintiff through the operation of the defendant's train is prima facie proof of every act of negligence alleged in the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 277-306; Dec. Dig. § 136; Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 348.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 185*)—INJURIES TO THE PERSON—EXPECTANCY OF LIFE.

Where the age of the person in question is shown, expectancy of life may be determined by the jury without having the mortality tables before them or without any other direct evidence on the subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

4. NO ERROR.

No material error appears.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. NEGLIGENCE (§ 3*)—"DILIGENCE."

"Diligence" is a relative term, and what is "due diligence" in a case where negligence would be wrongful must be determined from all the surrounding circumstances, for a degree of diligence which might suffice under one set of circumstances might be wholly inadequate under different conditions.

Error from City Court of Savannah; Davis Freeman, Judge.

Action by Willie Moore, by next friend, against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Willie Moore, by his next friend, brought suit against the railroad company for damages for personal injuries. He claimed that while he was crossing Henry street, in the city of Savannah, late at night, some freight cars were standing on the tracks of the railroad just on the edge of the crossing without any light on them, and that, when he was opposite the end of one of the cars, an engine or train of the defendant struck the other end without any warning or signals, and knocked the car suddenly on the crossing, whereby the car ran over his foot and mashed and permanently injured it. He alleged that the injury was due to the following acts of negligence on the part of the defendant: (a) Failure to lower the railway gates or guards so as to warn plaintiff of the danger incident to the operation of its cars. (b) Failure to keep a watchman stationed at the intersection of the defendant's tracks with Henry street so as to warn pedestrians of the movements of its cars. (c) Failure to provide a light so as to illuminate the northern end of the car and so as to enable the plaintiff to see those in charge of the movement of the car. (d) Failure to provide a light or signal on the rear end of the car. (e) Failure to station a flagman or brakeman in charge of the car and at the rear end thereof before moving it so as to warn the petitioner of the intention to shift the car. (f) Failure to blow a whistle or sound a gong, or give any other warning that the car was to be moved. (g) Negligence in suddenly starting the car upon the public crossing violently and without warning.

Plaintiff testified that between 11 and 12 o'clock on the night of October 7, 1908, he was struck by a train of cars while he was upon the crossing made by the intersection of Henry street and the defendant's tracks; that he was knocked down and his foot seriously and permanently injured; that he was not aware of the presence of the train, or that it was going to start; that there was no gate down, no flagman at the end of the cars, no watchman stationed at the street crossing, no bell rung or whistle blown. He testified he was 19 years old, and he showed his earning capacity.

The railroad company denied that the plaintiff was injured in the manner he alleged, and introduced testimony to show that he was not injured on the crossing at all, but was hurt by reason of his endeavoring to board a passing freight train and falling therefrom. The evidence was conflicting, and the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,500. The defendant excepts to the overruling of its motion for a new trial. In addition to the usual general grounds of the motion, the defendant complained of certain instructions contained in the charge of the court to the jury and of the admission of certain testimony. The special grounds of the motion for a new trial were as follows:

1. Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "Applying the law to the facts in the case now before you, should you find from the evidence that the plaintiff has sustained by proof satisfactory to you by a preponderance of the evidence, the alleged facts in his declaration, and that the defendant's servants in charge of the car or cars were negligent in the manner alleged, that they did or failed to do what is alleged in the declaration, and that doing or failing to do that amounted to the lack of ordinary care and diligence, and that the plaintiff could not have avoided such negligence by the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety, and that at the time he was injured he was in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover for the injury sustained"—the error in said charge being (a) that it submits to the jury as issues on the question of negligence three statements set forth in the declaration and declared to be negligence which did not constitute negligence either as a matter of law or under the facts proved, and such statements in the declaration should have been eliminated by the charge, to wit, that it failed to provide a watchman stationed at the intersection of Henry street with the tracks of the railroad company so as to warn passing pedestrians of the movements of defendant's cars; that the defendant failed to provide an electric light or other light at said intersection so as to enable plaintiff to see those in charge of the movement of the car; that the defendant was negligent in failing to lower the guard rails or railroad gates that he alleges were located at that point to warn passing pedestrians of the danger incident to crossing the track while the car was in motion. (b) Said charge is misleading and confusing, in that it thus submits to the jury statements in the declaration which could not possibly be negligence. (c) Said charge is further confusing and misleading, in that it stated to the jury in one portion thereof that the defendant would be liable if the plaintiff proved by a preponderance of evidence that "the defendant's servants in charge of the car or cars were negligent in the manner alleged," and in another portion states to the jury that the defendant would be liable if the plaintiff proved by a preponderance of evidence that "they did or failed to do what is alleged in the declaration"; there being several acts of negligence alleged in addition to those of the servants of the defendant in charge of the train. (d) The court should not have left it to the jury to say whether the omission of the defendant to do the acts set out in the declaration, to wit, to have a watchman, an electric light, and to lower the gates, amounted to a lack of ordinary care and diligence.

(2) Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "In other words, it must be shown to you that the injury occurred as described in the declaration, and that the injury so done amounted to or was caused by the lack of ordinary care and diligence, either in the acts alleged or in the omission of acts alleged in the declaration"—the error in said charge being: (a) That it submits to the jury as issues on the question of negligence three statements set forth in the declaration and declared to be negligence which do not constitute negligence either as a matter of law or under the facts proved, and such statements should have been eliminated by the charge, to wit, that the defendant failed to provide a watchman; that the defendant failed to provide an electric light; that the defendant failed to lower the gates. (b) Neither of the three said acts being negligence as a matter of law or as a matter of fact, the court should not have left it to the jury to determine whether the alleged omission of the defendant to provide a watchman, to provide an electric light at said crossing, and to lower the gates at said crossing amounted to a lack of ordinary care and diligence. (c) Said charge authorized the jury to find for the plaintiff in the event the jury found that the defendant omitted to do any one of the three acts hereinbefore set out, to wit, to provide a watchman, to provide an electric light, and to lower the gates, and that such omission amounted to a lack of ordinary care on the part of the defendant, although the jury may have found that the defendant was not negligent in other particulars alleged in the declaration, it appearing that no one of the three acts of alleged negligence as above set forth was negligence as a matter of law or as a matter of fact. (d) Said charge authorized the jury to find for the plaintiff in the event the jury found that the defendant omitted to do any one of the acts alleged in the declaration, and that such omission amounted to a lack of ordinary care and diligence, although the jury may have found that such omission was not the proximate cause of the injury and did not contribute thereto.

3. Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "I charge you that it is a question for you to determine from all the facts and circumstances of the case whether or not ordinary care and prudence required that the defendant railroad company should have done what it is alleged in this declaration it failed to do, if you find that it failed to do it, or if it amounted to a want of ordinary care and diligence for it to do what it is alleged in this declaration it did, if you find that it did such a thing. That applies to all of the allegations of negligence set out in the declaration"—the error in said charge being the same as set out heretofore in the second ground of the amended motion for new trial in paragraphs "a," "b," "c," and "d."

4. Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence that ordinary care and prudence required that the defendant should have done what it is alleged it should have done to avoid the alleged danger set out in the petition, and that the defendant failed to provide persons, servants, or means as therein alleged to be necessary in the exercise of ordinary care to avoid the alleged danger, and that such failure was negligence and was the cause of the injuries received by the plaintiff, if you find that such injuries were received by him, and that at the time the injuries were received by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence on his part he could not have prevented the same, then that would make such a case as would authorize a recovery on the part of the plaintiff"—the error in said charge being the same as set out heretofore in the second ground of the amended motion for new trial in paragraphs "a," "b," "c," and "d."

5. Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "Now, gentlemen, if you find that it has been shown by the preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff in this case has been injured in the manner he described, and because of something alleged to have been done or omitted in this declaration, and that the doing or omission to do this something alleged in the declaration caused the injury, and amounted to the lack of the exercise of ordinary care and diligence on the part of the defendant company, he may recover, provided he himself was in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence for his own safety"—the error in said charge being the same as set out heretofore in the second ground of the amended motion for new trial in paragraphs "a," "b," "c," and "d."

6. Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "Having arrived at the yearly loss, as indicated above, you can multiply the amount so ascertained by the expectancy of life of the plaintiff, and the result would be the gross amount of the loss he will have sustained during his life expectancy"—the error in said charge being that there was no evidence on which to base such charge, it not having been proved what the life expectancy of the plaintiff was at the time he was injured.

7. Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "This cash value may be arrived at by dividing the gross amount by $1, plus the interest on $1 at 7 per cent. for the plaintiff's expectancy of life." The error in said charge being: (a) Said charge lays down an incorrect rule for determining the cash value, the true rule being that the gross earnings are not taken as a basis for arriving at the cash value of such loss as that claimed by the plaintiff in this case, but the total amount after allowance has been made for increasing years, feebleness of health, actual sickness, the loss of employment, voluntarily abstaining from work, dullness in business, reduction in wages, the increasing infirmities of age, with a corresponding diminution of earning capacity. (b) There was no evidence on which to base such a charge, the plaintiff's expectancy of life not having been proved. (c) The rule for determining the cash value of the loss in such a case as this as set out in said charge is not the true rule. The correct amount will not be reached by dividing the gross amount by $1 plus the interest on $1 at 7 per cent.

8. It is insisted that the court erred in admitting the following testimony of West Murray, over the defendant's objections: "He (Martin Fifer) made a report to me that he believed some one got hurt at Henry street crossing; that he heard the cars run back, and he heard some one holler." The objections to the testimony were that the evidence was hearsay, and that the witness was seeking to bind this defendant by the statement of a party who bore no relation to the defendant, and whose statements could under no circumstances bind or affect the defendant. The admission of this evidence is insisted to be erroneous for three reasons: (a) That the court permitted hearsay evidence on the most material issue in the case to reach the jury. (b) The court permitted hearsay evidence to go before the jury without warning or instructing them not to consider it. (c) The court permitted the hearsay statement of a party to go to the jury, which statement had the effect of binding the defendant, when it was not shown that the party making the statement bore any relation whatever to the defendant.

Garrard & Meldrim and Shelby Myrick, for plaintiff in error. Osborne & Lawrence, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). So far as the general grounds of the motion are concerned, it cannot be said that the verdict is without evidence to support it. A consideration of each of the exceptions to the charge of the court in connection with the charge as a whole, as it appears in the record, and a careful examination of the brief of evidence, convinces us that there is no error in the charge which requires a grant of a new trial. The several exceptions to the charge which we have quoted furnish an illustration of the fact that, when only segregated excerpts of a charge are considered, a minor error may be seemingly aggravated and error appear to exist, where in fact there is none. As appears in the context of the charge (following the portion which is made the subject of the first exception, and also in other portions of the charge), the jury were several times told by the court that the plaintiff could not recover for any negligence of the defendant, if any had been shown, other than that specifically charged in the petition. The questions which arise, then, are whether the portions of the charge excepted to were misleading and confusing, whether the court should have specifically eliminated certain allegations of negligence because of lack of evidence to support them, and the inquiry as to whether the charge of the court authorized the plaintiff to recover even though some of the grounds of negligence relied upon may not have been the proximate cause of the injury or have contributed thereto. It is insisted that the court erred in leaving to the determination of the jury whether certain acts or omissions of the defendant were in fact negligence. We would only say in regard to this last insistence that we heartily approve the charge of the court in this respect because negligence is purely a question of fact, and its absence or existence should always be submitted to the jury for their determination. As to the insistence of the plaintiff in error that the charge of the court submits to the jury as issues of fact on the question of the defendant's negligence three of the allegations of negligence as to which no evidence was introduced, it is only necessary to say that, when the plaintiff proved his injury and proved that it was caused by the defendant's train, all of the distinct allegations of negligence in the petition were presumptively proved, and the burden was cast upon the defendant railroad company of rebutting that presumption. If the defendant failed to rebut this presumptive proof (and in this case no evidence to that effect was offered), the plaintiff had established prima facie that his injury was due to each and all of the negligent acts or omissions charged in his declaration; so we do not think the insistence can be maintained that the court's charge was without evidence to authorize it. As to the failure to furnish gates or guards, the failure to furnish a watchman, and to provide electric or other lights, it was not for the court, but for the jury, to say whether these omissions on the part of the defendant company or either of them constitute negligence. See Columbus Railway Co. v. Asbell, 133 Ga. 573, 68 S. E. 902.

The plaintiff in error insists that a plaintiff cannot detail in a petition a number of absurd allegations of negligence, and then have the court submit them to the jury without reasonable evidence to prove them. In regard to this, it is only necessary to say that if the allegations of a petition are absurd or unreasonable, and it palpably appears that the statement of facts in the petition would not constitute actionable negligence, a timely demurrer would serve to raise the issue of law, and to cause the elimination of those allegations which should not properly be submitted to the jury.

It is held in Savannah, Thunderbolt & Isle of Hope Railway v. Beasley, 94 Ga. 142, 21 S. E. 285, that "in charging the jury upon negligence the court should not enumerate acts or omissions which are wholly outside of any degree of diligence which the law requires." Assuming, then, that the plaintiff had proved the allegations contained in his petition by the presumption arising from proof of the injury, did the court err in submitting to the jury the failure to furnish a watchman to lower the gates or to provide electric lights for the reason that they were outside of any degree of diligence required by law? We think not. Of course, "diligence," like "negligence," is a relative term. In determining whether due diligence is used in any particular case where negligence would be wrongful, all of the surrounding circumstances are to be considered. A degree of diligence which might suffice under one set of circumstances might be wholly inadequate under different conditions. This is a matter which the law recognizes, and in every case the jury in determining the fact of negligence or no negligence must be governed by the circumstances and conditions surrounding the act or omission under consideration. In our view that all questions of negligence are primarily questions of fact, there could certainly be no error in submitting to the jury whether the failure to provide lights or to lower the rails or to place a watchman at this street crossing should have been submitted to the jury, in connection with the other circumstances of the case, to allow the jury to say whether these omissions were under the existing circumstances negligence. But inasmuch as it appears undisputed in the evidence that the point where the plaintiff claimed to have been hurt was upon a much traveled street of a populous city, and that, in addition, the tracks of the defendant at this particular point were almost constantly used, we think the court would have been safe in assuming that the omissions which were charged as negligence were not outside of that degree of diligence which the law would require at such a locality, and that, therefore, the charge of the court was not in conflict with anything held in the Beasley Case, supra.

It is insisted that the instructions of which complaint is made in the first three special grounds of the motion for a new trial are in conflict with the ruling of the Supreme Court in Alabama Midland Railroad v. Guilford, 114 Ga. 631, 40 S. E. 796, in which case the court charged that, "if the defendant was negligent in any of the particulars set out in the declaration and contended for by the plaintiff, you should find this defendant company liable, provided that you find that the plaintiff has sustained an injury." It is true that this charge was disapproved by the Supreme Court, but it was expressly upon the ground that some of the allegations, even if proved, would not have authorized a recovery against the defendant, and the court says further: "The charge left the jury free to find for the plaintiff because of any such act of negligence, although such act may not have in any wise contributed to the plaintiff's injury." The facts in the Guilford Case were very dissimilar to those in the case at bar, because in our judgment any one of the acts of negligence alleged in the present case, if the plaintiff was himself free from fault, might have caused or contributed to the injury and authorized a recovery. It is to be noted, too, that in Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 890, 43 S. E. 280, the method of reviewing the pleadings sanctioned in the Guilford Case, supra, is expressly disapproved. For the reason, then, that we think that the allegations of negligence were within that degree of diligence which the law requires, and because all or any of them could have been considered to be the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, we hold that there was no error in the charge of the court as given, and that the judge was not required to eliminate any of the acts or omissions alleged to be negligence. Of course, the court was required to charge the jury that they must find the specific acts of negligence to have been the proximate cause of the injury, but the judge was not required to needlessly repeat the instruction in totidem verbis that the negligence charged must be the proximate cause of the injury. In the first instruction of which complaint is made the court charged this principle by exclusion when he instructed the jury after telling them that the plaintiff could not recover for any negligence not specifically charged that if the defendant was negligent in the respects charged and the plaintiff could not have avoided the negligence alleged by the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety, and that, if he was in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, then he would be entitled to recover, then proceeded as follows: "I charge you that the plaintiff, if he is entitled to recover, is entitled to recover only upon the allegations set forth in his declaration and none other. In other words, it must be shown to you that the injury occurred as described in the declaration and that that injury, so done, was caused by the lack of ordinary care and diligence either in the acts alleged or in the omission of acts alleged in the declaration." Further on in the charge, the court repeats the instruction to the effect that the jury must find that the negligence alleged was the cause of the plaintiff's injuries in the following language: "If you find from the evidence that ordinary care and prudence require that the defendant should have done what it is alleged it should have done to avoid the alleged danger set out in the petition, and that the defendant failed so to provide persons, servants, or means as therein alleged to be necessary, etc., * * * and that such failure was negligence and was the cause of the injury received, etc., then that would make such a case as would authorize a recovery on the part of the plaintiff." In the charge excepted to in the fifth special ground of the motion for a new trial the jury is again instructed that the plaintiff can only recover if he was injured in the manner described, and because of something alleged to have been done or omitted. We do not think that the jury could have failed to understand that the plaintiff could only recover on account of such negligence as was the proximate cause of the injury, even though the term "proximate cause" was not used. In actions for damages for personal injuries, the jury should, of course, be informed that an act of negligence which is not the proximate cause of the injury should not be considered, but, in the absence of a request for specific instructions upon that point, the fact that the idea is conveyed indirectly, and otherwise than by a pointed statement to that effect, though plainly, does not afford ground for a new trial.

We find no error in the instructions upon the measure of damages. The age of the plaintiff was in evidence, and, although the mortality tables were not introduced, the plaintiff appeared before the jury, and there is nothing in the evidence to show that his health or habits were either better or worse than the average. With these facts before them, the jury could as well determine the expectancy of the plaintiff from their observation and experience as from the tables of mortality. The court having fully instructed the jury that they were to take into consideration lost time and irregularity of income, feebleness of health, actual sickness, loss of employment, voluntarily abstaining from work, dullness in business, reduction in wages, and increasing infirmities of age, there was no error in charging the jury as follows: "Having arrived at the yearly loss as indicated above, you can multiply the amount so ascertained by the expectancy of life of the plaintiff, and the result will be the gross amount of the loss he will have sustained during his life expectancy." Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Co. v. Corcoran, 4 Ga. App. 654, 669, 62 S. E. 130; Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company v. Stewart, 71 Ga. 446. In the case last cited Judge Jackson says: "I know of no law which requires tables of the probable length of life and its probable worth to be introduced. They may be a useful circumstance, but are not conclusive or absolutely essential."

There is no merit in the exception to the charge that the cash value may be arrived at by dividing the gross amount by $1 plus interest on $1 at 7 per cent. for plaintiff's expectancy of life. The complaint is that the instruction lays down an incorrect rule for determining the cash value especially because allowance must be made for increasing years, feebleness of health, sickness, loss of employment, etc. As we have already pointed out, the judge had already instructed the jury to make deductions and allowances for these matters. In the extract excepted to, the court referred to a gross sum, but this sum was to be arrived at by considering all of the contingencies and reductions which had been referred to by the court in connection with the expectancy of life. The instruction, properly construed, means the annual income and the average expectancy both diminished by the various contingencies pointed out in the charge. The same instruction of which complaint is here made was given in the case of Savannah Electric Company v. Bell, 124 Ga. 668, 53 S. E. 109, and was approved as a correct rule for estimating the present value of a sum payable in the future, the court citing Kinney v.

Folkerts, 84 Mich. 616, 48 N. W. 283. But, even if the instruction complained of is not technically correct, it would afford no ground for a reversal for the reasons stated in the Corcoran Case, supra.

The error complained of in the eighth ground, if an error at all, appears harmless when the assignment is considered in connection with the note of the presiding judge, and when the excerpt from Murray's testimony is read with its context. In approving this ground the judge says that the eighth ground is approved with the qualification that the plaintiff expressly disclaimed that the statement narrated by the witness as having been made to him by Martin Fifer was introduced for the purpose of establishing the truth of the hearsay statement of Fifer to the witness, West Murray. This testimony was admitted for the sole purpose of fixing the time of day of the original report made by Fifer to Murray; it being contended that this was a circumstance to aid in fixing the time the injury was inflicted, and was introduced and used for this and no other purpose. Said statement was not urged before the jury in argument save for the purpose aforesaid. One of the issues in the case was the time of the occurrence in which the plaintiff claimed to have been injured. The plaintiff contended that he was injured between 11 and 12 o'clock. The defendant's witnesses testified that he was injured between 12 and 1 o'clock. The fact that Martin Fifer reported the circumstances to West Murray at 11 o'clock was certainly relevant, and what he said in making the report could very properly be considered as part of the res gestæ of the report. Granting that what Martin Fifer said to West Murray was hearsay, it would nevertheless be admissible as explanatory of Fifer's conduct. Hearsay is admissible to explain motive or conduct, and, as the court properly restricted the purpose for which this evidence was used, the assignment of error complaining of its introduction is not meritorious.

Upon a review of the whole case, we are satisfied that the trial was without error, and that the result of the case turned solely upon the credibility of the witnesses.

There was therefore no error in refusing a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v.
GLENN.GLENN v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH
CO. (Nos. 2,119, 2,120.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 6, 1910.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. DAMAGES (§ 14)—"NOMINAL DAMAGES"— AMOUNT—"EXEMPLARY DAMAGES."

"The term 'nominal damages,' like 'exemplary damages,' is purely relative, and carries with it no suggestion of certainty as to amount," while it generally refers to a trivial sum awarded. Where a mere breach of duty or infraction of right is shown, with no serious loss sustained, it is apparent that this trivial sum might, according to the circumstances of each particular case, vary almost indefinitely. In some cases a very small amount might constitute nominal damages; in others a much larger amount might measure down to the same standard of triviality. It would depend largely upon the vastness of the amount involved what sum would be considered trivial. A recovery may be classified as coming under the definition of nominal damages where the violation of a right is shown, substantial damages claimed, and some actual loss proven, and yet the damages are not susceptible of reasonable certainty of proof as to their extent.

2. DAMAGES (§ 14*)—FAILURE TO TRANSMIT.

In an action brought to recover $3,000 damages from a telegraph company for failure to transmit a message, where the undisputed evidence shows a gross violation of the company's duty to transmit the message, a verdict for $250 approved by the trial judge will not, in the absence of anything to justify the suspicion of prejudice or bias, be set aside by this court as excessive, even though the finding was treated in the lower court as one of nominal damages only.

Powell, J., dissenting.

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Action by M. J. Glenn against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From the judgment, both parties bring error. Affirmed.

Du Pont Guerrey, Jos. H. Hall, and Warren Roberts, for plaintiff in error. Nottingham & McClellan and W. D. & Custis Nottingham, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. This case has previously been before this court, and is reported 1 Ga. App. 821, 58 S. E. 83. At that time the judgment of the lower court sustaining a general demurrer to the plaintiff's petition was reversed, and the case remanded for trial. Upon the trial the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $250. The defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and it excepts to that judgment. The plaintiff in the court below offered certain amendments which the court refused to allow, and certain testimony which was repelled; and, by a cross-bill of exceptions, she complains of these rulings. It is not necessary for us to rule upon the cross-bill of exceptions, but we will say in passing that we thought the amendment should have been allowed and some of the excluded testimony should have been admitted.

The controlling question is raised by the main bill of exceptions. There are various grounds in the motion for a new trial, but the only real point raised is that the verdict for $250 in favor of the plaintiff cannot be sustained, because the court restricted the plaintiff to the recovery of nominal damages only, and because $250 is too excessive an amount to be included within the term "nominal damages." We held in the case of Batson v. Higginbotham, 7 Ga. App. 835, 68 S. E. 455, that $380 was too large an amount to be denominated as "nominal damages"; but the circumstances of that case were materially different from those in the case at bar. In Milledgeville Water Co. v. Fowler, 129 Ga. 111, 58 S. E. 643, a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $150 was set aside; but, as pointed out by Judge Beck in that case, there is a wide difference between the mere breach of a contract and a tort in the commission of which a public duty or a private obligation arising from the duty is violated. We are aware that the general definition of nominal damages, as given by Bouvier, Angell, and Black, is that it is such a trivial sum as is awarded where a breach of duty or an infraction of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved. It is defined in our own Code, however, as such a sum as "will carry the costs." Civ. Code 1895, § 3801. Thus a minimum is fixed, but no maximum. We think the proper rule for determining what is a recovery of nominal damages when application is made to the court to set aside a verdict on the ground that the amount is too excessive to be called nominal damages is to be found in the case of Sellers v. Mann, 113 Ga. 643, 39 S. E. 11, where Judge Lewis says: "The term 'nominal damages,' like 'exemplary damages,' is purely relative, and carries with it no suggestion of certainty as to amount. This is shown by the definition given the expression in the recognized authorities. In 2 Bouvier's L. Dict. 504, it is defined as 'a trifling sum awarded where a breach of duty or an infraction of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved to have been sustained.' Nominal damages have also been described as a 'trivial sum awarded where a mere breach of duty or infraction of right is shown, with no serious loss sustained.' Anderson's L. Dict. 307. It is apparent that this 'trivial sum' might, according to the circumstances of each particular case, vary almost indefinitely. In some cases a very small amount might constitute the trivial sum contemplated by the term 'nominal damages'; in others, a much larger amount might measure down to the same standard of triviality. It would depend largely upon the vastness of the amount involved what sum would be considered trivial."

It must also be remembered that the verdicts of juries are not to be interfered with in any case, unless there is something to justify the suspicion of prejudice or bias as affecting the verdict rendered. And, while nominal damages are not strictly compensatory, they are always included under general damages, and it is recognized that there is a class of cases in which the damages cannot be adequately and definitely estimated, and yet, for the infraction of the plaintiff's right or the violation of a duty by the defendant, there is a right of recovery on the principle that wherever there is a right there is a remedy. This principle is recognized by the text-writers, and in support of the proposition the case of Greensboro v. McGibbony, 93 Ga. 672, 20 S. E. 37, is cited. In that case the court held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover nominal damages in the absence of any proof as to the value of the lost time for which he sued, and even though such time was worth nothing. We have taken the pains to examine the original record in the McGibbony Case, and we find that the amount thus referred to by the court as "nominal damages" was exactly the same as that returned by the jury in this case, to wit, the sum of $250.

Judgment affirmed.

POWELL, J. (dissenting). I cannot get my mind to the point of agreeing that in a case like the one before us a recovery of $250 can be held to be nominal in amount.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1156*)—WRIT OF ERROR—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—NEW TRIAL.

As no error of law is assigned, and as the evidence authorized the conviction of the defendant, the exercise of the trial judge's discretion in refusing a new trial will not be disturbed.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 938*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Prermitting other considerations the testimony adduced in support of the ground of the motion for a new trial which presented alleged newly discovered evidence in support of an alibi was not sufficient to have required a different result upon another trial, if a new trial had been ordered, and consequently it was not error to overrule this ground of the motion. Furthermore, some of the affiants who testified in support of this ground were witnesses at the trial, and the facts within their knowledge were also within the knowledge of the defendant, and the facts known by them might, by the exercise of ordinary diligence on the part of the defendant, have been brought to the attention of the court at the time of the original investigation.

Error from City Court of Franklin; Frank S. Loftin, Judge.

J. T. Lambert was convicted of assault and battery, and brings error. Affirmed.

Leon Hood, for plaintiff in error. D. B. Whitaker, Sol., for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was adjudged guilty of assault and battery. According to the testimony of the prosecutrix, the judgment against him was authorized. The point is made that, after identifying the defendant, the prosecutrix did not thereafter testify that he was the person who assaulted her, because as she was stooping down she heard somebody behind her say: "What are you doing?" We think it quite evident from the context that, though the prosecutrix did not know while her back was turned who it was that spoke (and therefore in the effort to represent her mental state or her thought at that time, she used the word "somebody," instead of naming the defendant), yet after she saw who it was she knew it was the defendant, and in using the words "he" and "him" thereafter she plainly referred to the defendant. It is clear from the evidence that the parties were well acquainted with each other, and no effort was made by cross-examination or otherwise to show that the prosecutrix had any doubt about who the person was after the time when she stated that she was stooping down and after that individual was no longer behind her.

Such a large number of witnesses testified to the bad character of the prosecutrix and that they would not believe her on oath that the trial judge would have been authorized to disregard her testimony entirely. But he was not required to do so even if there had been no testimony (as there was in this case) tending to sustain her by proof of good character. The credibility of the witnesses addressed itself solely to the trial judge, and the exercise of this right of selection is not reviewable. There is a vast difference between attempting to impeach a witness and actually destroying his testimony by successful impeachment. In the present case it is evident from the result that the witness was not impeached.

In support of one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial, Lambert presented the affidavits of several witnesses, who were properly vouched for, to the effect that he was one of the judges at a turkey shooting at Simpson from about 1 o'clock until after 4 o'clock on the afternoon of December 31st (which was the afternoon on which the alleged assault was committed), and that he was not out of their presence during that time. Aside from the fact that the prosecutrix only stated the time of the occurrence approximately as being about 3 o'clock, and therefore might have been mistaken about the time, and the further fact that so far as appears from this record the scene of the alleged offense may be near the point where the turkey shooting was had, we cannot say that the court erred in overruling this ground of the motion for a new trial if the court reached the conclusion that the movant by the exercise of ordinary diligence could have adduced upon the trial the facts to which they bore witness by affidavits upon the hearing of the motion. It is significant that two of the witnesses who testified by affidavit upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial that the defendant was with them at the turkey shooting testified as witnesses at the trial. As they were with the defendant and he was in their presence at the turkey shooting, it seems to us that by merely asking the witnesses while they were on the stand the question as to the defendant's whereabouts at the time of the alleged offense the facts which are now alleged to be newly discovered could have been elicited. So far as appears, the defendant's counsel did not know anything about the turkey shooting, and therefore the showing as to diligence was sufficient as to counsel, but in exercising even a slight degree of diligence the defendant should have asked his counsel to question the witnesses Henry J. Hardy and T. A. Lipham and perhaps other witnesses who were at the turkey shooting, if the defendant was not with them at the time that the prosecutrix testified that he was with her. The defendant must have known this fact then as well as he did when the motion for a new trial was filed. It is not necessary to refer to other points which apparently sustain the ruling of the trial judge in refusing a new trial. No error of law is complained of. The evidence was sufficient to authorize the finding reached, and, under these circumstances, this court has no power to alter the result.

Judgment affirmed.

2. SALES (§ 481*)—TROVER AND CONVERSION (§§ 13, 16*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—RECOVERY OF POSSESSION BY PURCHASER—FORM OF REMEDY.

When a vendee is entitled to the possession of chattels, he may maintain trover for their conversion against either the vendor or third persons; and this is true, even though under the terms of a conditional sale the legal title to the chattels is reserved by the vendor. As against a vendor who has reserved the title, the vendee may maintain trover by showing that his right of possession is wrongfully withheld from him by the defendant. The gist of the action of trover is the injury to the right of possession. The action of trover being founded on a concurrent right of property and possession, any act of the defendant which negatives or is inconsistent with such right amounts in law to a conversion. Wherever there is a conversion, trover is the remedy; and, as against a wrongdoer, possession will be held to be conclusive evidence of such general or special property in the personalty as is essential to maintain trover.

3. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§§ 1, 42*)—DAMAGES—MEASURE.

Where, in an action of trover, the plaintiff elects to take a money verdict, the suit resolves itself into one for damages; and if the proof shows that the interest of the plaintiff in the property is less than that of absolute ownership, the measure of damages will be the value of the plaintiff's interest therein, whatever that may be.

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

Error from City Court of La Grange; Frank Harwell, Judge.

Action by J. D. Favor, as trustee, against the Roper Wholesale Grocery Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

E. R. Bradfield, Jr., for plaintiff in error.
E. A. Jones and Hatton Lovejoy, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Favor, as trustee for R. L. Carter, bankrupt, brought a suit against the Roper Wholesale Grocery Company, by which he sought to recover certain personal property described in the petition, which it was alleged had been taken from the assets of the bankrupt by the defendant. Upon the call of the case the plaintiff abandoned that portion of the petition which sought to recover the property on the idea that by the delivery of the property the bankrupt had made a preference in violation of the bankrupt law, and the case proceeded to trial upon that portion of the petition which can very well be treated as an ordinary action of trover. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $125.87, as the difference between the actual value of the property converted and the interest of the defendant therein under its reservation of title. The court refused a new trial, and exception is taken to this judgment.

There is conflict in the evidence; but, in view of the verdict, we must assume that the testimony for the plaintiff represents the truth of the transaction. According to this testimony, a representative of the Roper Wholesale Grocery Company took the property from the bankrupt without his consent. The goods and fixtures which were the subject-matter of the present suit were assigned to one Heard to pay a debt of $250, and the title to the personalty was passed by the writing, with a provision that any payments on it would reduce the debt evidenced thereby. This contract and assignment of title was transferred by Heard to the Roper Wholesale Grocery Company for a consideration of $245. The agreed valuation of the articles, title to which was conveyed to Heard, and by him transferred to the Grocery company, as evidenced by the writing, was $363. The conversion was shown to have occurred on January 28, 1908, which was the date upon which Mr. Carter testified that Roper took the property from his possession.

1. By exceptions pendente lite the plaintiff in error complained that the judge refused to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant at the close of the testimony. No valid exception can ever be based upon the refusal of a trial judge to direct a verdict in favor of either party. The judge may direct a verdict, at his peril; and if the verdict directed is the only finding that could properly and legally have been reached under any view of the case, he has effected an economy of time, and his judgment will not be reversed, because the error is harmless. Inasmuch, however, as the only ground upon which the direction of a verdict is sanctioned is that it is such a harmless error that it will not be regarded, there is no case in which a judge can be required to direct a verdict, or in which it can be said that he errs if he refuses to do so.

2. The real question in the case is presented by the exception of the plaintiff in error to the following charge of the court. There being evidence that the property was of a value greater in amount than the amount of the plaintiff's indebtedness to the defendant, the court charged the jury as follows: "If you find, from the evidence in this case, that R. L. Carter & Co. did execute and deliver this instrument, to which I have called your attention, to G. B. Heard, to secure a debt due by Carter & Co. to Heard, and that thereafter Heard, as set out here on the back of this paper, transferred it to Roper Wholesale Grocery Company, and defendant paid to Heard the debt owed to Heard by R. L. Carter & Co., and to secure which this paper was given, and if you find that Carter & Co. have never paid to the Roper Wholesale Grocery Company this Heard debt, and that the property enumerated in the writing includes the property in controversy, and if you further find that Mr.

Roper, in behalf of the Roper Wholesale Grocery Company, the defendant, took possession of this property in controversy, without the consent of Carter, forcibly took possession of it, and if you further find that at that time R. L. Carter & Co. had the right of possession to this property, notwithstanding that Roper Wholesale Grocery Company, as transferees of G. B. Heard, had title to it, if the firm of R. L. Carter & Co. had the right of possession, then I charge you that the plaintiff in this case would be entitled to recover, and the measure of his recovery would be thus: In the event that you find that the value of the property was greater than the amount of the debt, if any, which was secured by this instrument of writing, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the difference, with interest on the difference, whatever you find it to be, at 7 per cent., from the date of conversion. If you find that the value of the property is equal to or less than the amount of the debt, then there could be no recovery for the plaintiff."

The exception to this charge is that it is error, because it would have been necessary for the plaintiff to show title in himself before he would be authorized to recover at all. Of course, we understand this to mean that the plaintiff makes the contention that, as there was evidence that the bankrupt had conveyed title to the property to the Grocery Company, as the assignee of Heard, he could not maintain the action, and it is understood, in the second place, that the measure of damages is improperly stated, and the case as submitted to the jury was an entirely different one from that brought by the plaintiff in its petition. It is not necessary, in order to maintain an action of trover, that the plaintiff have title. If he have either such a title or property as to confer right of possession, he may maintain trover as against one who wrongfully deprives him of his right. "To maintain an action of trover, the plaintiff must show title in himself, or the right of possession wrongfully withheld from him by the defendant." Without going at any length into the subject, it may be said that in this case the plaintiff had merely given to the defendant's assignor a conditional bill of sale; and the authorities are abundant that when, by the terms of a conditional sale, the buyer is entitled to possession, he may maintain trover for a conversion of the chattel which was sold to him against third persons, and even against the seller himself. Mitchell v. Georgia & Alabama Ry., 111 Ga. 762, 36 S. E. 971, 51 L. R. A. 622; Aldrich v. Hodges, 164 Mass. 570, 42 N. E. 107; Burt v. Dutcher, 34 N. Y. 493. A wrongful sale by a conditional vendor is a conversion against the vendee. Smith v. Wood, 63 Vt. 534, 22 Atl. 575.

The statute, section 1, c. 89, Code 1906, provides for but one form of summons (declaration), and evidence of forcible entry by defendant, which is unlawful, is admissible thereunder, without specific allegation thereof.

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Action by Thomas Fisher and others against Thomas Harman and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed and remanded.

D. J. F. Strother, W. L. Taylor, Jas. A. Strother, and E. C. Marshall, for plaintiffs in error. A. S. Higginbotham and Chapman & Gillespie, for defendants in error.

MILLER, J. In unlawful entry and detainer the court below set aside the verdict for defendant and awarded plaintiff a new trial, to which judgment we awarded a writ of error.

In disposing of this case we have had in mind the general rule that a stronger case is required to justify an appellate court in disturbing an order granting a new trial, than when one has been refused, and that the judgment below will not be reversed, unless plainly erroneous. 10 Ency. Dig. Va. & W. Va. Rep. 471; Coalmer v. Barrett, 61 W. Va. 237, 244, 56 S. E. 335.

The first point is that plaintiffs' evidence was so variant from the facts alleged that the verdict could not have been otherwise than for defendants. It is argued that section 1, chapter 89, Code 1906, gives three separate and distinct causes of action, each requiring specific allegation and proof, namely, forcible entry, unlawful entry, and unlawful detainer. The statute, however, prescribes but one form of summons (declaration), namely, that it summon "defendant to answer the complaint of the plaintiff, that the defendant is in the possession and unlawfully withholds from the plaintiff the premises in question." The form of summons in this case is the same as that prescribed by Mr. Minor, 4 Minor, 629; and by Mr. Hogg, Hogg's Pl. and Forms, 412. It is contended that plaintiffs' evidence of forcible entry by defendants, not alleged in the summons, was not admissible. The point is without merit. Such evidence is admissible in an action of unlawful entry and detainer. Every forcible entry is unlawful, regardless of the right to the possession, and evidence thereof will support the action. Duff v. Good, 24 W. Va. 632; Olinger v. Shepherd, 12 Grat. (Va.) 462; Feder v. Hager, 64 W. Va. 452, 63 S. E. 235. Evidence of good title and right to the possession is also admissible whether defendants' possession was obtained peaceably or forcibly. Olinger v. Shepherd and Feder v. Hager, supra. Plaintiffs relied not only on their evidence of forcible entry by defendants, but also upon good and paramount title. They offered title papers which they claim took them back by an unbroken chain to the Commonwealth.

On the theory of forcible entry by them defendants claim plaintiffs' evidence was insufficient to support a verdict for them. The evidence in chief mainly relied on by plaintiffs was that of their tenant W. G. Beavers, and Crockett Beavers, his brother. And as corroborating them they also relied on the testimony of Thomas Harman and Frank Harman, two of the defendants, not controverted they say by the evidence of John Estill Harman, the other defendant, who also testified, but who said nothing on the subject; also on the fact that William Brewster, son-in-law of John Estill Harman, present at the time, was not called or examined by defendants. Defendants contend, however, that the evidence being conflicting plaintiffs are concluded by the adverse verdict of the jury. They also claim that being themselves in possession of the land, of which the 107½ acres is a part, the entry thereon by plaintiffs constituted a mere trespass, against which they had the right to protect themselves, by force if necessary. Plaintiffs claim that the witnesses on both sides substantially agree on what occurred after their entry on the land, and that the facts established by the decided weight and preponderance of the evidence present a question of law for the court. In such cases the court does not invade the province of the jury in pronouncing judgment on these facts. Shoe Co. v. Prince, 51 W. Va. 510, 515, 41 S. E. 907.

It is not controverted that the Beavers under a lease in writing from plaintiffs to W. G. Beavers, about March, 1903, entered upon the 107½ acres of land in controversy, pitched their tent, and remained there for several days felling trees and clearing away the brush, preparatory to building a cabin on the land; that while they were so engaged defendant John Estill Harman, with his two sons, Thomas and Frank, and his son-in-law, William Brewster, the sons and son-in-law being armed either with a shot gun or rifle, went upon the land where the Beavers were at work, and that John Estill Harman, after inquiring of the Beavers, what they were doing there, and who had put them there, and by what right, and being told, and probably shown the contract of lease, he endeavored to serve written notice on W. G. Beavers, which Beavers says he didn't notice, dropped it. Beavers also says that Harman also warned him verbally that if he did not get out by the next day "there would be shooting going on"; that Harman did not distinctly say that he would shoot, and that the boys did not say they would shoot, but that because of what they did say he was afraid they would shoot him, and that he pulled out that same night, about 8 o'clock, and went to Cane Break to see Taylor, plaintiffs' agent, and to report to him what had occurred. He also says that his brother, who had gone for a saw before the Harmans arrived on the land, had not returned before he left. On the following Monday morning Beaver and his brother went back, found Harman, his sons, son-in-law and Tom Lambert and others on the land; that they had torn down his tent, and were engaged in building fence and hauling the logs which he and his brother had cut for the cabin, and that John Estill Harman had a shotgun. In the conversation between the Beavers and Harman that morning they say Harman tried to get W. G. Beavers to surrender his lease, and to take employment under him, which, Beavers says, he declined, and that in about a half hour they went away fearing to attempt to regain possession of the land. Defendants completed the cabin begun by the Beavers, out of the logs prepared by them and put in it one of their own men to hold possession. It is admitted by the Harmans that J. E. Harman ordered the Beavers to get off the land and notified them that they would have to get off. They admit also that they went on the grounds with their guns. But in explanation, Thomas Harman says he had been sick and that he used his gun as a cane. Frank Harman says on cross-examination that he had his gun because his father was going to serve notice on the Beavers to vacate.

Moreover, J. E. Harman claims he had the right to defend his alleged possession by force if necessary. His title consists: First, of a deed from H. M. Harman to John Estill Harman, August 24, 1876, by rather indefinite boundaries calling for 100 acres more or less, but surveyed in this suit, according to directions given by him, covering a boundary of 634 acres, including most of the 107 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres in controversy; second, continued possession under Rebecca Brewster, his mother-in-law, his wife being her only heir, and the said Rebecca Brewster being also a daughter and one of the devisees of Mathias Harman, who had owned, or claimed and resided on a tract of 250 acres, of which the 107 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres in controversy is a part, for about 45 years, and the improvements on which are from 75 to 100 years old. The evidence shows that notwithstanding his claim by the deed from his brother in 1876, J. E. Harman, October 30, 1889, purchased and procured from D. G. Sayers and wife a deed for a tract described as containing 200 acres more or less, and within the boundary of the 634 acres as claimed by him, and on which his dwelling house and other improvements were located. This tract of 200 acres, March 23, 1899, he sold and conveyed to W. M. Ritter, describing it by metes and bounds as the Harman home place, and as containing 164.05 acres more or less, and as being the same land, or a portion thereof, conveyed to him by D. G. Sayers and wife, October 30, 1889, and as beginning at a corner to Patterson and McMillin's 380 acre tract, and Mathias Harman's 250 acre tract, making no reference therein to his deed of 1876. It also appears that the 200 acre tract and the 250 acre tract are both within a 50,000 acre tract, part of a 300,000 acre tract patented to Wilson Cary Nicholas in 1795; and that Mathias Harman, though claiming his land by prior patents, on April 10, 1884, five years before J. E. Harman procured his deed for the 200 acres, also procured a deed from said Sayers for 250 acres. So that if J. E. Harman claimed under his prior deed of 1876, Mathias Harman, his father-in-law and neighbor was also in possession claiming under prior patents, and after getting his deed from Sayers in 1884 he and his heirs and assigns, as for many years before, continued in possession of his 250 acre tract. Mathias Harman devised his land in part, at least, to children and grand children, the tract in controversy, which plaintiffs claim, going to his grand daughter Josephine Harman, and twenty-nine acres thereof, perhaps a part of the tract on which defendant, J. E. Harman moved after selling his land, going to his mother-in-law, Rebecca Brewster, for life, remainder to Mathias Harman, son of Daniel Harman, and two other parts going to other children. A deed in evidence, dated July 26, 1884, purporting to be "between the undersigned heirs at law of Mathias Harman, deceased, and signed by William Harman, Christena Harman, Rebecca Brewster, Daniel Harman and Nancy Wallace, purports to convey to Christena Harman a certain boundary of land on John's Branch, and bounded on one side by the division line between J. E. Harman and Mathias Harman; and to said Rebecca Brewster a tract described as: "Beginning on said Christena Harman's line, on John's Branch, at the forks of said branch, running to Estell Harman's lines, Patterson, McMillins and others, and so as to include all the land on John's Branch owned by said Mathias Harman, deceased, at the time of his death, and not heretofore conveyed by deed or will, and also all the lands on the south or west side of Dry Fork, not heretofore conveyed by deed or will, by said Harman, deceased, to Daniel Harman." Bailey, surveyor, says, this description covers 147 acres, part of the 250 acres, and designated on the official map as Hannah Harman's 147 acres, and the same on which J. E. Harman, under Rebecca Brewster, resided at the time of his death. He further says he never knew of J. E. Harman having possession of any part of the 250 acre tract, except the 147 acres owned by his wife and on which he moved after he sold to Ritter. One witness, W. P. Payne, thought Mathias Harman had been dead since 1883. And it is argued from this that Mathias Harman could not have been living in April, 1884, the date of the deed from D. G. Sayer to him for the 250 acres, rendering that deed void. It is very certain, however, that the witness Payne is at fault in his recollection, for Mathias Harman's will, dated May 10, 1883, was not probated until April 26, 1886, and J. E. Harman himself substantially admits knowledge of Mathias Harman's purchase and deed from Sayers, and that he claimed it as his old patent land, and says that if the 250 acre tract was not covered by his old patents, it was covered by the land he bought of Sayers. He further admits that he himself bought from Sayers for the reason that if the Sayers land ran as he claimed, Sayers' title was better than his. He pretended to think and expressed the opinion that Sayers was mistaken, and that his deed did not take in as much as he claimed. He does not attempt to show, however, how much of the land claimed by him was outside of the Sayers claim, nor where located.

Though J. E. Harman claimed that his deed of 1876 covered the 250 acres belonging to Mathias Harman, he never had any actual possession of any part of this tract until he went in under Rebecca Brewster. He and Mathias Harman lived neighbors for years, and it is not shown, and is most improbable, that during the life of Mathias Harman, or after his death, J. E. Harman acquired any title by possession as against Mathias Harman, his heirs or devisees. Mathias Harman's title was older than J. E. Harman's deed of 1876, and the latter had nothing to stand on. Sayers title was conceded by J. E. Harman to be older and better than his deed of 1876. Mathias Harman's deed from Sayers is older than J. E. Harman's by five years. His possession within the interlock appears from the evidence to have been actual, open, continuous and adverse to all others, including J. E. Harman. We do not see from the record how J. E. Harman now actually occupying part of the land so acquired by Mathias Harman, under Rebecca Brewster, his mother in law, ever acquired any title to the land claimed by plaintiffs, either under his deed of 1876, or his deed from Sayers of 1889. He could with as much show of right have claimed title by possession under his deed of 1876 to the land of his mother in law Rebecca Brewster on which at the time of this suit and at the time of his death he was living, not in hostility, but in subordination to the title of Mathias Harman, for it was a part of the 250 acres covered by the deed to Mathias Harman of 1884. There is no appreciable evidence showing that he at any time during the life of the latter, except by the mere recording of his blanket deed of 1876, claimed any part of the 250 acres, or in hostility to the title of Mathias Harman. He is shown by his acts in assisting in the making of surveys of this and adjoining lands, and by the recitals in his deed to Ritter, to have recognized the superior right and title of Mathias Harman, his heirs and devisees, and there is no room to doubt that at the time of his death he was living upon that portion of this land so acquired by his mother in law in subordination to that title. Having thus obtained possession of so much he, or those claiming under him, now seek to hold the portion devised to Josephine Harman, the land in controversy, under his blanket deed of 1876, and alleged possession under it. There is nothing in the record as now presented to justify the claim. We can say, therefore, unhesitatingly, that J. E. Harman never had or acquired any such right to or possession of the land in controversy as at the time he entered and took possession from plaintiffs he had the right to maintain by force.

Are plaintiffs then entitled to maintain this action against defendants? If defendants' entry was forcible, it was unlawful, regardless of the question of right. If they were strangers, or without right or title, their entry was unlawful whether forcible or not. Duff v. Good, supra; Franklin v. Geho, 30 W. Va. 27, 3 S. E. 168; Davis v. Mayo, 82 Va. 97; Fore v. Campbell, 82 Va. 808, 1 S. E. 180; Olinger v. Shepherd, supra.

In Franklin v. Geho it is said: "A forcible entry, for which under our statute, as under the statute of other states, the party dispossessed is given civil redress by this summary proceeding, is precisely the same as the forcible entry, for which at common law an indictment would lie." And adopting the rule for determining what constitutes such forcible entry, stated in State v. Pollak, 28 N. C. 305, 42 Am. Dec. 140, one of the cases cited, it is held, point 2 of the syllabus: "Where a party, entering on land in possession of another, either by his behavior or speech, gives those, who are in possession, just cause to fear, that he will do them some bodily harm if they do not give way to him, his entry is esteemed forcible, whether he caused the terror, by carrying with him such unusual number of attendants, or by arming himself in such a manner, as plainly to indicate a design to back his pretensions by force, or by actually threatening to kill, maim or beat those, who continue in possession, or by making use of expressions, plainly implying a purpose of using force against those who make resistance." See also 19 Cyc. 1112-1117. The difficulty we encounter here, like that encountered by the Court in Franklin v. Geho, is in applying this law to the facts. The facts here are not unlike the facts in that case. In that case the hostile demonstrations consisted mainly in the tearing down by defendant, in the absence of plaintiff, of a line fence recently rebuilt by the latter, and moving it over on the land, which plaintiffs had had in actual use and possession for more than twenty years; the rebuilding thereof by plaintiff on the old line; the tearing down and removing of the fence again by defendant; a second rebuilding thereof by plaintiff on the old line; tearing it down again and removing it to the new location by defendant; and lastly in threats by defendant to whip the plaintiff and his whole family if they should further interfere with the fence as relocated by him. There was some conflict in the evidence as to what was the exact language of the defendant's threats. The plaintiff desisted, however, and brought his suit of unlawful entry and detainer. The Court, by Judge Green, in that case says: "The evidence is certainly to some extent unsatisfactory, and contradictory; but giving it a most benign interpretation, as the court must have done on this motion to exclude the evidence of the plaintiff, and more especially as he never did again pull down this fence, as he had done twice before in a month's time, but instead of doing so brought this suit, we must conclude, that the plaintiff was driven from the possession of this land by the threats of the defendant, that he would beat him; and this constituted the entry on this land by the defendant a forcible entry." In that case no deadly weapons were exhibited. In this there were. The defendant went upon the ground with numbers all armed except himself, made his demands, and was at least prepared to enforce them. When he went back on the following Monday morning he took with him unusual numbers and his gun, entered, tore down the tent of plaintiffs' tenants, fenced in the land occupied by them, and was prepared to maintain his position. What did these demonstrations all mean? Some of the authorities cited say: "This terror may be caused by the party carrying with him such an unusual number of attendants or by arming himself in such a manner as plainly to intimate his design to back his pretensions by force." The same authority says: "There may be a forcible detainer, although the entry is peaceable; but whoever retains a wrongful possession by keeping an unusual number of people or unusual weapons or threatening to do some bodily hurt to the former possessor if he dares to return is guilty of a forcible detainer, although no attempt is made to re-enter." 19 Cyc. 1116. These authorities with others that might be cited, we think, upon the undisputed facts, and upon defendants' admissions, pronounce them guilty not only of forcible and unlawful entry, but of forcible and unlawful detainer, justifying the judgment of the court below in setting aside the verdict for defendants and awarding plaintiffs a new trial.

The conclusion reached on the question of the forcible entry and detainer calls for affirmation of the judgment below; and seeing, as we do from the facts proven, that defendants, on the new trial awarded, will be unable to make a different case on the question of unlawful entry and detainer, it becomes unnecessary for us to go into the question of the relative strength of the conflicting claims of title, or the many questions raised upon the admission and rejection of title papers and oral evidence in relation thereto.

We therefore affirm the judgment and remand the case for a new trial in accordance therewith.

GAINNEY v. ANDERSON et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 13, 1910.)

1. DOWER (§ 44*)—BAR—MORTGAGE—CONVEYANCE TO MORTGAGEE—EFFECT.

While a sale under a judgment in foreclosure vests the purchaser with the estate passed by the mortgage, including the wife's dower when she joined in the mortgage, discharged of the right to redeem, yet where the mortgagor, without his wife, conveys the land to the mortgagee to extinguish the mortgage, the wife's right of dower is not barred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. §§ 130-143; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

2. DOWER (§ 53*)—REVERSION TO THE WIFE—WHEN.

A release of dower on an instrument is merely an incident to the conveyance, which, if the conveyance never takes effect or is extinguished by act of the parties or by operation of law, reverts eo instanti to the wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-110; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

3. ESTATES (§ 10*)—MERGER.

When two estates in the same property unite in the same person in the same capacity, the lesser is merged in the greater, unless a contrary intention appears, either express or implied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 9-13; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. ESTATES (§ 10*)—MERGER—WHEN.

The merger of two estates or interests will not take place if opposed to the intention of the parties affirmatively proved or to be implied from the fact that merger would be opposed to the interest of the person in whom the different estates or interests became united.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 9-13; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

5. MORTGAGES (§ 295*) — CONVEYANCE TO MORTGAGEE—MERGER—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where property was mortgaged and subsequently deeded to the mortgagee to satisfy it, the burden was on the mortgagee to prove that there was no merger according to the intention of the parties; he having alleged it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 815-831; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

6. MORTGAGES (§ 295*)—DEED TO MORTGAGEE—MERGER—INTENTION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to show that, at the time of a deed by a mortgagor to the mortgagee of the premises, the mortgagor's wife not joining in the deed, there was an intention on the part of the mortgagee to keep the mortgage alive as against the wife's dower, so as to prevent a merger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 19*) — MORTGAGES—LIMITATION APPLICABLE.

When property is conveyed to satisfy a mortgage by husband and wife, but without a release by the wife after the lapse of more than 20 years from the date of the mortgage, it is presumed paid, and is barred by the 20-year statute of limitations. Civ. Code 1902, § 2449.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 73-85; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

8. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 25*)—MARRIED WOMAN—DOWER—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

The act of 1793, providing how a married woman shall renounce her dower, and the act of 1870, giving her unlimited power to contract, having both been re-enacted in the general statutes, must be construed together so as to make both effectual, and therefore the privy examination of the wife, as required by the act of 1793, is a condition precedent to an effectual renunciation of her dower in a deed executed prior to the Constitution of 1895.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 133-148; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1123*) — DIVIDED COURT—EFFECT.

Where the Supreme Court is divided on a proposition, the decision of the circuit court on the point is affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4421-4427; Dec. Dig. § 1123.*]

10. DOWER (§ 50*) — ESTOPPEL TO CLAIM — WARRANTY IN HUSBAND'S DEED.

A husband and wife joined in a bond and mortgage, and subsequently the husband alone conveyed the premises to the mortgagee, in extinguishment of the debt and lien, by a deed containing a general warranty, not mentioning the wife's dower. Held, that the fact that the wife received a benefit from the deed by the extinguishing of her liability on the bond did not render the warranty an estoppel against her subsequent claim of dower.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. § 99; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Darlington County; Thos. S. Sease, Judge.

Action by Rebecca B. Gainney against Sarah M. Anderson and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Burke, Rivers & Erckmann, for appellants. McLauchlin & Tatum, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. In 1881 J. W. Gainney and his wife, the plaintiff herein, gave McKinnon and McNair their joint and several bond, conditioned to pay a debt which Gainney had contracted. At the same time Gainney gave them a mortgage of a tract of land, owned by him, to secure the debt, and his wife duly renounced her dower thereon. This bond and mortgage were assigned to Carrigan and Silcox. In 1894, the debt being still unpaid, Gainney and wife, by their joint deed, containing the usual covenant of general warranty, conveyed the land to Carrigan and Silcox in satisfaction of the mortgage, though the consideration expressed in the deed is $450—the amount then due on the mortgage. On this deed Mrs. Gainney did not renounce dower. In 1895 Carrigan conveyed his interest to Silcox, from whom the defendants derive title by descent. Gainney died, and in January, 1908, this action was brought by Mrs. Gainney to recover her dower in the land. The decree below was for the plaintiff.

The appellants contend that because the deed was taken in satisfaction of the mortgage—somewhat in the nature of a voluntary foreclosure, by act of the parties—and as dower had been renounced on the mortgage, it should be made to inure to the benefit of the grantees in the deed and cure the failure of Mrs. Gainney to renounce dower on the deed, just as if the mortgage had been foreclosed in court. The argument is that the parties ought to be allowed to do for themselves voluntarily, and without expense, and with the same result what the court would have compelled at great expense. When the wife of a mortgagor renounces her dower on his mortgage by her own act, she places herself in privity of estate with him; and, when the mortgage is foreclosed, the court acts upon and conveys the legal title by virtue of the complete lien of the mortgage—the contract made by the parties—and the purchaser at a sale under judgment of foreclosure of such a mortgage takes the legal title and the dower. Miller v. Bank, 49 S. C. 427, 27 S. E. 514, 61 Am. St. Rep. 821. But, when the parties deal with the situation themselves by a new contract, the court can give to their contract no greater force or effect than its terms import under the rules of law. A release of dower on an instrument—whether a lease, mortgage, or deed of conveyance—attends upon and is incident to the principal conveyance, and endures with it, and no longer. If the principal conveyance never takes effect, or if it is satisfied or extinguished by act of the parties or by operation of law, the dower reverts, eo instanti, to the wife. Rickard v. Talbird, Rice, Eq. 158. The general rule is that when two estates or interests in the same property unite in the same person, in the same capacity, the lesser is merged in the greater, unless a contrary intention appears; for the intention, express or presumed, of the person whose interests are so affect, determines whether merger takes place or not. In McCreary v. Coggeshall, 74 S. C. 42-55, 53 S. E. 978, 982, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, Mr. Justice Woods, speaking for the court, after an able and elaborate review of the authorities in this state and in other jurisdictions, reaches the conclusion that "merger will not take place, if opposed to the intention of the parties affirmatively proved or to be implied from the fact that merger would be opposed to the interest of the person in whom the different estates or interests became united." Under this rule, the question arises whether the preponderance of the evidence showed an intention to keep the mortgage open, or, in the absence of evidence of such intention, whether it will be presumed from the circumstances; it being to the interest of the mortgagees to preserve the lien of their mortgage to protect the legal title against the plaintiff's claim of dower. Upon this question, the burden was upon appellants; for, when the circumstances under which merger ordinarily takes place are shown, the burden rests upon him who alleges that there was no merger to prove a contrary intention, or to prove facts and circumstances from which such an intention will be presumed.

The only direct evidence upon that point is that of Mrs. Gainey, whose testimony is uncontradicted. She testified that the deed was executed in satisfaction of the mortgage, and that the amount then due on the mortgage was $450. The fact that the consideration expressed in the deed is $450, the amount then due on the mortgage, tends to corroborate her testimony upon this point. It does not even appear that the bond and mortgage were retained by the mortgagees. They were put in evidence, but the record fails to show by whom they were introduced, or from whose possession they came. The fact that Mrs. Gainey was asked to sign the deed with her husband tends to support the theory of merger, because it tends to show that the mortgagees thought that her signature to the deed was sufficient to convey all her interest in the land, including her inchoate right of dower. If they so thought, there would have been no reason to want to keep the mortgage alive. If she had regularly renounced her dower on the deed, no reason could have been assigned for an intention on the part of the mortgagees to keep the mortgage open. Moreover, it does not appear that Carrigan's interest in the land was conveyed subject to the mortgage, or that the conveyance was accompanied by an assignment of his interest in the mortgage, either of which would have been some evidence of intention to keep the mortgage alive, and the absence of which, of course, tends to prove the contrary. As there is no direct or circumstantial evidence of such intention, the only thing upon which a finding of its existence can be predicated is the presumption which arises from the fact that it would have been to the interest of the mortgagees, which is overthrown by the facts and circumstances above mentioned. There is another reason why the mortgage cannot avail appellants. More than 20 years had elapsed after the date of the mortgage before this action was brought. The mortgage was therefore presumed paid, and it was barred by the statute of limitations. Section 2449, Civ. Code 1902; Jennings v. Peay, 51 S. C. 327, 28 S. E. 949.

The next contention of the appellants is that plaintiff is estopped by the covenant of general warranty contained in the deed, for the execution of which there was a valuable consideration moving to her, to wit, the satisfaction of the bond which she had signed with her husband. As the deed was executed prior to the Constitution of 1895, the question must be determined by the powers conferred on married women by the Constitution of 1868, and the laws enacted thereunder; and no opinion is expressed as to the effect of such a covenant by a married woman since the adoption of the Constitution of 1895. In Townsend v. Brown, 16 S. C. 91, it was held that a married woman who executed with her husband in 1872 a quitclaim deed to a tract of land "in token of her renunciation and release of all right of dower in the premises" was not thereby barred of her dower; that the provisions of the Constitution of 1868 (article 14, § 8) that the property of a married woman should not be subject to her husband's debts, but should be held as her separate property, and might be bequeathed, devised, or alienated by her the same as if she were unmarried, did not apply to the wife's inchoate right of dower, that not being the kind of property referred to in the Constitution and act of 1870; that, if she had been made sui juris in all respects by the Constitution, the Legislature might nevertheless have required her privy examination as evidence of her signature to a deed; that the act of 1795, providing the manner in which a married woman shall renounce her dower, and the act of 1870, giving her unlimited power to contract, having both been re-enacted in the general statutes, must be construed together so as to make both effectual, and, therefore, that a privy examination of the wife, as required by the act of 1795, is a condition precedent to an effectual renunciation of her dower. The principles upon which that case was decided are conclusive of this question. And the matter would require no further consideration, but for the fact that by some later decisions of the court an exception seems to have been ingrafted upon the principles decided in that case, and the contention of appellants that the facts of this case bring it within the exception.

In Shelton v. Shelton, 20 S. C. 560, the husband and wife had entered into an agreement with the view of separation. The husband conveyed certain property to the wife, which she agreed to accept "in lieu and in consideration of all claims or demands upon the said Marshall Shelton (the husband) or his estate, and hereby relinquish all further claims upon him for support or otherwise." It was intimated, though not decided, that a wife might since the Constitution of 1868 and the laws passed thereunder, giving a married woman the right to contract as if she were a feme sole, so covenant not to claim dower, as to make it binding upon her by way of estoppel; but, to do so, the covenant "should be entirely free from doubt, clear, positive and express in its terms." But it was held that, as the covenant in question did not in express terms exclude her right to dower, she was not barred.

In Smith v. Oglesby, 33 S. C. 194, 11 S. E. 687, the agreement on the part of Mrs. Smith, made during coverture, was express in its terms to release all her right and title to dower in said land, and was based upon a valuable consideration, to wit, $575, which was paid to her daughter, according to the agreement. Held, that as her power to contract was without limit, except such as applied to all other persons, and as she was in contemplation of law, so far as the power of contracting was concerned, a feme sole, in the absence of an offer to return the money, she was estopped.

In McKenzie v. Sifford, 48 S. C. 458, 26 S. E. 706, the wife had covenanted with her husband, from whom she was separated, "to renounce and release unto my said husband, his heirs and assigns, all my right or claim of dower to and in any and all lands now or hereafter owned by him." After the death of the husband, she brought suit to set aside the covenant on the ground that it was without consideration. Held, that it was upon the consideration of $1,000 paid to her, and that, unless she refunded the consideration, she was not entitled to have the covenant set aside. In the same case, on a subsequent appeal (52 S. C. 104, 29 S. E. 388), it was held that the question of her liability to refund the consideration before she could have the covenant annulled (the circuit judge had held that she was not liable to refund it) was res judicata under the judgment on the first appeal. The first proposition presented by the appellants in that case is thus stated by Mr. Justice Pope, who delivered the opinion: "That the plaintiff could, and did in 1891, make a valid and binding contract to release her right of dower set forth in the covenant." In disposing of that proposition he said: "Under the act of 1795, which is still retained in our statute books, a wife was compelled to renounce dower before a particular set of officers in a specified form in order to debar herself of dower. All these matters are now settled in this state by the case of Townsend v. Brown, 16 S. C. 95-99." Chief Justice McIver concurred in the result, and

Mr. Justice Gary dissented as to the holding that she was bound to refund the consideration as a condition of having the covenant annulled, and concurred in the result on the other propositions. But, two of the justices having concurred in affirming the decision of the circuit court on the proposition stated, the decision upon that point is the established law. Florence v. Berry, 62 S. C. 469, 40 S. E. 871.

It is unnecessary in this case to decide whether the dictum in Shelton v. Shelton and the decision in Smith v. Oglesby are to be any longer adhered to, if, indeed, they have not by necessary implication, already been overruled by the decision of McKenzie v. Sifford, supra. At any rate, the principle announced in those cases should be extended no further; for the practical effect of holding that a married woman may during coverture estop herself by covenant from claiming dower in the lands of her husband would be to annul the statute which requires that her dower shall be renounced in a specified manner after her examination separate and apart from her husband before certain officers designated.

In Moon v. Bruce, 63 S. C. 128, 40 S. E. 1031, the court said: "If it be true, under the authority of the cases of Shelton v. Shelton, 20 S. C. 566, and Smith v. Oglesby, 33 S. C. 197 [11 S. E. 687], that a married woman, without the private examination and formalities required by the statute in relation to the renunciation of dower, could upon valuable consideration execute such a contract as would estop her from claiming dower, it is also true that under the same authorities that, to have such effect, the contract 'should be entirely free from doubt, clear, positive and express in its terms.'" It was held that the covenant relied on in that case did not clearly express an intention to release dower, and in concluding the opinion the court said: "Having reached the conclusion that the intention to covenant to release dower is not clearly manifest from the terms of the instrument, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether the plaintiff had power to make such a contract to release dower as would estop her except by compliance with the statute, which prescribes the mode by which the favored right of dower shall be renounced. But see Townsend v. Brown, 16 S. C. 91; McKenzie v. Sifford, 52 S. C. 108 [29 S. E. 388], and also Brown v. Pechman, 53 S. C. 2 [30 S. E. 586], which last-mentioned case is in reference to the renunciation of inheritance of a married woman." From what was said in Shelton v. Shelton and Moon v. Bruce, it is clear that the general warranty contained in the deed which plaintiff signed is not such a covenant as would estop her from claiming dower. True, the general warranty is held by implication to warrant against the claim of dower, for it warrants against all incumbrances; but it is certainly not "express in its terms" against such a claim.

The other points presented are involved in the foregoing considerations, in which we have assumed that the execution of the deed was voluntary, and that it was for valuable consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, A. J., concurs in the result.

SWINDELL v. SWINDELL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. GIFTS (§ 18*)—INTER VIVOS—DELIVERY.

To constitute a valid gift inter vivos, there must be an actual or symbolical delivery by the donor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 29-33; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 49½*)—GIFTS—INTER VIVOS—DELIVERY.

A gift by a husband to his wife is completed by a delivery of the property by him to her, and the property is then vested in her, so that the subsequent possession and use thereof by the husband does not impair her title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 249-252; Dec. Dig. § 49½.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Beaufort County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by G. L. Swindell, administrator of F. R. Swindell, against Eureka Swindell. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

Small, MacLean & McMullan, for appellant. W. O. Rodman, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought to recover the possession of a horse alleged to be unlawfully detained by the defendant. The plaintiff is the administrator of F. R. Swindell, and the defendant is his widow. There was evidence tending to show that F. R. Swindell had given the horse to his wife. The plaintiff contended that there had been no actual or symbolical delivery of the horse to the defendant, which was necessary to complete the gift. Gross v. Smith, 132 N. C. 604, 44 S. E. 111. The evidence tended to show that there had been an actual delivery of the horse to the defendant, and an admission by the husband afterwards that it belonged to his wife.

With reference to this dispute between the parties, the court charged the jury as follows: "In order to constitute a gift by F. R. Swindell to his wife of the horse in question, she must satisfy you by the greater weight of the evidence that there was an actual delivery and transfer of possession by him to her at the time, and that she thereafter alone had the control and possession of the horse." To this instruction defendant excepted. If there had been a delivery of the horse to the defendant by her husband, the gift was complete and the property in the horse vested in her. It was not required, in order to complete the gift, that she should continue in the sole possession of the horse. If it was her property, the mere possession and use of the horse afterwards by her husband did not divest or even impair her title, no more than such a possession and use of property, which she had acquired by purchase or which she owned at the time of the marriage, would affect her title to such property. In Hollday v. McMillan, 83 N. C. 271, the court, when considering the competency of a declaration of the wife, while in possession of a buggy, that it belonged to her, and deciding in favor of its competency, said that: The "case stands on peculiar grounds. With separate estates held by married persons, and the husband's use of that belonging to the wife, the actual possession can seldom be ascertained except under the rule of law that it follows and attaches to the title. It would therefore seem almost unavoidable to admit such declarations made ante litem to explain the quality and nature of the possession. They are received, not as proof of ownership, but as an assertion and claim of ownership, and to repel the inference of holding for another, or of a recognition of property in any one else than the declarant." The instruction of the court was erroneous.

BERRY v. McPHERSON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 27*)—ACTUAL POSSESSION—EVIDENCE.

On the issue of adverse possession, testimony that lands were in the "possession" of certain persons must be taken to mean actual, and not mere constructive, possession; it being a statement of fact subject to overthrow on cross-examination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 57*)—CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for trespass upon land where in plaintiff relied on adverse possession, evidence held to warrant a finding that his and his father's acts of dominion were those of ownership, and not of occasional trespassers, and that they were repeated and continuous for a considerable period of time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 277, 278; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

3. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 57*)—PROOF REQUIRED.

In proving continuous adverse possession under color of title, nothing must be left to mere conjecture, it being necessary that the testimony tend to prove continuity of possession for the statutory period, either in plain terms or by necessary implication, and the possession need not be unceasing, though the evidence should warrant an inference that the actual use and occupation have extended over the required period, and that during the time the claimant has from time to time continuously subjected some portion of the disputed land to the use to which it was susceptible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 277, 278; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 115*)—FACT OF POSSESSION—JURY QUESTION.

In an action for trespass upon land wherein plaintiff relied on adverse possession under color of title, evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the question as to the fact of the possession claimed by plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 691, 692; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 112*)—FACT OF POSSESSION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden is on one claiming land by adverse possession to establish the fact of possession for the statutory period by a preponderance of the proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 651, 655; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Camden County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by W. S. Berry against A. B. McPherson. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Nonsuit set aside, and new trial ordered.

E. F. Aydlett and J. C. B. Ehringhaus, for appellant. H. S. Ward and W. A. Worth, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff introduced deeds. (1) O. G. Pritchard, administrator of T. S. Berry, to the plaintiff, W. S. Berry, December, 1897. (2) Deed of trust of W. S. Berry and wife, who are the parents of the plaintiff, to T. S. Berry, dated December, 1890. (3) W. M. Lindsey to W. S. Berry, August 12, 1859. These deeds cover the lands in controversy, according to plaintiff's testimony.

Failing to show title out of the state by grant, plaintiff relied upon possession under color, and testified that his father, W. S. Berry, was in possession of the lands covered by the deeds, and claiming them for 25 years prior to 1897, and that he had been in possession of them ever since, constituting a possession of over 30 years. This language of the witness, unexplained and uncontradicted by cross-examination, must be taken in the ordinary sense, as understood by laymen, to mean an actual, and not a mere constructive, possession. It is to be treated as the statement of a fact, which, however, upon cross-examination may be shown to be without substantial basis, in which event it will be disregarded. "A witness may testify directly in the first instance to the fact of possession if he can do so positively, subject, of course, to cross-examination." Abbott, Trial Ev. 622, 590; Rand v. Freeman, 1 Allen (Mass.) 517; Bryan v. Spivey, 109 N. C. 68, 13 S. E. 766, where this question is learnedly discussed by Mr. Justice Shepherd. The further examination of the witness does not in our opinion weaken or destroy the effect and significance of his first statement. He testifies that there is an island about midway of his possession and a road leading across the swamp to the island; that he and his father kept up this road; that there was a road leading across the woods to the island for a third of the way from which he and his father regularly got firewood; that his father sold timber off the land in controversy, and that six years ago defendant cut timber on this land and promised to pay plaintiff for it; that on one occasion defendant in presence of plaintiff and his brother recognized plaintiff's possession by admitting the cedar corner claimed by plaintiff to be the true division corner. Plaintiff further testifies that tenants on his farm cut wood on this land whenever they needed it, and that he had cut and sold shingles off it frequently, and his father had cut and sold railroad ties. Plaintiff further stated that he sold pine timber off the land, and allowed the neighbors to get wood off it whenever they desired. The land in controversy appears to be swamp land, uninclosed and with no habitation upon it.

The evidence indicates that plaintiff and his father for more than 30 years exercised acts of dominion over the land and made from it the only profits and use of which it is susceptible. From the evidence of the witness the jury may well infer that these acts were those of ownership, and not those of an occasional trespasser, and that they were repeated and continuous for a considerable period of time. The possession was as decided and notorious as the nature of the land would permit and offered unequivocal indication that plaintiff and his father were exercising the dominion of owners, and were not pillaging as trespassers. Williams v. Buchanan, 23 N. C. 535, 35 Am. Dec. 760; Tredwell v. Reddick, 23 N. C. 56; Hamilton v. Icard, 114 N. C. 538, 19 S. E. 607; Simpson v. Blount, 14 N. C. 34; Baum v. Shooting Club, 96 N. C. 310, 2 S. E. 673. It is true that in proving continuous adverse possession under color of title nothing must be left to mere conjecture. The testimony must tend to prove the continuity of possession for the statutory period either in plain terms or by "necessary implication." Ruffin v. Overby, 105 N. C. 83, 11 S. E. 251. This possession need not be unceasing, but the evidence should be such as to warrant the inference that the actual use and occupation have extended over the required period, and that during it the claimant has from time to time continuously subjected some portion of the disputed land to the only use of which it was susceptible. Ruffin v. Overby, supra; McLean v. Smith, 106 N. C. 172, 11 S. E. 184; Hamilton v. Icard, supra.

While the evidence offered is not necessarily conclusive, if taken to be true, as to the fact of possession, we think it sufficient to be submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions that they may draw such inferences as they see proper, bearing in mind that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish the fact of possession for the statutory period by a preponderance in the proof.

The nonsuit is set aside.

HOLLOWELL v. NORFOLK & S. RY. CO.
et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railway company and its receivers, appointed by a federal court, it was not reversible error to permit plaintiff to show an order of the federal court permitting plaintiff to sue the company, though it was not certified by the clerk of the federal court and the seal of that court was not attached, where the answer raised no jurisdictional question; the evidence being thus immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153-4160; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

2. RECEIVERS (§ 178*)—TORTS COMMITTED BEFORE APPOINTMENT—PARTIES.

It was proper to sue the receivers of a railway company alone, or to join them as defendants with the company in an action for injuries, though the cause of action arose before their appointment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. §§ 346-351; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 901*)—EXISTENCE OF ERROR—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden is on appellant to show error in an instruction depending on consideration of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3670; Dec. Dig. § 901.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 928*)—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that, if the jury believed the evidence, they should answer an issue affirmatively, will not be held erroneous, where the evidence on that issue is not sent up, and the statement of the case recites that there was evidence tending to support a finding for appellee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3749-3754; Dec. Dig. § 928.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Chowan County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by W. J. Hollowell against the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The plaintiff complained that his horse was injured by a defective crossing of the defendant railway's roadbed, negligently constructed and maintained by the defendants. The jury so found, and assessed plaintiff's damages at $102.

Pruden & Pruden and Brown Shepherd, for appellants. Ward & Grimes, for appellee.

MANNING, J. The defendants are the railway company and its receivers. It was admitted that plaintiff's cause of action arose prior to the appointment of the receivers by the federal court. The plaintiff filed a single complaint against the railway company and its receivers, and a joint answer was filed by the defendants, admitting the appointment of the receivers, but denying the alleged acts of negligence and the damages sustained thereby. There was no plea that the defendant receivers were not liable because the injury complained of was not received while the receivers were operating the railroad under appointment of the federal court, and that the corporation was not suable in the state courts, because such actions against the corporation had been enjoined by the federal court. After offering evidence tending to show the negligence complained of and the date of the injury, and the damages sustained by plaintiff, the plaintiff offered in evidence an order of Judge Purnell, judge of the federal court, permitting the plaintiff, upon his petition therefor, to sue the railway company. The defendants objected to the introduction of this order, upon the ground that the order was not certified by the clerk of the federal court, nor was the seal of the court attached thereto. We do not think the evidence material, and that its reception by the court constituted reversible error. The complaint alleged that the defendant corporation was operating a railroad in the state, and that its business and property had been placed under the management and control of the other defendants as receivers appointed by the federal court. The answer, filed jointly by all the defendants, admitted the truth of these allegations. It became, therefore, unnecessary to offer evidence of a preliminary jurisdictional fact admitted in the pleadings. The defendant railway company had by its answer to the merits without raising any jurisdictional question submitted itself and its defense on the merits to the jurisdiction of the court. The court having jurisdiction of the parties and the cause of action, it remained only to hear and determine the cause upon the merits.

This court held in Kessenger v. Fitzgerald, 152 N. C. 247, 67 S. E. 583, that, under the provisions of section 1224, Revisal 1905, the receivers were properly named as defendants to an action instituted upon a cause of action arising prior to their appointment, because the action against the receivers was, in effect, an action against the insolvent corporation. Grady v. Railroad, 116 N. C. 952, 21 S. E. 304; Farris v. Receivers R. & D. R. R., 115 N. C. 600, 20 S. E. 167. In the Kessenger case, supra, this court said: "We think the failure to formally name the company in the summons is not of the substance, and should be cured now by amendment, even if required." In the present action, however, the corporation was formally named as a defendant, as well as the receivers. It follows from these authorities that it was proper to sue the receivers alone or to join as defendants the corporation and the receivers, though the cause of action arose prior to the appointment of the receivers. What effect or what priority of payment the federal court will give to the judgment in plaintiff's favor in administering the assets of the insolvent corporation is not before us, and we refrain from expressing or intimating any opinion thereon. The defendants object to his honor's charge to the jury "that, if they believed the evidence in this cause, they should answer the first issue, 'Yes.'" The evidence offered by the plaintiff upon the first issue is not sent up. In the statement of the case it is stated that on the trial there was evidence tending to show the facts necessary to support a finding for the plaintiff, and that the defendants offered no evidence. In State v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 508, 62 S. E. 1088, this court has so recently considered the question presented by this exception that we deem it now only necessary to refer to that decision, and to say that, the defendants being appellants, the burden is upon them to convince us that there was error in the ruling of his honor excepted to. Upon the facts appearing in the record, we cannot hold that the charge of his honor constitutes reversible error. We cannot see that a contrary inference was permissible from the evidence.

We have examined the other exceptions taken by the defendants, and we do not think they can be sustained. Finding no error, the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

WHITE v. LANE et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. DRAINS (§ 17*)—DRAINAGE DISTRICTS—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS — APPEAL — STATUTES.

Under Pub. Laws 1909, c. 442, providing for the establishment of a drainage district, and declaring in sections 33, and 37 thereof that one who fails to appeal from his assessment or fails to pay it is deemed as consenting to the issuance of drainage bonds, and declaring that all parties who have had their day in court are deemed to have waived all objections where there was no exception and appeal, etc., one who was a party to drainage proceedings may not collaterally attack the judgment of the clerk of court appointing the drainage commissioners after their election by the corporation on the ground that the clerk had an interest in the land subject to assessment, but the remedy, if any, was by appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. DRAINS (§ 17*)—ESTABLISHMENT OF DISTRICTS.

The interest of the clerk of court in a tract of land in a drainage district does not disqualify him from appointing the drainage commissioners after their election by the corporation, and bonds voted and issued by the drainage commissioners under their corporate seal cannot be attacked on the ground of the interest of the clerk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

3. JUDGES (§ 39*)—DISQUALIFICATION—INTEREST.

The interest of a judge rendering a judgment void must be a direct interest in the subject-matter, and not a remote one, or which he has in common with many others in a public matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 184, 186; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1078*)—EXCEPTIONS — ABANDONMENT.

An exception not briefed in appellant's brief is under Supreme Court Rule 34 (86 S. E. ix) deemed abandoned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4256-4261; Dec. Dig. § 1078.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Chowan County; Ward, Judge.

Action by E. B. White against W. H. Lane and others. From an order vacating a restraining order, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action for the purpose of enjoining the issuance of bonds in the sum of $25,000 by the defendants as the board of drainage commissioners of the "Bear Swamp-Drainage District," which had been formed under authority of chapter 442, Laws 1909. The plaintiff is a landowner in the said district, and on his own behalf and behalf of others in like manner interested brought this suit to enjoin said bond issue, contending that the proceeding in which the said commissioners were appointed was void because the clerk of the court before whom the same was instituted was a landowner in the district, and therefore directly interested in the result of the matter he was to hear and determine. A restraining order which had been granted was vacated, and the plaintiff appealed.

Small, McLean & McMullan, for appellant. W. S. Privott, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. The sole exception presented by appellant's brief is whether the issuance of the bonds by the drainage commissioners is invalid because the clerk of the superior court who appointed them had an interest in a tract of land within the drainage district. We think his honor correctly held that the interest which disqualifies one to act as judge must be a direct interest in the subject-matter of the litigation. In this case the judgment of the clerk in no wise affected his title or interest in the said tract, but the proceeding was simply to create a drainage district and for the assessment of the lands therein for the purpose of paying for such drainage, either in cash or by issuance of bonds. If in such proceeding the clerk should have committed any error (and none is alleged), the remedy was by an appeal in that cause. If any question had arisen upon exception to the report of the board of viewers as to the proper classification and assessment of the tract in which the clerk had an interest, the question might then arise whether the clerk could pass upon such exception, or should certify the exception to the judge for decision. But, as the owners of land within the district are not incompetent to sit on the board of viewers to pass upon the classification and assessment of the several tracts in the first instance, it would not seem that the clerk would be disqualified to pass on their report, seeing that the judge can review his action upon appeal. But, however that may be, such question is not here presented. Here, all the landowners in the district having been petitioners or been served with summons as defendants and final judgment rendered, the drainage commissioners issued bonds for the drainage district, and it is sought to restrain such issuance of bonds by them. The drainage commissioners were elected by the new corporation, the "Drainage District." Section 19, ch. 442, Laws 1909.

This is a collateral attack upon the judgment of the clerk who appointed the commissioners after their election by the corporation on the ground that the clerk had an interest in one of the tracts subject to assessment. The bond issue here called in question is not authorized by any judgment of the clerk, but the bonds are issued by the board of drainage commissioners by virtue of section 34 of said chapter 442, Laws 1909, and section 33 provides that any one who has failed to appeal from his assessment or failed to pay it is "deemed as consenting to the issuing of said drainage bonds." Section 37 further reiterates that all parties, like the plaintiff for instance, who have had their day in court, are deemed and held to have waived all objections if there was no exception and appeal taken in the cause "and the remedies provided for in this act shall exclude all other remedies." The object of the act is to encourage drainage, and to cut off all vexatious, technical, and dilatory litigation where a party has had his day in court and has failed to appeal. "Not having spoken when he could have been heard, the plaintiff cannot now be heard when he should be silent."

Irrespective of the express provisions of this statute, and that the bonds are voted and to be issued by the drainage commissioners, a corporation, under their corporate seal, and not by virtue of any decree of the clerk, the interest of the latter in a tract of land in the drainage district "would not be such interest (even if it had been excepted to) which would have disqualified him to appoint Drainage Commissioners." In re Ryers, 72 N. Y. 1, 28 Am. Rep. 88. Also 23 Cyc. 579, which recites sundry instances of remote or contingent interests which will not disqualify a judge. The interest of the judge which renders a judgment void must be a direct interest in the subject-matter, and not a remote or minute one, or which he has in common with many others in a public matter. Otherwise no citizen of a town or county or of the state would be competent either as judge or juror in actions for or against the town, county, or state or in cases involving the validity of bonds issued by them. Eastman v. Com'rs, 119 N. C. 505, 26 S. E. 39; Johnston v. Rankin, 70 N. C. 550. Cases in which the clerk would be disqualified to act are cited in Land Co. v. Jennett, 128 N. C. 4, 37 S. E. 954.

The plaintiff also excepted below that the statute was unconstitutional. But this is abandoned by not being in his brief here, Rule 34 of this court, 140 N. C. 666, 66 S. E. ix. This, we presume, was the real ground of appeal originally, and was abandoned because the statute has been held constitutional, in a well-considered opinion by Hoke, J., Sanderlin v. Luken, 152 N. C. 738, 68 S. E. 225.

The judgment dissolving the restraining order is affirmed.

STATE v. WEDDELL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 174*)—OFFICERS—ALDERMEN—INTEREST IN CONTRACTS—OFFENSES.

Revisal 1905, § 3572, provides that if any person appointed or elected a commissioner or director to discharge any trust wherein the city may be in any manner interested shall become an undertaker, or make any contract for his own benefit under such authority, or be in any manner concerned or interested in making such contract, or in the profits thereof, either privately or openly, or singly or jointly with another, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that where, prior to defendant's election as alderman of a city, he was employed by a firm of contractors at a weekly salary as timekeeper and office man, at which time the contractors were executing a contract with the city, and after such election defendant voted to accept the contractors' bid for a sidewalk contract, it being the lowest submitted, his employment by the contractors in such capacity did not constitute a violation of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 410-414; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Ferguson, Judge.

J. H. Weddell was indicted for becoming interested in the making of a contract with a city of which he was an alderman, and from a judgment finding him not guilty the State appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant was indicted under section 3572 of the Revisal of 1905, which reads as follows: "If any person appointed or elected a commissioner or director to discharge any trust wherein the state or any county, city or town, may be in any manner interested shall become an undertaker, or make any contract for his own benefit, under such authority, or be in any manner concerned or interested in making such contract, or in the profits thereof, either privately or openly, singly or jointly with another, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The jury returned a special verdict as follows:

"(1) That Bowe & Page, a copartnership of Charleston, S. C., on about January 29, 1909, by competitive bidding, were awarded a contract for laying brick pavement on the streets of the city of New Bern, to an amount of about $50,000.

"(2) That on about March 1, 1909, said Bowe & Page, through their agent, one Finch, employed the defendant, J. H. Weddell, as timekeeper and office man in the performance of the said contract.

"(3) That at the regular election, the Tuesday after the first Monday in May, 1909, being May 4th, the defendant, J. H. Weddell, was elected an alderman of the city of New Bern from the Second ward. That pursuant to the charter, on Friday, May 7, 1909, the said vote was canvassed, and the said J. H. Weddell was declared elected and entered upon the discharge of his duties as an alderman of the city of New Bern, and has been a member of the board up to the present time.

"(4) That during the month of May, 1909 (Alsop & Pierce, contractors to lay sidewalks in the city of New Bern, having refused to complete the same), by order of the board of aldermen, advertisement was made for sealed bids for the making of one thousand (1,000) square yards, more or less, of concrete sidewalk, which consisted of a few short pavements on the sidewalks, and the balance consisting of short ends leading from the corners of the regular sidewalks to the curbing at corners of the various streets.

"(5) That pursuant to the said advertisement, at the meeting of the board of aldermen in June, 1909, bids were offered by three parties being sealed and delivered to the clerk of the board, and not being opened until the board was in session, and that, when opened, the bid of Bowe & Page was at the rate of $1 per square yard, and the next lowest bid was $1.12½ per square yard.

"(6) That during said meeting the defendant, J. H. Weddell, as alderman, made a motion that the lowest bid be accepted, the said Bowe & Page being the lowest bidders, and said motion was adopted by the board.

"(7) That, pursuant to the said contract, Bowe & Page proceeded to do the work as advertised and were paid therefor by the city.

"(8) That, while Bowe & Page were performing the said contract, the defendant J. H. Weddell continued as officeman and timekeeper for said Bowe & Page, without any new contract after March, 1909, having been paid a regular wage of $20 per week from the beginning of his employment to its close. That in said employment the said J. H. Weddell had no supervision of the work being done, the material used, or the manner in which it was done. That the said J. H. Weddell, as alderman, was not a member of the committee of the board of aldermen whose duty it was to supervise the said work.

"(9) That the said J. H. Weddell had no interest in the profit or losses of Bowe & Page on the said contract, but he received his wages of $20 per week as set out in paragraph 8, and his employment was not limited to their work in the city of New Bern, but at their directions he was sent elsewhere to perform same duties as those for which he was employed in the city of New Bern."

The Attorney General and George L. Jones, for the State. D. E. Henderson, W. D. McIver, and Simmons, Ward & Allen, for appellee.

BROWN, J. Upon the special verdict we concur with the court below that the defendant is not guilty, and with the candid admission of the Attorney General at the close of his brief that "the conduct of the defendant does not come within the terms of the statute, and there is no suggestion that it comes within its spirit."

Affirmed.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). The defendant was an alderman of the city, and at the same time was holding an important post as employé in the service of a party making a contract with the city. While this does not fall within the terms of the statute, it is not altogether seemly, nor to be commended, that one who holds employment in the service of a contractor with the city should, as an alderman, sit on the board, when passing upon a contract between his employer and the city.

WOOTEN v. HARRIS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 230*)—SALE OF GOOD WILL—AGREEMENT TO PROTECT.

An agreement by an outgoing partner not to re-engage in business in or adjacent to the same town in support of a contract for the sale of his interest need not be in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 230*)—GOOD WILL—AGREEMENT NOT TO RE-ENGAGE IN BUSINESS—DEFINITENESS.

An out-going partner's agreement not to re-engage in a competing business in F. or near enough thereto to interfere with plaintiff's business was not too indefinite, at least so far as to prevent his re-engaging in business in F.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 477½; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 117*)—GOOD WILL—AGREEMENT NOT TO RE-ENGAGE IN BUSINESS—TIME—LIMITATION.

An agreement by an outgoing partner not to re-engage in business in F., or near enough thereto to interfere with plaintiff's business, without limitation as to time, was valid for the time during which plaintiff was engaged in business at that place during his life.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 554-569; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

4. MONOPOLIES (§ 12*)—SALE OF GOOD WILL—AGREEMENT NOT TO RE-ENGAGE IN BUSINESS—STATUTES.

A provision of an agreement for the sale of a partner's interest that he would not again engage in the mercantile business in F. or near enough thereto to interfere with plaintiff's business was not in violation of Pub. Laws 1907, c. 218, § 1, subd. "e," prohibiting any person, firm, corporation, or association engaged in buying or selling anything of value in North Carolina to make an agreement, express or implied, with any other person, firm, corporation, or association not to buy or sell such things of value within certain territorial limits within the state with the intention of preventing competition in selling, or to fix the price, or prevent competition in buying.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Monopolies, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

5. CONTRACTS (§ 117*)—SALE OF GOOD WILL—CONTRACT NOT TO RE-ENGAGE IN BUSINESS.

Where an out-going partner sold his interest in a general village store to plaintiff, and agreed not to re-engage in mercantile business in the same town, or near enough thereto to interfere with plaintiff's business, and such contract was reasonable in its scope and as to duration and territory and was not shown to be one of many similar contracts tending to engross that particular business in the territory, it was not invalid as tending to create a monopoly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 554-569; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

Moore & Long, for appellant. Harry Skinner, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff bought out the defendant, who was his partner in general mercantile business in the town of Falkland, including the defendant's interest in the "good will" of the business, and, to secure the latter whose purchase was an inducement to the contract, the defendant contracted verbally with plaintiff that he would not again engage in the mercantile business in the town of Falkland, or near enough thereto to interfere with plaintiff's business. The defendant denied the agreement, but, before the jury had decided the issue, his honor announced that he would nonsuit the plaintiff.

This action the defendant contends should be sustained: (1) Because the alleged agreement was not in writing. We know of no authority requiring this. (2) Because the territory "in the town of Falkland or near enough thereto to interfere with plaintiff's business" is too indefinite. If this were true as to any place outside of the town, the expression "in the town of Falkland" is definite enough, and the averment is that the defendant had started his new business within the town and in a few feet of the store in whose business he had sold his interest and his share in the "good will." In Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 25 S. E. 813, 34 L. R. A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650, the expression "in the vicinity of Elizabeth City" was held good at least as to Elizabeth City. In Hauser v. Harding, 126 N. C. 295, 35 S. E. 593, the territory was "the town of Yadkinville and the territory surrounding." This was held an agreement valid within the town limits of Yadkinville. (3) The defendant further contends that the agreement is invalid because not limited in duration. But by its very terms, "not to interfere with the plaintiff's business," it is limited to the plaintiff's lifetime and even to such time as he may be engaged in the same business at that place. In Hauser v. Harding, supra, it was held that, if no time was named or indicated, the limitation would be held valid for the grantor's lifetime. And for the last ground of defense the defendant relies upon Laws 1907, c. 218, § 1, subsec. "e" which makes it unlawful "for any person, firm, corporation or association engaged in buying or selling anything of value in North Carolina to make or have an agreement or understanding, express or implied, with any other person, firm, corporation or association not to buy or sell said things of value within certain territorial limits within the state, with the intention of preventing competition in selling or to fix the price or prevent competition in buying of said things of value within said limits."

This last is the real point in this case. But, in construing such statute, we must consider its object and the evil to be remedied. The history of this legislation is known to all. It is an attempt to make unlawful the formation and operation of great trusts and monopolies which may buy out or crush out all competition in certain articles or business with a view to exercise the power of fixing the prices of the raw material and of the manufactured article, that enormous profits may be extorted thereby at the expense of the public. Neither the language, the known purpose of this enactment, nor the history of this legislation will justify its application to the purchase, as here, by one partner of the other's interest in a general store in a village or town; nor to a similar purchase between other individuals. Such contract when reasonable in its scope and as to duration and territory cannot possibly lend itself to the formation of trusts or monopolies, unless shown to be one of many similar contracts, tending to engross that particular business in a given territory. There is here not shown in evidence any "intention of preventing competition in selling, or to fix the price or prevent competition in buying, of said things of value within said limits." This contract is therefore not within the terms of the statute. It might be different if it were shown that this was one of many similar contracts tending to engross or monopolize any given business, or the sale of any article, within the territory named.

Such contracts as herein have been held not to be "illegal restraint of trade" in many cases in this court from Baker v. Cordon, 86 N. C. 116, 41 Am. Rep. 448, down to Anders v. Gardner, 151 N. C. 604, 66 S. E. 665. To hold such contracts invalid would have no possible effect toward preventing trusts and monopolies, but would merely destroy the "good will" which one has built up in his business for it would become valueless and unsalable, if the seller cannot guarantee its possession to the vendee by an agreement not to again engage in the same business at the same place in competition with his vendee.

The judgment of nonsuit is reversed.

ROBERTSON v. CONKLIN et al.

(153 N. C. 13)
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 171*) — MALICIOUS TORTS — PUNITIVE DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

In cases of malicious torts, where punitive damages may be awarded, evidence of plaintiff's pecuniary condition is inadmissible for the purpose of securing punitive damages, and is admissible only on the ground that his pecuniary circumstances are directly involved in estimating the actual damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 498; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 62*)—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in an action for malicious prosecution based on defendant procuring the arrest of plaintiff for larceny, the evidence showed that plaintiff did not suffer because of his poverty, and that he was not discharged from defendant's service, but was transferred to other work without a decrease in compensation, and that he continued in the service until after the commencement of the action when he was discharged, evidence that plaintiff had no property and was dependent on his labor for a living was inadmissible on the question of actual or punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 72*)—ACTUAL AND PUNITIVE DAMAGES—SUBMISSION OF ISSUE TO JURY.

The court in an action for malicious prosecution could submit only one issue as to damages, and under it the court should charge as to actual damages, and also on punitive damages, and when the latter may or may not be allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Washington County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by Samuel Robertson against E. J. Conklin and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed, and new trial granted.

There were three distinct counts or causes of action set out in the complaint—malicious prosecution, abuse of process with false arrest, and slander. The following issues were submitted:

"(1) Did the defendant wrongfully and without probable cause cause the warrant for searching the plaintiff to be issued? A. Yes.

"(2) If so, was the defendant actuated by malice in causing such warrant to issue? A. Yes.

"(3) Did the defendant wrongfully and without probable cause cause the plaintiff to be arrested? A. Yes.

"(4) If so, was the defendant actuated by malice in causing such arrest? A. Yes.

"(5) Did the defendant wrongfully and maliciously charge the plaintiff with the larceny of the money? A. Yes.

"(6) What actual damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? A. $1,000.

"(7) What punitive damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? A. None."

By consent of plaintiff the court reduced the verdict to $500, and gave judgment for plaintiff. The defendant appealed.

Asa O. Gaylord, for appellants. Wm. M. Bond and Wm. M. Bond, Jr., for appellee.

BROWN, J. The evidence tended to show that the plaintiff was employed by the Plymouth Lumber Company as night watchman at the time of the alleged wrongs committed against him, and that E. J. Conklin was secretary and treasurer of the lumber company; that on a Saturday night $40.80 was left in a desk drawer in the office of the lumber company in the mill grounds, which the plaintiff was employed to watch; that the money was taken, and defendants charged plaintiff with the larceny, and also had him arrested under a search warrant, or without warrant, and had his home searched by an officer.

Over the objection of the defendants plaintiff was permitted to testify that he had no property at the time, and was entirely dependent on "his two hands" for a living. The rule that in cases of malicious torts, where punitive damages are claimed and may be awarded, evidence of the defendant's pecuniary condition is admissible, is very generally recognized by the authorities, but evidence of the pecuniary condition of the plaintiff as a general rule is inadmissible. It is admitted only on the ground that the pecuniary circumstances of the plaintiff are directly involved in estimating the actual damages caused by the tortious act; the poverty of the plaintiff making the injury the greater. Such evidence is never admitted for the purpose of securing vindictive damages. Rowe v. Moss, 9 Rich. Law (S. C.) 423, 67 Am. Dec. 566, and cases cited. It is generally allowed in actions for the wrongful infliction of personal injuries by an assault upon the theory that the consequences of a severe personal injury are more disastrous to a person destitute of pecuniary resources and dependent wholly upon his manual exertions for the support of himself and family than to one of ample means. We think this is the rule recognized by this court in Reeves v. Winn, 97 N. C. 248, 1 S. E. 448, 2 Am. St. Rep. 287. There is nothing in this case which justifies a consideration of the plaintiff's pecuniary condition in assessing the damages. There is no foundation for the claim that whatever actual damage he suffered was increased by plaintiff's poverty. The evidence shows that he did not suffer the pangs of hunger or listen to the cry of his children for bread by reason of defendant's conduct. In fact, he was not even discharged from defendant's service, but transferred to the day force at no decrease in pay so far as the record discloses, and continued in defendant's service for some time after the occurrence, and only discharged after the commencement of this action. It is evident from reading the evidence as to actual damage that the jury undertook to allow punitive damages under the sixth issue, which probably induced his honor to reduce the verdict and plaintiff to accept it.

Upon the next trial, we think it better to follow the usual practice, and submit only one issue as to damage, and under it the judge should carefully instruct the jury as to actual damage and also upon punitive damage, and when the latter may or may not be allowed.

New trial.

STATE v. WILLIAMS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 174*)—ALDERMAN—INTEREST IN CONTRACTS—LIABILITY.

Revisal 1905, § 3572, providing that, if a public commissioner be in any manner interested in the making of a contract which should be of profit to him, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, applies to an alderman who was president of the corporation with which a contract was made by the board of aldermen, and also head of the mechanical department of the corporation, although he may have been wholly innocent of the transaction, as the law would hold him to a knowledge of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 411; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 174*)—ALDERMAN—INTEREST IN CONTRACTS—LIABILITY.

Under such statute, an alderman is not exculpated by his retiring from the meeting when the board of aldermen audited and paid the bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 411; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 174*)—ALDERMAN—INTEREST IN CONTRACTS—LIABILITY.

Under such statute, it is not necessary to show that an alderman directly profited by the contract, but that he was in some degree financially interested is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 411; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Ferguson, Judge.

Eugene Williams was convicted of a misdemeanor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

This is an indictment under section 3572, Revisal 1905, as follows: "If any person, appointed or elected a commissioner or director to discharge any trust wherein the state or any county, city or town may be in any manner interested, shall become an undertaker, or make any contract for his own benefit, under such authority, or be in any manner concerned or interested in making such contract, or in the profits thereof, either privately or openly, singly or jointly with another, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." There was a special verdict at March term, 1910, of the Superior Court of Craven county, his honor, Judge Ferguson, presiding, as follows:

"The jurors being duly sworn and impaneled to try the issue between the state and defendant, Eugene Williams, finds the following special verdict, to wit:

"(1) At the times hereinafter named, the defendant, Eugene Williams, was a member of the board of aldermen of the city of New Bern.

"(2) At said times H. P. Willis was the practical engineer in charge of the machinery supplying electric light and water to the city of New Bern, which plant was owned by the city of New Bern.

"(3) That Thomas F. McCarthy was at said times the chairman of the committee of the board of aldermen of the city of New Bern having supervision of said electric light and water plant.

"(4) That during the month of July said H. P. Willis, by authority of said Thomas F. McCarthy, sent an order to the New Bern Iron Works, Inc., for supplies necessary for the operation of said plant amounting to $75.63, a portion of which manufactured to order and could be manufactured and supplied by no other concern in or near the city of New Bern except by the New Bern Iron Works, Inc.

"(5) That at the times hereinafter mentioned said Eugene Williams had purchased of W. A. McIntosh stock in the New Bern Iron Works, Inc., on credit and had hypothecated said stock to W. A. McIntosh for the purchase money thereof, but received profits whenever any were declared, and that in said bill furnished the city a profit was charged.

"(6) That said Eugene Williams was a director and president of the company, but his duties in connection with the company were simply to act as head of the mechanical department of the shop.

"(7) That W. A. McIntosh owned part of the stock of said corporation and held all the balance of the stock as collateral security and was the general manager of the company, and had full control and direction of its business, and C. M. Kehoe was bookkeeper of said company, and was under the direction and control of W. A. McIntosh.

"(8) That at the August meeting, 1909, of the board of aldermen of the city of New Bern, C. M. Kehoe, said bookkeeper, by the direction of W. A. McIntosh, presented said bill for supplies to the clerk of the board, who past the same, which had already been approved by Thomas F. McCarthy, chairman of the water and light committee, to H. M. Groves, chairman of the finance committee, and said H. M. Groves approved the same.

"(9) That said bill so approved was presented to the board of aldermen, and said Eugene Williams, being present at the meeting, requested the board to excuse him from voting and he was excused by the board, and the remaining members of the board approved the bill and issued an order therefore which has not yet been paid.

"(10) That said Eugene Williams has had nothing else to do with the transaction except as hereinbefore set out, neither as an officer or stockholder of the New Bern Iron Works, Inc., nor as an alderman of the city of New Bern, and he has had no corrupt intention in connection with the matter.

"If upon the foregoing facts the court is of the opinion that the defendant is guilty, the jury finds him guilty; and, if upon said facts the court is of the opinion that the defendant is not guilty, the jury finds him not guilty."

From judgment of guilty the defendant appealed.

W. D. McIver and Simmons, Ward & Allen, for appellant. The Attorney General and Geo. L. Jones, for the State.

BROWN, J. This section of the Revisal is substantially the same as the act of 1825 (Pub. Laws 1825, c. 1269), which has been in force since that time, but, so far as we have been able to learn, this court has never been called upon to construe its provisions. Whether the law has been scrupulously obeyed or has gone into "innocuous desuetude" is a matter of conjecture. The defendant contends that the proper construction of the act requires that the defendant must have been appointed or elected a commissioner or director to discharge a public trust, and then, in the course of such public authority, have made a contract for his own benefit that according to the verdict the defendant took no part in the making of the contract, either as alderman, in behalf of the city, or in paying for the work done, nor did he take any part in the making of the contract in behalf of the New Bern Iron Works & Supply Company of which company he was a stockholder and president, that the defendant could not control the business of the corporation, and that his entire duty in the management of the corporation was to act as head of the mechanical department of the shops.

While we are glad to concede that there is no evidence of moral turpitude upon the part of the defendant, we cannot concur with his counsel that a finding to that effect is necessary to conviction, and that the act does not extend to an officer of a corporation, when the dealing is between the corporation and the municipality. It is true that in People v. Mayer, 41 Misc. Rep. 368, 84 N. Y. Supp. 817, the Supreme Court of New York City sustained the last contention, in consequence of which decision the General Assembly of New York amended the law of that state so as to include dealings between corporations whose officers, directors, or stockholders were municipal officers. The judgment was rendered at Special Term of the Supreme Court, a nisi prius court, by Judge Bischoff, and not by the Appellate Division or by a court of last resort. We are not impressed with the reasoning of the opinion, and do not regard it as a very persuasive authority.

This law was enacted to enforce a well-recognized and salutary principle, both of the mortal law and of public policy, that he who is intrusted with the business of others cannot be allowed to make such business an object of pecuniary profit to himself. This rule has its foundation in Scriptural teaching that no man can serve two masters, and is recognized and enforced in nearly all well-governed countries. As is said by Judge Dillon: "The application of the rule may in some instances appear to bear hard upon individuals who have committed no moral wrong; but it is essential to the keeping of all parties filling a fiduciary character to their duty to preserve the rule in its integrity, and to apply it to every case which justly falls within its principle." 1 Dillon's Municipal Corporations (4th Ed.) § 444. We are not prepared now to hold, nor is it necessary to decide, that the statute would cover the case of a mere stockholder in a corporation that sold goods or did work for a municipality, of which he was an officer, when the stockholder had no knowledge whatever of the transaction and possibly could not prevent it, but we are of opinion that it is broad enough to include within its scope this defendant under the facts found. He was more than a mere stockholder who had no part in the management of the corporation. He was its president and director, and acted as the head and manager of the "mechanical department of the shop." It was this department that must have manufactured that portion of the articles which could be manufactured and supplied by no other concern in New Bern. Whether the defendant had actual knowledge of the transaction is immaterial. Occupying the official positions he held in the corporate body and in its working department, the law will hold him to a knowledge of its transactions with the city of which he was an alderman. The fact that he retired from the meeting when the board of aldermen audited and paid the bill does not change the character of the transaction.

Nor is it necessary to show that defendant directly profited by the contract. In Doll v. State, 45 Ohio St. 445, 15 N. E. 293, it is held that: "To become so interested in the contract, it is not necessary that he make profits on the same. But it is sufficient if, while acting as such officer, he sell the property to the city for its use, or is personally interested in the proceeds of the contract of sale, and received the same, or part thereof, or has some pecuniary interest or share in the contract." A case directly in point is Commonwealth v. De Camp, 177 Pa. 112, 35

Atl. 601, where it is held: "The secretary who is a stockholder of a corporation having a contract for the lighting of a city is within the prohibition of Crimes Act 1860 (P. L. 400) § 63, prohibiting any councilman from being interested in any contract with the city, though he was elected councilman after the execution of the contract." Upon the special verdict the defendant was properly adjudged guilty.

Affirmed.

WILLIAMS et al. v. BRANNING MFG. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. ARBITRATION AND AWARD (§ 82*)—AWARD—EFFECT.

A valid award by arbitrators operates as a final judgment as between the parties to the submission or within the jurisdiction of the arbitrators as to all matters determined and disposed of by it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arbitration and Award, Cent. Dig. §§ 440-450; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

2. ARBITRATION AND AWARD (§ 16*)—SUBMISSION—REVOCATION.

The common-law rule that a submission to arbitration may be revoked by any party thereto at any time before the rendition of the award is in force in North Carolina.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arbitration and Award, Cent. Dig. §§ 64, 65; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

3. ARBITRATION AND AWARD (§ 16*)—SUBMISSION—REVOCATION.

The revocation of a submission to arbitration must be express, unless there is a revocation by implication of law, and, in case of an express revocation, notice must be given to the arbitrators.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arbitration and Award, Cent. Dig. §§ 69-72; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 115*)—REVOCATION—IMPLICATION OF LAW.

A revocation by legal implication of a submission to arbitration arises from the legal effect of some intervening event happening after submission, either by act of God or by a party, and which necessarily puts an end to the submission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 64-76; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

5. ARBITRATION AND AWARD (§ 16*)—REVOCATION—IMPLICATION OF LAW.

A submission to arbitration is not revoked by the commencement of an action, unless the action covers the subject-matter submitted, and, until a complaint is filed by a party to the submission, the adverse party has no legal notice of the cause of action, and the arbitrators may proceed with the arbitration and render their award though a summons has been issued.

Appeal from Superior Court, Hertford County; Ward, Judge.

Action by J. T. Williams and others against the Branning Manufacturing Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

The following is the judgment of the superior court:

"This cause coming on for hearing before his honor, George W. Ward, judge presiding, and a jury being impaneled, the following facts were admitted in open court by the parties, plaintiffs and defendant:

"(1) That the copies of the contracts between the plaintiffs and defendant are true copies of said contracts.

"(2) That on the 20th day of February, 1906, the plaintiffs and defendant entered into a written agreement, submitting several matters of differences between them, growing out of their old contract, to arbitrators, selected as provided in the contract of October 1, 1904, and said several matters of differences are included in the matters complained of by the plaintiffs in this action.

"(3) That a copy of agreement of submission is annexed to the answer in this cause.

"(4) That this suit was commenced on the 1st day of January, 1907, as shown by the summons.

"(5) That said arbitrators, thereafter, on the 25th day of January, 1907, rendered their award, passing on the matters submitted to them, and shortly thereafter the same was sent to plaintiffs and defendant, and which the plaintiffs ignored.

"(6) It was then agreed by counsel for plaintiffs and defendant in open court that a jury trial would be waived, and that his honor might upon the above facts and upon the record and pleadings in this action pass upon the pleas in bar set up in the answer to an accounting and the question of jurisdiction of this court in this action, and render such judgment as in law he thought proper.

"Now, after hearing the arguments on both sides, and after giving the matters full consideration, his honor being of the opinion that the provision in said contracts of 1901 and October 1, 1904, aforesaid, providing for the submission to arbitration the matters of differences between the parties thereto, was no bar to the right of the plaintiffs to enter and prosecute this suit, and that said agreement of submission of February 20, 1906, of the matters therein set forth was no bar to the prosecution of this suit, which was begun before any award was rendered by said arbitrators, and that the court has full jurisdiction of this action, wherefore, on motion of Winborne & Winborne, attorneys for plaintiffs, it is adjudged and decreed that the defendant's pleas in bar are overruled, and are no bar to a reference to state an account between the parties under said contract of October 1, 1904.

"It is further adjudged that the contract of October 1, 1904, is a bar to all matters of differences between the parties prior to that date. Defendant does not object to refusing the statute of limitations by the court, but reserves the right to object to his findings of fact and conclusions of law thereon.

"It is further ordered, upon plaintiffs' motion, defendant objecting thereto, that the action be and it is referred to —, as referee, to state all matters of differences growing out of the contract of October 1, 1904, not barred by the statute of limitations, the question of the statute of limitations being likewise referred to him. He shall hear the said matters, after due notice to the parties, and make his report to court.

"Defendant has the right to except to the referee's findings of fact and conclusions of law, and to raise such issues of fact, to be heard by a jury, as he may be advised are necessary and proper."

Civil action for damages for breach of contract in writing in which plaintiffs obligated for certain consideration to operate defendant's lumber plant at Ahoskie, in Hertford county, and to cut into logs the standing timber of defendant and manufacture them into lumber at said plant. In October, 1904, these parties entered into another contract, modifying and changing some of the provisions of the contract of 1901. In the contract of 1904 the following provision is incorporated: "Sec. 9. It is further understood and agreed, in the event of any future misunderstanding or disagreement between the parties hereto as to the contract of March 1, 1901, or as to any modifications of the same herein contained, that the matter shall be settled by arbitrators, to be selected, one by the Branning Manufacturing Company and one by the said J. T. Williams & Bro., and the third by the two, who shall hear and determine the same, and whose award shall be accepted as final between the parties and faithfully performed by each." Disagreements having arisen the matters in controversy were submitted to arbitrators on February 20, 1906, in accordance with the agreements. After the controversy had been heard by the arbitrators, but before they rendered their award, to wit, January 1, 1907, this action was commenced to recover the damages for the breach of the aforesaid contract. It is admitted in the "facts agreed" that the several matters of difference submitted to arbitration are those set out in the complaint in this action, which complaint was not filed until January 18, 1908. It is admitted in the case agreed "(5) that said arbitrators thereafter, on the 25th day of January, 1907, rendered their award, passing on the matters submitted to them, and shortly thereafter the same was sent to plaintiffs and defendant, and which the plaintiffs ignored." The cause was submitted at spring term, 1910, superior court of Hertford county to his honor, Judge Ward, who rendered judgment for plaintiffs. The defendant appealed.

Pruden & Pruden, Wm. M. Bond, and S. B. Shepherd, for appellant. Winborne & Winborne, for appellees.

BROWN, J. It is unnecessary to review the conclusion of the superior court that the provision in the contract agreeing to submit all matters of difference to arbitration is no bar to this action, for the reason that the plaintiffs and defendant did voluntarily submit such matters to arbitration in manner and form as provided in the contract and the arbitrators in due time rendered their award. It is common learning that a valid award operates as a final and conclusive judgment as between the parties to the submission, or within the jurisdiction of the arbitrators, respecting all matters determined and disposed of by it.

But it is contended that the fact that a summons in this action was issued some days before the rendering of the award revoked the submission, and deprived the arbitrators of the right to make an award. No other form of revocation is contended for. At common law a submission might be revoked by any party thereto at any time before the award was rendered. Bacon, Abridgement, Arb. B; Comyns, Dig. Arb. D, 5; Vinyors' Case, 8 Coke, 82. Some courts of this country have held to the contrary (Berry v. Carter, 19 Kan. 135, and cases cited), but this court has followed the doctrine of the common law (Tyson v. Robinson, 25 N. C. 333; Carpenter v. Tucker, 98 N. C. 316, 3 S. E. 831). The revocation, to be effective, must be express, unless there is a revocation by implication of law, and, in case of express revocation, in order to make it complete, notice must be given to the arbitrators. It is ineffective until this has been done. Allen v. Watson, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 205; Brown v. Leavitt, 26 Me. 251; Morse on Arb. & Award, p. 231; Vin. Ab. Authority, E. 3, 4; Vinyors' Case, supra; 2 Am. & Eng. 600.

It is contended that commencing an action is a revocation by legal implication. Such revocations arise from the legal effect of some intervening event happening after submission, either by act of God, or caused by the party, and which necessarily puts an end to the business. The death of a party or arbitrator, marriage of a feme sole, lunacy of a party, or the utter destruction and final end of the subject-matter are of this description. But whether the bringing of an action for the subject-matter of an arbitration after submission and before award is an implied revocation is a matter about which the courts differ. In New York it is held that it is no revocation in law. Lumber Co. v. Schneider (Com. Pl.) 1 N. Y. Supp. 441; Smith v. Compton, 20 Barb. 262. To same effect are the decisions in New Jersey and Vermont. Knaus v. Jenkins, 40 N. J. Law, 288, 29 Am. Rep. 237; Sutton v. Tyrrell, 10 Vt. 91. The courts of Kentucky, Illinois, Georgia, and New Hampshire hold the contrary. Peters v.

Craig, 6 Dana, 307; Paulsen v. Manske, 24 Ill. App. 95; Leonard v. House, 15 Ga. 473; Kimball v. Gilman, 60 N. H. 54. The conclusion of Judge Collamer in the Vermont case is that "the entry and continuance of an action was obviously not an express revocation, nor was it such an act as put an end to the subject-matter of the submission, nor did it prevent the arbitration from proceeding with effect. It occasioned the defendant no cost, and, indeed, it was no more than an ordinary act of caution to keep the action in existence, should the opposite party revoke or decline to attend. This, then, was not a revocation in law." Nevertheless, it is plainly deducible from all the cases that the action when commenced must cover the subject-matter submitted to arbitration; otherwise, it cannot be construed as a revocation or notice to the other party or to the arbitrators. In the case at bar the summons was issued some days before the award was made, but the complaint was not filed until a year after. The summons gave no indication as to the character of the action except that it was a civil action. Until a complaint is filed, the defendant has no legal notice of the cause of action, and the arbitrators had a right to proceed with the pending arbitration and to render their award. Assuming that the bill of particulars furnished upon defendant's demand is notice of the character of the action, that was not furnished until after August 1, 1908, several months after the award had been rendered.

It is further contended that the award is not warranted by the terms of submission. According to the written contract and the terms of the submission, the purpose of the award was to ascertain the damages accruing by reason of: "(1) The percentage of mis-cuts and stained lumber. (2) As to excess cost of railroading. (3) As to excess cost of handling lumber on the yard. (4) Are J. T. Williams & Bro. responsible for fire which occurred last fall, supposedly originating from sparks from locomotive No. 7? The above items cover all disputes and contentions under said contract to date." In their written award the arbitrators appear to have carefully confined themselves to the questions submitted, and to have confined their findings to the four matters in dispute. But it is unnecessary to discuss that contention further as it is expressly admitted in the case agreed that the arbitrators on January 25, 1907, rendered their award, "passing on the matters submitted to them."

In view of this admission in the record, it is not now open to plaintiff to attack the award.

The judgment of the superior court upon the "case agreed" is reversed.

PAUL et al. v. CARTER.

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 14*)—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Under Revisal, § 1556, rule 4, providing that on the failure of lineal descendants, where land has been transmitted by descent from an ancestor, the inheritance shall descend to the next collateral relations capable of inheriting of the person last seised who are of the blood of such ancestor, and rule 6, declaring that collateral relations of the half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood, etc., the children of a man by his first marriage cannot inherit land inherited by the second wife from her father, where the man and his second wife died leaving a child of the second marriage which died in infancy, for the children of the first marriage were not of the blood of the second wife or of any blood of her father.

Appeal from Superior Court, Beaufort County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by Fenner Paul and another against S. Lloyd Carter. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

The plaintiffs brought this action to recover the possession of a tract of land. They claim title to the land as the children of J. B. Paul by his first marriage. J. B. Paul, after the death of his first wife, married Bettie Carter, who inherited a one-third interest in the land from her father, Stephen Carter; the other heirs of Stephen Carter being his two sons, Lawrence Carter, and the defendant. The latter has purchased the interest of Lawrence Carter, and is owner of the entire interest in the land, if the disputed question is decided in his favor. J. B. Paul had one child by his second marriage. He died, and then his wife, Bettie Paul, formerly Bettie Carter, died intestate; their child surviving them. The child died in infancy, and the plaintiffs now assert title to a one-third interest in the land as the heirs of the deceased child of J. B. and Bettie Paul, while the defendant claims that he and his brothers are the heirs of the child, and that he by purchase from them of two-thirds of that interest and inheritance in his own right of the other third is the sole owner of the land. The court so decided, and the plaintiffs appealed.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The solution of the question in this case depends upon the construction of rules 4 and 6 of the canons of descent. Revisal, c. 30, § 1556. Rule 4 provides that, on failure of lineal descendants where land has been transmitted by descent from an ancestor, the inheritance shall descend to the next collateral relations, capable of inheriting, of the person last seised, who are of the blood of such ancestor. Rule 6 provides that collateral relations of the half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood, the degrees of relationship to be computed according to the rules of the common law, but this rule is subject to the proviso that if "the person last seised shall have left no issue capable of inheriting, nor brother, nor sister, nor issue of such, the inheritance shall vest in the father, if living, and if not, then in the mother, if living." These two rules were adopted at the same time (Acts 1808, c. 739), and, as they relate to the same subject or are in pari materia, should be construed together, and it was clearly intended that they should be. There is no conflict between them, as suggested by counsel of plaintiffs. They can easily be harmonized, and each be allowed its full scope and effect. Collateral relations of the half blood derive their right of descent from the provisions of rule 6. It surely was not the intention to confer upon them a greater right than upon collateral relations of the whole blood. Rule 6 was adopted, therefore, to prevent the term "collateral relations," as used in rule 4, from being confined to those of the whole blood. That term, therefore, embraces all collateral relations—that is, of the whole or of the half blood—who are capable of inheriting, and those of the half blood are as much subject to the restrictions of rule 4 as those of the whole blood, which require, not only that they should be capable of inheriting, but that they should be of the blood of the ancestor from whom came the descent or inheritance. But it is useless to further consider or discuss the rules for the purpose of ascertaining their meaning, as this court has already construed them adversely to the plaintiffs' contention in several cases. The plaintiffs are not of the blood of Bettie Paul (or Bettie Carter) the ancestor of the person last seised, nor have they any of the blood of Stephen Carter in their veins, if we are permitted to go back to him. In McMichael v. Moore, 56 N. C. 471, the very question presented by this appeal was considered and decided by the court, the position of the parties being reversed, but the point and the principle involved being common to both cases. In that case it was said by Judge Pearson, for the court, that "the petitioners are of the blood of the ancestor from whom the land descended. The defendants, who are the children of the defendant Harvey Moore, and the half brothers and sisters of the person last seised, are nearer in degree than the petitioners; but they are not of the blood of the ancestor. Consequently, as against them, the petitioners would be entitled to the land." See, also, Bell v. Dozler, 12 N. C. 383; Dozler v. Grandy, 66 N. C. 484. The case of Little v. Bule, 58 N. C. 10, fully answers the plaintiffs' contention, and shows conclusively that rule 6 excludes from the inheritance collateral relations of the half blood, who are not of the blood of the transmitting ancestor. Judge Manly said in Little v. Bule: "It is clear that the father, upon the death of his son, took the entire interest in the land in question, and half-sisters, not being of the blood of the transmitting ancestor, took nothing."

There was no error in the ruling and judgment of the court upon the case agreed.

Affirmed.

CHAUNCEY v. CHAUNCEY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 568*)—CASE ON APPEAL—SETTLEMENT.

Though Revisal, § 591, was amended to allow an appellant 15 days, instead of 5, to serve his case on appeal, and to allow appellee 10 days, instead of 3, to serve exceptions or a counter case, the provision requiring appellant on receiving appellee's exceptions or counter case to "immediately" request the judge to fix a time and place for settling the case remained in Revisal 1905. Laws 1907, c. 312, provides that, if appellant delays more than 15 days after appellee serves his counter case or exceptions to request the judge to settle the case, such counter case or exceptions shall be taken as correct. Held, that the effect of chapter 312 is to substitute 15 days in lieu of "immediately" as the time in which appellant can make such request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 568.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 571*)—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—SETTLEMENT OF CASE ON APPEAL.

Appellant's timely request under Revisal, § 591, and Laws 1907, c. 312, for settlement of his case on appeal, having been denied, he is entitled to certiorari to procure settlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 571.*]

Action by J. S. H. Chauncey against W. W. Chauncey. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. On appellant's motion for certiorari. Motion sustained.

W. M. Bond, for plaintiff. W. C. Rodman, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. Under the original C. C. P., the appellant was allowed five days after entry of appeal to serve his case on appeal, and the appellee was allowed three days after such service to serve his exceptions or counter case. By successive amendments this was changed to 15 days for appellant and 10 days to appellee. Revisal 1905, § 591.

The further provision that the appellant upon receipt of appellee's exceptions or counter case should "immediately" request the judge to fix a time and place for settling the case on appeal remained unaltered in Revisal 1905, § 591. But chapter 312, Laws 1907, provides that, "if the appellant shall delay longer than 15 days after the appellee serves his counter case, or exceptions, to request the judge to settle the case," the appellee's counter case or exceptions shall be taken as correct. The effect of this is to substitute "15 days" in lieu of "immediately" as the time in which the appellant, after receipt of appellee's exceptions can make his request to the judge, though it is not expressly so stated.

The appellant in this case, having made such request to the judge within 11 days after receipt of the appellee's exceptions, was entitled to have his request granted. This not having been done, he is entitled to his certiorari, to the end that the judge may now "settle the case."

Motion allowed.

HUGHES v. PRITCHARD.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 178*)—PROOF OF CONTENTS OF LOST RECORDS.

In a proceeding to establish a division line between defendant's homestead and a tract of land sold under execution against him, plaintiff could show by oral evidence and by a copy the contents of the original report of the appraisers who set apart the homestead on proof of loss of the original report.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 580-594; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 186*)—PROOF OF CONTENTS OF LOST INSTRUMENT.

Revisal 1905, §§ 827-845, authorizing proceedings to establish a lost or destroyed record, is an enabling act, and does not exclude oral evidence, which was admissible at common law, to prove the contents of a lost instrument, whether a deed or a record of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 661-673; Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

3. HOMESTEAD (§ 52*)—SETTING APART—REPORT—SIGNATURE.

The failure of appraisers appointed to set apart defendant's homestead to sign their report in the presence of the sheriff did not render it void so as to permit defendant to impeach it collaterally in a proceeding to establish a division line between the homestead and the tract sold under execution against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 71, 72; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

4. HOMESTEAD (§ 52*)—SETTING APART—REPORT—OBJECTIONS.

If failure of appraisers appointed to set apart a homestead to sign their report in the presence of the sheriff affected the report, objection should have been taken by motion to set it aside when it was filed with the clerk of the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Camden County; Ferguson, Judge.

Proceedings by M. E. Hughes, Sr., against D. T. Pritchard to establish a division line. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. Worth and H. S. Ward, for appellant. E. F. Aydtlett, J. C. B. Ehringhaus, and Pruden & Pruden, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This is a proceeding which was instituted for the purpose of establishing the dividing line between a tract of land alleged by the plaintiff to be the homestead of the defendant, and an adjoining tract, which was purchased by the plaintiff at a sale under an execution issued against the defendant. In his deed the sheriff conveyed to the plaintiff the tract of land upon which he had levied under the execution, but excepted therefrom the homestead of the defendant.

It appeared that the report of the appraisers, who set apart the homestead to the defendant, could not after diligent search be found in the clerk's office. There was evidence tending to show that an allotment of the homestead had been made by three appraisers, at the request of the sheriff, and that their report was prepared and signed by them. This report was seen in the clerk's office among the papers in the judgment roll of the case in which the execution had been issued. A copy of the report was made, and, after proving the loss of the original report, the plaintiff proposed to prove by oral evidence and by the copy the contents of the original report for the purpose of showing the boundaries of the homestead and the proper location of the disputed line. This testimony was objected to by the defendant, but admitted by the court. It was clearly competent. The defendant's objection was based upon the ground that oral evidence cannot be received to prove the contents of a judicial record, unless in a proceeding brought to establish the lost or destroyed record, under chapter 11 of the Revisal, and that the record thus restored by proof and the judgment of the court is the only evidence admissible to show the contents of the lost record. This is a misapprehension of the meaning and scope of that enactment. It is an enabling act, and it was not intended to exclude oral evidence, which was admissible at common law to prove the contents of a lost instrument, whether a deed or the record of a court. This has been well settled by the decisions of this court. Mobley v. Watts, 98 N. C. 284, 3 S. E. 677, and cases cited in the annotated edition; Cox v. Lumber Co., 124 N. C. 80, 32 S. E. 381; Alken v. Lyon, 127 N. C. 175, 37 S. E. 199; Jones v. Ballou, 139 N. C. 526, 52 S. E. 254; Wells v. Harrell, 152 N. C. 218, 67 S. E. 584. In this case the plaintiff did not depend altogether upon the memory of a witness as to the contents of the report, but introduced an examined copy, or one which had been compared with the original and found to be correct. This is the principal exception of the defendant, and in passing upon it we must sustain the ruling of the court below. The failure of the appraisers to sign the report in the presence of the sheriff did not render it void, so that the defendant could impeach it in this collateral proceeding. It was at most an irregularity, and, if compliance with the statute in this respect is so essential to the sufficiency of the report and the allotment of the homestead, as to constitute the omission to sign the report in the presence of the sheriff a valid objection to it, the remedy of the defendant was by a motion to set aside the report after it had been filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court. Oates v. Munday, 127 N. C. 439, 37 S. E. 457; Formeyduval v. Rockwell, 117 N. C. 320, 23 S. E. 488; Burton v. Splers, 87 N. C. 91. The other exceptions of the defendant are without merit, if they are not sufficiently considered and disposed of by what we have already said.

No error.

WHITE v. TAYLOE et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 14, 1910.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 743*) — CONCLUSIVENESS — IDENTITY OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

A former judgment establishing the division line between plaintiff's land and an adjoining tract estops him from claiming any interest in land on the other side; his remedy having been an appeal from the judgment for any error in the trial, or motion to set aside the verdict, if it was against the evidence.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 662*) — RECORD — CONCLUSIVENESS.

A verdict must be considered on appeal as it appears in the record, in the absence of any correction or amendment of the record.

3. JUDGMENT (§ 533*) — REFERENCE TO FORMER JUDGMENT — EFFECT.

Reference in a judgment fixing a boundary of dower land to a former judgment which merely adjudged that plaintiff was the owner of such land, without locating it, did not change the legal effect of the subsequent judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 533.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Hertford County; Geo. W. Ward, Judge.

Action by T. J. White against M. L. Tayloe and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action was brought to recover possession of a tract of land known as the "Britton Moore place," which plaintiff claims is a part of the dower of Ann E. Tayloe, widow of James E. Tayloe. In his complaint the plaintiff alleges that Ann E. Tayloe conveyed her dower to M. L. Tayloe, and the latter conveyed the tract of land which was allotted to him in the division of the lands of James E. Tayloe, together with the said dower, to W. D. Pruden and D. B. Winbourne, as trustees, and that, in accordance with the terms of the deed to them, the trustees sold and conveyed the said land to him. He further alleges that the plaintiffs are in possession of the land, claiming the Britton Moore tract under a deed from Ada F. Parker, the daughter of James E. Tayloe, to the feme defendant, Carrie W. Tayloe. The defendants in their answer deny that the dower of Ann E. Tayloe was ever allotted to her, and therefore that no particular tract of land was conveyed to M. L. Tayloe by the deed to Ann E. Tayloe, but only her right of dower. They aver in their answer, as a special defense to the action of the plaintiff, that on the 5th day of January, 1908, the plaintiff commenced an action in the superior court of Hertford county against these defendants to recover the land conveyed to him by the said trustees, and that at Spring term, 1908, he recovered judgment for that part of the land which was allotted to M. L. Tayloe in the division of the James Tayloe lands, and for such rights as were acquired by M. L. Tayloe in said land under the deed to him by Ann E. Tayloe. It was adjudged in the former suit that the plaintiff is the owner of the dower right and interest of Ann E. Tayloe in the land of her husband, James Tayloe, which was conveyed by her to M. L. Tayloe, and that, if the said dower had been allotted by metes and bounds, the plaintiff is entitled to the possession thereof, but that, if the said dower had not been so allotted, then the plaintiff should proceed to ascertain the same in the manner provided by law. The foregoing judgment was rendered at April term, 1908, of the superior court, when Judge O. H. Allen presided. At April term, 1909, when Judge O. H. Gulon presided, an issue was submitted to the jury in the same action for the purpose of ascertaining the dividing line between the lands claimed by the plaintiff and those claimed by the defendant, the plaintiff having alleged that he is the owner of the Britton Moore tract as a part of the dower of Ann E. Tayloe, and the defendant denying the allegation. The issues and answers thereto were as follows: "(1) Is the line (of division) the one indicated on the plat by the letters A and B? Answer, Yes. (2) If not, is the line the one indicated on the plat by the letters C, D, and E?" This issue was not answered.

If the true line of division is the one indicated by the letters A and B, the Britton Moore tract would not be included within the boundaries of the lands owned by the plaintiff. If the true line is the one indicated by the letters C, D, and E, then a large part of the Britton Moore tract would be so included. Upon the verdict in that case, it was adjudged that the plaintiff owned the land lying west of the line indicated by the letters A, B, and the defendant Carrie W. Tayloe owned all of the land lying east of said line, the issue made by the pleadings being as to the ownership of the respective parties. In September, 1910, the plaintiff brought another action against the defendants to recover damages for a trespass on the Britton Moore tract, which he claimed was a part of the dower of Ann E. Tayloe, the title to which he alleged had been acquired by him under the deed from the trustees. In that action he prayed for a receiver, and the receiver was appointed to take charge of the lands and to collect rents and profits. The defendants moved to vacate the order appointing the receiver and to dismiss the action, which motion, upon consideration of the same, was granted by the court and a judgment in the case entered accordingly.

The defendants in their answer to the plaintiff's complaint in this action set up as a defense in bar thereto the judgments in the former suits between the same parties. Issues were submitted to the jury which with the answers thereto are as follows: "(1) Was dower allotted to Ann E. Tayloe in the lands of her husband, James Tayloe, as alleged? Answer: Yes. (2) If so, did said dower cover the lands known as the Britton Moore land? Answer: Yes. (3) Is said Britton Moore land and the land on the west side of A, B, in plat referred to in the judgment which was rendered at April term, 1909, the same land? Answer: Yes. (4) Has the Britton Moore land been heretofore adjudged to be the land of defendant Carrie Tayloe in a suit between the same parties? Answer: Yes." Upon this verdict the court adjudged that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that the defendants recover their costs of him. The plaintiff excepted and appealed.

L. L. Smith, for appellant. Winborne & Winborne, for appellees.

WALKER, J. The plaintiff alleged in his complaint filed in this action that the dower of Ann E. Tayloe had been allotted many years ago, and that the record of the said allotment had been lost. He sought to restore the record, and to recover the Britton Moore tract of land as a part of the dower. In the action tried at April term, 1909, of the superior court, when Judge Gulon presided, the defendant denied that they were in possession of any land owned by the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff acquired, by the deed from the trustees, an interest in any such land. A survey was made to establish the dividing line between the land owned by the plaintiff and that owned by the defendant Carrie W. Tayloe. The jury by their verdict found that the line indicated by the letters A, B, is the dividing line, and the court so adjudged. The effect of the verdict and judgment in that case is to estop the plaintiff from now asserting any title to the land lying on the east side of the line, or to any interest therein, as the court adjudged the feme defendant to be the owner of all the land on that side. There was no exception to the judgment or appeal therefrom. If the Britton Moore tract or any part of the dower land is in fact on the east side of that line, the plaintiff should have made it appear, so that the verdict would have been according to the truth of the matter. If he failed to do so by reason of any error of the court at the trial of the case, he should have excepted and appealed. If the verdict was contrary to the weight of the evidence, he should have moved to set it aside. Having failed to impeach the verdict and judgment in any proper way, the plaintiff is bound by them, and will not be heard in this action to contradict anything which was decided in the former suit upon the issues joined between the parties. The jury have found in this case, it is true, that the Britton Moore tract was a part of the dower land as allotted to the widow, but they also find that it is on the west side of the line. If "west" should be "east," as suggested on the argument, the plaintiff is still estopped by the former verdict and judgment from claiming the land, as the jury further find that the feme defendant had theretofore been adjudged to be the owner of the Britton Moore tract of land. The issues were raised by the pleadings and the verdict was in accordance with instructions given by the court as to the legal effect of the records in the prior suits. We find no error in the charge of the court. We have shown that the identical question involved in this action has heretofore been decided against the plaintiff in a suit between the same parties. If we accept and consider the verdict as it appears in the record, and we must do so in the absence of any correction or amendment, it is perfectly consistent with the verdict and judgment as rendered at April term, 1909, before Judge Gulon. The reference in that judgment to the judgment rendered at April term, 1903, when Judge Allen presided, does not change its legal effect, for the latter judgment merely declared that the plaintiff is the owner of the dower land, without locating it, while the other judgment clearly ascertains that it is no part of the land on the east side of the line, as the feme defendant owns all the land on that side. The plaintiff may have lost a part of his land in the litigation, though it does not so appear, but, if he has, we cannot restore it to him without disregarding a well-settled rule of law which protects the feme defendant in the ownership of the land once adjudged to be hers. We need not enter upon any lengthy discussion of the principle underlying the doctrine of estoppel by record or res judicata. We simply refer to what is said by the court in Bunker v. Bunker, 140 N. C. 18, 52 S. E. 237, when considering a question similar to the one presented by this appeal: "It being a final judgment, the plaintiffs cannot be heard upon any matter which was litigated in the action and which was necessarily determined by it. In such a case, the matter in dispute having passed in rem judicatum, the former decision is conclusive between the parties, if either attempts, by commencing another action or proceeding, to reopen the question. This doctrine is but an outgrowth of the familiar maxim that a man shall not be twice vexed for the same cause, and the other wholesome rule of the law that it is the interest of the state that there be an end of litigation and consequently a matter of public concern that solemn adjudications of the courts should not be disturbed. Broom's Legal Maxims (8th Ed.) 330, 331. 'If,' says Lord Kenyon, 'an action be brought and the merits of the question be discussed between the parties and a final judgment obtained by either, the parties are concluded and cannot canvass the same question in another action, although, perhaps, some objection or argument might have been urged upon the first trial, which would have led to a different judgment.' Greathead v. Bromley, 7 Duff. & East. (7 T. R.) 546. And again, in another case, he says: 'After a recovery by process of law, there must be an end of litigation. If it were otherwise, there would be no security for any person, and great oppression might be done under the color and pretense of law.' Marriott v. Hampton, 7 Duff. & East. 269. 'Good matter must be pleaded (or brought forward) in good form, in apt time, and in due order, otherwise great advantage may be lost.' Coke, 303b. If there be any one principle of law settled beyond all dispute, it is this, that whensoever a cause of action, in the language of the law, transit in rem judicatum, and the judgment thereupon remains in full force and unreversed, the original cause of action is merged and gone forever, and so it is also that if the plaintiff had an opportunity of recovering something in litigation formerly between him and his adversary, and but for the failure to bring it forward or to press it to a conclusion before the court, he might have recovered it in the original suit. Whatever does not for that reason pass into and become a part of the adjudication of the court is forever lost to him. U. S. v. Leffler, 11 Pet. 101 [9 L. Ed. 642]. Judge Willes thus states the rule: 'Where the cause of action is the same and the plaintiff has had an opportunity in the former suit of recovering that which he seeks to recover in the second, the former recovery is a bar to the latter action.' Nelson v. Couch, 15 C. B. (N. S.) 108; s. c., 109 E. C. L. R. 106. These principles have been fully adopted by us, as will appear in the case of Tyler v. Capeheart, 125 N. C. 64 [34 S. E. 108], where the doctrine as to the plea of former judgment is concisely and accurately stated." In Tyler v. Capeheart it was held that "the judgment is decisive of the point raised by the pleadings, or which might properly be predicated upon them." See, also, Turnage v. Joyner, 145 N. C. 81, 58 S. E. 757. The plaintiff is estopped by the judgment rendered at April term, 1909, to allege that he is the owner of any land on the east side of the line A, B, or of any interest therein. Being concluded by the former judgment, he cannot recover upon the cause of action stated in his complaint.

The fourth issue was properly submitted to the jury, as it involved a question of law and fact.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Beaufort County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by J. N. Yeates against R. F. Forrest. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

Small, MacLean & McMullan, for appellant. Ward & Grimes, for appellee.

MANNING, J. This case is reported in 152 N. C. 752, 67 S. E. 171. The judgment of this court having been certified to the superior court of Beaufort county, Judge Allen, at May term, 1910, rendered, on motion of plaintiff's attorney, the following judgment: "This cause coming on for hearing upon the return of the certificate of the Supreme Court, affirming the former judgment in said cause, it is ordered and adjudged that the former judgment of this court be declared the final judgment in this cause, and that the surveyor of the court run and mark a line on the land in accordance with the judgment heretofore rendered, and the defendant be and he is hereby enjoined from trespassing across said line, and that this cause go off the docket, at the cost of the defendant."

The judgment, from which the former appeal in this case was taken by the defendant, clearly and distinctly defined the dividing line between plaintiff's and defendant's lands, as fixed by the verdict of the jury. This judgment was affirmed by the court. We can, therefore, see no objection to that part of his honor's judgment directing the surveyor appointed by the court to run and mark a line on the land in accordance with the former judgment. This line had been defined on a plat and in the judgment, and we do not see that any right of the defendant could be invaded by having it marked on the land itself by either artificial or natural objects. The verdict and judgment conclusively determined, not only plaintiff's title, but his right of possession. The plaintiff, as a part of the relief prayed by him in his original complaint, had asked for a restraining order, and, the judgment having conclusively determined that defendant was trespassing upon land belonging to plaintiff, we can see no objection to that part of his honor's judgment enjoining the defendant from a continuance or resumption of his acts of trespass. The power to protect its judgment from violation by the defendant was within the power of the court. No right of the defendant was invaded, and this was in aid of plaintiff's rights.

But that part of the judgment which directed the case to be discontinued from the docket before the surveyor had made his report that he had run and marked the exact line of division, we think, is properly subject to defendant's objection. The reason is clear to us. The surveyor might not run and mark the proper line, and the action should have been retained to receive the surveyor's report, and for an opportunity to either party to file exceptions to the running and marking of the line as not the exact and actual line of division. In view of this possible disagreement, the case should not have been finally disposed of, but should have been retained. We do not think any action should be ordered discontinued from the docket of the court until every act commanded to be done has been performed, and its performance passed upon by the court.

In directing this action to be discontinued from the docket, before the report of the surveyor was received and passed upon, there is error. The defendant appellant is entitled to recover the costs of the appeal.

We notice the appellant has had printed the entire record in the former appeal. We think this clearly unnecessary, and the costs of this part of the transcript and of its printing must be taxed against the appellant.

SPRUILL et al. v. TOWN OF COLUMBIA et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 1000*)—CONTRACTS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT—SUIT TO SET ASIDE—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to declare void a contract to pave sidewalks of a town on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, a town ordinance providing that no appropriation should be made except at a regular meeting of the board of commissioners was admissible; the contract having been made at a called meeting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 1000.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 1000*)—CONTRACTS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT—SUIT TO SET ASIDE—EVIDENCE.

Proof that through the efforts of the contractor the ordinance requiring four commissioners to constitute a quorum was changed so as to make three commissioners a quorum, and that three constituted the meeting when the contract was made, was competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 1000.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a suit to declare void a contract of a town for street work on the ground that it was procured by fraud, the error, if any, in admitting evidence that the current expenses of the town took all the money raised by the tax levy, over the objection that it was immaterial, was not reversible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 1000*)—CONTRACTS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

Whether a contract to pave the sidewalks of a town was fraudulent and obtained by the contractor through collusion with the board of commissioners held, under the evidence, for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tyrrell County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by J. L. Spruill and others against the Town of Columbia and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Gaylord & Gaylord and W. M. Bond, for appellants. E. F. Aydtlett, H. S. Ward, and J. B. C. Ehringhaus, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. This was an action to declare void a contract for paving the sidewalks of the town of Columbia upon the ground that it was obtained by fraud, and to enjoin the defendants, commissioners, from issuing bonds to the defendant Newberry for the same. The work has not been performed.

The first exception was to the introduction of an ordinance of the town which provided that no appropriation of money should be made except at a regular meeting of the board of commissioners. This was competent because the contract of the defendant Newberry was made at a called meeting. The evidence that the ordinance required four to constitute a quorum, and that through the efforts of Newberry this was changed to three who constituted the meeting when this contract was made, was also competent. The defendants also excepted to the testimony that the current expenses of the town took all the money raised by the tax levy because it was immaterial. If so, it is not reversible error. Collins v. Collins, 125 N. C. 98, 34 S. E. 195.

The chief exception is to the refusal of the motion to nonsuit. There was evidence tending to show that the defendant Newberry, through his personal influence with the board, had obtained the contract for paving the sidewalk at a price between $5,000 and $8,000 without competitive bidding; that he was instrumental in causing the board to change the town ordinance which required that four should constitute a quorum, so that three members gave him the contract at an exorbitant price, and one of the three who voted the contract was related to Newberry, and declared himself in favor of paying 25 cents per square yard more to Newberry for the work than to any other person; that at the meeting, though there was another bid in, the majority of the board declined to receive bids and returned them unopened; that afterwards the defendant Newberry carried his proposition to the board, already written, and procured the three members to pass it; that the contract was excessive in price, and was made without any investigation as to price, or as to the best material; that it was indefinite and uncertain so that the contractor might put down a first-class pavement, or an inferior one, and still comply with the contract; that it called for a bonded indebtedness largely in excess of what the town was able to meet; that the defendant Newberry helped to elect the board in order to get the contract; that he had suggested to some members of the board that certain personal advantages and profit would come to them by giving him the contract; that he also requested one member of the board who opposed his having the contract to resign and take part in the paving, and intimated that he (Newberry) would make it profitable to him.

There was other evidence tending to show that the contract was fraudulent, and obtained by Newberry through collusion with the board. His honor properly overruled the motion to nonsuit. It was a question for the jury. Jones v. Insurance Co., 151 N. C. 56, 65 S. E. 602, and cases cited; Tuttle v. Tuttle, 146 N. C. 484, 59 S. E. 1008, 125 Am. St. Rep. 481.

The jury found that the defendants, commissioners, acted fraudulently in making the contract with their codefendant Newberry, and that he colluded with the commissioners in obtaining the contract. The other exceptions require no discussion.

No error.

FRAZELL v. LIFE INS. CO. OF VIRGINIA.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

INSURANCE (§ 198*)—LIFE—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS BY AGENT—EFFECT.

Where the fraudulent representations made by a life insurance agent as to the terms of the policy were not believed by the purchaser, he could not recover the premium paid on the strength of such misrepresentations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 457, 459; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by M. D. Frazell against the Life Insurance Company of Virginia. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. No error.

Simmons, Ward & Allen, for appellant. Gulon & Gulon, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover $192, the amount of premiums paid by him on an insurance policy for $500, which it is alleged he was induced to pay to the defendant by false and fraudulent representations of its agent as to the terms and conditions of the policy. The plaintiff testified substantially that the agent of the company stated to him, before he agreed to take the policy, that it would contain provisions by which the full amount, or $500, would be paid at his death, and, if he continued the policy for 10 years, the company would pay to him the amount of all premiums it had received to that time, with interest, upon the surrender of the policy, and, if he paid the premiums regularly for 20 years, it would become a paid-up policy. There were no such provisions, except the first one, in the policy. Plaintiff paid the premiums for nearly 10 years, when he discovered, or was told by the agent of another company, that the policy did not contain the provisions as represented to him. He further testified that he did not believe what the defendant's agent had told him, but sought the advice of his attorney as to the meaning of the contract and believed him and acted on his advice. At the close of the testimony, the court sustained a motion to nonsuit, and the plaintiff appealed.

If the testimony of the plaintiff is sufficient to sustain the allegation of false and fraudulent representations, within the principles stated by this court in Caldwell v. Insurance Co., 140 N. C. 100, 52 S. E. 252, Sykes v. Insurance Co., 148 N. C. 18, 61 S. E. 610, Stroud v. Insurance Co., 148 N. C. 54, 61 S. E. 626, and Whitehurst v. Insurance Co., 149 N. C. 273, 62 S. E. 1067, he admitted that he did not believe the agent who made them, and therefore he neither relied upon them nor was induced by them to accept the policy and pay the premiums. While he can read and write, and we must assume is a person of ordinary intelligence, he did not read his policy when it was sent to him (Floars v. Insurance Co., 144 N. C. 232, 56 S. E. 915), nor was its language, as well as we can gather from the record what it is, calculated to mislead him. He has not presented a case for reformation of the policy, nor does he seek that equitable remedy. Floars v. Insurance Co., supra. When we consider his testimony in the most favorable light for him, we find that he has not sustained the allegation of fraud. In Whitehurst v. Insurance Co., supra, we held that the false representation must have induced the plaintiff to accept the policy and to part with his money by the payment of premiums before he can recover the amount thus paid, with interest. If he falls in this respect, no actionable fraud is shown. The plaintiff did not believe the agent, and therefore could not have been induced by his alleged representations to take the policy and pay the premiums. He was advised by his attorney and acted upon what he said. We do not mean to imply that the plaintiff might recover, under the circumstances of this case, if he had relied on the statements of the agent. It is not necessary to consider that question.

No error.

WHITEHURST v. KERR et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—SERVICE OF PROCESS.

The Legislature may provide for service of process on foreign corporations doing business within the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2603, 2604; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—CONDITION UPON WHICH THEY MAY DO BUSINESS—STATUTES—SERVICE OF PROCESS.

Statutes providing for the service of process on foreign corporations doing business in the state are considered a condition upon which they may do such business, and which they are deemed to have assented to.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2603, 2604; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—SERVICE OF PROCESS—RULES—REASONABLENESS.

The rules regarding service of process on foreign corporations must be reasonable, providing for service only on its proper representatives, who it could be reasonably presumed would inform the corporation of the service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2610; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—SERVICE OF PROCESS.

Revisal 1905, § 440, providing that service of process may be had on a foreign corporation by service on a local agent, and that any person receiving money in the state for the corporation will be deemed such a local agent, does not restrict service to such an agent, but extends the rule to include him.

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—SERVICE OF PROCESS ON BOOKKEEPER—SUFFICIENCY.

Service of process on the bookkeeper of a foreign corporation engaged in bridge building, who was apparently the only financial agent connected with the construction of a bridge in the state by reading and leaving a copy of the service with him, was sufficient under Revisal 1905, § 440, providing that service of process may be had on foreign corporations doing business within the state by service on a general or local agent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pasquotank County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by G. W. Whitehurst against Kerr and Wolcott, receivers of the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company, and others. From the order dismissing the service of process, plaintiff appeals. Order set aside.

Return of service on the McLean Contracting Company as follows: "Received February 26, 1910. Served February 26, 1910. By reading to and leaving a copy with Mr. F. H. Cameron, bookkeeper and acting agent for the above defendant company the McLean Contracting Company." At spring term, 1910. The defendant, the McLean Contracting Company, a special appearance having been entered for the purpose, moved to dismiss the action as to said company for want of proper service. Motion allowed and plaintiff excepted and appealed.

J. C. B. Ehringhaus and E. F. Aydlott, for appellant. S. Brown Shepherd and Pruden & Pruden, for appellees.

HOKK, J. The power of a state Legislature to provide for service of process on foreign corporations doing business within the state is no longer questioned. Speaking to the subject in the case of St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 1 Sup. Ct. 354, 27 L. Ed. 222, Associate Justice Fields said: "The state may therefore impose as a condition upon which a foreign corporation shall be permitted to do business within her limits that it shall stipulate that in any litigation arising out of its transactions in the state it will accept as sufficient the service of process on its agents or persons specially designated, and the condition would be eminently fit and just. And the condition and stipulation may be implied as well as expressed. If a state permits a foreign corporation to do business within her limits, and at the same time provides that, in suits against it for business there done, process shall be served upon its agents, the provision is to be deemed a condition of the permission, and corporations that subsequently do business in the state are to be deemed to assent to such condition as fully as though they had specially authorized their agents to receive service of the process. Such condition must not, however, encroach upon those principles of natural justice which require notice of a suit to a party before he can be bound by it. It must be reasonable and the service provided for should be only upon such agents as may be properly deemed representatives of the foreign corporation. The decision of this court in Lafayette Insurance Co. v. French [18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451], to which we have already referred, sustains these views." And the doctrine so stated is universally recognized and acted on.

Our state statute applicable to and controlling the question presented on this appeal (Revisal 1905, § 440) is, in terms, as follows: "If the action be against a corporation to the president or other head of the corporation, secretary, cashier, treasurer, director, managing or local agent thereof: Provided, that any person receiving or collecting moneys within this state for, or on behalf of, any corporation of this or any other state or government, shall be deemed a local agent for the purpose of this section; but such service can be made in respect to a foreign corporation only when it has property within this state, or the cause of action arose therein, or when the plaintiff resides in the state, or when such service can be made within the state, personally upon the president, treasurer, or secretary thereof." Construing a statute of similar import, it has been held that the first clause enumerates the persons on whom service of process can be made, to wit, on the president or other head of the corporation, secretary, cashier, treasurer, director, managing or local agent thereof, and in that respect applies to all corporations both domestic and foreign. Then follows the proviso as to who shall be considered local agents for the purpose of the section, and the last clause establishes certain conditions, restrictive in their nature, which are required and necessary to a proper and valid service on foreign corporations. That is, service on the persons designated in the first clause shall only be good as to foreign corporations: (1) When they have property in the state, or (2) when the cause of action arose therein, or (3) when plaintiff resides in the state. And then a fourth method is established: (4) "When service can be made within this state personally on the president, treasurer or secretary thereof." This construction will be found approved and sustained in Foster v. Chas. Betcher Lumber Co., 5 S. D. 57, 58 N. W. 9, 23 L. R. A. 490, 49 Am. St. Rep. 859; and authoritative decisions here and elsewhere are in accord with the general principles of that well-considered case. Higgs v. Sperry, 139 N. C. 299, 51 S. E. 1020; Clinard v. White & Co., 129 N. C. 251, 39 S. E. 960; Jones v. Insurance Co., 88 N. C. 499; In re Hohorst Petitioner, 150 U. S. 653, 14 Sup. Ct. 221, 37 L. Ed. 1211; Société Foncière v. Millikin, 135 U. S. 304, 10 Sup. Ct. 823, 34 L. Ed. 208; Tuchband v. C. & A. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 437, 22 N. E. 360; Express Co. v. Johnson, 17 Ohio, 641; Porter v. Railroad, 1 Neb. 14.

In Jones v. Insurance Co., supra, it was expressly held that service on a foreign corporation could be made either on a general agent or local agent; and, construing the terms of the proviso in the statute to the effect "that any person receiving or collecting moneys within the state for or on behalf of any corporation of this or any other state or government, shall be deemed a local agent for the purpose of this section," it has been further held that this "authority to receive money is not the exclusive test of a local agent upon whom service of process could be made," and that these words of the proviso were not intended to "limit service to such class of agents but to extend the meaning of the word agent to embrace them." Copland v. Telegraph Co., 136 N. C. 12, 48 S. E. 501. While there is some apparent conflict of decision in construing these statutes providing for service of process on corporations arising chiefly from the difference in the terms used in the various statutes on the subject, the cases will be found in general agreement on the position that in defining the term "agent" it is not the descriptive name employed, but the nature of the business and the extent of the authority given and exercised which is determinative, and the word does not properly extend to a subordinate employé without discretion, but must be one regularly employed having some charge or measure of control over the business intrusted to him or of some features of it, and of sufficient character and rank as to afford reasonable assurance that he will communicate to his company the fact that process has been served upon him (19 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 665-676, 677; Simmons v. Box Co., 148 N. C. 334, 62 S. E. 435; Jones v. Insurance Co., 88 N. C. 499, supra; Angerhoefer, Jr., v. Bradstreet Co. [C. C.] 22 Fed. 306; Hill v. St. Louis Ore & Steel Co., 90 Mo. 108, 2 S. W. 289), and by express provision of our statute as stated including "any person receiving or collecting moneys within this state for or on behalf of any corporation of this or any other state or government."

Applying the principles established by these decisions and on the facts appearing in the record, we are of opinion: That F. H. Cameron was an agent of defendant corporation appellee upon whom process could be lawfully served. That conditions existed authorizing service on him as such agent and that service of process upon said F. H. Cameron as shown by the sheriff's return "by reading and leaving a copy with F. H. Cameron, bookkeeper and acting agent," was a valid service, and said company is thereby properly in court. Although the parties were so intent on the question of the kind of agency required to a proper service, that they have failed to state the nature of the action or that the plaintiff resides in the state, or, in express terms, that it had property therein, and, although there is evidence to the effect that F. H. Cameron was styled only a bookkeeper of the defendant company "merely that and nothing more," it does appear from a perusal of the record that at the time this summons was issued and before and after that time defendant company was engaged in building a railroad bridge across Albemarle Sound in the state at a point where it is from three to five miles wide, the width suggested being a physical fact of which the court may take judicial notice; that it was an enterprise of unusual proportions requiring an extensive equipment, and necessarily involving the employment of large numbers of hands and the expenditure of large sums of money; that the agent, F. H. Cameron, had charge and control of the money of the company appropriated for the purpose, and kept it on deposit in a local bank, the bank entries showing that this continued in one bank from May 5, 1909, to March 18, 1910; that he had the company's pay rolls and disbursed this money in payment of the hands and other claims against the company. Thus an affidavit of the sheriff filed at the instance of defendant and in explanation of a prior affidavit made by that officer states "that he, the sheriff, does not know that F. H. Cameron received money in any way for the company; that his only information upon the subject is that said F. H. Cameron upon one occasion paid to him for the McLean Contracting Company certain costs that he (the sheriff) held against said company in an attachment proceeding on behalf of the Edenton Ice & Cold Storage Company and others amounting to $64, and, in addition, was informed that the said Cameron for the said contracting company paid to the plaintiff in that action the amount of these claims," etc. This former affidavit was as follows: "That he knows F. H. Cameron, who was acting as agent for the McLean Contracting Company in building a bridge across the Albemarle Sound for the Norfolk and Southern Railway Company, near Edenton. That he knows the said F. H. Cameron received money and paid out money for the said McLean Contracting Company." The affidavit of Chas. H. Wood, the cashier of the Citizens' Bank of Edenton, N. C., is as follows: "That he knows F. H. Cameron, employed by the McLean Contracting Company in building a bridge across the Albemarle Sound near this place (Edenton, N. C.) for the Norfolk and Southern Railway Company. That he knows that the said F. H. Cameron deposited moneys from the McLean Contracting Company, after handling the pay roll to his credit as agent, and drew on same for payment of sundry accounts. The pay rolls were not deposited, but the moneys deposited by F. H. Cameron, agent, was received from said McLean Contracting Company. According to our books, his first deposit as F. H. Cameron, agent, was May 5, 1909; his last deposit was March 18, 1910." And, while the affidavit of F. H. Cameron himself and several other officers of the company state that he is only a bookkeeper and without authority to receive or collect money for the company, he also states "that his sole duties are to keep the books of the company wherever it is engaged in contracting work and to settle with and pay off its mechanics and laborers." So far as appears, this agent was the only representative of the company on the ground having any charge or control of the financial features of this transaction, and we are of the opinion, as stated, that from the facts in evidence it is clear that his authority and occupation went far beyond the duties of an ordinary bookkeeper, and, if not a managing agent as defined in some of the decisions, that he came well within the meaning of the term "local agent," on whom process could be properly served, and that at the time of action commenced the company was doing business in the state and had property therein.

There is nothing either in Moore v. Bank, 92 N. C. 590, or in Kelly v. Lefalver, 144 N. C. 4, 56 S. E. 510, cases cited and relied on by defendants, which militates in any way against the disposition we make of this appeal. In Moore's Case it was held that an attorney at law who had certain claims to collect for a foreign corporation was not in the regular employment of the company so as to become a local agent within the true meaning of our statute on the service of process. And in Lefalver's Case, supra, the court, in stating the essential facts, said: "It will be noted that the person in question was not an agent in the course of the company's business while it was being operated, nor in closing out said business, nor in making general disposition of the company's property after it had ceased to do business. In fact, he was not an agent of the company at all, nor even an employé in the ordinary acceptance of the term, but simply a caretaker—acting, as found by the court, out of friendship and without salary or any pecuniary recompense"—showing that neither decision is applicable to the facts presented here. For the reasons stated, the order of the court below dismissing the action as to appellee company will be set aside and the cause proceeded with according to law, and the course and practice of the court.

Reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by the Newbern Banking & Trust Company against R. N. Duffy and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant D. H. Green appeals. Modified.

Simmons, Ward & Allen, for appellant. Moore & Dunn and Loftin, Varner & Dawson, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought to recover the amount of a note, which is in the following words and figures: "Newbern, N. C. March 3, 1909. $5,000.00. On or before three years after date, we promise to pay to the order of D. H. Green, Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) with interest from date at six per cent (6 per cent) per annum, payable at the National Bank of Newbern, N. C. Value received. Interest is payable one year after date and annually thereafter. If any instalment of interest is not paid when due or within ten days after demand, then the principal of said note shall become due and payable. The makers and endorsers of this note hereby waive notice of dishonor and notice of protest and protest itself, and agree to become bound, notwithstanding any extension or extensions. Witness our hands and seals. [Signed] R. N. Duffy. [Seal.] A. C. Burnett. [Seal.]" The note was indorsed and transferred for value by D. H. Green, the payee, to the plaintiff, who is now the owner thereof.

It is alleged in the complaint that, the first instalment of interest not having been paid when it was due, demand was made for the payment of the same, and no part thereof has been paid. The defendant A. C. Burnett was not served with process, and the defendant R. N. Duffy failed to appear and answer. The defendant D. H. Green answered, and denied that any demand had been made for the payment of interest, as alleged in the complaint. Plaintiff moved for judgment against the defendants R. N. Duffy and D. H. Green "upon the answer of Green; no other answers having been filed." The defendant resisted the motion upon the ground, among others, that no judgment could be given upon the pleadings, as the allegation of a demand for the payment of interest had been denied, which raised an issue as to the truth of the allegation, and therefore, for the purposes of the motion, it must be assumed that the principal of the note was not due when the action was commenced. The court refused to render judgment, and the plaintiff appealed. The contention of the plaintiff is that a demand was not necessary, as it had been waived by the very terms of the note, and, besides, that by a proper construction of the note the principal became due when there was a default in the payment of the first installment of interest; the words "or within ten days after demand" being immaterial or surplusage. The clause by which the makers and indorsers of this note waive notice of dishonor and protest and agree to remain liable, notwithstanding any extension of the time of payment, does not refer to the next preceding clause as to nonpayment of interest and the maturity of the principal, but to the notice required to prevent a discharge of the indorser under the law of commercial paper. It can hardly be supposed that the parties would make an agreement as to a demand for the payment of interest in one clause, and then waive it in the next clause.

As to the other question, it is well settled that a contract should receive that construction which will best effectuate the intention of the parties, which must be collected from the whole of the agreement, greater regard being had to their clear intent than to any particular words which they may have used in the expression of it, and, for the purpose of executing the intent, courts will disregard or correct obvious mistakes in writing and grammar. Clark on Contracts (2d Ed.) §§ 218-219. We cannot reject the words "or within ten days after demand," as we think they were intended to be of the essence of the contract, and therefore to be considered in construing it. There is no rule of law authorizing us to ignore those words. Why insert them if they were deemed to be not material? The true meaning of the clause is that if the interest is not paid when due, and there shall be a further default in its payment for 10 days after demand, the principal of the note shall become due and payable. The two defaults must concur before the maturity of the note is accelerated. The word "or" was used for "nor." The context shows it. As we must assume, at this stage of the case, that no demand for the payment of interest had been made, the right of action against D. H. Green for the recovery of principal and interest had not accrued when this action was commenced. Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 754. 91 Pac. 620. The stipulation that the note shall become due and payable if there is a default in the payment of interest for 10 days after a demand is valid. 7 Cyc. 599, 859; 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. (5th Ed.) § 48; Whitehead v. Morrill, 108 N. C. 65. 12 S. E. 894.

The plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against R. N. Duffy, as he did not answer, but his failure to answer cannot prejudice D. H. Green. The admission by Duffy of a demand upon him for the payment of the interest cannot be taken as any admission by Green of such a demand. The latter still has the right to deny that any demand was made, which he has done, and to have the issue thus joined submitted to a jury. Judgment will be entered in the court below against R. N. Duffy. Plaintiff moved in the superior court that judgment be rendered against D. H. Green for the principal and interest of the note. The court properly refused to grant the motion. Until it is found that a demand was made and the interest was not paid within ten days thereafter, the plaintiff will not be entitled to judgment for the principal of the note, as by its terms the note will not be due, so that an action can be brought upon it, until the expiration of the definite time fixed for payment—that is, three years from its date—unless there has been or hereafter is, a default in the payment of interest for 10 days after demand. Kinsel v. Ballou, supra.

The costs of this court incurred by D. H. Green will be paid by the plaintiff, who will recover of the defendant R. N. Duffy all other costs.

STATE v. NORMAN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 386*)—TRAILING OF BLOODHOUNDS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

To make the testimony of trailing by bloodhounds admissible, it must be shown by the testimony of persons having knowledge thereof that the dog has acuteness of scent and power of discrimination, and has been trained or tested in the exercise of tracking human beings, and it must also be proved that the dog was laid on the trail, whether visible or not, at a point where the circumstances showed that the guilty party had been, or on a track which such circumstances indicated to have been made by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 768; Dec. Dig. § 386.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 386*)—TRAILING OF BLOODHOUNDS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where there were no tracks at nor anything about the premises connecting accused with a crime committed thereon, and there were no tracks between the premises and a railroad crossing, and in a field between a public road and the house where accused was found, evidence that a bloodhound left the premises, ran down the track of the railroad to a highway crossing, then down the highway, and thence across the field to the house of accused, and that the dog did not recognize accused, though he stood near him, was inadmissible, especially where other persons had been in the house with accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 768; Dec. Dig. § 386.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 741*)—EVIDENCE—SUBMISSION OF ISSUE TO JURY.

Where there is no evidence of the guilt of accused, or where it is so slight as not reasonably to warrant an inference of guilt, or where it furnishes no more than material for mere conjecture, the court will not submit the case to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1713-1728; Dec. Dig. § 741.*]

4. BURGLARY (§ 45*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence on a trial for burglary held not to justify the submission of the case to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. § 110; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Camden County; Ferguson, Judge.

Will Norman was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Reversed.

The defendant was indicted in the court below for breaking and entering the storehouse of W. S. Berry with the unlawful and felonious intent of stealing, taking, and carrying away the goods and chattels of the said Berry. The evidence tended to show that there were several persons in the store on Saturday night, the 5th day of March, 1910. W. S. Berry went to his store Monday morning, March 7th, by 8:30, and found that it had been entered, and that a few articles were lying on the counter and floor. They had been taken from the showcase and the shelves. The money drawer had been tampered with. He left a pistol in the drawer on Saturday night which belonged to the defendant, and was pawned by him to secure a loan of $2. The pistol was the only thing that was taken from the store. He telephoned to Mr. J. W. Shores, and requested him to bring his bloodhound with him to the store, so that they could trail the thief. Shores came with the bloodhound. The dog scented several articles, and started the trail just as he scented the money drawer. He left the store and ran down the track of the railroad to a public crossing, and then down the public road for some distance, and thence across a field to the house of a widow, where Berry and Shores saw the defendant and the woman standing in the door. The dog did not recognize the defendant, although he stood near him. Several other persons had stayed in the house the night before with the defendant. The defendant lived about a mile from the house, at his father's home. There were no tracks around the store, and, as stated by the prosecuting witness, there was "nothing to identify the defendant as the person who had entered the house." The tracks of several persons were found on the public road near the railroad crossing, some of which seemed to correspond with the shoes worn by the defendant, though afterwards a comparison was made, and it was found that, while the track was made by a blunt-toed shoe, the defendant did not wear such a shoe. There were no tracks for the dog to follow. The only tracks found were those near the crossing.

The owner of the hound testified that he was a young dog, and had been on but three trails, the results of which were not stated. He further testified that he was not regularly in the business of training bloodhounds and trailing criminals, but was by trade a painter. The dog was a bloodhound of good strain. The defendant's counsel requested the court to charge the jury that there was no evidence of the defendant's guilt, which the court refused to do, and charged the jury that they must consider all the circumstances, and, while they could not convict upon the evidence alone as to the actions or conduct of the dog, if they found beyond a reasonable doubt from all of the evidence that the defendant was guilty, they should return a verdict accordingly, and, if not, they should return a verdict of not guilty. The defendant excepted. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and, judgment being rendered thereon, the defendant appealed.

Thos. J. Markham and W. L. Cohoon, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett, for the State.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). We think the court should have given the instruction requested by the defendant. We have decided in several cases that the action and conduct of a bloodhound in trailing a person from the place where a crime has been committed is competent evidence under certain circumstances. The conditions which must exist in order to render such evidence competent are stated in the case of Pedigo v. Commonwealth, 103 Ky. 41, 44 S. W. 143, 42 L. R. A. 432, 82 Am. St. Rep. 566. It is there said: "That in order to make such testimony (the trailing of a track by a dog) competent, even where it is shown that the dog is of pure blood, and of a stock characterized by acuteness of scent and power of discrimination, it must also be established that the dog in question is possessed of these qualities, and has been trained or tested in their exercise in the tracking of human beings, and that these facts must appear from the testimony of some person who has personal knowledge thereof. We think it must also appear that the dog so trained and tested was laid on the trail, whether visible or not, concerning which testimony has been admitted at a point where the circumstances tend clearly to show that the guilty party has been, or upon a track which such circumstances indicated to have been made by him. When so indicated, testimony as to trailing by the bloodhound may be permitted to go to the jury for what it is worth, as one of the circumstances which may tend to connect the defendant with the crime of which he is accused. When not so indicated, the trial court should exclude the entire testimony in that regard from the jury." This court in the case of State v. Moore, 129 N. C. 494, 39 S. E. 626, 55 L. R. A. 96, adopted the rule of evidence as stated in that case, and, when applying it to the facts of the Moore Case, said: "In this case there is no evidence to connect the circumstance of the baying of the two defendants, or either of them, with the making of the tracks at the time the larceny was committed; nor is there any evidence that the dog scented any that were then made by either of the defendants; nor is there any way to ascertain that fact. The evidence admitted failing to become a circumstance to connect the defendants with the crime, and, failing to become a circumstance in corroboration of Rountree's testimony, there was error in admitting it." Evidence as to the conduct of the bloodhound in pursuing the track of a human being was admitted in the case of State v. Hunter, 143 N. C. 607, 56 S. E. 547, 118 Am. St. Rep. 830, and State v. Freeman, 146 N. C. 615, 60 S. E. 986, but it will be found on an examination of those two cases that there were facts and circumstances which made the evidence reliable and therefore competent. Where such facts and circumstances do not exist, as in our case, the evidence is conjectural in its nature, and barely raises a well-grounded suspicion as to the guilt of the party. In this case there were no tracks at the store, and, as stated by the prosecutor in his testimony, there was nothing about the premises which tended to connect the prisoner with the commission of the crime. There were no tracks between the store and the railroad crossing, and there were none in the field between the public road and the house where the defendant was found. How can it be said, with any degree of certainty, that he committed the offense? It is true that the pistol was missing from the money drawer, but it was not found in the possession of the defendant, and the mere fact that he owned the pistol was not evidence of his guilt, as any other person who may have entered the store could have taken it as well as he. While the dog ran from the store to the house where the defendant was found, it is stated in the case that he did not "recognize" the defendant, nor did he give any indication by his conduct, which is usual in such cases, that the defendant was the man whose trail he had been pursuing. The rule is that if there be no evidence, or if it be so slight as not reasonably to warrant an inference of the fact in issue, or if it furnish no more than material for mere conjecture, the court will not submit the issue to the jury. Brown v. Kinsey, 81 N. C. 245. In State v. Vinson, 63 N. C. 335, it was held that evidence which "merely shows it possible for the fact in issue to be as alleged, or which raises a mere conjecture that it is so, is an insufficient foundation for a verdict and should not be left to the jury." So in Byrd v. Southern Express Company, 139 N. C. 273, 51 S. E. 851, it was said: "It all comes to this, that there must be legal evidence of the fact in issue and not merely such as raises a suspicion or conjecture in regard to it. The plaintiff must do more than show the possible liability of the defendant for the injury. He must go further and offer, at least, some evidence which reasonably tends to prove every fact essential to his success." There is nothing in this case to indicate that the defendant committed the crime of breaking and entering the storehouse, except the conduct of the dog, and what he did is so uncertain and unreliable in its character as to be insufficient of itself to legally establish the defendant's guilt. It was not shown that the defendant was at the store on Saturday night, or that his tracks were seen at or near the store, or that he was in possession of any property which was stolen, or, as we have said, that the dog indicated by his conduct that he was the thief. It is impossible to understand how the dog could have trailed the defendant across the field when it appears that no tracks were found there. A careful analysis and consideration of the evidence convinces us that there was no proof of the defendant's guilt, and he was, therefore, entitled to the instruction which was requested by his counsel.

In his argument before us, the Attorney General, with his usual frankness, stated that the evidence in the case does not "create a just suspicion against the defendant and the jury should have been instructed to return a verdict of not guilty." In this view of the facts, we have concurred with him.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF KANSAS CITY v. GRIFFIN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

TRIAL (§ 234*) — INSTRUCTIONS — ASSUMPTION OF FACT.

Where the testimony of all the officers of a bank conversant with the facts that the bank was an indorsee for value before maturity and a holder in due course of the note sued on was not contradicted, and the maker relied solely on the fraud of the payee in procuring the note, the court properly charged that if the jury believed the evidence, or if they found the facts to be as testified, the verdict should be for the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 535; Dec. Dig. § 234.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Bertie County; Ward, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Kansas City against one Griffin and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Plaintiff's indorsees, and claiming to be holders in due course, sued upon the following instrument: "Windsor, N. C. Dec. 18, 1907. July 1, 1909, after date, for value received, we jointly and severally promise to pay McLaughlin Bros., or order, fifteen hundred dollars, at the Bank of Windsor, N. C., with interest at six per cent per annum, payable annually. [Signed] Griffin Bros."—and 14 others. Upon this note was indorsed a payment of $100, and which said note was indorsed by "McLaughlin Bros." There was allegation with evidence on part of defendants tending to show that the note was procured from defendants by false and fraudulent representations on the part of the payees. In reply, plaintiffs offered evidence on the part of the officers of the bank tending to show that said bank was an indorsee for value and a holder in due course of the instrument sued on. The exception presented, with the attendant facts and relevant evidence, is stated in the case on appeal as follows: "The plaintiff then introduced the depositions of the president, the cashier, and discount teller of the plaintiff bank, who testified as follows: 'That the plaintiff bank is a corporation, doing a banking business in Kansas City, Mo., and that the said bank purchased the note sued on in this action of McLaughlin Bros., the payees of the said note, before its maturity, to wit, in February, 1909, and for value; that the said note was purchased and taken by the plaintiff bank in due course, and the said bank and none of its officers or agents had any knowledge of the said McLaughlin Bros., or any agent of theirs, if any were made, or any equities whatever in favor of the defendants, or any other defenses set up by the defendants in their answer.' They further testified that the plaintiff bank purchased said note in regular course of business, in good faith, without any notice of any defects in its execution or of any equities in favor of the defendants, and that it paid full value for said note, less the usual discount; that on the date of its purchase by plaintiff the amount due on said note was $1,529.02, and that plaintiff paid for same $1,488, which was the full amount due thereon, less the regular discount of 6 per cent., which discount amounted to $41.02; that said McLaughlin Bros. indorsed said note to the plaintiff bank, and the amount of the purchase, to wit, $1,488, was placed to the credit of said McLaughlin Bros. upon the books of the bank, and by them checked out in the regular course of their business; that McLaughlin Bros. are, and have been for several years, regular customers of the bank, and Mr. William McLaughlin, of the firm of McLaughlin Bros., resides in Kansas City. Upon cross-examination the witnesses stated that they knew McLaughlin Bros.; that they were solvent, and had been for many years customers of the bank, but they did not know any one of the makers of the said note, and knew nothing of their financial standing. Here the plaintiff rested. Whereupon the defendant offered evidence tending to show that the agent of McLaughlin Bros. who took the note made the representations to the defendants set out in the answer, and that these representations were false, and they were induced to sign the said note on account of the said representations. Here the defendants' counsel stated that the defendants had no evidence to offer upon the question of plaintiff's being a holder in due course. The court charged the jury, if they should find all the facts to be as testified by the witnesses in this case, they should answer the issue 'Yes.' There was verdict for plaintiff for amount due on note. Judgment on the verdict, and defendants excepted and appealed.

Pruden & Pruden, Gillam & Davenport, and S. B. Shepherd, for appellants. Winston & Matthews, for appellee.

Hoke, J. This case is governed by the decision of the court in Bank v. Fountain, 148 N. C. 590, 62 S. E. 738, and affords a good illustration of the principles declared and approved in that opinion. A new trial was granted in Fountain's Case for the reason that after evidence had been offered tending to show fraud in the procurement of the note and the President of the Bank in reply had testified, in substance, that the bank had purchased the note in due course, and was an endorsee for value before maturity and without notice, the judge below charged the jury, among other things, that the prima facie case of plaintiff, the holder of the note, had been restored by the uncontradicted evidence of the president of the bank that it had acquired the note in the usual course of business before maturity and without notice of any vice in it, thereby erroneously invading the province of the jury by assuming that the evidence of the bank president was true, and should be so accepted by them. After holding that this was reversible error in the trial below, the court in the opinion speaking further to the subject said: "It may be that when fraud is established in procuring the instrument or there has been evidence offered tending to establish it, if the plaintiff, as he is then required to do, should lay before the jury all the evidence available as to the transaction, and it should thereby appear, with no evidence to the contrary and no other fair or reasonable inference permissible, that plaintiff was the purchaser of the instrument in good faith, for value, before maturity and without notice, the court could properly charge the jury if they 'believed the evidence' or if they 'found the facts to be as testified'—a more approved form of expression—they would render a verdict for plaintiff. But there the fraud having been established or having been alleged, and evidence offered to sustain it, the circumstances and bona fides of plaintiff's purchase were the material questions in the controversy, and both the issue and the credibility of the evidence offered tending to establish the position of either party in reference to it was for the jury, and not for the court. State v. Hill, 141 N. C. 771 [53 S. E. 811]; Riley's Case, 113 N. C. 651 [18 S. E. 168]." And in concluding the opinion the court again stated the position as follows: "If, when all the facts attendant upon the transaction are shown, there is no fair or reasonable inference to the contrary permissible, the judge could charge the jury, if they believed the evidence, to find for plaintiff, the burden in such case having been clearly rebutted. But the issue itself and the credibility of material evidence relevant to the inquiry is for the jury, and it constitutes reversible error for the court to decide the question and withdraw its consideration from the jury."

The facts presented bring the present case clearly within the principles stated. All the officers of the bank who were conversant with the matter testified in effect that the bank was an indorsee for value before maturity and holder in due course of the instrument sued on. There was no evidence which contradicted or tended to contradict their testimony, and the judge below properly charged the jury, "if they believed the evidence or if they found the facts to be as testified they would render a verdict for plaintiff." There is no error, and the judgment below is affirmed.

No error.

(153 N. C. 35)

HIGSON et ux. v. NORTH RIVER INS. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 95*)—DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP—JURISDICTION OF STATE COURT.

The jurisdiction of a state court over a cause removable to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship terminates on the timely filing in the state court of a proper petition and bond for removal to the federal court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. §§ 204, 205; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

2. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§§ 86, 89*)—DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP — JURISDICTION OF STATE COURT.

A state court having jurisdiction of a cause removable to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship need not surrender its jurisdiction unless the petition for removal shows on its face a removable cause founded on diverse citizenship, and unless the petition and accompanying bond are filed in the state court within the time required by Acts Cong. March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 1, 24 Stat. 553 and Act Cong. Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 435 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 510).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. §§ 166-172, 189, 195; Dec. Dig. §§ 86, 89.*]

3. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 79*)—APPLICATION — TIME TO FILE.

An application by a defendant to remove a cause from a state court to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship must be made to the state court when the answer is due, though plaintiff does not then move for judgment by default, and the fact that the original summons and complaint were destroyed by fire subsequent to the time for answering does not affect the rights of defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. §§ 141-146; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

4. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 89*)—APPLICATION—FILING—EFFECT.

A filing with the clerk of court of a petition and bond for the removal of a cause to the federal court is not a presentation to the judge in term as required by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. § 189; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

5. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 89*)—APPLICATION—JURISDICTION OF COURT.

A proceeding to remove a cause from a state court to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship must be commenced in the state court, and the filing of a petition in the federal court does not authorize the federal court to order a removal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. § 189; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

6. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 107*)—APPLICATION—WAIVER.

The act of plaintiff's counsel in appearing in the federal court erroneously ordering the removal to it of an action commenced in a state court, and in moving to remand the cause to the state court, does not confer jurisdiction on the federal court, but the motion to remand is a challenge to the jurisdiction of the federal court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

7. JUDGMENT (§ 17*)—DEFAULT.

Where a defendant admits the due service of summons, a judgment by default may be rendered in the absence of a summons substituted in place of the original summons served on defendant and destroyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by W. B. Higson and wife against the North River Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 67 S. E. 509.

No answer has been filed, but on the 23d of April, 1910, defendant filed a petition and bond for removal to the Circuit Court of the United States, which at the hearing before Judge Peebles was urged in bar of the judgment by default. Upon the hearing his honor rendered the following judgment: "This cause coming on to be heard before Hon. R. B. Peebles, judge presiding at the May term of Pitt county superior court, 1910, upon the motion of attorneys for plaintiff for judgment by default and inquiry for want of an answer on the part of defendant, and the same having been argued fully by Messrs. Skinner & Whedbee, attorneys for plaintiff, and it appearing to the court that summons in this action was issued September 11, 1909, and served September 14, 1909, and that thereafter complaint was filed December 9, 1909, and that since the issuance of the summons in this cause there have been civil terms of Pitt county superior court as follows, to wit: December 13, 1909; January 24, 1910; March 21, 1910; and May 2, 1910—and that no answer has been filed to the complaint filed in this cause, and at none of the terms of said court, nor at any other time has the defendant in the above-entitled cause made any motion or obtained any leave of record to file answer, and that the defendant up to the 23d day of April, 1910, never filed any bond or made any motion for the removal of this cause from this court; the May 2d term only held for one day, and the petition was not called to the attention of the court, and the judge announced that he would remain as long as there was anything he could do: It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the plaintiff W. B. Higson is entitled to recover of the defendant in this action on account of the matters and things alleged in the complaint; and it is further ordered that a jury come at a subsequent term of this court to assess the amount of the damages that the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the defendant company by reason of the matters and things alleged in the complaint. And this cause is retained for further orders. R. B. Peebles, Judge Presiding." From the judgment rendered, the defendant appealed.

Moore & Long, Tillett & Guthrie, for appellant. Harry Skinner, for appellees.

BROWN, J. It appears to be settled by both the federal and state courts in numerous decisions based upon petitions to remove causes pending in state courts upon the ground of diverse citizenship that the jurisdiction of a state court over a removable case terminates upon the timely filing therein of a proper petition and bond for its removal to a Circuit Court of the United States. Nat. S. S. Co. v. Tugman, 106 U. S. 118, 1 Sup. Ct. 58, 27 L. Ed. 87; Stone v. State of South Carolina, 117 U. S. 430, 6 Sup. Ct. 799, 29 L. Ed. 962; Winslow v. Collins, 110 N. C. 121, 14 S. E. 512. It is equally well settled that the state court is not bound to surrender its jurisdiction unless the petition shows upon its face a removable cause founded upon diverse citizenship, and unless such petition and an accompanying bond are filed in the state court within the time required by the act of Congress of 1887 and 1888 (Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 1, 24 Stat. 553, and Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 435 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 510]). Railroad v. Daughtry, 138 U. S. 298, 11 Sup. Ct. 306, 34 L. Ed. 9; Stone v. State, 117 U. S. 430, 6 Sup. Ct. 799, 29 L. Ed. 962; Howard v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 944, 29 S. E. 778; Corp. Commission v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 447, 66 S. E. 427; Moon on Rem. § 156. The statute is imperative that the application to remove must be made to the state court when the answer is due, and, although the plaintiff does not then move for judgment by default, it cannot be held that he thereby extends the time for removal. Railroad v. Daughtry, supra; Moon, § 158. Mr. Moon says: "A plaintiff may even stipulate that defendant shall have further time to answer without plaintiff thereby consenting that a petition for removal may be filed after the time limited therefor has expired." Again, the same author says: "The better reason, if not the weight of authority, sustains the theory that the state court in which a suit is pending cannot by an order extending the time for the defendant to answer, or otherwise enlarge the time within which a petition for removal may be filed." In support of the text the author cites a great array of decided cases from the federal courts. Page 446. Referring to this construction of the act, Judge Sanborn says: "It secures uniformity in the practice, prevents delays, and, I think, is in accord with the evident intention of Congress. It was not within any time that a defendant might procure to be given him by the court or his opponent, but within the time fixed by the statute, that Congress intended the petition should be filed." Gold Mining Co. v. Hunter (C. C.) 60 Fed. 305; Howard v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 944, 29 S. E. 778, and cases cited.

The fact that the courthouse of Pitt county was burned on February 24, 1910, when the original summons and complaint in this cause were destroyed, cannot help the defendant. The complaint was filed December 9, 1909. Civil terms of the superior court convened on December 13, 1909, and January 24, 1910. At neither of those terms did the defendant offer to file the petition and bond for removal, but waited until April 23d long after the time for answering had expired. It is true the defendant filed with the clerk of the superior court of Pitt county on January 24, 1910, a copy of a petition and bond for removal of this cause, but it was a copy of a petition addressed to the judge of the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina, and filed in that court, praying the federal judge to order a removal of this cause to that court. This copy was attached to a copy of an order of said judge directing the clerk of the Circuit Court to cause a copy of such petition and his order to be forwarded to the superior court of Pitt county, to the end that said record may be certified to the Circuit Court of the United States. It was not an original petition for removal addressed, as it should be, to the judge of the superior court of Pitt county (as the petition filed April 23d was addressed), but only a copy of a proceeding commenced originally in the Circuit Court of the United States, and delivered to the clerk of the superior court of Pitt county. Nevertheless, treating it as an original petition for the sake of argument, it was not filed within the time required by law nor presented to the superior court in term.

The time for answering according to our statute expired with the term convening December 13, 1909, and a filing with the clerk of a petition and bond for removal is not a presentation to the judge in term as is required. Railway Co. v. Roberts, 141 U. S. 690, 12 Sup. Ct. 123, 35 L. Ed. 905; Howard v. Railroad, supra; Shedd v. Fuller (C. C.) 36 Fed. 609; Roberts v. Railway Co. (C. C.) 45 Fed. 433. It is further contended that the order of the district judge had the effect to remove the cause into the Circuit Court of the United States, and to oust the jurisdiction of the state court. We cannot concede this, and with entire respect for the learned judge must hold that his order cannot have the effect to terminate the jurisdiction of the state court. If the removal proceeding were founded in the local prejudice act of Congress, we should willingly concede that his order lawfully transferred the cause to the Circuit Court. But where the ground of removal is solely that of diverse citizenship, as we understand the law, the Circuit Court has no authority to order a transfer of the cause, especially when at the time no petition and bond has been presented to the state court, as was the case here. The right of removal for diverse citizenship is purely statutory, and, before the jurisdiction of the state court can be disturbed, it must appear affirmatively that a proper petition and bond has been in due time presented to the state court, when as said by Chief Justice Waite, in Stone v. South Carolina, 117 U. S. 430, 6 Sup. Ct. 799, 29 L. Ed. 982: "The state court is at liberty to determine for itself whether on the face of the record a removal had been effected." The learned Chief Justice then proceeds to say: "If it decides against removal and proceeds with the cause, notwithstanding the petition, its ruling on that question will be reviewable here after final judgment under section 709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 575)—citing several cases. If the state court proceeds after a petition for removal, it does so at the risk of having its final judgment reversed, if the record on its face shows that when the petition was filed that court ought to have given up its jurisdiction." The act of Congress does not confer upon the lower federal courts the power to order removal of causes on account of diverse citizenship, as it does in the local prejudice act, but the removal proceeding must commence in the state court by filing the petition and bond there. At the time Judge Connor's order was made, January 10, 1910, no petition or bond had ever been filed in the superior court of Pitt county, either presented to the judge, or filed with the clerk, and that court had not been asked to surrender its jurisdiction.

We fail to find any authority, state or federal, which sustains the action of the Circuit Court under such circumstances, and its order cannot have the effect to oust the jurisdiction of the superior court of Pitt county. "A state court is not ousted of its jurisdiction of a case by unauthorized proceedings taken for removal of the same case to a federal court." Johnson v. Wells Fargo Co. (C. C.) 91 Fed. 1; Tavis v. Pallentine Insurance Co. (C. C.) 149 Fed. 560. It is contended that the plaintiff's counsel appeared in the Circuit Court and moved to remand to the state court, and that such action is a recognition of the Circuit Court's jurisdiction and power to make the original order. We are unable to see how any action of plaintiff's counsel can confer on a court a jurisdiction not conferred by law, but we would regard a motion to remand as rather in the nature of a challenge to the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court to make the order of removal rather than a submission to or recognition of it. The motion was doubtless made to prevent an unseemly conflict between the state and federal courts. Had the defendant pursued the usual and orderly procedure, the petition and bond would have been presented to the superior court in term, and, if the judge determined that on the face of the record a removal had not been effected, the defendant could have appealed to this court, and, if necessary, had its judgment reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and thus preserved its right to answer until the right of removal had been finally adjudicated. On the contrary, the defendant chose to commence his removal proceedings originally in the Circuit Court and declined to file its answer to the complaint in the state court. There was nothing left for the state court to do but grant the plaintiff's motion for judgment by default and inquiry.

The point is made that a judgment by default cannot be lawfully rendered in the absence of a summons substituted in place of the original served on defendant September 14, 1909, and destroyed by fire. This is not necessary as the defendant admits, when it filed its petition for removal on April 23d, that it had been made a party defendant to this action. This is not only admitted by the act of filing itself, but it is expressly stated in the petition that the summons has been duly served on defendant. Nevertheless the substituted summons has been filed in the record by leave of this court since the argument.

The cause is remanded to the superior court of Pitt county with instructions to execute the inquiry, and otherwise proceed as the law directs.

Affirmed.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). The great bulk of court business under our system of government is necessarily in the state courts. The federal courts have a restricted jurisdiction which is limited to matters marked out by the United States Constitution. So true is this that in all actions in a federal court it is presumed that the court is without jurisdiction until the contrary affirmatively appears. Robertson v. Cease, 97 U. S. 646, 24 L. Ed. 1057; 11 Cyc. 855. In those instances of concurring jurisdiction in which notwithstanding a state court has first taken jurisdiction the federal judiciary act permits a removal into the federal, such removal is permissible only when the motion is made in apt time, and in all respects complies with the requirements of the act of Congress. Whether it does so comply is a matter of which the state court is competent to judge, as well as the United States Court; the federal Supreme Court being the final arbiter. Stone v. South Carolina, 117 U. S. 430, 6 Sup. Ct. 799, 29 L. Ed. 962.

A writ of error lies from a state Supreme Court to the United States Supreme Court though even this was strenuously denied in the early history of the court. But there is no superiority or inferiority between the state superior court and the federal District and Circuit Courts. They are co-ordinate courts, just as the state superior courts are between themselves. The right to remove cases from the state court to the federal court argues no superiority in the latter over the former, but only indicates that, in the purview of the federal Constitution and laws, the nature of the case is such that the defendant is entitled to have it tried in the federal court, but only when the defendant has made his motion within the time and in the manner prescribed by the statute. It is not inappropriate to say this much, as the learned counsel for the defendant, in his argument here, spoke of the writ going "down" from the federal Circuit Court to the state superior court. "Words" said the great orator Mirabeau, "are things," and in matters touching the jurisdiction of courts there should be entire accuracy of thought and speech. The jurisdiction of the federal courts below the Supreme Court, as well as their existence, is entirely statutory, created originally by the judiciary act of 1789 and modified by statutes since, and subject to further modifications, but not to exceed the limits marked out by the United States Constitution. U. S. v. Railroad, 98 U. S. 569, 25 L. Ed. 143. The United States Supreme Court alone is not a legislative creation, and therefore it cannot be abolished by act of Congress (as has been the case with Circuit and District Courts), but even that high court is dependent upon Congress for the exercise of its jurisdiction, which as prescribed by Const. U. S. art. 3, § 2, cl. 2, is "with such exceptions, and under such regulations, as the Congress shall make." The federal courts therefore have no inherent jurisdiction, and their limited jurisdiction extends only to the cases, and can be exercised only in the instances marked out by the statute.

In re EVERETT'S WILL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. WILLS (§ 163*)—PROBATE—UNDUE INFLUENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a will was executed through the intervention of a person occupying a fiduciary relation to testator, whereby such person was made executor and a large beneficiary, there was a suspicion of undue influence, and such person had the burden of removing the suspicion by proving that the will was the voluntary act of testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 390-395; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

2. WILLS (§ 163*)—PROBATE—UNDUE INFLUENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a feeble or dying person was brought under a strong and exclusive influence to make an unfair will, the burden of proving good faith was on those setting up the will, and claiming its benefits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 398; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

3. WILLS (§ 166*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

The undue influence invalidating a will may be proved by a number of facts, each one of which standing alone may be of little weight, but, taken collectively, may satisfy a rational mind of its existence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 421-437; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

4. WILLS (§ 166*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to justify a finding that a will was procured by undue influence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Washington County; Ferguson, Judge.

Proceedings for the probate of the will of Amelia Everett, deceased, instituted by the executor of the will and legatees, in which Harry Wheelock appeared as caveator. From a judgment denying probate, propounders appeal. Affirmed.

This is an issue of devisavit vel non tried at January special term, 1910. The propounders of the will are Addison Everett, the brother of testatrix, the executor to the will, and certain other legatees. The caveator is Harry Wheelock, the only son of testatrix. This issue was submitted: "Is the paper writing propounded and every part thereof the last will and testament of Amelia Everett? Answer: No." From the judgment rendered, the propounders appeal. The facts are fully stated in the opinion of the court.

A. O. Gaylord and S. B. Spruill, for propounders. Ward & Grimes and Wm. M. Bond, for caveator.

BROWN, J. The only assignment of error presented here is the refusal of the judge to charge the jury that there is no sufficient evidence of undue influence.

The testimony tends strongly to prove that Addison Everett, the executor, was the business adviser of his sister, the testatrix; that a few days before her death, at a time when she was very sick in bed, he procured from her a check for about $900, all the money she had in bank; that Addison stated he was getting the money for testatrix's mother, but, in fact, he gave it to his own daughter, who afterwards left for New York and has not returned. Said daughter was in the room when the will was signed, and had the will when the witness entered the room. When Addison went in the room with the witnesses he said: "Here are parties to witness will." All the witnesses agreed that from the time the parties entered the room up to the time they left the sick woman did not speak a word to anybody about the will or anything else; she being in bed in desperate condition at the time. Addison was appointed executor. He got a large part of the dead woman's property. His wife, his daughters, and his brother got all the balance of her property, except $10, which by the terms of the will were given to her son. It appears that when the son sent some squirrels to his mother, who was sick, when Addison saw the son, he offered to pay him for the squirrels. It appears that the daughter of Addison offered to pay the sick woman's son for something he had sent her to drink. It appears from the testimony that the only person from whom the sick woman had been in the habit of getting advice about her business affairs was Addison Everett. She was sick in Addison's house at the time referred to. It further appears that Addison, when the witnesses went in the room, after saying "Here are the witnesses to sign the paper," himself got the pen for D. Lee, one of the witnesses, to sign. It further appears that, after the woman was dead, Addison refused to let her son go in the room to see her body until one of his daughters was there to go in with him, and that Addison himself took sole charge of the funeral arrangements; that he has always been against the caveator, to use the language of Wheelock, and that in arranging for the funeral he put himself and family to follow the corpse, then allowing a lot of people who were not related in any way to the dead woman to come immediately behind his family, and that the caveator, the only son of the dead woman, was assigned to a place at the back end of the procession; that after said will had been offered for probate before the clerk Addison remarked to said son that his mother had given him more than she ought to have given him. It appears from Wheelock's testimony that Addison, his wife, and daughter would give him no opportunity at any time to talk to his mother without one or more of them being in the room with her; that he and his mother were friendly, and he went to see her each day. It appears that the will was written by one Johnson, who says the deceased never spoke to him about it; that he wrote it at the instance of an attorney, in the attorney's office, testatrix not being present, and said attorney was in the courtroom during the entire trial, and propounder did not put him on the stand as a witness; that the woman for years before her death had been friendly with her son, and had said she intended to properly provide for him. Under the will the executor, Addison Everett, and his daughters get practically the testatrix's entire estate.

Experience has shown that direct proof of undue or fraudulent influence is rarely attainable, but inference from circumstances must determine it. Therefore it seems to be generally held that when a will is executed through the intervention of a person occupying a confidential relation towards the testatrix, whereby such person is the executor and a large beneficiary under the will, such circumstances create a strong suspicion that an undue or fraudulent influence has been exerted, and then the law casts upon him the burden of removing the suspicion by offering proof showing that the will was the free and voluntary act of the testator. Pritchard on Wills, § 133, and cases cited; Watterson v. Watterson, 1 Head (Tenn.) 1; Gardner on Wills; Maxwell v. Hill, 89 Tenn. 584, 15 S. W. 253; section 62, Schouler; section 240. In such condition of the proof, as said by Gardner, "the proponent must then go on with the evidence, and cause the scales to at least balance." Wills, § 62; Coghill v. Kennedy, 119 Ala. 641, 24 South. 459.

The decided cases are numerous wherein some feeble, decrepit, or dying person appears, as in this instance, to have been brought under a strong and exclusive influence to make an unfair will such as the testator was not likely to have made at his own instance. Then combined circumstances, less suspicious than those in evidence here, become of great consequence, and easily shift the burden of proof of bona fides upon those who set up the instrument and claim its benefits. Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357; Harvey v. Sullens, 46 Mo. 147, 2 Am. Rep. 491; Ray v. Ray, 98 N. C. 566, 4 S. E. 526; Schouler, § 240, and cases cited. By the Roman law qui se scripsit hæredem could take no benefit under the will. While such is not the rule of the common law, yet that law requires proof which must free the paper from suspicion. It was long ago laid down by Sir John Nichol in Parke v. Ollatt, 2 Phillim, 323, and approved by Baron Parke in Barry v. Butlin, 12 Eng. Reports, that, where a party prepares or procures the execution of a will under which he takes a benefit, that of itself is a circumstance that ought generally to excite suspicion and calls upon the court to be vigilant in examining the evidence in support of the instrument, in favor of which it ought not to pronounce unless the suspicion is removed, and it is satisfied that the paper propounded does express the true will of the deceased. General evidence of power over a testator, especially of weak mind, or suffering from age and bodily infirmity, though not to such an extent as to destroy testamentary capacity, has been held in this country to be enough to raise a presumption that ought to be met and overcome before a will is allowed to be established. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 403, 53 Atl. 253; Miller v. Miller, 187 Pa. 572, 41 Atl. 277; Boyd v. Boyd, 66 Pa. 283. In this last case, referring to above rule, the court says: "Particularly ought this to be the rule when the party benefited stands in a confidential relation with the testator." Judge Redfield says: "Where the party to be benefited by the will has a controlling agency in procuring its execution, it is universally regarded as a very suspicious circumstance and one requiring the fullest explanation." Wills, 515. This text has been adopted and approved generally by the courts of this country. 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. 488; Gardner on Wills, p. 189. Prof. Wigmore says: "Where the grantee or other beneficiary of a deed or will is a person who has maintained intimate relations with the grantor or testator, or has drafted, or advised the terms of the instrument, a presumption of undue influence or of fraud on the part of the beneficiary has often been applied." Section 2503, and cases cited in note. The courts of appeals of Virginia declare: "When a will is executed by an old man, differs from his previously expressed intentions and is made in favor of those who stand in relations of confidence or dependence towards him, it raises a violent presumption of undue influence, which should be overcome by satisfactory testimony." Hartman v. Strickler, 82 Va. 238; Whitelaw v. Sims, 90 Va. 588, 19 S. E. 113; 1 Jarman, Wills, 71-72. Undue influence is generally proved by a number of facts, each one of which, standing alone, may be of little weight, but taken collectively may satisfy a rational mind of its existence.

From the several facts offered in evidence by the caveator the inference is strong that the will in question was the result of a controlling and improper influence upon the part of the propounders and especially the executor. The making and execution of the paper was surrounded by all the indicia of undue influence. The testatrix was an old and feeble woman in her last illness in the house of propounders. She could not read or write, and had to make her mark. There is no evidence that the paper was explained to her or that she fully understood its contents. The inference is strong that the executor and chief beneficiary had the paper written at a lawyer's office and kept possession of it, and that he was "master of ceremonies" at its execution. He and his daughters take the entire estate except $10, which is the sole legacy to testator's only child, for whom she had only a short time before expressed a purpose to properly provide. Shortly before the execution of the will, the executor had procured from testator a check for her entire bank funds, and given them to his own daughter. The son was carefully excluded from any private conversation or intercourse with his mother, and not permitted to see her except in presence of propounder's wife and daughters. The executor was for years her confidential adviser and business agent as well as brother.

In view of such facts in evidence, under the rulings of many courts, as well as the teachings of text-writers, the doctrine of presumptions would be applied, and the burden be cast upon the propounders to rebut a presumption of fraud and undue influence. But it is not necessary that we pass on that question now, as the court below, so far as the record discloses, did not apply the doctrine or place such burden upon the propounders. His honor appears to have submitted the question of undue influence to the consideration of the jury without instruction as to the burden of proof, and to the charge as given no exception seems to have been taken.

No error.

POWELL BROS. v. McMULLAN LUMBER CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§§ 16, 24*)—ORGANIZATION—REQUISITES—ISSUANCE OF STOCK—BY-LAWS.

Where incorporators complied with the requirements of the law as to the form of the articles, and, after execution, caused them to be properly recorded as required by Code, §§ 678, 679, they thereby became a corporation, though no stock was ever issued or by-laws adopted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 23, 24, 27, 48-69; Dec. Dig. §§ 16, 24.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 94*)—STOCKHOLDERS—ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATE.

Subscribing or registry of a stockholder's name on the stock book opposite the number of shares for which he has subscribed confers title thereto, and makes him a stockholder without the issuance of certificates.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 435; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 309*)—DIRECTORS—LOANING MONEY TO CORPORATION.

A director of a going solvent corporation may aid it with loans of money and take security therefor, notwithstanding the rule that a director of an insolvent corporation who is also a creditor cannot take advantage of the information he has obtained of the corporation's affairs to protect himself to the injury of other creditors, or secure an advantage over them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1366-1373; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 309*)—TRUST DEED TO DIRECTORS—VALIDITY—STATUTES.

Where a corporation was not insolvent at the time it executed a trust deed to two of its directors of substantially all its property to secure indebtedness to them, partly pre-existent and partly for a present consideration of nearly equal amount, and all its other creditors existing at the time were paid, with one exception, holding a small claim and he was not complaining, the conveyance was not invalid because no schedule of the preferred debts was filed under oath by the corporation and no inventory was filed by the trustee as required by Revisal 1905, §§ 967, 968; such sections being limited to conveyances by insolvents to secure pre-existing debts in preference to other existing creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1366-1373; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 538*)—INSOLVENCY—TRUST DEED.

The mere giving of a trust deed by a corporation of substantially all its property to secure past and present indebtedness in nearly equal amounts, the corporation having subsequently paid nearly all of its then existing indebtedness, did not establish a prima facie case of insolvency in favor of subsequent creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2151; Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Chowan County; Ferguson, Judge.

Suit by Powell Bros. against the McMullan Lumber Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action tried at Spring term, 1910. The plaintiffs, as partners, sued the McMullan Lumber Company, a corporation, M. H. White, E. V. Perry, and White & White Company, corporation. The facts alleged are substantially as follows: In August, 1905, the McMullan Lumber Company was chartered under the general corporation law of the state, with three stockholders, S. W. McMullan, subscriber for 97 shares of the capital stock, E. V. Perry for 2 shares, and M. H. White for 1 share. There were no other stockholders. On September 16, 1905, the stockholders met and elected three directors—White, Perry, and McMullan. McMullan was elected president and he was also elected general manager. Perry was elected secretary and treasurer. In November, 1905, the directors met, being also all the stockholders, to consider the affairs of the corporation. It was then indebted for cash advanced to White and Perry in sums aggregating $3,475. The corporation bought and took deed from Perry for real estate necessary for its business to the value of $2,500, and White and Perry advanced then the further sum of $125, making a total indebtedness to them of $3,600—$3,000 to each. The corporation duly authorized the execution of two notes to be executed of $3,000, $3,000 to each, and to secure their payment authorized a mortgage to be executed on substantially all its property—real estate, buildings, and machinery. The approximate value of this property was $12,500. The corporation owed other debts than to White and Perry, but all of these have been paid except a debt of $40, and were paid before this suit was brought. The holder of this small debt seems, according to the record, to manifest no concern about it. A deed of trust, instead of a mortgage.

securing the two, was duly executed and promptly recorded. Some six months thereafter the plaintiffs, being lumbermen, began to deal with the corporation, selling it lumber and taking its notes and acceptances, so the aggregate amount, as established by the verdict, of $1,510. After the meeting in November, 1905, there was no other meeting of the directors or stockholders, the business having been left to the sole management of McMullan, the president and general manager, who was regarded as a competent and reliable business man. No certificates of stock were issued, and no by-laws were adopted. In December, 1906, there was a sale by the trustee, named in the deed of trust, pursuant to its terms, to satisfy the two notes secured therein, both of them at that time being owned by White. White purchased for the amount of the two notes, $8,000 and subject to taxes $126, and a prior lien in favor of the American Wood-working Company, for the sum of $1,336. White subsequently sold to the White & White Company for $7,500. Upon the foregoing facts and the further fact that White said to McMullan before the sale by the trustee that he, White, would buy the property at the sale if it did not bring more than his debt, and that he and McMullan would then run the business, the plaintiffs contended that the mortgage or deed of trust to secure the notes to White and Perry was void because (1) made to secure largely pre-existing debts and covering substantially all the property of the corporation, and the requirements of section 967, Revisal 1905, were not observed by the assignor; (2) made by the corporation to two directors, necessarily by their own votes, and that the deed was fraudulent, as the evidence sustaining the above facts tended to prove. At the conclusion of the evidence of the plaintiff, the defendants White, Perry, and White & White Company moved for judgment as of nonsuit. The motion was allowed, and plaintiff appealed. Judgment was rendered against the McMullan Lumber Company for the debt and interest and costs, and of nonsuit against the plaintiffs in favor of the other defendants.

W. M. Bond and W. M. Bond, Jr., for appellant. Pruden & Pruden, Chas. Whedbee, J. C. B. Ehringhaus, and E. F. Aydlott, for appellees.

MANNING, J. The contention that the McMullan Lumber Company was not a corporation is settled by the decision of this court in Benbow v. Cook, 115 N. C. 324, 20 S. E. 453, 44 Am. St. Rep. 454, where it is said: "Having complied with the requirements as to the form of the articles of agreement and caused the proper record to be made, the three persons named as sole corporators become a body politic for the purposes set forth in the agreement. Code, §§ 678, 679. When corporate powers are granted by a special, instead of a general, act of the Legislature, there must be evidence of acceptance by the corporators and compliance with all the conditions precedent prescribed by law in order to show affirmatively that the corporation is lawfully organized. But in our case every corporator affixed his hand and seal to the articles of agreement recorded, and by such signature and the recording of the instrument became invested with all the powers which it was contemplated by law to confer in such cases. Code, § 679. Private corporations are formed when the necessary contractual relations are created between the persons clothed by law with the powers of a body politic. 1 Morawetz, 24." In addition to the conclusive effect of this authority, the plaintiffs allege in the first paragraph of their complaint "that the McMullan Lumber Company is a corporation, having become such on or about August 25, 1905," and that plaintiffs, beginning in June, 1906, had many dealings with the corporation. The fact that the McMullan Lumber Company was a corporation and its continued existence as such would seem to be placed beyond controversy in this action. The fact that the corporation did not issue certificates of stock did not affect its creation or existence as a corporation. "It is the act of subscribing, or the registry of the stockholder's name upon the stock book of the company opposite the number of shares for which he has subscribed, which gives him his title thereto, and that the certificate neither constitutes his title nor is necessary to it, but only a memorial of it." 10 Cyc. 390; Womack's The Law of Private Corporations, § 267. If certificates are not necessary to membership in a corporation, it would seem certainly clear that they would not be necessary for the existence of the corporation itself, nor does section 1187, Revisal 1905, prescribing the requirements for the formation of a corporation, prescribe that certificates of stock shall be issued. Nor did the failure of the corporation to adopt by-laws destroy or impair its existence as a corporation. In 10 Cyc. 353, Judge Thompson says: "Where the governing statute in express terms confers upon the corporation the power to adopt by-laws, the failure to exercise the power will be ascribed to mere nonaction, which will not render void any acts of the corporation which would otherwise be valid." What the by-laws of a corporation may determine and contain are set forth in section 1146, Revisal 1905. The question most stressed in the brief and oral argument before us is the invalidity of the deed of trust to secure the notes of White and Perry, growing out of their relationship to the corporation; that the larger part of the amount secured was a pre-existing debt; that there were other creditors at that time; that the corporation conveyed in the deed of trust substantially all of its property, and the assignor failed to file the schedule required by section 967, Revisal 1905, and the trustee failed to file the inventory required by section 968, Revisal 1905. The plaintiff's evidence showed that the corporation was not insolvent at the time the deed of trust was executed; that at that date the property of the corporation was worth approximately $12,000; that all its other debts existent at that date except a small debt of $40 had been paid; and nearly half the amount of the notes secured was not a pre-existing debt, but a present consideration of equal value; that the stockholders and directors authorized both the note and the security to be given. These facts clearly distinguish this case from Edwards v. Supply Co., 150 N. C. 171, 63 S. E. 742; Hill v. Lumber Co., 113 N. C. 173, 18 S. E. 107, 21 L. R. A. 560, 37 Am. St. Rep. 621; Electric Light Co. v. Electric Light Co., 116 N. C. 112, 21 S. E. 951; Graham v. Carr, 130 N. C. 274, 41 S. E. 379; Holshouser v. Copper Co., 138 N. C. 251, 50 S. E. 650, 70 L. R. A. 183; Bank v. Cotton Mills, 115 N. C. 507, 20 S. E. 765. That these facts are determinative of the validity of the mortgage or deed of trust is stated with great clearness by Chief Justice Clark in Edwards v. Supply Co., supra: "It would have been otherwise if, at the time the money was authorized to be borrowed, the company had authorized the mortgage to be executed to secure its officers, who agreed to sign the note as indorsers. In such case the money received would have balanced the debt secured, and would have paid off that amount of prior debts to others, or would otherwise have aided the business of the company. Such arrangements are often necessary, and, when bona fide, are valid. Banking Co. v. Lumber Co., 91 Ga. 624 [17 S. E. 968] cited and approved; Hill v. Lumber Co., 113 N. C. 179 [18 S. E. 107], 21 L. R. A. 560, 37 Am. St. Rep. 621." The wholesome and just doctrine which the above cases clearly settle is that the director of an insolvent corporation who is also a creditor cannot take advantage of the information which he has obtained of the affairs of the corporation to protect himself to the injury of the other creditors, or secure an advantage over them; but it has not been decided that the officers of a going, solvent corporation cannot aid it with loans of money and take security therefor. Such a doctrine would destroy corporate growth and seriously impair business activity. It is also insisted by plaintiff that the deed of trust is invalid because, conveying substantially all the property of the corporation and securing only two of its creditors, no schedule of the preferred debts was filed under oath by the corporation, and no inventory filed by the trustee, as required by sections 967, 968, Revisal 1905. These statutes have been considered by this court in the cases of Bank v. Gilmer, 116 N. C. 684, 22 S. E. 2; Id. (on rehearing) 117 N. C. 416, 28 S. E. 833; Gilanton v. Jacobs, 117 N. C.

427, 23 S. E. 335; Cooper v. McKinnon, 122 N. C. 447, 29 S. E. 417; Pearre v. Folb, 123 N. C. 239, 31 S. E. 475; Brown v. Nimocks, 124 N. C. 417, 32 S. E. 743; Taylor v. Lauer, 127 N. C. 157, 37 S. E. 197; Odom v. Clark, 146 N. C. 544, 60 S. E. 513. And it has been held "that, where an insolvent man makes a mortgage of practically all of his property to secure one or more pre-existing debts, such an instrument will be considered an assignment, subject to the regulations of the statutes addressed to that question, and the result will not be changed because some small portion of his property shall have been omitted, or because the instrument may have been drawn in the form of a mortgage having a defeasance clause. In the first of these cases (Bank v. Gilmer, supra) it is held: 'While the act of 1893 (chapter 453) does not prohibit bona fide mortgages to secure one or more pre-existing debts, yet, where a mortgage is made of the entirety of a large estate for a pre-existing debt (omitting only an insignificant remnant of property), the mortgage is, in effect, an assignment for the benefit of creditors secured therein, and is subject to the regulations prescribed in said act of 1893.'"

It seems necessary from these decisions, and essential for the application of the act of 1893 (sections 967, 968, Revisal 1905), that the grantor should be insolvent, and the debts secured should be pre-existent to the mortgage or assignment, and that there should be other existing creditors. If these essential conditions do not concur, then the mortgage or deed of trust could not be regarded as subject to the requirements of the sections of the Revisal above referred to, though the property conveyed may constitute substantially all of the grantor's estate. In the present case the plaintiff's evidence showed, and there was no evidence offered for the defendants, that the corporation was not insolvent; that the debts secured were partly pre-existent, and partly for a present consideration of nearly equal amount; and that, while there were other creditors existing at the time, they were all paid except one whose debt amounted to $40, and this creditor seems to manifest no interest in that small amount. He is wholly inactive. The plaintiffs, however, contend that the fact of the existence at the date of the deed of trust of other debts than the secured debts, though they may have been subsequently paid, and especially the existence of the unpaid $40 debt, enables them to have the deed of trust declared void, and to bring the property therein conveyed within their reach under the doctrine declared by this court in Clement v. Cozart, 112 N. C. 412, 422, 17 S. E. 486, 489. The doctrine of that case is thus stated: "The law is that a voluntary conveyance, where the grantor did not, at the time of the grant, retain property fully sufficient and available for the satisfaction of his then creditors, is fraudulent in law as to existing creditors. And, if such conveyance shall be declared void at the suit of an existing creditor, all creditors, those existing at the execution of the conveyance, and also subsequent creditors, will be entitled to come in and participate in the fund arising from a sale of the property, subject to priorities and to the maxim, 'Vigilantibus non dormientibus leges subveniunt.' In that case the conveyances were impeached, not only because they were voluntary, the grantor not retaining property fully sufficient and available for the satisfaction of his then creditors, but also because the grantor had the actual fraudulent intent to hinder and delay his creditors. The deed of trust in the present case was not a voluntary deed, nor is there any evidence of any actual fraudulent intent and purpose. But if the conveyance under consideration fell under the condemnation of section 967 or section 968, Revisal 1905, as construed by this court in the cases above cited, no more would be needed, for as expressly determined in Cooper v. McKinnon, supra, such a deed would be void and invalid, not only as to creditors, but also inter partes. In that case the court said: "The distinction suggested by the plaintiffs that the assignment may be valid between the parties—that is, the assignor and assignee—and yet void as to creditors, cannot be maintained. This doctrine applies only to cases where the grantee takes the property for his own benefit exclusively, as a mortgage, or grantee in an absolute conveyance. * * * If such a conveyance is in fraud of creditors, either actually or by construction of law, it may be set aside as to them; but, until so set aside, it is valid between the parties. But a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors is essentially different, and, if such a deed becomes void as to creditors, its primary and essential purpose is defeated, and it is totally invalid. * * * In the case at bar, the first deed of assignment being void, the title of the property was still in the assignor, and was by him conveyed to his codefendant, Patterson, by the second deed of assignment, which is admittedly valid if not affected by the prior deed." In the case now at bar, the plaintiff's evidence negatives the insolvency of the lumber company—a fact essential to the application of sections 967, 968, Revisal 1905, unless we hold that the mere giving of a mortgage upon substantially all the mortgagor's property to secure a past and present indebtedness nearly equal in amount raised under the evidence in this case a presumption of insolvency in fact at the date of the deed of trust, or made out such a prima facie case as required it to be submitted to the jury. Upon the evidence presented in this case, we cannot so hold. A different conclusion might be reached upon evidence presenting additional facts. The hardship upon the plaintiffs of losing their debt may be somewhat obviated by an inquiry in a proper proceeding as to the payment of the subscribed capital stock of the corporation. If the subscribers have not paid in full their subscriptions, the unpaid subscriptions constitute assets for the payment of the debts of the corporation.

After a careful examination of the authorities cited by the learned counsel of the plaintiffs, and the exceptions to the rulings of his honor, we find no error and the judgment is affirmed.

GOLDSBORO LUMBER CO. v. HINES BROS. LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21. 1910.)

1. WILLS (§ 630*)—DEVISE—VESTING—CONDITIONS.

In a devise to testator's wife for life for her support and the support of her children, the clause "for her support and the support of her children," was neither a condition precedent nor subsequent to the vesting of the estate, but merely the reason for its devise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1475; Dec. Dig. § 630.*]

2. WILLS (§ 601*)—DEVISE—ESTATE CREATED—PROVISIONS INCONSISTENT WITH FEE.

A devise of timber land to A. and B. in fee, but "if my wife should survive me she shall have her life right to the premises for her support," created a life estate in the wife with a remainder to A. and B., under which the timber could not be cut for sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1340-1350; Dec. Dig. § 601.*]

3. WILLS (§ 614*)—DEVISE—LIFE ESTATE—WHAT CREATES.

The devise of a "life right" creates a "life estate"; so also do the phrases "dower of use," "benefit and profits."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1393-1416; Dec. Dig. § 614.*]

4. LIFE ESTATES (§ 13*)—TIMBER LAND—RIGHT TO SELL TIMBER.

Under a devise of timber land to A. for life to use the profits thereof for her support, remainder to B. and C., the timber could not be cut for sale without the consent of both the life tenant and remainderman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 21, 32; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Jones County; Gulon, Judge.

Action by the Goldsboro Lumber Company against the Hines Brothers Lumber Company. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Loftin, Varser & Dawson and Rouse & Land, for appellant. Warren & Warren and Simmons, Ward & Allen, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The item of the will of Felix E. King (who died in 1885) to be construed is as follows: "I give and bequeath to my granddaughters, Effie A. King and Katie E. King, all of my home tract of land known as the Moses Saunders tract of land, containing 450 acres, more or less, to have and to hold in fee simple forever. And if my present wife should survive me she shall have her life right to and in said premises and lands for her support and for the support of said minor heirs." The defendant has acquired the interest of Effie A. King in the timber on said tract. The plaintiff has acquired the interest of Katie E. King in said timber, and also the interest, if any, of Mary King, the widow of the testator.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The defendant contends that the widow, Mary King, did not acquire any estate or interest in the land, but merely the right to her support out of the said land, and that this is only a charge upon the rents and profits from the land, and that no interest whatever in the timber was conveyed to the plaintiff by her deed; that, therefore, the defendant is entitled to one-half interest in the timber rights on said land under its deed from Effie A. Taylor. In Wellons v. Jordan, 83 N. C. 371, the testator devised certain lands to his grandson, he to take care of his father and mother during their lives, and to hold the aforesaid property his lifetime, and if he should take care of his parents, etc., and have issue, said property to be theirs in fee at his death; but, if he should die without issue, then it was to descend to the testator's daughters in fee. Held, (1) that a due support of the parents of the devisee was not a condition precedent to the vesting of the remainder in fee in his issue; (2) that, even if such were a proper construction of the will, only the heirs of the testator could take advantage of the breach of the condition. The court said (page 375 of 83 N. C.): "At most, it would be a charge on the estate, a personal obligation on the devisee, as was held in Taylor v. Lanier, 7 N. C. 98." In McNeely v. McNeely, 82 N. C. 183, there was a devise to a son "by him seeing to her," his mother, and it was contended that these words fettered and controlled the estate devised. The court says: "In the will now under consideration the words which give rise to the controversy, 'by him seeing to her,' are in themselves vague and indeterminate, and if an essential and defeating condition of the gift, would be very difficult of application. What is meant by seeing to the widow, and what neglect falls short of that duty? How much of personal care and attention in the son to the mother is requisite, and how is the dividing line to be run between such omissions as are, and such as are not, fatal to the devise?" In the case at bar the above reasoning applies with greater force. Here the widow, Mary E. King, takes a life right or estate in the land in controversy "for her support and the support of said minor heirs," presumably referring to the devisees, Effie A. King and Katie E. King, both of whom attained their majority years ago. The widow took a life estate, and during the minority of the minor heirs there was "at most a personal obligation" on the devisee Mary E. King, "present wife" referred to in the will under consideration. The words "for her support and the support of the minor heirs" do not constitute a condition precedent to the vesting of the life right or estate in Mary E. King, or a condition subsequent by which the estate could be defeated, but were intended by the testator as his reason for the devise, and, as said before, could at the most impose a personal obligation upon the devisee Mary E. King to support the devisees Effie A. King and Katie E. King during their minority. The devisees Effie A. King and Katie E. King have the remainder of the estate after the determination of the life estate.

The "life right" is synonymous with "life estate." Dower of use, benefit, and profits passes a life estate. Perry v. Hackney, 142 N. C. 368, 55 S. E. 289, 115 Am. St. Rep. 741. The devise to the widow was in lieu of dower, and might be styled "testamentary dower." Her interest in the land is an estate for life. This case is clearly distinguishable from Whitaker v. Jenkins, 138 N. C. 480, 51 S. E. 104, where Walker, J., says: "The provision is that the lands shall belong to her during her life, or until the sons shall be of full age, at which time it shall belong to them, his wife to have her maintenance out of the land if she survived that event. The intention of the deviser is most clearly expressed. We cannot infer that he intended his wife to have an estate, or even an interest in the land, when he had expressly said that it should belong to his sons, and that she should only have a maintenance." The widow, a life tenant, had no power to cut the timber for sale or to sell any right to do so, but neither could the tenants in reversion or remainder do so. As, however, they wish to receive the value of their interest in the timber at this time in anticipation, this could only be done by the concurrence of the life tenant. It is set out in the case agreed that the value of the life estate, if the widow is entitled to any, is $1,361.40.

The judgment of the court below is in accordance with these views, and is affirmed.

LORICK & LOWRANCE, Inc., v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 26, 1910.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 82*)—RIGHT OF WAY—ABANDONMENT—NONUSER.

Abandonment by a railroad of a right of way may not be inferred from mere nonuser for 20 years, unless the circumstances indicate an intention not to make any further use thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 213-219; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 324*)—RIGHT OF WAY—ABANDONMENT—NONUSER.

Civ. Code 1902, § 2194, providing that a right of way shall vest in the corporation so long as the same may be used for the purposes of the railroad and no longer, prohibits a railroad company on pain of forfeiture from using for private gain land which it acquired under the right of eminent domain for a public use, but, to destroy the right, there must be either a use separate or distinct from railroad purposes or nonuser for railroad purposes, under circumstances indicating an intention to abandon the right of way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 857, 858; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by Lorick & Lowrance, Inc., against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lyles & Lyles, for appellant. Thomas & Lumpkin, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff being the owner of a square of land in the city of Columbia containing four acres, bounded by Rice, Bull, Marion, and Tobacco streets, brought this action to enjoin the Southern Railway Company from using an old right of way across the land on the ground that the right to the easement had been abandoned and lost by nonuser. The issue submitted to the jury was "whether at the time of the commencement of this action the Southern Railway Company was entitled to a right of way over the four acres of land described in the complaint along the line of the old Charlotte & South Carolina Railway track, and, if so, of what width." The evidence showed beyond dispute that the Charlotte & South Carolina Railway Company owned a right of way over the land 130 feet wide acquired in 1850, and that the defendant is successor to the right and title of the Charlotte & South Carolina Railway Company. There was evidence tending to show that, owing to change in track arrangement, the right of way over this lot of land had not been used for 20 years; but there was no evidence of adverse use by any owner of the servient estate of land embraced in the right of way for the statutory period of 10 years. The verdict on the issue submitted was in favor of the defendant. The circuit judge by his decree approved this finding, and, in refusing the injunction and dismissing the complaint, adjudged the Southern Railway Company to be entitled to a right of way over the land 120 feet in width.

The exceptions assign error in the instructions to the jury on the issue whether the right of way had been abandoned by the railroad company. The charge, in substance, was that abandonment of the right of way could not be inferred from mere nonuser for 20 years, unless the circumstances indicated an intention not to make any further use of the easement. This instruction was in accordance with the law thus laid down in Polson v. Ingram, 22 S. C. 541: "It will be observed that the question of abandonment is a very different question from having the easement defeated and divested by the adverse use of another. This last question is to be determined by the character of the adverse use and how long continued, while the former depends upon the intention of the party in possession, without regard to the claims of others. Such being the law, it would have been error for the judge to have charged, as a direct and positive proposition, 'that 20 years' nonuser will presume the abandonment of an easement.'" The rule thus stated is one of general recognition except when altered by statute. 33 Cyc. 221; Orr v. O'Brien, 77 Iowa, 253, 42 N. W. 183, 14 Am. St. Rep. 282, and note; Trimble v. King, 131 Ky. 1, 114 S. W. 317, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881, and note.

The plaintiff insists, however, that the charter statute under which the Charlotte & South Carolina Railway Company acquired this right of way alters the rule, in that it enacts with respect to the right of way, "The said company shall have good right and title thereto and shall have hold and enjoy the same as long as the same may be used only for the purposes of the said road and no longer," etc. The same provision is found in section 2194 of the Civil Code of 1902, relating to rights of way acquired under the general condemnation statute. The design and meaning of these enactments is that the railroad company should be prohibited on pain of forfeiture from using for private gain land which it was permitted to acquire under the state's right of eminent domain for a use in which the public is concerned. The statutes cannot be tortured into meaning so unreasonable a thing as that any temporary nonuser of the right of way without purpose of abandonment shall destroy the easement. To destroy the right under these statutes, there must be shown either a use separate and distinct from railroad purposes or nonuse for railroad purposes under such circumstances as to indicate an intention to abandon the right of way. Southern Railway v. Beaudrot, 63 S. C. 286, 41 S. E. 299.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

COX v. HARDEE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1910.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 327*)—DISMISSAL—SEPARATE DEMURRERS AND EXCEPTIONS.

Suit was brought by a receiver of a corporation against stockholders thereof to recover against each the amount alleged to be still due upon his subscription; it appearing from the petition that the debts due by the corporation and which it was unable to pay were more than the sum of the separate amounts alleged to be due by the defendants respectively, so as to necessitate the recovery against each defendant of the whole amount alleged to be due by him. Several of the defendants separately demurred to the petition, each demurrer being overruled; and each of the demurrants separately excepted. Held, that it furnished no ground for a motion to dismiss the several writs of error that each demurrant separately excepted, and did not join the other defendants in the case in his bill of exceptions, or serve them therewith.

(a) In such a case, no question of contribution between the defendants appeared from the face of the petition to exist, nor any reason requiring that all of the defendants be made parties to each bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1817; Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 78*)—SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK—VALIDITY.

The fact that it appeared from the petition that another corporation subscribed for a number of shares of stock in the corporation of which the plaintiff is receiver, and that without this subscription the amount of capital stock necessary, under the subscription agreement, to make the subscriptions binding upon the subscribers would not be complete, did not render the other subscriptions invalid.

(a) There was nothing in the petition which even indicated that the subscribing corporation was not authorized by its charter to make the subscription, and, moreover, there was nothing to show that it had not paid for the stock for which it subscribed.

(b) One who subscribed for stock in a proposed corporation, with knowledge that a portion of the capital stock thereof had already been subscribed for by another corporation, was not, when sued for the amount of his subscription, in a position to question the validity of the subscription made by the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 219, 229; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 81*)—SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—LIABILITY OF SUBSCRIBERS.

Certain persons became subscribers to the stock of a proposed corporation by signing a written agreement which provided that its capital stock should be a given sum, that the subscriptions thereto should be payable in four equal installments at designated times, and that they were made upon the express condition that the first installment should not be called for until the entire amount of the capital stock had been subscribed. The capital stock, as provided for in the agreement, was fully subscribed. The corporation was organized and became insolvent, and its assets were placed in the hands of a receiver, who, under authority conferred upon him by the court, brought suit against a number of the subscribers to recover against each the amount alleged to be due upon his subscription: Held that, although a subscriber had paid no part of his subscription, no notice to him that the full amount of the capital stock had been subscribed was necessary in order to render him liable for the amount of his subscription, nor was such notice required before the receiver could lawfully institute suit against him to recover the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 87*)—SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—OVERSUBSCRIPTIONS—VALIDITY.

No provision having been made for an apportionment of the stock among the subscribers in the event of oversubscription, subscriptions made after the full amount thereof had been subscribed were void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 196; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 874*)—EXCEPTIONS.

While a decision overruling a demurrer to a petition may be brought to this court for review, without waiting for the final termination of the case in the court below, when the "judgment complained of, if it had been rendered as claimed by the plaintiff in error, would have been a final disposition of the cause," the plaintiff in error in such a case cannot in his bill of exceptions properly also except to a decision striking his answer or a portion thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3537-3540; Dec. Dig. § 874.*]

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Action by W. P. Hardee, receiver of the Savannah Sand Lime Brick Company, against Charles A. Cox, A. H. Entelman, J. N. Knight, W. E. Norton, and nine other persons. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants named prosecuted separate writs of error. Affirmed as to Cox and Entelman, and reversed as to Knight and Norton.

Jacob Gazan, O'Byrne, Hartridge & Wright, Hitch & Denmark, Osborne & Lawrence, and Edmund H. Abrahams, for plaintiffs in error. Edward S. Elliott, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. W. P. Hardee, as receiver of the Savannah Sand Lime Brick Company, brought an equitable petition against Charles A. Cox, A. H. Entelman, W. E. Norton, J. N. Knight, and nine other persons to recover against each of the defendants, severally and separately, the amount alleged to be due by him as a subscriber to the capital stock of the company. The substance of the petition, after certain amendments thereto were allowed, so far as now material, was as follows: The Savannah Sand Lime Brick Company was duly incorporated by the superior court of Chatham county on July 22, 1905, a copy of the charter being attached to plaintiff's petition and made a part thereof. The incorporators of the company were Charles A. Cox, A. H. Entelman, and other named persons. The minimum amount of the capital stock authorized by the charter was $30,000, each share of stock being of the par value of $100. On or about July 22, 1905, the defendants severally subscribed for various amounts of the capital stock; the amount subscribed for and the sum still due upon the subscription by each defendant being stated. Charles A. Cox and J. N. Knight each subscribed for five shares of the capital stock of the company, and A. H. Entelman for two shares, and neither of these defendants has paid anything upon his subscription. W. E. Norton subscribed for 10 shares for $1,000 and paid only $500. There were also allegations as to the number of shares subscribed for by each of the other defendants, and as to amounts paid by some of them upon their respective subscriptions. The corporation is insolvent, the debts which it is unable to pay amounting to not less than $20,000 or other large sum. It owes the Commercial Bank of Savannah $20,935, and the American Sand Lime Brick Company $3,615.64. On November 24, 1908, petitioner, as receiver, was directed to collect any amount that might be due to the company, and to bring suit therefor if necessary; a copy of the order of the court in this respect being attached to the petition. Petitioner has demanded of each of the defendants the sum due by him, and each of them has failed and refused to pay such sum or any part thereof. The company accepted the charter and organized on August 1, 1905. Petitioner is without an adequate remedy at law, and brings this petition to avoid a multiplicity of suits, and in order that complete equity may be done. Attached to the petition and made a part thereof was a copy of the subscription agreement, which was as follows: "We, the undersigned, hereby subscribe our names as members and shareholders of the Savannah Sand Lime Brick Company, with a capital stock of $30,000, divided into shares of $100 each, setting opposite our respective names the number of shares to be taken and paid for by each subscriber thereto, the same to be paid as follows: 25 per cent. on signing the contract, after charter has been obtained about July 15, 1905; 25 per cent. on August 1, 1905; 25 per cent. on October 1, 1905; and 25 per cent. on December 1, 1905. This subscription is made on the following express conditions: (1) That the first installment of 25 per cent. shall not be called for until the whole of the entire amount of $30,000 shall have been subscribed, and then the remaining installments shall be paid as above specified. (2) That a majority of the stockholders representing a majority of the capital stock of this company shall be satisfied, with all reasonable tests made, with the quality of the brick made by this process, to their entire satisfaction." Then followed the names of the subscribers, with the number of shares subscribed for by each placed opposite his name. It appeared from this copy of the subscription agreement that Charles A. Cox and J. N. Knight each subscribed for 5 shares, W. E. Norton for 10 shares, and A. H. Entelman for 2 shares, and that the "Empire Investment Company" subscribed for 50 shares. It was alleged that the conditions set forth in this agreement were fulfilled as follows: "The sum of $30,000 was subscribed for stock as set forth in said contract on or about the 22d of July, 1905. A majority of the stockholders representing a majority of the capital stock of said company were satisfied with all reasonable tests made on or about September 7, 1905, with the quality of brick made by the process intended by the words 'this process' in said subscription contract, meaning the said sand lime brick process, to their entire satisfaction; the process adopted being the American Sand Lime Brick system."

The prayers were that petitioner have judgment against the several defendants for the amount due by each, with interest, that the corporation be made a party defendant to the suit, that process issue, etc., and for such other and further relief as might be meet and proper in the premises.

Cox demurred to the petition upon various general and special grounds, and, subject to the demurrer, filed his answer. The plaintiff demurred to this answer, and moved to strike it, specially demurring to certain paragraphs thereof. The court overruled the demurrer to the petition, and sustained the plaintiff's demurrer as to certain paragraphs of defendant's answer, and struck these paragraphs. Defendant Cox excepted to the judgment overruling his demurrer to the petition, and in his bill of exceptions also assigns error upon the ruling striking given portions or paragraphs of his answer. In the Supreme Court Cox abandoned his exception to the judgment overruling his demurrer to the petition, except as to the overruling of the grounds of the demurrer numbered 1, 5, and 6, which were as follows:

(1) The petition does not set forth any cause of action against this defendant. "(5) It is nowhere alleged in said petition that the Savannah Sand Lime Brick Company, or any of its officers or agents, notified this defendant, * * * that the amount of $30,000 capital stock had been subscribed, it appearing from said alleged copy of subscription list that the subscriptions were not binding until the said sum of $30,000 had been subscribed. (6) It is not alleged in said petition that any of the conditions of said alleged subscription list were complied with." Defendant Entelman demurred to the petition both generally and specially. His demurrer was also overruled, and he too sued out a bill of exceptions, wherein he complains of this ruling. The only grounds of demurrer which he insists upon in this court are the same as those above set forth from the demurrer of the defendant Cox, other grounds being expressly abandoned. We will state here, however, that it does not appear from the record in the case made by the Entelman bill of exceptions that he demurred upon the ground that the corporation never notified him that the capital stock of $30,000 had been subscribed. Defendants Norton and Knight each separately demurred to the petition upon various grounds, and both of the demurrers were overruled; and each of these defendants sued out a bill of exceptions, complaining of the overruling of his demurrer. Each of them demurred upon the ground that it appeared from the subscription agreement set forth by the petition that the total amount of the capital stock of the corporation, as provided for by the agreement, had been subscribed before he signed such agreement, and therefore his subscription was not binding upon the corporation or himself. In the view which we have taken of this ground of demurrer, it is unnecessary to deal with or to mention any other urged by either of these parties.

1. In each of these four cases, there is a motion to dismiss the writ of error, because the plaintiff in error, who it appears was one of a number of defendants in the trial court, has brought the case to this court by a separate writ of error, and because he has not made the other defendants in the court below parties to the cause in this court. This motion must be overruled. Each of the respective plaintiffs in error separately demurred to the petition in the trial court, his demurrer was overruled, and he thereupon sued out a bill of exceptions wherein he complained of such ruling. So the question here raised is controlled by the decision in Jones v. Hurst, 91 Ga. 338, 17 S. E. 635, where it was held: "Where a petition is filed against several defendants, and a separate demurrer thereto by one or more of them is overruled, the remaining defendants need not be made parties to, or be served with a copy of, a bill of exceptions assigning as error the overruling of the demurrer mentioned." It is contended by counsel for defendant in error that under the right of contribution which exists between subscribers to the capital stock of a corporation, who, upon its insolvency, are, for the purpose of paying the corporate debts, sued for the amounts respectively due by them upon their subscriptions, all those who were defendants in the trial court were by reason of interest in the ruling complained of necessary parties to the cause in this court. It is unnecessary to discuss this contention further than to say that it appears from the allegations of the petition that no question of contribution can arise in the case, as the amount of the indebtedness of the corporation which it cannot pay is far in excess of the aggregate amount of the unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock.

2. It will be seen from the preceding statement of facts that the fifth and sixth grounds of the demurrer of the defendant Cox are simply amplifications of the general grounds that no cause of action against him is stated in the petition, and merely serve to point out alleged defects in the petition upon which this main contention is based. This seems to be the view taken by counsel for the plaintiff in error in his argument and brief in this court, the three grounds being argued together, and the contention being that no cause of action is set forth in the petition, because the subscription agreement which was signed by Cox and others was, as shown by the copy thereof attached to the petition, predicated upon certain conditions which the petition does not show were fulfilled, and that notice to the defendant of the performance of the condition as to the amount of capital stock which should be subscribed, in order to make the subscriptions binding, was necessary before he would be bound by his subscription. The first condition was "that the first installment of 25 per cent. shall not be called for until the whole of the entire amount of $30,000 shall have been subscribed, as above specified." It is contended that the petition shows that this condition was not complied with, because it appears from the subscription list or contract that the "Empire Investment Company" subscribed for 50 shares of the capital stock of the Savannah Sand Lime Brick Company, and that the name "Empire Investment Company" imports a corporation, and a corporation, unless expressly authorized by its charter so to do, has no power to purchase and hold stock in another corporation, and therefore the subscription by the "Empire Investment Company" was invalid and unenforceable; and that as the subscription list shows that, unless the subscription of the Empire Investment Company is included in the computation as to the amount of stock subscribed, less than $30,000 was subscribed, and hence the first subscription condition was not complied with. We think it does appear from the subscription list that the Empire Investment Company is a corporation, as its name tends to indicate this, and the signature of the company purports to have been made "by John F. Tietjen, President, and Allen Sweat, Treasurer." It is also true that the subscriptions other than that of this company aggregate only $29,800, and so fall short of the sum of $30,000 required by the first condition. But, so far as the petition shows, the Empire Investment Company paid the full amount of its subscription. Indeed, the petition rather tends to indicate that it did, for it is not sued by the receiver, who presumably sued all the delinquent subscribers. If it paid for the stock for which it subscribed, or even for two or more shares of the same, the amount necessary to make up the sum of $30,000 would be complete, without counting the unpaid balance, if any, of its subscription. The Empire Investment Company could not itself sue to cancel its agreement to take and pay for this stock, upon the ground that the contract was ultra vires on its part, if the contract had been fully executed. 10 Cyc. 379; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. McKeen, 64 Fed. 36, 12 C. C. A. 14; Peterborough R. Co. v. Nashua, etc., R. Co., 59 N. H. 385. Certainly another subscriber to the stock of the Sand Lime Brick Company will not be heard to question the validity of the subscription of the Empire Investment Company, when it does not appear that the last-mentioned company is itself in a position to repudiate this subscription. The Supreme Court of Illinois has held that the fact that corporations without authority subscribed for the capital stock of another corporation, and against which they could make a defense, does not enable an individual subscriber to evade his own subscription, where he during the whole proceedings to effect the incorporation made no objection to any subscription by such corporations, or effort to repudiate his own on that account, and where there is no evidence that the contracts of subscription by the corporations were not performed, or that they had availed themselves of their privilege to deny or repudiate their obligations. McCoy v. World's Columbian Exposition, 186 Ill. 356, 57 N. E. 1043, 78 Am. St. Rep. 288. We know of no law in this state, however, which prohibits granting to a private corporation power to purchase and hold stock in other corporations, except that embraced in article 4, § 1, par. 4, of the Constitution (Civ. Code 1895, § 5800), which simply prohibits the grant of power to a corporation to purchase stock in another corporation, when the purchase may have or be intended to have the effect of defeating or lessening competition or encouraging monopoly. So it cannot be determined, upon general demurrer, from the face of the petition that the Empire Investment Company had no power to subscribe for and take stock in the Savannah Sand Lime Brick Company. The name "Empire Investment Company" seems to indicate that the corporation bearing it was created for investment purposes, and, so far as the petition demurred to shows, it might have been authorized by its charter to invest in the stock of other noncompetitive corporations.

Again, from the copy of the subscription agreement attached to the petition, it appears that Cox and Entelman subscribed for stock in the Savannah Sand Lime Brick Company after the Empire Investment Company had subscribed for stock therein; and, as they are presumed to have read the subscription agreement before signing it, they must have seen the name of that company in the list of subscribers when they, respectively, made their subscriptions, it being the second name signed under the subscription agreement. In Cornell's Appeal, 114 Pa. 153, 6 Atl. 258, it was held that where subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation were made upon condition that a certain amount should be subscribed, and that amount was nominally subscribed, but really not subscribed by reason of the invalidity of some of the subscriptions, those subscribers who became such subsequently to the invalid subscriptions and with knowledge of their character could not set up a failure of the condition in an action to enforce their liability as stockholders. In Cole v. Satsop R. Co., 9 Wash. 487, 37 Pac. 700, 43 Am. St. Rep. 858, it was held that where subscribers to the stock of a corporation, with knowledge that some of the stock had been subscribed for by another corporation, paid their subscription on some of the stock, they could not, as against creditors, defend an action against them on their subscriptions on the ground that, the subscription of the corporation being invalid, the whole stock was not subscribed for, and therefore they were not liable on their subscriptions. On the same line it was held in Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman, 46 Or. 352, 80 Pac. 421, that where the defendant and the plaintiff corporation entered into a contract which, among other things, required plaintiff to increase its stock, and to obtain subscriptions to part of it, failure of the defendant, on receiving a list of the subscribers, to object to a subscription purporting to have been made by a corporation, was an implied admission that the subscription was genuine. In United States Vinegar Company v. Foehrenbach, 148 N. Y. 58, 42 N. E. 403, the court went even further than this, and held that, in an action to recover unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation the defendants cannot raise the objection that the capital stock was subscribed for in part by other corporations, and that such subscriptions were therefore invalid. Gray, J., who delivered the opinion, said: "The argument that it appears that the capital stock was subscribed for in part by corporations, and that such subscriptions were invalid under the law, is of no avail. That is a question for the people to raise through their proper officers and in appropriate proceedings. The defendants cannot raise it. At furtherest, it might be available in proceedings to vacate the charter—a point, however, we do not consider." There the action was by a corporation to recover unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock.

3. The contention that the petition failed to set forth a cause of action, because it did not allege that the defendant had been notified by the corporation to whose capital stock he had subscribed, or by any of its officers or agents, that the full amount of $30,000 had been subscribed to its capital stock, as was required in order to render the subscriptions binding, is without merit. It has been held in some jurisdictions that where one subscribes to the capital stock of a corporation upon a given condition, which is subsequently performed, it is necessary, before the corporation can make a "call" upon him for the payment of a part or the whole of the amount embraced in his subscription, that he should be notified of the performance of the condition; and Cook says that while there is some doubt as to whether, upon the performance of the condition, the subscriber is entitled to notice of such performance, the better rule seems to be that he is entitled to such notice. 1 Cook on Stock and Stockholders, § 89. The rule is thus stated in 10 Cyc. 419: "The subscriber is entitled to notice of the condition before an action can be sustained against him on his contract, unless the act be one that carries notice of itself. He will, however, be affected by a general notice to the shareholders." The rule is so stated in 2 Thompson on Corporations (1st Ed.) § 1333. Notice of the performance of the condition is, however, not necessary in order to render the subscription binding upon the subscriber. The rule is well established that performance of the condition on the part of the corporation makes the subscription absolute. 1 Thomp. Corp. (2d Ed.) § 609; 10 Cyc. 419; Chase v. Sycamore, etc., R. Co., 88 Ill. 215. Whatever may be the rule in regard to giving notice as a preliminary step to making a call as between a corporation which is a going concern and a subscriber to its stock, it is clear that after the company has failed and its assets have been placed in the hands of a receiver, who has been directed by order of court to bring suit for the purpose of collecting any amount due by any person, thus including unpaid stock subscriptions, a petition in a suit so brought by the receiver to recover the entire amount of unpaid subscriptions is not subject to demurrer on the ground that it does not allege that notice had been given to the subscriber of the compliance by the corporation with the condition of the subscription. The contention that the stipulation that the first installment of 25 per cent. upon the stock subscribed for was to be paid "on signing of the contract, after charter has been obtained about July 15, 1905," shows "that the parties contemplated the signing of a contract other than the one sued on, before being bound to take and pay for any stock in said corporation," and therefore cannot be held liable upon this subscription agreement, is so obviously without merit as to require no discussion.

4. The demurrers of Norton and Knight should have been sustained upon the ground, taken in each, that the subscription agreement set forth by the petition shows that the full amount of the capital stock of the corporation, as prescribed in the agreement, had been subscribed by others before the demurrant subscribed for stock in the same, and hence he was not bound by his subscription. The general rule is that after the full amount of the capital stock of a corporation provided for in the charter has been subscribed any further subscriptions are void. 1 Cook, Stock and Stockholders, § 58. And where, under statutory provisions, commissioners are appointed for the purpose of receiving subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation, and they receive subscriptions in excess of the amount authorized by the charter or act of incorporation, they cannot, in the absence of statutory authority, reduce proportionally all the subscriptions and apportion the stock among the subscribers. Their only duty is to receive subscriptions to the full amount of the prescribed capital, and to refuse anything beyond that. Ib.; 1 Thomp. Corp. (2d Ed.) § 578. It is obvious that none of the subscribers in the present case would have been bound to take stock in the corporation if the amount of its capital stock had been made greater than that which was provided in the subscription agreement. In the petition for incorporation which was granted, it was expressly provided that the amount of the capital stock should be $30,000, the amount fixed in the subscription agreement. We have no statute in this state which provides for the apportionment of the stock of a corporation among the subscribers thereto in the event the prescribed amount of the capital stock has been oversubscribed; and there is nothing in the subscription agreement under consideration which authorized this to be done. Hence, so far as Norton and Knight were concerned, the subscription agreement could not be enforced, either in whole or in part, by the corporation or by the subscriber.

5. Under the ruling in Turner v. Camp, 110 Ga. 631, 36 S. E. 76 (1), this court has no jurisdiction now to determine whether the court below erred in striking certain paragraphs of the answer of the defendant Cox. In that case it was held: "While the defendant in an action may before its final termination bring to this court for review a decision overruling a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition because the 'judgment complained of, if it had been rendered as claimed by the plaintiff in error, would have been a final disposition of the cause,' such defendant cannot, in a bill of exceptions sued out in such a case, properly except also to a decision striking his answer or a part thereof."

Judgment affirmed in the Cox and Entelman cases, and reversed in the Knight and Norton cases. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

AIKEN et al. v. WALLACE et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 9, 1910.
On Motion for Rehearing. Sept. 20, 1910.)(Syllabus by the Court.)1. EVIDENCE (§ 353)—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—DEEDS.

Where a deed sufficiently described land intended to be conveyed, but for more particular description referred to a plat recorded on the general records of the county, the deed was not inadmissible in evidence because the plat was not produced or its absence accounted for.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1427; Dec. Dig. § 353.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 10*)—MAPS—CONSTRUCTION.

A deed recites that it conveys "all that lot of land known as the 'Hotel Reservation' in King City on the Island of St. Simons, in said county of Glynn, and more particularly and perfectly described on the map and plan of said King City shown in Record Book 'KK,' page 593, of the General Records of said county, and being bounded on the north by Floyd street; on the south by Mallory street; on the east by lots 'G' and 'K' and twenty feet of a short alley; and on the west by high-water mark. Said above-described property conveying a portion of Page avenue as shown on the plan of said King City. To have and to hold the said described lot known as the Hotel Reservation unto her, the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns, as aforesaid, in fee simple." The map referred to indicates a rectangular lot between defined lines, marked "Hotel Reservation," bounded on two sides by parallel streets, marked "Floyd street," and "Mallory street," and on another by certain lots and the end of a 20-foot alley, and fronting on another street marked "Page avenue," which runs at right angles to the two parallel streets, which also shows beyond Page avenue another line parallel to it, along which are written the words "High-water Mark—Beach Line." Such deed is to be construed as conveying land extending to high-water mark, and to include that portion of Page avenue which lies between the parallel streets above mentioned, when projected across Page avenue to the high-water mark.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 90, 91; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 50*)—GROUNDS—ERECTING OBSTRUCTIONS ON LAND.

The uncontradicted evidence showed title in the plaintiffs to that part of the land in dispute between high-water and low-water mark; and, injunction being an appropriate remedy in order to afford adequate relief, it was erroneous to refuse to enjoin the defendants from erecting obstructions on that part of the land between high-water and low-water marks, as prayed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 103; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 697*)—INJUNCTION—RIGHT TO REMEDY—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

There being an adequate remedy at law, injunction will not lie to compel the removal of an existing permanent structure in a street.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1502-1505; Dec. Dig. § 697.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)5. DEEDS (§ 112)—CONSTRUCTION.

A deed including the descriptive elements in the body of the instrument, as well as those in a plat referred to as an additional description of the land conveyed, should be construed as a whole, and effect given to every part thereof if practicable under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 3607.

On Motion for Rehearing.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 835*)—REHEARING—SCOPE—CONTENTIONS NOT MADE ON HEARING.

Where a case was apparently determined in the lower court and argued in the Supreme Court as if the only question to be determined was whether or not the title to a strip of land in question lying between high and low water marks was in plaintiff when the bill was filed, the question of an easement or right of access to the water will not be considered on rehearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3242; Dec. Dig. § 835.*]

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County:

T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by F. D. Aiken and others against Mrs. Bena Wallace and others. There was a decree granting certain relief, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

The owners of "Retreat Plantation," a tract of land on the Island of St. Simons in the county of Glynn, carved out of it a smaller tract which was laid off in separate lots, streets, and alleys, and called "King City." A map of it was executed on October 30, 1886, filed for record in the office of the clerk of the superior court on November 17, 1891, and recorded March 24, 1893. Mrs. Bena Wallace purchased a part of the property and received a deed from the owners, dated September 12, 1896, and immediately entered possession and made valuable improvements, consisting of houses and out-houses, used as a hotel and its appurtenances. Lots in King City were sold both before and after the deed to Mrs. Wallace, but none to such of the plaintiffs as became purchasers of such lots until after the deed to Mrs. Wallace. After having been in possession for a number of years, Mrs. Wallace extended her buildings in such manner as to encroach five feet on one of the streets called Mallory street, and all the way across another street called Page avenue, and undertook to construct a wharf extending from high-water mark of St. Simons Sound, opposite her improvements, across the beach, and over the low-water mark to a place suitable for the landing of boats. The plaintiffs, including the grantors of Mrs. Wallace, and F. D. Aiken and others, as owners of "Retreat Plantation" and certain lots in "King City," filed suit for injunction to prevent the construction of the wharf and the maintenance of the obstructions in the street. On the interlocutory hearing the judge granted an order "that the injunction prayed for be and the same hereby is denied, except that said defendants are hereby temporarily restrained and enjoined from constructing or maintaining the wharf-run, or pier complained of, over or upon any part of Page avenue as shown on the map of 'King City.' The plaintiffs excepted.

Harry F. Dunwoody and D. W. Krauss, for plaintiffs in error. Crovatt & Whitfield and A. D. Gale, for defendants in error.

ATKINSON, J. 1. The deed under which Mrs. Wallace claimed title from the proprietors of King City contained the following: "All that lot of land known as the 'Hotel Reservation' in King City on the Island of St. Simons, in said county of Glynn, and more particularly and perfectly described on the map and plan of said King City shown in Record Book 'KK,' page 593, of the General Records of said county, and being bounded on the north by Floyd street; on the south by Mallory street; on the east by lots 'G' and 'K' and twenty feet of a short alley; and on the west by high-water mark. Said above-described property conveying a portion of Page avenue as shown on the plan of said King City. To have and to hold the said described lot known as the Hotel Reservation unto her, the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns, as aforesaid, in fee simple." Objections were urged to its admission, as follows: "(a) That the said deed without having accompanied with it to offer in evidence the map and plan referred to as being recorded in Book 'KK,' p. 593, was inadmissible and irrelevant. (b) That the said offered deed was not accompanied by the map or plan of King City therein referred to, by which said Hotel Reservation was clearly and specifically described. (c) That said alleged deed was void for lack of sufficient description of the land conveyed without the map and plat conveying same or proof of the contents of such map. (d) That, without such accompanying map and plan as referred to, there was no sufficient description of said 'Hotel Reservation' to authorize its introduction in evidence even as color." The description in the deed was sufficient without the map, and the reference to the map for more particular description of the property intended to be conveyed did not render introduction of the map essential to the admissibility of the deed.

2. The decision involved a construction of the deed referred to in the first division. It was insisted by the plaintiffs that the land conveyed to Mrs. Wallace did not include any part of Page avenue, nor extend to high-water mark on the shores of St. Simons Sound, while the defendants urged that it embraced a part of Page avenue and extended over to high-water mark. It appeared from allunde evidence that the deed misrecited the cardinal points. The map was introduced by the plaintiffs. It failed to recite the cardinal points. On the map was a space, rectangular in shape, designated "Hotel Reservation," which appeared to be bounded on one side by Mallory street, on another by two lots and an alley, on another by Floyd street, and on the remaining side (shown by allunde evidence to be the south side) by Page avenue. The south line of the lot designated "Hotel Reservation" and the south line of other lots by the side of the "Hotel Reservation" formed a continuous line. South of the line thus formed was another line, parallel thereto, and in the space between these two lines were written the words "Page avenue." Still further south of the most southerly of the two above-mentioned lines was still another line, parallel to the one last mentioned, and between these two was a space in which were written the words "Beach Line—High-water Mark." Immediately south of all of these was a space marked "Saint Simons," which by allunde evidence was shown to be St. Simons Sound. The map did not recite the width of Page avenue, nor the width of the beach, but allunde evidence showed that Page avenue was 50 feet in width, and that there was a space of highland 52 feet wide intervening between the south line of Page avenue and the high-water mark of St. Simons Sound. In support of their position that the property conveyed did not include any part of Page avenue, the plaintiffs contended that the deed expressly referred to the map as more particularly describing the property intended to be conveyed, which was the lot therein designated as "Hotel Reservation," and that as the plat clearly designated "Hotel Reservation" as a particular lot, lying within designated bounds, none of which included any part of Page avenue or any land on the opposite side of Page avenue, the boundaries given in the plat should be regarded as controlling, and indicating the real intent of the parties as to what property was intended to be conveyed; and as the plat thus clearly showed what was intended to be conveyed, other language in the deed, reciting that one of the boundaries of the property conveyed was "high-water mark," and that the deed conveyed a portion of "Page avenue," was merely false description, and ought to be disregarded. In support of this contention the plaintiffs cited the case of Harris v. Hull, 70 Ga. 831, where it was said: "In construing conveyances of land, effect is to be given to every part of the description, if practicable; but if the thing intended to be granted appears clearly and satisfactorily from any part of the description, and other circumstances of description are mentioned which are not applicable to that thing, the grant will not be defeated, but those circumstances will be rejected as false or mistaken. What is most material and most certain in a description shall prevail over that which is less material and less certain." In Sears v. Carver, 133 Ga. 422, 65 S. E. 886, it was held: "Where the award of the commissioners to admeasure dower refers to an attached plat for description of the land assigned, courses, distances, names, and marks on the monuments, as appearing on the plat, are to be considered as if written on the return of the commissioners." In the case of Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co., 134 U. S. 178, 10 Sup. - Ct. 518, 33 L. Ed. 872, it was said: "Where a plat is referred to in a deed as containing a description of land, the courses, distances, and other particulars appearing on the plat are to be as much regarded in ascertaining the true description of the land and the intent of the parties as if they had been expressly enumerated in the deed." These and similar rulings which might be cited are authority for the proposition that, where a plat is appropriately made a part of a deed, its descriptive averments become parts and parcels of the deed. It does not necessarily follow that they are to be given greater weight in construing the deed than other descriptive averments. They might, under particular circumstances, be entitled to greater weight, but they might not be entitled to greater weight under other circumstances. The deed, including the descriptive averments in the body of the instruments, as well as those in the plat, is to be construed as a whole, and effect given to every part thereof, if practicable. Civ. Code 1895, § 3607. Treating the map as a part of the deed, and construing the deed as a whole, in connection with the extraneous evidence, it appears that the recital in the body of the deed that Page avenue was on the west of the "Hotel Reservation" was erroneous; it being in fact on the south. The body of the deed did not expressly restrict the land conveyed to that particular lot which was designated on the map as the "Hotel Reservation," but recited a conveyance "of all that lot of land known as 'Hotel Reservation,' * * * more particularly and perfectly described on the map or plan of said King City," and proceeded to give the boundaries by streets, etc. On two sides it was described as bounded by streets, on another by two lots and an alley, and on the remaining side the only boundary given was high-water mark. The body then recited that the property conveyed included a portion of Page avenue as shown on the plan of said King City. Under the extraneous evidence, the boundary recited as "high-water mark" was on the south of the property conveyed, and, if the east and west lines were projected across Page avenue to high-water mark, it would include a portion of Page avenue, and also a portion of the highland intervening between Page avenue and high-water mark; but the plat did not indicate any such intervening land. According to its terms, while the width of Page avenue was not expressed, Page avenue covered the entire distance between the line designated on the plat as the south line of "Hotel Reservation" and the high-water mark. The deed expressly recited that on the side on which St. Simons Sound was located it should extend as far as the high-water mark, and that it conveyed a portion of Page avenue. It also in this connection employed the language "as shown on the plan." While reference to the plan would show a perfect description of the tract of land designated "Hotel Reservation," it would not show that the lot so designated extended to high-water mark, or that it embraced any part of Page avenue. If it had not been intended to convey any part of Page avenue, or to grant all the property down to high-water mark, it is impossible to account for such express declarations as those which stated that it did include a part of Page avenue and extended to high-water mark. There is a conflict between these declarations and the map, but these descriptive averments are not such as ought to be disregarded as surplusage; but giving due effect to all of the deed, including the map, it should be construed as conveying the property down to high-water mark, including that part of Page avenue which lies between the east and west lines of "Hotel Reservation," delineated on the map, projected over Page avenue down to high-water mark.

3. The plaintiffs claimed title to the beach extending from high-water mark to low-water mark opposite the improvements of Mrs. Wallace. In 1804 and 1810 William Page was the grantee in two deeds which together conveyed to him what was afterwards called "Retreat Plantation," on St. Simons Island. They were recorded. Construing the terms of the deeds and the maps which were made a part of the description thereof, they expressly conveyed the land to low-water mark on St. Simons Sound. There was evidence of possession on the part of Page, and those holding under him, for many years. The plaintiffs in the present case were descendants of Page and persons holding under them. In 1896 a part of the "Retreat Plantation" was laid out into lots, and the name of "King City" was given to the survey. The defendant bought a portion of the land in King City. Her deed expressly bounded the land conveyed to her by high-water mark. A number of lots were sold in "King City" to different persons, but what was not sold off remained in the original owners and others who succeeded to their rights. As we construe the original deeds to include the land to low-water mark and the defendant's deed to include the land only to high-water mark, the land between the two remained in Page or those succeeding to his rights. In a word, the plaintiffs and the defendants both claim under the same title. The plaintiffs represent the holders of this title to the entire plantation down to low-water mark, except so much of it as has been sold off, while Mrs. Wallace holds a fraction of the plantation sold to her and by the terms of her deed extending only to high-water mark, thus leaving the land between high-water mark and low-water mark unconveyed.

Whether in a controversy between the state and an individual there is any presumption against the state from possession and lapse of time or not, or what would be the case if the state asserted title to a particular piece of land and granted it, there is undoubtedly a possession which may become a prescriptive title between a prescriber and other persons. Under the facts, as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, in 1902 the plaintiffs had a title to low-water mark and the defendants had not. The act of 1902 (Acts 1902, p. 108) did not affect the case. It did not undertake to take the title to land from one person and confer it upon another. The deeds to Page recited grants from the state to certain parties named, and that the conveyance to him covered such land. As already stated, Mrs. Wallace holds under this title. She simply took a deed to a part of a tract of land. The boundaries of the whole extended to low-water mark. The boundary of her deed was expressly high-water mark. What was left between the two remained in the owners of the entire plantation or in those succeeding to their rights, and the act of 1902 did not undertake to take this title away from the latter and confer it upon her. The thing complained of and sought to be enjoined was the construction and use of a wharf over the beach between high and low water marks. If it had been erected, it would have constituted a continuing nuisance. As the evidence demanded a finding in favor of the title of the plaintiffs to the whole of the beach, including that part to which title was asserted by Mrs. Wallace, it was erroneous to refuse to grant the injunction, as prayed, relatively to the beach.

4. Complaint was also made because the judge refused to grant the injunction in so far as it related to the encroachment upon Mallory street. It appeared from the evidence that the encroachment was brought about by extending the hotel building for a distance of five feet over the west line of Mallory street. The structure was permanent in character, and was completed before the institution of the suit. While it might be a nuisance if left in the street, and be subject to be abated as such, there is an adequate remedy at law, and injunction is not the remedy. The prayer was to prevent the defendants from maintaining the obstruction, and from interfering with the free use, enjoyment, and occupancy of the street by the plaintiffs and other owners of lots in King City. The effect was to pray for the removal of the structure from the street. It was not alleged that maintaining the structure in the street would be a nuisance for any other reason than that it was in the way. The relief sought was positive in character, and cannot be accomplished through the offices of injunction.

Judgment reversed.

BECK, J., absent. The other Justices concur.

On Motion for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. 1. On the motion for a rehearing, it was urged that, even if it should be held that the plaintiffs or those under whom they hold had title extending to low-water mark, yet the right of access to the water was an easement necessary and appurtenant to the land conveyed to the defendant. But no such contention was raised by the pleadings or urged in the briefs of counsel on the argument here. On the contrary, the brief of plaintiff in error contained the statement that "it will be seen that the only question to be determined in this case is whether or not the title to this strip of land lying between high and low water mark was in plaintiff in error at the time of the filing of this bill." This case having been apparently determined in the court below and argued here on that basis, we do not deal with any question of easement. Nor do we deem it proper to rule upon that question now, or to grant a rehearing because of such contention now made by the motion.

2. In the original opinion it was not decided as a general rule of law that where a conveyance specifies as one boundary the sea or an estuary thereof the title would extend to low-water rather than high-water mark. As will appear from a careful reading of the opinion, both parties claimed under a common source of title. In some of the deeds under which both parties obtained title references were made to grants and to maps attached to such deeds. Upon a construction of these deeds, we held that it appeared that the description extended one of the boundaries to low-water mark. The plaintiffs owned what had not been conveyed away. The title of the defendant expressly stopped at high-water mark. Hence, the strip between high and low water remained in the plaintiffs.

3. None of the grounds upon which the motion for rehearing was based present reasons sufficient to render a rehearing necessary.

Motion overruled.

WILKINS v. McMAHAN. (No. 2336.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 6, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. COSTS (§ 277)—REMEDIES FOR COLLECTION—ABATEMENT OF SUBSEQUENT ACTION TILL PAYMENT.

Upon the trial of a plea in abatement, filed upon the ground that the plaintiff had reinstated his action after dismissal without payment of the costs due in the first suit, it appeared that the plaintiff went to the clerk of the court in which the suit was pending, and paid what the clerk said was the amount of the costs, and took a receipt for it, and was not informed of any additional costs being due until after the second suit had been brought, when for the first time it appeared that there was a small item of costs which had not been included in the bill so rendered by the clerk, held, that a finding against the plea in abatement was authorized, there being nothing to impeach the good faith of the transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 1048-1060; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 330*)—CROPS.

The plaintiff took from one who was in fact his cropper an instrument reciting that the relation between them was that of landlord and tenant, and creating a lien in the sum of $300 for supplies to be furnished, and this was transferred by the plaintiff to the defendant, who, however, was cognizant of the actual relation existing between the parties. The cropper not only traded out with the defendant the $300 mentioned in the written lien, but also made with him an additional account of some $200. In the fall, and before there had been a final division of the crops, the cropper delivered to the defendant enough of the crops to amount to more than $300, and additionally delivered to him the three bales of cotton for which the plaintiff sued. Held, that as the cropper had delivered to the defendant more than enough of the crops to satisfy the amount of the lien stated in the instrument in which the relationship of landlord and tenant was recited, and as the defendant was not actually otherwise deceived as to the true relationship existing between the landlord and the cropper, the plaintiff was not estopped from asserting title to the three bales of cotton in dispute as being his by virtue of the relationship of landlord and cropper.

(a) The plaintiff was not estopped from showing the true relationship existing between him and his cropper by reason of the fact that he had sued out a distress warrant alleging the cropper to be a tenant; it appearing that this distress warrant was sued out under a misapprehension, and was dismissed when the mistake was discovered. While the fact of the suing out of the distress warrant was in the nature of an admission on the part of the plaintiff, it was not a conclusive or unexplainable admission.

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict appears to be correct under the evidence.

Error from City Court of Monroe; W. S. Upshaw, Judge pro hac.

Action by Aaron McMahan against J. B. Wilkins. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. O. Dean, for plaintiff in error. Napier & Cox, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. McMahan recovered a judgment in trover against Wilkins for three bales of cotton, and Wilkins excepts. It appears that Judge Atkinson was a cropper of McMahan's. During the year (in the month of May) McMahan, in order to arrange for the furnishing of supplies, caused Atkinson to execute to him a note for $300, reciting that McMahan was landlord and that Atkinson was tenant, and that the note was given for the purpose of creating a lien for supplies to make the crops raised on the premises, and McMahan transferred this instrument to Wilkins. Wilkins, however, knew that the relationship between McMahan and Atkinson was that of landlord and cropper; i. e., he knew, as he himself testified, that Atkinson was working the crop "on halves," which is a common way of designating a cropper contract. Atkinson not only traded out with Wilkins the $300 named in the written lien, but also made an additional account for nearly $200. In the fall, after Atkinson had paid about $400 to Wilkins out of the crops, he delivered to him the three bales of cotton in question. While there had been a tentative division between McMahan and Atkinson, there had been no final division.

The defendant relied chiefly upon the proposition that McMahan was estopped from asserting that Atkinson was a cropper, because he had taken from the latter and transferred to the defendant the instrument stating that the relation between them was that of landlord and tenant, and had also in the fall of the year sued out a distress warrant against Atkinson, alleging that he was a tenant. It appears, however, that this distress warrant was voluntarily dismissed by McMahan upon getting the advice of counsel to the effect that the relationship was not that of landlord and tenant, but that of landlord and cropper. The defendant further pleaded, by way of abatement, that McMahan had previously instituted a suit against him for the same cotton; that the same had been dismissed, and the costs had not been paid upon the renewal of the action. He also pleaded, by way of abatement, that the costs in the distress warrant case and a claim case which grew out of it had not been paid. It appeared that, upon the dismissal of the two suits mentioned, McMahan had gone to the clerk in one instance, and to the justice of the peace in the other, had asked for a bill of costs, and, upon receiving it, had paid it, though it did develop that there was a small amount of costs unpaid—a matter which was not called to McMahan's attention until after the present suit was filed.

We will take up the points in somewhat inverse order. The plea in abatement, so far as it related to the nonpayment of the costs in the distress proceedings and the claim case which grew out of it, was plainly not well taken. The present action was in no proper sense a renewal of those suits. As to the nonpayment of the costs in the former action of trover between the same parties, we think that when the plaintiff went to the clerk, received the bill of costs, and paid it in full, he had done all that either law or good faith required, and that under the particular circumstances there was no error in finding against the plea in abatement.

If the amounts paid out of the crops to Wilkins by Atkinson had not amounted to enough to discharge the indebtedness of $300 represented by the written lien transferred by McMahan to Wilkins, we think that McMahan would have been estopped from asserting any title to the crops (so far as was necessary to pay off the $300) on the theory that Atkinson was his cropper and not his tenant. However, as it appears that Wilkins received an amount in excess of the $300, and as it appears that he was not deceived in the transaction by any actual belief that Atkinson was a tenant, we see no reason for the application of any estoppel against McMahan's asserting his title to the crops as against Wilkins' holding it as a payment on open account. The jury's verdict is consistent with this view of the case, and appears to be a correct solution of the problem presented by the special state of facts.

Counsel for Wilkins insist, also, that the suing out of the distress warrant by McMahan amounted to a solemn admission in judicio, and precluded him from thereafter asserting that Atkinson was merely a cropper. To this proceeding, it must be remembered, Wilkins was not made a party by McMahan, and while the fact of McMahan's having sued out a distress warrant had probative value as an admission, it was not a conclusive admission, and was subject to explanation. Sims v. Dorsey, 61 Ga. 488; Evans v. Napier, 111 Ga. 105, 38 S. E. 428. The court properly allowed McMahan to explain the admission implied against him by reason of his having sued out the distress warrant by showing that he had sued it out in ignorance of the law, and that he promptly dismissed it so soon as he had received advice of counsel upon the actual facts of the case. After a careful review of the record, we find no sufficient reason for reversing the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Jeff Davis County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by P. Granger against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

J. F. De Lacy, King & Chastain, and McDaniel, Alston & Black, for plaintiff in error. P. L. Smith, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Granger sued the railway company to recover damages for the killing of a cow, and obtained a verdict. The complaint of the railway company is that the verdict is contrary to law and without evidence to support it, and we have finally concluded that this complaint is sustained by the record, though to the mind of the writer it is extremely questionable whether the judgment of the trial judge, refusing a new trial, is not right. Upon my individual judgment I would be inclined to hold that, as all questions of negligence are for the jury, it was for the jury to determine (under the peculiar circumstances of the case and their special and general knowledge of cows) whether the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the servants of the railway company to keep from killing this cow required them to blow a whistle, or to adopt some other measure to frighten the cow away, or to prevent her from returning to the railroad track. Upon consultation, I yield my doubts.

It was admitted that the cow was killed by an engine of the defendant company. She crossed the track in plain view of the engineer and fireman about 300 or 400 yards in front of the engine, and they naturally supposed she was out of danger. There was an embankment at this point, and after the cow had crossed the track, and had gone into some weeds a few feet from the track, she suddenly wheeled, and, just before the engine got to her, she unexpectedly ran back on the track, immediately in front of the engine, and was killed. It is true that the train did not slow down, nor did the engineer sound his whistle; but the cow was apparently out of danger, and after she ran back on the track it was too late to keep from killing her. There was nothing in the cow's actions to give an indication that she would run back on the track, and that is the reason given by the engineer and fireman for not putting on the brakes or sounding the whistle.

Under this evidence we hold that the railway company rebutted the presumption of negligence, and the jury was not authorized to infer that the servants of the railway company had failed to exercise ordinary care to keep from killing the cow, merely because the cow acted in an extraordinary way. The burden was on the railway company to rebut the presumption that the cow was negligently killed, and to show that its servants exercised ordinary care and diligence to keep from killing the cow. The cow had crossed the track, and had gotten 7 or 8 feet the other side, when she wheeled around and came back on the track. The engineer and fireman could not reasonably have anticipated that the cow would turn around and come back on the track, although, according to the testimony, she was only 7 or 8 feet the other side of the track. With such knowledge of the bovine genus as we possess, we do not think that it could possibly have been foreseen, by the exercise of ordinary care, that the cow would "take a back track."

Russell, J., dissenting.

Error from City Court of Cordele; E. F. Strozler, Judge.

Action by Mrs. J. W. Ransom against the Georgia, Southern & Florida Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

John I. Hall, J. E. Hall, and J. T. Hill, for plaintiff in error. F. G. Boatright, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Mrs. Ransom brought suit against the Georgia, Southern & Florida Railway Company to recover damages for an alleged tort of a conductor of a passenger train in addressing to her certain language which she alleges was "unnecessary, cruel, willful, and wanton, and was intended and did cause her great mortification, mental pain, and humiliation." She recovered a verdict for $1,000, and the case is here on exceptions to the judgment overruling the defendant's motion for a new trial. The case was before this court on a previous occasion, when the plaintiff recovered a verdict for $700 on substantially the same state of facts. 5 Ga. App. 740, 63 S. E. 525.

It is unnecessary to again set forth in extenso the evidence, which can be found fully stated in the previous decision of this court.

Briefly, the evidence makes the following case: Plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's train from Dakota to Cordele. She was accompanied by two small children, one a baby in arms, and the other about two years of age. When the conductor approached her and asked for her ticket, she could not find it, and he told her to look for it to see if she could not find it and passed on. The conductor approached her a second time, and asked her if she had found her ticket, and she replied that she had not. The conductor then told her again to look further for her ticket and again passed on. He returned the third time, when the train was in Crisp county nearing the point of destination of the passenger, and she still had not found her ticket, and did not offer a ticket or cash fare. The plaintiff's exact testimony on this point is as follows: "The conductor came to me and asked me for my ticket, and I told him I had lost it, and he went away and told me he would give me some time to find it—told me to look for it, and probably I would find it. In a few minutes he came back again, and I still hadn't found it, and I told him I hadn't found it, and he said, 'Well,' and he stated the fare, and I told him I didn't like to have to pay another fare without more time to search for my ticket, and he said I must pay fare if I rode on that train, and I told him I had paid it, as for that matter, and intended to pay it again, if I couldn't find my ticket; and he asked me then if I wanted him to stop at Arabi and put me off, and I told him 'No,' I wanted him to go to Cordele where I had paid him to go, and he said he hadn't seen any fare, and I said, 'Well, I had paid,' and I would pay again, if I couldn't find my ticket. He went away for a few minutes, and he asked me again, and I still hadn't found it, and he says: 'You are a woman. I see you are trying to take advantage of me, and I will pay your fare for you here in the presence of these gentlemen.' And I says, 'I haven't asked you to pay my fare'; and he said, 'No; you haven't asked me, but it is an advantage you are taking.'" The gentlemen to whom the conductor referred were two passengers sitting right behind the plaintiff and one to her left, across the aisle. She testified, further, that the conductor spoke in a very harsh manner, and that, after addressing to her the remarks above quoted, he went away, saying nothing more at that time. Subsequently she found her ticket and delivered it to the conductor, who said, according to her testimony, "I thought you had lost it." This concluded the incident. Immediately upon arriving at Cordele, the plaintiff sought out an attorney and filed her present suit for damages, alleging the language of the conductor and his manner as constituting the tort complained of.

It may be stated that there is no conflict between the evidence for the plaintiff and that for the defendant, except that the plaintiff testified that she did not refuse to pay her fare, but stated that she would do so provided she did not find her ticket; and the conductor and the two passengers who were introduced as witnesses, all three testified that she did positively and unconditionally decline to pay her fare when the conductor demanded it of her on the third interview. She testified also that the language of the conductor was impolite and harsh. The conductor and the two passengers who were immediately behind the plaintiff and who testified as to the entire controversy between the conductor and the plaintiff stated that the conductor's manner was polite, courteous, and considerate. It will thus be seen that there was only an apparent conflict upon the question as to whether she did positively refuse to pay her fare after he came to her the third time, and we think the only fair conclusion from her own language to the conductor was that she expressed no present intention of paying the fare, although nearing her destination. But, for the purposes of the case, we must take the testimony of the plaintiff as the truth of the transaction, and, if in that testimony we find sufficient facts to justify a verdict for $1,000, the verdict must stand.

When the case was before this court on a previous occasion, in discussing the amount of the $700 verdict, we gave it as our opinion that the evidence for the plaintiff made an "extremely weak" case for a recovery, and that the verdict for the amount then rendered was "large to the point of generosity," and we further stated that in our opinion the jury were "very generous and chivalric; probably more so than the facts warranted." While, as before stated, there is no substantial difference between the evidence on the first and second trials as to what took place between the passenger and the conductor, there is considerable difference in the testimony on the first and second trials as to the effect of the alleged treatment by the conductor. On the first trial she proved a very nervous condition resulting from the interview between her and the conductor, and there was no evidence before that jury that there was any other cause for such condition. On the second trial there was testimony presented to the jury that both before and since the trial the plaintiff was frequently found in a nervous condition, and was under treatment for such condition by her physician, and the evidence on the second trial would seem to eliminate the nervous condition of the plaintiff as an element of damage, and we think it fair to limit the question of damages to what actually occurred between the plaintiff and the conductor on the train. Were the language and conduct of the conductor from the plaintiff's standpoint sufficiently tortious and inexcusable to require or justify a verdict for $1, 000? It is insisted that the amount of the verdict is excessive, and, after a review of the entire evidence, we have arrived at the same conclusion. We do not think that either the language or the conduct of the conductor construed most strongly against him and in favor of the contention of the plaintiff would warrant a verdict for $1,000 as damages. The conductor gave the passenger, it would seem, a reasonable time to make search for and to find her ticket. She did not find it, and she did not offer to pay fare, although she had failed to find her ticket. The conductor was presented solely by the conduct of the passenger with a difficult and embarrassing problem to solve. It was his duty as an official to collect the ticket or the fare, and, failing to do so, it was his duty to stop the train and put the passenger off at some convenient place, which he offered to do. But the woman had in her arms a baby, and was leading by the hand another infant. There was thus a conflict between the conductor's feelings as a man and his duty as an official, and he endeavored to reconcile the two. If his language was not apt or conciliatory, it was certainly neither harsh nor wholly unwarranted. The contention that his characterization of the passenger as a "woman" instead of as a "lady" was an insult is too frivolous and absurd for serious consideration. His statement that she was trying to take advantage of him because of her sex, while probably an equivocal expression, did not necessarily import falsity of the passenger's claim that she had purchased her ticket. It was but the expression by the conductor of his opinion of the situation. The fact that he offered to pay her fare was certainly not a very grave insult, if an insult at all, and was probably intended by the conductor for his own self-protection as an official, and the fact that he called upon the passengers to witness the payment of the fare was doubtless for the same purpose, and was not done in any manner for the purpose of calling attention to any improper conduct of the woman, and these gentlemen as witnesses fully rebut any conclusion of this kind by their testimony that the conduct of the conductor was courteous, kind, and considerate. But it is unnecessary to discuss the question any further. We just simply cannot get our minds to consent to the proposition that the offense of the conductor, if an offense at all, was of sufficient gravity to justify a verdict of $1,000 in damages against the railroad company. The amount of the verdict seems to us to be manifestly out of all proportion to the wrong, and we are compelled to adopt the conclusion that the jury in assessing the amount of damages for so trivial a tort, if a tort at all, were influenced, not by the evidence, but by some extraneous fact which aroused their partiality for the plaintiff, or prejudiced them against the defendant. A mother with a babe in her arms and a child by the hand appeals powerfully to sympathy, if she does not entirely shut the eyes of justice.

We are aware of the many decisions of the Supreme Court that in cases of tort and personal injury where the damages are unliquidated, and the law furnishes no rule of measurement save the enlightened conscience of impartial jurors upon the evidence before them, a verdict will not be set aside and a new trial granted upon the ground of excessive damages, unless the amount is so unreasonable and excessive as to evince passion, prejudice, partiality, corruption, or misapprehension; and every case must stand upon its own particular facts, there being no inflexible rule that can be laid down on the subject. And, while the question of damage is peculiarly one for the jury, both in the act complained of and any circumstances of aggravation, yet, where the finding is so excessive as to justify an inference of undue bias, partiality, or prejudice on the part of the jury, it is the duty of the courts to interfere. But this interference by the court is not to be taken as any reflection on the jury, but only a recognition of the well-known fact that jurors in some cases, of which the present case furnishes a type, are sometimes prone to allow their feelings to get the better of their judgment. In our previous decision of this case we did not expressly disapprove of the verdict for $700, although, as intimated in the opinion, it went to the very limit of reasonable adjustment of the damage to the injury complained of. In the present case there is no substantial difference in the evidence; the only difference being another reason for the nervous condition of the plaintiff independent of the altercation between her and the conductor. We feel compelled to be consistent with the view then entertained, which has been strengthened by a further consideration of the evidence, by setting aside this verdict and granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict is excessive.

There are many other special exceptions set out in the motion for a new trial. Some of them are meritorious and some are without merit; but the necessity for a decision of any of them is eliminated by the grant of another trial on the ground stated.

The indictment, in addition to charging that the defendants committed unlawful acts of violence, alleged that the persons accused, "being assembled and gathered together, and acting with a common intent, unlawfully, violently, and tumultuously did make a great noise, riot, tumult, and disturbance, to the great terror of Will Lovelace and others." It was therefore not error for the court to charge the jury, in explanation of the nature of the offense of riot, that "the act need not necessarily be an unlawful act in a violent and tumultuous manner. If you believe the defendant, in connection with others and acting with a common intent, did an unlawful act or any other act in a violent and tumultuous manner, you would be authorized, and it would be your duty, to convict him."

3. RIOT (§ 1*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

There was no evidence that the plaintiff in error and his associates were guilty of any unlawful act of violence; and the testimony failed to show that any act of the defendant himself or in conjunction with others was done in a violent and tumultuous manner. Consequently the verdict was without evidence to support it. To transmute acts which are intrinsically lawful into a riot, the commission of such acts must be attended with both violence and tumult. Both ingredients are essential in order to cause the reaction which is necessary to change the quality of a lawful act. Neither noise alone nor violence alone attending the performance of a lawful act can make a riot.

Error from City Court of Griffin; J. J. Flynt, Judge.

John Taylor was convicted of riot, and brings error. Reversed.

Robt. T. Daniel and T. E. Patterson, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Beck, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. 1, 2. The first and second headnotes are self-explanatory.

3. To show one guilty of the crime of riot, the act in which the accused must engage or participate in concert with another or other persons must be either an act of violence expressly declared by law to be unlawful, or it must be some act which (though it would not necessarily be criminal) is committed so violently and is attended with such tumult as that the manner in which the act is performed disturbs the public peace. Riot is essentially an offense against the public peace and good order, and looks to this rather than an infraction of the personal rights of any particular individual as such. The common-law offense of riot did not include that class of riots where two or more persons with a common intent might do any act in a violent and tumultuous manner (which from its present nature must be peculiarly an offense against the peace of the public); and yet, at common law, riot was specifically classified as a public wrong and as an offense against the public peace. 4 Chit. Bl. 108. Of course, where the rioters commit an unlawful act of violence, the violation of the personal rights of a certain individual may be a paramount consideration, and in this form of riot it is not necessary that the act which the law penalizes as a riot shall be done in a tumultuous manner, because the act in such case is of itself a crime, and the common intent of the perpetrators and their concert of action only adds an additional ingredient to the crime, and thereby aggravates the offense. The new criminal element is that of conspiracy, and, when this element is the inspiration of an unlawful act (or crime) of violence participated in by two or more, the crime, resultant from the union is riot. It is enough in such a case if the proof shows that the unlawful act was one involving violence and participated in by two or more. But in the extension of the offense of riot, as defined in section 354 of the Penal Code of 1895, beyond its common-law definition, so that the commission (by two or more persons) of a lawful act in a violent and tumultuous manner is made a crime (as the act done is of itself, and disconnected from the manner in which it is done, a lawful act), the proof must show, not only that the act in which the rioters were jointly engaged was an act involving violence, and in the execution of which violence was actually employed, but that it was done in a tumultuous manner so as to disturb the public peace.

The offense in such a case is wholly one against the public peace and tranquility, and, though an act be violently done by two or more persons, yet if it be a lawful act, and if there is no attendant tumult which disturbs the public peace, there is no riot.

BEACH LUMBER CO. et al. v. BAXLEY BANKING CO. (No. 2313.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 336)—AMENDMENT.

A bill of exceptions may on motion be amended by the addition of necessary plaintiffs in error, where the fact that they are necessary parties plainly appears from the record. The writ of error will not be dismissed where all necessary parties thereto have been properly supplied by amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1868-1876; Dec. Dig. § 336.*]

2. PROCESS (§ 167*)—CURE OF DEFECT BY SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS.

A suit was filed against several defendants, some of whom resided in the county of the court's jurisdiction, and one in another county. The clerk failed to sign the process on the original petition, but the process annexed to the second original was properly signed, and the second original was served on the nonresident defendant. At the trial term the defendants moved to dismiss the suit upon the ground that there was no process signed by the clerk in said case, and that the process prepared was void and not amendable. Held, that the court did not err in directing the clerk to prepare and attach to the petition, and to the second original, process returnable to the next ensuing term of the court, with direction that service be perfected upon the defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. § 256; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

Error from City Court of Waycross; J. T. Myers, Judge.

Action by the Baxley Banking Company against the Beach Lumber Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

V. E. Padgett, for plaintiffs in error. Parker & Highsmith and J. L. Sweat, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. 1. A motion is made to dismiss the writ of error upon the ground that the bill of exceptions does not show who composed the Beach Lumber Company (the plaintiff in error) which is alleged to be a copartnership, and that, as the individuals composing the firm are not named, the writ of error should fail for the want of proper parties. The plaintiff in error by a written motion asked this court to permit the bill of exceptions to be amended by adding as plaintiffs in error W. R. Beach, J. M. Beach, and J. F. Beach. Upon consideration of this motion, it was granted, because it appears from the record that they were defendants in the original action in the court below, and named as such in the original petition of the defendant in error. For this reason the amendment cannot affect any right of the defendant in error, and the motion to dismiss the writ of error is denied.

2. In addition to the statement of the second headnote, it may perhaps be proper to say that this was a suit upon a promissory note made by the Beach Lumber Company, payable to the order of J. F. Smith, and indorsed by W. R. Beach and J. F. Smith. Suit was brought in the city court of Waycross to the June term, 1909, of that court by the Baxley Banking Company as the transferee. The clerk in attaching process to the original failed to sign it, though he signed the process to the second original prepared to be served upon J. F. Smith, who was a resident of Appling county. Each and all of the defendants were served, and at the appearance term, there being no appearance, the case was marked in default. At the September term, which was the next term of the court, the defendant the Beach Lumber Company appearing only for that purpose, filed a written motion to dismiss the suit "because there is no process signed by the clerk in said case. The process, being prepared in the original and copy petitions not having been signed by the clerk, is absolutely void, and not amendable." The court refused to dismiss the suit, and, on motion of the plaintiff's counsel, ordered the clerk to issue a new process, requiring the defendants to be and appear at the next term of the court to be held on the second Monday in December, 1909, together with copies of said petition and process, to be served by the sheriff upon all of the defendants, and the December term being expressly made the appearance term of the suit.

We find no error in this order. It was not a question of a void process, which is not amendable. As to the Beach Lumber Company and the individuals composing this partnership, there was no process, and the court, having the right to control its process, could either dismiss the proceeding or (there appearing to be no fault or laches on the part of the plaintiff) take steps to have process issued, instead of putting the plaintiff to the expense and trouble of recommencing his suit. A case is cited where it was held that void process is a fatal defect, or a void process cannot be amended. Of course, where a process is void, and yet the case is treated as if the process was sufficient, or where process returnable to a term already past is attempted to be substituted for process returnable to a term in future, the proceedings would be nugatory; but in any case where, through no fault of the plaintiff, there is an absolute failure to issue process, as also in a case where process may have issued, but for some reason with which the plaintiff is not chargeable there has been no service, it is within the power and discretion of the court to preserve the status of the case upon the docket, and to order the issuance of process, returnable to a future appearance term, and service thereof.

Judgment affirmed.

STAMPS v. NEWTON COUNTY. (No. 2,190.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DEATH (§ 24*)—ACTION FOR DEATH OF CHILD—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In refusing to strike that portion of the defendant's plea which set up that the death of the plaintiff's child was the fault of the plaintiff herself in negligently and carelessly permitting the child to pass over the footbridge without the guidance of some other person, well knowing that the stream at that time was very much swollen and in a dangerous condition, and that the plaintiff aided and contributed to her own injury by allowing the child to enter upon said footbridge without some other person to guide the child and prevent her from falling, the court did not err, inasmuch as the defendant had the right to introduce evidence to show if it could that the mother was present, or at least in sight, at the time the child was drowned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 25, 26; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

2. DEATH (§ 24*)—OF CHILD—DUTY OF PARENT TO PROTECT CHILD.

While a mother who is compelled to earn her own living by her labor may not be required in the exercise of due diligence to be present at all times and personally overlook the care of her children, still she is responsible for the exercise of ordinary care for the safety of her child while the child is in her presence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 25, 26; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

3. BRIDGES (§ 46*)—ACTION FOR DEATH OF CHILD—QUESTION FOR JURY—NEGLECT.

While isolated excerpts from the judge's charge to the jury to which exception is taken, may seem inaccurate, the charge, construed as a whole, was extremely favorable to the contentions of the plaintiff in error, and fairly and fully presented the law applicable to the issues presented by the pleadings and evidence.

(a) Construed together, all of the instructions of the court tended to impress the jury with the statement that, if the death of the child was due to a defect in the bridge of which the county authorities had knowledge or notice, the plaintiff's right of recovery could not be defeated.

(b) The instruction to the effect that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover unless the county authorities knew of the defect of the bridge, or unless this defective condition had existed for such a length of time that knowledge thereof on the part of the county authorities would be presumed, was correct. Under the evidence adduced, and, when taken in connection with the further instruction that if the bridge was originally negligently or defectively constructed, and any defect in the bridge was the cause of the child's death, the county would be liable, the charge afforded no ground for complaint.

(c) Whether the omission to replace guard rails upon the bridge, if guard rails were previously there, or the failure to put guard rails upon the bridge in first instance, was or was not negligence on the part of the county authorities, was a fact to be determined by the jury from the circumstances of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-122; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 996*)—RES IPSA LOQUITUR—PROVINCE OF JURY.

In any case in which it is contended that the circumstances of the transaction call for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the prerogative of the jury to judge whether the circumstances of the case itself are such as to raise an inference of negligence and to fix the liability upon the defendant for the act complained of (unless satisfactory evidence is offered by him) is exclusive, and not reviewable. The jury was authorized in the present case to find that neither the condition of the bridge nor the other circumstances in the case placed upon the defendant the burden of proving how the casualty resulted, and that the negligence of the county was not responsible therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3908-3911; Dec. Dig. § 996.*]

5. BRIDGES (§ 37*)—MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR—DUTY OF COUNTY.

It is the duty of the proper county authorities to construct and maintain bridges across streams in a workmanlike and proper manner, so that any person may use them with safety, in the exercise of ordinary travel, but this duty is not one of extraordinary care and diligence, nor does its exercise extend to extraordinary occasions beyond the ken of general experience. The law does not make the county authorities insurers of the safety of any of those who use bridges.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Cent. Dig. §§ 103-105; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 194*)—DEFECTS—INJURIES.

It was not error to exclude from the consideration of the jury nails taken from the bridge in 1909, since the question at issue was the condition of the bridge in 1908, more than a year previous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 252*)—DUTY TO INSTRUCT.

In the absence of any evidence as to the value of the child's services it was not error to omit to instruct the jury upon the measure of the plaintiff to recover upon that count of the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

8. DEATH (§ 24*)—OF CHILD FROM DEFECTIVE BRIDGE—RIGHT OF RECOVERY.

It was not error to instruct the jury in substance that, even though both the plaintiff and the defendant might be negligent, the plaintiff's right to recover would not be defeated if the death of the child was caused by the negligent condition of the bridge, and the child in crossing was using as much care as a person of full discretion. The charge of which complaint is made presented one of the strongest contentions of which the evidence in behalf of the plaintiff was susceptible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 25, 26; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 317*)—HEARSAY—ADMISSIBILITY.

Hearsay testimony is permissible in explanation of conduct or, as in this case for the purpose of identifying and locating objects referred to in the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1174-1192; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

Error from City Court of Covington, W. H. Whaley, Judge.

Action by Susan G. Stamps against Newton County. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Middlebrook, Rogers & Knox, for plaintiff in error. R. W. Milner, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Susan G. Stamps brought suit for damages against Newton county, alleging that in August, 1908, her daughter, five years old, while crossing a public foot-bridge of the county, fell from it and was drowned, in consequence of the fact that one of the planks upon the bridge was not nailed, and tilted and threw the child into the stream. She sued both for the value of the child's life and the value of its services. The evidence in regard to the circumstances attending the child's death was conflicting. There was no testimony as to what was the value of the child's services or as to whether they were of any value. The verdict was for the defendant.

1. The plaintiff moved to strike that portion of the defendant's answer in which the county set up contributory negligence on her part. If the court erred in not sustaining the motion to strike, the error was secured by the instructions of the trial judge to the jury. They were told specifically that negligence on the part of the plaintiff could not defeat her recovery, if the proximate cause of the child's death was negligence of the county in the construction and maintenance of the bridge from which it fell to its death. But, aside from this, we do not think the judge erred in refusing to strike this portion of the defendant's plea, for conceding that a mother is not necessarily required to keep personal supervision of her children at all times, and that it might not be negligence on her part for them to wander away from home and expose themselves to danger, still the plea is not addressed to that state of facts. The defendant contemplated to state all circumstances in which the mother was in sight, and in such a case it would be a question whether she could or ought to have prevented the child from going upon the bridge. And, if she was present and permissibly acquiesced in the child's putting itself in the situation where the danger was apparent, she might be brought within the rule laid down in the case of Atlanta & Charlotte Ry. Co. v. Gravitt, 93 Ga. 369, 20 S. E. 550, 26 L. R. A. 553, 44 Am. St. Rep. 145. Being present with the child, the circumstances would be so altered that the rule of diligence applicable would be entirely different from that which would apply if she had been necessarily away from her child.

2. It is strenuously insisted that a mother who is compelled by her financial necessities to earn support for herself and children is not required to exercise personal supervision over them at all times, that necessarily she must be absent from them in some occupations in which she may be engaged in earning a livelihood. Personally we agree with this contention, but we find nothing in the judge's charge to the jury which limited their right to consider this phase of the case. It is in every case a question for the jury as to whether the acts of the persons involved when considered in the light of all circumstances were duly diligent or unduly negligent under the peculiar circumstance of the case. Negligence in one case might not be negligence in another, but it is for the jury to say whether negligence existed or due diligence was exercised in either.

3. While the isolated excerpts from the charge of which complaint is made in several of the grounds for motion for new trial, viewed apart from their setting, might seem to be inaccurate, yet, when the charge is construed as a whole, it is plain that no right of the plaintiff was prejudiced. The instructions of the trial judge were extremely favorable to her contentions. So far as the charge of the court is concerned, the plaintiff would have been fully authorized to recover the full value of her child's life if the jury had been impressed with the view that the death of the child occurred in the way that she testified it did, and if it had been satisfactorily shown that the county authorities were negligent in the construction or maintenance of the bridge. On the other hand, the jury were fully authorized to conclude primarily that the death of the child might have occurred in some other way, or that, no matter how the death resulted, it was not due to any defects in the bridge which should have been obviated by the exercise of care on the part of the county authorities. The jury may have concluded, and we think could have done so, that the erection of a guard rail would have added nothing to the safety of the bridge, so far as a child four or five years old was concerned, for the reason that the child could have easily passed under these guard rails, and either walked off or fell off into the stream below. At any rate, the question as to what kind of bridge should have been maintained at this point in the exercise of ordinary diligence was fully and fairly submitted by the court to the jury, and in the state of the evidence we do not think it was obligatory upon the trial judge to grant a new trial. For that reason, we certainly cannot interfere. It can serve no useful purpose to discuss the various exceptions to the charge to the jury, and, so far as reference thereto is necessary, our view will be found in the headnotes.

4. It is insisted that the circumstances of the case call for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. If it be conceded that this is so, it is to be borne in mind that the maxim or doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is the mere statement of a rule of evidence; and there was nothing in this case to prevent the jury from applying it if it had seen proper. In any case in which it is contended that the circumstances of the transactions are governed by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the prerogative of the jury to judge whether the circumstances of the case itself are such as to raise an inference of negligence and to fix the liability upon the defendant for the act complained of, unless a satisfactory explanation is offered by him, is exclusive and not reviewable. The jury was authorized in the present case to find that neither condition of the bridge nor the other circumstances in the case placed upon the defendant the burden of proving how the casualty resulted, and that the county was not responsible therefor. There was nothing in the charge of the court to prevent the jury from saying that the circumstances of the case itself spoke of negligence, and placed the burden of explaining the apparent prima facie negligence upon the county. But the jury were not compelled to indulge this inference, and, if the plaintiff in the court below had desired the attention of the jury to be addressed specifically to this rule of evidence, an appropriate request should have been made.

5. While it is the duty of the several counties of this state to construct all bridges (even footbridges) across streams in a workmanlike and proper manner, so that any person using ordinary care may use them with safety in ordinary travel, the county authorities are not required to use extraordinary care and diligence, even to foresee casualties resulting from extraordinary occasions. Of course, in the exercise of extraordinary care, the fact that streams will rise and freshets occur will be taken into account. But such an extraordinary case as that a bridge might be engulfed by an earthquake that too would not reasonably be anticipated and would not be within the purview of the county's duties. In other words, the county authorities are not insurers of the safety of those who use the public bridges. The county is to build bridges reasonably safe for ordinary use, with an eye to these extraordinary strains and extraordinary occasions which rise within ordinary human experience.

6. The nails which were taken from the bridge in 1909 were properly excluded, not only because the accident occurred in 1908, nearly a year before, and therefore the nails were not illustrative of the condition of the bridge in 1908, but also because there was no evidence that they were taken from the plank which it was alleged tilted and caused the child's death.

7. There was no error in omitting to give the jury instructions as to the measure of the plaintiff's damage for the loss of the services of her child, for the reason that there was no evidence as to the value of the child's services. Furthermore, this omission could not have been harmful, for the reason that the plaintiff sued both for the value of the child's life and the value of its services, and she could not recover for both. It is probable that, if she had recovered, her recovery would have been larger in case the jury allowed her the value of the child's life than if the recovery were for its services until it reached its majority, and the right of the plaintiff to the value of the child's life, provided the jury found the county negligent, was fully explained.

8. The charge of which complaint is made in the eighth special ground of the motion for new trial was really very favorable to the plaintiff. It was equivalent to telling the jury that certainly, if the child was acting as a grown person would act, the plaintiff could recover, even though both the plaintiff and the defendant were negligent. In other words, the jury were told that, even if they believed the plaintiff was negligent in caring for the safety of her child, still in spite of that negligence, if the child was acting in the discreet and cautious way in which a careful grown person would be supposed to act, the defendant, if negligent, could derive no benefit from the plaintiff's negligence.

9. It insisted that the court erred in admitting the evidence of the witness John Dobbs, as follows: "I saw the bridge the next day after the child was drowned. I saw some children there that day. I saw the child that testified here. I just asked all of them where the child fell off, and could not tell which one told me. This one was present when I told some one to show me where the child fell off, and they showed me. I asked them all where she fell off, and they said right here about the middle of the bridge. This child was in the crowd, but I don't know whether she said a word or not." It is contended that this testimony was purely hearsay as to all the children save the one who testified, and that it did not contradict her testimony. It is true this testimony is hearsay, but for the purpose of identifying location of time or as explanatory of conduct hearsay is admissible. The court did not err in overruling the objections to this testimony.

From a review of the case as a whole, we conclude that the jury decided that the bridge, a photograph of which was before them, was reasonably safe, and therefore its construction did not speak of negligence, and that the manner of the child's death was not proven to the satisfaction of the jury. Furthermore, there was no evidence that the child contributed to the support of the mother or as to the value of its services. There was no error in refusing a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)EVIDENCE (§ 370)—SALES (§ 52*)—DOCUMENTS—PROOF OF EXECUTION—EVIDENCE OF SALE.

The court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff. The execution of the written order for the goods was not proved, nor the fact that the defendants ever received or accepted the shipment. If the plaintiff had sued upon the order, the defendant would have been obliged to deny its execution in a sworn answer. But when the contract was introduced in evidence in support of the account, the defendant had the right to insist upon the proof of its execution, and the fact that the contract, apparently executed at Holton, La., was sent by the plaintiff's Louisiana salesman, purporting to be signed by a firm doing business in Douglas, Ga., did not prove that the latter had signed it. If the plaintiffs had proved that the defendant gave the order, the proof of the delivery of the goods to the common carrier would have established a prima facie right of recovery; but proof of delivery to the carrier, without more, raised no presumption that the goods were bought or received by the defendants.

Though an affidavit had been prepared for execution, as appears from the record, the proposed affidavit was neither signed nor sworn to by the plaintiff, nor was the jurat signed by any one. So that the account was not verified. Upon the call of the case in the justice's court at the first term, the plaintiff in error demurred to the suit, upon the ground that the account sued on was barred by the statute of limitations, as appears upon the face of the account itself. The magistrate sustained this demurrer and dismissed the suit. Upon certiorari to the superior court, the judgment of the justice of the peace was set aside, and it was ordered that the case be tried. We think this judgment was error, and that the certiorari should have been overruled and dismissed. The plaintiff's account as attached to the summons plainly shows that it was for indebtedness due to a landlord. Starting with an undated "balance due from the account of 1903," the dates of the several items embraced in the account range from January 8, 1904, to November 21, 1904. The last item is a charge of $50 for the rent of two mules, dated November 21st. The several items of the account aggregate $812.62. There is a credit for certain work in the month of April, which follows charges of cash items of the same date, and the last item of the account to which we have referred is followed by a credit for the crop of 1904 as a whole, amounting to $699.19.

From the statement of the account, it is apparent that the last item charged would have become barred on November 21, 1908, unless, as insisted by the counsel for the defendant in error, there is something which would suspend the operation of the statute of limitations. It is insisted in the argument that the bar of the statute was suspended because it is the custom between landlord and croppers to settle at the end of each year. Whether this custom prevails or not, it does not appear from the face of the account; and certainly this custom does not supplant the law. It is a general principle that statutes of limitation begin to run from the time that the right of action accrues. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, a landlord's right to collect his rent, as well as to collect for any supplies he may have furnished to aid in making the crop, arises upon the maturity of the crop. It would never do to hold that a landlord could not proceed to collect advances or rent until the end of the year, for if this was the case, in most instances the right of action would be absolutely worthless. It is a matter of common knowledge that the staple crops of this state mature before the end of the year and the statement of this very account bears evidence of that fact in the credit given the cropper for the crop which seems to have been sold to the landlord. The statement, too, of this credit, causes the account upon its face to evidence that there had been settlement of some kind between the plaintiff and the defendant prior to December 31, 1904, which would have given the plaintiff the right to commence an action for the unpaid balance even if he had not been a landlord. So far as the account shows upon its face, every item was barred by the statute of limitations when the suit was commenced on December 31, 1908, for there is nothing to indicate that the account was in any of those classes (referred to in section 2885 of the Civil Code of 1895) whose accounts, by custom, become due at the end of the year. Happily for the agricultural landlord, no custom postpones his right of action to collect what is due him either for rent or for supplies after a sufficiency of the crop of the year is sufficiently matured and gathered to pay the same. If custom is the result of universal understanding between landlords and croppers and landlords and tenants, we would say that this was the custom of the country. The law fixes the landlord's special lien for rent on the crop by the date of the maturity of the crop. Saulsbury, Respass & Co. v. McKellar, 59 Ga. 302. See, also, Thompson v. Commercial Guano Co., 93 Ga. 282, 20 S. E. 309, and Colding v. Williamson, 71 Ga. 89. Upon the face of the account, it seems to have been an entire account between the parties, being the balance for the year 1903, and an itemized account for the year 1904, and consequently the statute began to run against it from the date of the last item in the account, November 21, 1904. This is said on the view that the plaintiff may not be a landlord. If, as is apparently the case, the plaintiff's account evidences the indebtedness of a cropper or a tenant to a landlord, then this account for supplies furnished by the landlord was due when the crop of 1904 was mature. The landlord has the benefit of summary foreclosure, and this remedy is applicable when the tenant fails to pay his rent, or disposes of any portion of the crop without paying the landlord for necessary advances. For this reason, we think it plain that the statutory bar began to run when the defendant in error saw proper to convert his demand into an open account by failure to use his statutory remedy of foreclosure. As the demurrer was properly sustainable under the ruling in Colding v. Williamson, supra, we think the court erred in sustaining the certiorari. The case is not affected by the provision of section 4130, because the record shows that the account was not verified by the affidavit.

PRUDENTIAL INS. CO. OF AMERICA v.
CHESTNUT. (No. 2,296.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 367*)—LIFE INSURANCE—CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the plaintiff's petition. Construing the insurance policy as a whole, it is apparent that the insurance was in force at the date upon which one of the insured parties died. As the insurance company accepted the payment of the premium quarterly, instead of annually, the insured, in any view of the case under the expressed provisions of the contract, would have had 120 days of extended insurance from the day on which there was default in the payment of the quarterly premium.

2. INSURANCE (§ 146*)—CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY.

A contract of insurance being prepared by the insurer should be at least reasonably construed in favor of insured, and where there are conflicting provisions, rendering the real intent of the parties doubtful, public policy requires that that construction be adopted which is most favorable to insured, and every part of the contract will be considered in connection with every other part in an effort to reach the true intent of the parties.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by T. R. Chestnut against the Prudential Insurance Company of America. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

McDaniel, Alston & Black, for plaintiff in error. Moore & Pomeroy, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. We see no error in the judgment overruling the demurrer which the defendant insurance company filed in the court below, to which exception is taken. By the demurrer it is insisted that the plaintiff's petition fails to set forth a cause of action because it is apparent from the contract of insurance which is attached to the petition that the insurance policy had lapsed. From an examination of the policy it appears that this is a contract by which the Prudential Insurance Company undertook to insure the joint lives of Thomas R. Chestnut and Ruby Valentine Chestnut, the amount of the policy being payable to the survivor. The petition alleges that all of the premiums were paid in quarterly installments, and that the petitioner paid to the defendant the premiums for two years and six months, and that all premiums due and payable upon the policy up to and including December 21, 1908, were paid. The petitioner, therefore, sets up that by the operation of the policy it is extended for 331 days from December 21, 1908, and that the extended insurance was in force at the time of the death of Ruby Valentine Chestnut, the insured, July 8, 1909.

In supporting its contentions that this insurance policy had lapsed, the plaintiff in error insists that the paid-up joint life policy provided for by the contract in the form of extended insurance applies only after the policy, has been in force three full years. The argument in favor of this contention is attempted to be supported by a stipulation in the contract which reads as follows: "If this policy, after being in force three full years, shall lapse or become forfeited for the nonpayment of any premium on the date when due as specified on the first page hereof, or of any note given for a premium or loan made in cash on such policy as security, or of any interest on such note or loan, it may be surrendered for a nonparticipating paid-up joint life policy as specified in the following table, provided the policy be legally surrendered to the company within three months after the date on which premiums have been duly paid. If this policy having lapsed or become forfeited as above be not surrendered for a paid-up joint life policy, the company will write in lieu of this policy without any action on the part of the insured, a nonparticipating paid-up joint term policy for the full amount insured by this policy. Such paid-up joint term policy to be dated on the day to which premiums have been duly paid and to continue in force for the term indicated by the following table." It is insisted by counsel for plaintiff in error that this sentence in the policy clearly indicated that the paid-up joint life policy shall apply only after the policy has been in force three full years. The plaintiff in error attempts to void the provisions contained in a table providing for cash loan values, paid-up joint life policy values, extended insurance values, and cash surrender values headed "Privileges" by pointing out that there is no cash loan privilege or joint life policy nor any cash surrender value as a privilege until the end of three years, and that, though there is a privilege given for extended insurance of 60 days at the end of one year and of 120 days at the end of 2 years, these privileges must be construed as special privileges subject to and conditional upon the language under the heading of "Special privileges," to wit, "Policy nonforfeitable after the first year's premium has been paid. If this policy, after being in force one full year, shall lapse for nonpayment of premium, the company will continue in force the insurance under the policy for a period of 60 days from the due date of such premium as specified on the first page hereof. If this policy, after being in force two full years, shall lapse for nonpayment of premium, the company will continue in force the insurance under the policy for 120 days from the due date of such premium, provided, however, that, if the death of either of the insured shall occur during the period of continued insurance herein defined, there shall be deducted from the amount payable by the company any premium that would have become due on this policy up to the time of such death, if the policy had been continued in force. After the policy has been in force for 3 or more years, the above privilege, 'Paid by the joint life policy or extended insurance,' will apply." It is insisted that this clause shows that the 60 days and 120 days extended insurance named in the table "is not to be considered as extended insurance under the policy, but as special privilege agreed to by the company under the policy." We think this is a distinction without a difference, because the plaintiff's right is the same whether the stipulation above quoted is to be considered as an extended insurance value under the policy, or as a special privilege, provided it is likewise included in the policy. Whether the extended insurance is a special or a general privilege, it is very plain, from the provisions of the policy set out in plaintiff's petition, together with the statement that the premiums were payable quarterly, that the holder of the policy had a right to extended insurance when he had paid the premiums for one year and for two years, and we fail to see why he would not have the same right merely because he had paid two years and a half instead of two years. In fact, the policy itself provides that, "if the premiums on this policy be paid in quarterly or semiannual installments, due allowance will be made in computing benefits from the above table for that portion of a year's premium paid over and above the full number of years' premiums indicated."

The insistence of the defendant in error is that, under this latter clause, he is entitled to extended insurance based upon the additional extended insurance to which he would be entitled when the policy was $2\frac{1}{2}$ years old over what extended insurance he would be entitled to when the policy was 2 years old. The plaintiff seems to have reached the extent of his extended insurance as claimed in his petition by deducting from the duration of extended insurance to which he would have been entitled if the premiums for three full years had been paid the 120 days of extended insurance allowed for the payment of the first two years' premiums, and dividing the difference by two. The amount of the extended insurance if the premium had been paid for three years would be 542 days. The extended insurance for the 2 years is 120 days. The difference 422 days and the half which would be apportioned for the premiums paid for the additional 6 months would be 211 days, which would extend the policy from December 21, 1908, to a date beyond July 8, 1909, when Mrs. Chestnut, the insured, died.

We need not decide whether the judgment overruling the demurrer can be sustained by the method upon which the plaintiff based his calculations as to the duration of the extended insurance. There is no difficulty whatever in determining that the policy had not lapsed when the allegations of the petition that the payments were paid quarterly, and that the premium due December 21, 1908, was paid, are construed with other clauses of the contract. It must be remembered that the contract was prepared by the insurance company, and is to be at least reasonably construed in favor of the insured. Where there were any conflicting provisions which render the real intent of the parties doubtful, public policy requires that that construction be placed upon the policy most favorable to the insured. And every part of the contract will be considered in connection with every other part in an effort to reach the true intent of the parties in making the contract. Certainly it cannot be said that the contract will authorize the construction which would give the insured less rights because he had paid the premiums for two years and a half than he would have had when he had only paid premiums for two years. Certainly the fact that the company had received the premiums for the additional six months must be taken into consideration, and it cannot be held that the insurer should be permitted to take this much money without giving anything in return. The demurrer admits that the premiums in this case were paid quarterly, and the policy provides for such a payment, and goes on to say that in such a case "due allowance will be made, in computing benefits from the above table, for that portion of a year's premiums paid over and above the full number of years' premiums indicated." The only difference between the benefits conferred by the table upon those who have paid only one year's premium or two years' and those who may have paid more is that, while those who have paid premiums for one year and two years have the privilege of definitely fixed extended insurance, they are not entitled to cash loan values, cash surrender values, or a paid-up joint life policy. But the second clause of the "Special privileges" provides that, if this policy "after being in force two full years shall lapse for nonpayment of premium, the company will continue in force the insurance under the policy for 120 days from the due date of such premium." This is followed by a provision that any unpaid premiums shall be deducted from the amount to be paid by the company. Treating the scheme of the company as a fair and equitable one, the next quarterly payment (after the one which was paid on the 21st of December, 1908) was due March 21, 1909. It was not paid. But the policy had been in force two full years and more. One of two things was obliged to happen. Either the company after having received the premium due on December 21, 1908, would have it in its power to put the insured in a worse condition than if he had not paid that money, or else, as it is undenied that two full years' premiums had been paid, the holder of the policy would be entitled at least to as much extended insurance as he would have been if only two years' premiums had been paid and no more. By no method of computation could one who had paid more than two years' premiums be entitled from the reserve fund of the company in which he has an interest to a less amount than he would be entitled to if he had paid exactly two years' premiums. By any process of reasoning this contract would come in the class of those which had been in force two full years, and the plaintiff would be entitled to an extension of 120 days from March 21st, which was the due date of the quarterly premium. This would have extended the policy to July 19, 1909, and consequently there can be no question but that the extended insurance was in force on July 8, 1909, when Mrs. Chestnut died. The provision in regard to a "paid-up joint term policy," on which the counsel for plaintiff in error relies, of course, has no reference to the state of affairs such as those detailed in the petition, because that provision has special reference to a policy which has been in force for three full years. It is, however, not a paid-up joint term policy, but the benefit of the provision in regard to extended insurance for a definite time, which the plaintiff seeks to recover by his petition.

SUMMERFORD v. KINARD.

KINARD v. SUMMERFORD. (Nos. 2,819, 2,820.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 139*)—WAIVER OF SERVICE OF MOTION.

One who appears at the time and place set for a hearing of the motion for a new trial and orally agrees to the brief of evidence filed with the motion, but who, after the judge has corrected and approved the brief of evidence, moves to dismiss the motion for a new trial for want of service, can properly be held to have waived any formal service of the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 279; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

2. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 16*)—TITLE TO SUPPORT ACTION—RIGHT OF POSSESSION.

The evidence was sufficient to show such constructive delivery of the chattel as to complete the sale and pass title to the plaintiff. However, even if there was doubt upon this point, the evidence of the plaintiff's right of possession was sufficient to authorize a recovery in trover.

Error from City Court of Sylvester; J. B. Williamson, Judge.

Action by E. B. Kinard against J. H. Summerford. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant brings error; plaintiff filing cross-exceptions. Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed, and cross-bill dismissed.

Perry & Foy, for plaintiff in error. Claude Payton and C. E. Hay, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL J. In the main bill of exceptions, error is assigned upon the judgment overruling a motion for a new trial; and by a cross-bill error is assigned upon the refusal of the trial court to dismiss the motion for a new trial for want of service.

1. We will first consider the cross-bill of exceptions. It appears from the record that at the hearing of a motion for a new trial which had been filed by Summerford, Mrs. Kinard, the respondent, moved to dismiss the motion "for want of sufficient service on her, there being no official entry of service of a copy of said motion on her, or of the rule nisi or other part of said proceeding, and no acknowledgment of such service and no written waiver of such service, which said motion to dismiss the court overruled on the ground that it came too late, it being made after counsel for both sides had orally agreed to the correctness of the brief of evidence, and after the court had approved the brief of the evidence and the amended motion for a new trial, and after the court had orally announced its decision on the motion for a new trial." However, the motion to dismiss was made before the court had written or signed its judgment on the motion for a new trial.

We think the court properly refused to dismiss the motion for a new trial. The only purpose of the service of a motion for a new trial is to give the respondent such timely notice as will enable him to prepare for the hearing and to enable him, if he can, to show cause why a new trial should not be granted. The motion in this case does not contain any statement that the respondent was less prepared to resist the motion for a new trial than he would have been if he had been duly served. Of course, service of a motion for a new trial is always necessary in order to give notice, but formal service may be waived, and in this case under the facts stated, we think it was waived. In an ordinary suit service may be waived by appearance and pleadings. In the case of a motion for a new trial where ordinarily the respondent is not required to plead, we think appearance and participation in the preparatory steps necessary to perfect the motion is such a circumstance as that it may be inferred that the respondent had notice of the pendency of the proceeding equivalent to that which would have been given him of actual service, and, where no point is made to the effect that the notice was not given in sufficient time to enable the respondent to prepare for the hearing, it can be presumed that any formal service was waived.

2. Mrs. Kinard brought an action of trover to recover from Summerford a set of harness. According to the testimony for the plaintiff, Summerford sold Mrs. Kinard a set of harness in the settlement of a debt, and Mrs. Kinard was to get the harness whenever she sent for it. The defendant denied having sold the harness to Mrs. Kinard. The jury, by finding for the plaintiff, sustained the theory that Summerford sold the harness to Mrs. Kinard, and held them as her agent until she should call for them. We think the evidence is sufficient to establish constructive delivery and perfect the sale. Or, construing it in another way, the jury were authorized to find that, by the terms of the sale, a bailment was created, and that the harness was thereafter in the possession of Summerford as Mrs. Kinard's agent who was holding them for her use. In either event, the verdict in favor of the plaintiff would withstand the point raised against it by the plaintiff in error.

It was not necessary that the plaintiff should show that she was in possession of the harness if the jury believed her testimony, and that she bought them from Summerford and had paid for them. According to this testimony, the manual delivery was to be postponed until Mrs. Kinard called for the harness. This gave her the right of possession, and, upon her demand being refused, the right of possession would afford ground for an action of trover. The right of possession wrongfully withheld may authorize a recovery in trover. See Roper Wholesale Grocery Co. v. Favor, 8 Ga. App. —, 68 S. E. 883.

Judgment on the main bill of exceptions affirmed; cross-bill of exceptions dismissed.

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. BUTLER. (No. 2,271.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLECT—PRESUMPTION.

The court did not err in refusing to award a nonsuit. The evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to infer that the plaintiff's injury was attributable to the negligent act of a person in the employment of the railroad company, which would raise the statutory presumption of negligence on the part of the company. Civ. Code 1895, § 2321.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 877-908; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 284*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Even if there had been no statutory presumption of negligence, it would have been proper for the court to have submitted to the jury the circumstance that the instrument which caused the plaintiff's injury was in the control and under the management of the defendant, and to have allowed the jury to determine, from the circumstances under which the casualty occurred, whether the defendant had satisfactorily explained the occurrence and rebutted the inference of negligence arising from the event, if, indeed, negligence could be inferred from the nature of the occurrence. In any case where the inference of negligence may as well be drawn as the inference that the casualty resulted from accident, it is error to award a nonsuit. Even if the explosion of a tank used to hold Pintsch gas is not such an unusual occurrence as to support the inference that an injury resultant from the explosion was due to the negligence of the defendant's servants having the tank in charge and engaged in repairing it, the evidence in behalf of the plaintiff showed that he was himself free from fault, and that the injury was inflicted upon him by the acts of others in the employment of the defendant railroad company. This raised the presumption that the defendant was negligent in the respects alleged in the petition, and presented a prima facie case, which was properly submitted to the jury.

Error from City Court of Savannah; Davis Freeman, Judge.

Action by Charlie Butler against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Butler sued the Central of Georgia Railway Company upon the following cause of action: He was in the employ of the defendant as a helper around the defendant's machine and repair shop. He was at work as a helper to the carpenters, and had been sent to carry some irons into the boiler room. He did so, and, as he started out, the tank exploded, causing the injury described in the petition. A Pintsch gas tank used on passenger cars for illuminating purposes was being repaired in the boiler shop. It contained a large amount of illuminating gas, which was highly explosive, and this gas precipitated an oil coating on the side of the tank, which, when heated, forms a highly explosive gas. The machinist and his helper were repairing this tank or reservoir. The plaintiff had nothing to do with its repair. The tank was being repaired by heating a dented place so as to soften the metal, and then turn on compressed air to force it out in its proper shape. Twenty pounds of air pressure was all it could safely stand, but the defendant's servants turned on a pressure of over 60 or 65 pounds. This large amount of moist air coming in contact with the gas residue remaining in the tank and with the gas generated by the heating of the coating precipitated upon the side of the tank and with the heated sides of the tank caused a violent explosion. The plaintiff did not know that the tank was likely to explode, or that it was going to explode, and nobody had warned him as to the danger of an explosion. The petition charged the defendant with negligence in the following particulars: (1) In causing said reservoir to be heated while it contained illuminating gas. (2) In causing compressed air to be forced into said reservoir while it had illuminating gas stored in it. (3) In causing a high and dangerous pressure of moist compressed air to be turned into the tank or reservoir, to wit, a pressure of 60 to 65 pounds. (4) In failing to furnish, keep, and maintain a safe place of work for plaintiff. (5) In failing to notify and warn plaintiff that the tank was likely to explode, and that it was dangerous for plaintiff to be near it.

The plaintiff's evidence established the following facts: He was at work for the defendant on February 23, 1909, as a carpenter helper, toting iron and stuff backward and forward to the carpenters. On that day the gas tank burst and the plaintiff was hurt. He went into the boiler room to carry some corner irons to be cut off and a couple of holes bored in them. When he had put the corner irons down and had gotten within about four feet of the tank, going to the blacksmith's shop, the tank burst, and something struck him and knocked him unconscious, breaking his skull, burning his arm, and injuring his finger. He was working under a carpenter named Long who sent him into the boiler room. He went to the boiler shop and carried the things where he was ordered to carry them. Nobody told him there was any danger in being around the tank. He did not know that the tank was going to explode or was likely to explode, and nobody had warned him as to the danger of an explosion. A witness for the plaintiff testified that he was a boiler maker, and at the time the plaintiff was injured was at work for the defendant. That day a gas tank exploded. This gas tank had been used for storing Pintsch gas on passenger or sleeping cars, and had been damaged or mashed out of shape. He and his helper were working on it. He was heating it and putting the pressure of compressed air in it. At the time of the explosion he had turned the air into the tank while it was heated. Twenty pounds of air were first turned on, but this did not cause an explosion. Then the foreman, Mr. Linder, turned on about 60 or 65 pounds. In a short time after this high pressure was turned on the explosion occurred. The plaintiff had nothing to do with the work on the tank. The tank was not of the latest kind, but of the old kind, and the air that was used in the tank was very damp. The plaintiff proved that his age was 23 years, and introduced mortality tables. Some other evidence was introduced as to the nature of the plaintiff's injuries, but it is not material to the issue presented. Upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which the court refused, and exception is taken to the judgment refusing to nonsuit.

Lawton & Cunningham, for plaintiff in error. Osborne & Lawrence, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). We think it would have been error to have nonsuited the plaintiff. We are clearly of the opinion that the evidence was sufficient to show that he received his injury at the hands of a person in the employment of the defendant. There is no dispute as to this fact, unless it be assumed that the explosion was an accident, and only the jury could act upon this assumption. The evidence being sufficient to raise the statutory presumption under section 2321 in the Civil Code of 1895, the plaintiff had proved a prima facie case placing upon the defendant liability for the negligence alleged in the petition, which it was the duty of the defendant to rebut. But, even if this had not been the case, the explosion of the tank was such an unusual circumstance that the jury might have inferred from this unusual circumstance and the fact that the tank was in the possession and control of the defendant at the time, that the thing spoke for itself of negligence. In that event the burden would have been cast upon the defendant of showing what was the real cause of the explosion, or that the defendant was not liable therefor. The ruling of the court in refusing a nonsuit was clearly right.

Judgment affirmed.

HARTMAN STOCK FARM v. HENLEY et al. (No. 2,321.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 431*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—DENYING EXECUTION OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the defendants' plea. While parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written contract, it is always permissible for the defendant to show, if he can, not only that the writing was not in fact executed by him, but even in a case where execution is admitted that the written instrument was never in fact delivered as a present contract, unconditionally binding upon the obligor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1969, 1975-1980; Dec. Dig. § 431.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 139*)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

The court erred in directing a verdict for the defendants for the reason that a finding in favor of their answer was not demanded. Their antecedent and coexistent obligation in writing which related to the same subject as the note sued upon and provided for their joint and several liability would have authorized a recovery in favor of the plaintiff.

3. EVIDENCE (§ 420*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—VARYING WRITTEN CONTRACT.

One who in the purchase of personal property enters into a written obligation, agreeing to pay therefor a certain stipulated sum and to execute notes with others, imposing upon the makers joint and several liability therefor, will not be heard thereafter to prove by parol conditions contradictory to a writing which, it is not denied, was executed as to signature as well as finally delivered.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by the Hartman Stock Farm against J. T. Henley and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

J. S. James, for plaintiff in error. Roberts & Hutcheson, for defendants in error.

RUSSELL, J. The Hartman Stock Farm brought a suit upon a promissory note for $933, attaching a copy of the note to its petition. The defendants filed an answer, in which they set up that the note was not binding upon them, for the reason that an agent of the plaintiff represented to them that in the event that any of the purchasers of a certain horse (which was the consideration of the note), and especially W. C. Abercrombie, W. J. Camp, and T. S. Abercrombie, should fail or refuse to sign the note with them, the note was to be a nullity, and not to be delivered to the plaintiff. The plaintiff demurred to the answer of the defendants, especially upon the ground that the answer undertakes to add conditions to the note other than those stated and to vary its terms. The main insistence of the plaintiff's demurrer was that the defendants' answer tended to let in parol evidence to vary the terms of the writing, which was the basis of the suit.

We think the court properly overruled the plaintiff's demurrer to the answer. As was held in Heltmann v. Commercial Bank, 6 Ga. App. 584, 65 S. E. 590, a written instrument "may, by parol or other extrinsic evidence, be shown not to be a contract at all, because of the nonperformance of a condition precedent as to which the writing is silent. * * * It may be shown by parol or other extrinsic evidence that the writing is not a valid or enforceable legal obligation because it does not possess finality of utterance as a completed, all-comprehensive, and presently operative embodiment of the entire agreement of the contracting parties." It is manifest, as pointed out in the Heltmann Case, that there is a very marked difference between allowing parol evidence for the purpose of varying the terms of a writing whose execution and delivery is not denied and allowing proof, even though it be parol, for the purpose of showing that on account of the nonperformance of some condition, perhaps not stated in the instrument, the alleged contract was in reality never created at all. And in that case we cited a number of authorities in this state and from other jurisdictions in which it has been held that it may be shown even by parol that a writing absolute on its face and whose terms are not disputed has never become operative as a binding contract because of a contingency which was the subject of an extrinsic agreement not referred to in the writing itself. In the present case, in answer to the plaintiff's petition, the defendants had the right to set up, if they could, that they signed the note, not as a completed contract, but subject to the condition that the note was to become binding only when signed by all of a number of designated persons, and that none should be bound unless all of those whom it was agreed should sign the note did in fact sign it. While parol evidence is inadmissible to alter or vary the terms of a written contract, where the contract itself is admitted or proved, the delivery of a writing is as essential as its signing. Each one of the parties who signed the note in this case had the right to show that his execution of the note depended upon all of the parties signing who had agreed to sign with him, and that the completion of the contract and the delivery of the note itself were to be postponed and be subject to this condition. It was immaterial whether this condition was stated in the note or not, for, if those who signed the note did show this distinct understanding, the note was not complete or executed until all had signed the instrument whose signatures were necessary to make it complete in accordance with the agreement. Section 3706 of the Civil Code of 1895 which provides that "any fact going to show that the original contract was not obligatory, though executed, may be set up as a defense," is closely akin to the principle which we have just stated, though, of course, where it is expressly agreed that an instrument is to have no effect until three designated persons sign it and only two of them in fact sign,

'the proposed contract fails to come into being as a legal entity. In such a case evidence brought to attack it cannot be classified as being introduced for the purpose of varying the terms of a contract, but is rather as an effort to deny its existence.

2. The court erred in directing a verdict for the defendants for the reason that a finding in favor of their answer was not demanded. Their antecedent and coexistent obligation in writing, which related to the same subject as the note sued upon, and provided for their joint and several liability, would have authorized a recovery in favor of the plaintiff. All of the defendants who were sworn testified that Johnson, whom they asserted to be an agent of the plaintiff, procured their signature to the note only upon his expressed assurance that the note should not be binding unless it was signed by all of those who had subscribed for the stallion, and especially unless it was signed by W. J. Camp, T. S. Abercrombie, and W. C. Abercrombie, and that the note was to be void and to be canceled unless these parties did in fact sign it. There was no evidence sustaining that portion of the defendants' answer in which it was insisted that the three shares alleged to have been sold to W. J. Camp, W. C. Abercrombie, and T. S. Abercrombie were never in fact sold or subscribed for by them in good faith. On the contrary, the plaintiff introduced the following contract, which was not only signed by the defendants, but by W. J. Camp and the two Abercrombies:

"Douglasville Ga. Aug 10, 1905. Name of stallion: German Coach Daemon, # 636. Hartman Stock Farm agree to sell the above-named stallion for $2,800 to the other undersigned subscribers, who, wishing to improve their stock, agree to pay Hartman Stock Farm $200 for each share in the said stallion. Capitol stock $2,800. Number of shares, 14. Payments to be made in cash, or one-third in one year, one-third in two years, and one-third in three years after Aug. 15, 1905. Secured by joint and several negotiable notes, with interest at seven per cent. per annum.

This contract was pre-existent and coexistent with the note itself, and could have as well afforded the basis for a suit as the note itself. This contract of sale and purchase, it will be noted, was made five days prior to the purported agreement of August 15, 1905, by which the signers to the latter instrument agreed among themselves to form a stock company. The execution and delivery of this contract of purchase not being denied, the Hartman Stock Farm could not be affected in any way by the subsequent agreement of the subscribers to form a stock company, or by a subsequent parol statement that none should be bound on the note unless others signed with them. The parties who signed the obligation which we have quoted above would be jointly and severally bound for the amount therein specified whether they afterwards succeeded in forming a corporation or not, and even if Johnson, as agent, agreed that he would form the corporation for them. The defendants are not prejudiced in any of their rights under the obligation voluntarily assumed by them on August 10, 1905, by reason of the fact that the two Abercrombies and W. J. Camp did not sign the note. The obligation of the notes was to be several. Certainly, when this contract was introduced by the plaintiff, it became a question of fact for the jury whether the defendants signed the notes as they testified because of Johnson's representations, or in pursuance of their agreement and written obligation made several weeks before to make just such a note. In fact, it is questionable whether under the answer as filed the testimony introduced in behalf of the defendants could seriously be considered in the face of the written agreement and while its validity is unquestioned. We do not rule upon this at this time, but it would seem to be a violation of the rule invoked by the counsel for the plaintiff in error to permit the defendants to vary the terms of the agreement of August 10th by parol testimony in conflict therewith. To say the least of it, however, the introduction of this contract by which the defendants agreed to buy the horse in question and to give their several note raised such an issue as should have been submitted to the jury. It is to be noted, too, that the defendants did not plead that the horse was not delivered to any one of the defendants, nor is there any plea that the horse was not all that he was represented to be. The whole contention of the defendants' answer upon this subject is that the horse was not delivered to the corporation which the defendants insist the plaintiff agreed to form. It seems that this proposed corporation was to be known as the Douglasville German Coach Horse Company, and on August 15, 1905, all of the parties who signed the contract of purchase of August 10th agreed to form a corporation by this name. Of course, this did not effectuate an incorporation, but the difficulty is that the agreement of August 10th, which we have quoted and which is signed by the Hartman Stock Farm, as well as by the defendants, was not made with the Douglasville German Coach Horse Company, but with certain individuals, part of whom are the defendants in this case. It is perhaps true that the defendants made a bad trade. They may have been overreached in making it; but the record shows that they failed to set aside the contract of August 10, 1905, by which they bound themselves to do the same thing, no more and no less than the note which they attempted to disown requires of them. If the Abercrombies and W. J. Camp, as the evidence discloses, are men of large means, the defendants have their right of contribution preserved unimpaired by the contract which the Abercrombies and W. J. Camp appear to have signed.

As we stated above, the plaintiff could have proceeded upon the contract against all the parties instead of suing on the note which was not signed by three of those who signed the contract; but the failure of these three to sign the note will not relieve them from the obligation of the pre-existing contract in which they agreed to sign just such a note.

There is considerable testimony in the record in regard to the nondelivery of the horse. The testimony of the witnesses, however, is to the effect that the horse was not delivered to any member of the Douglasville German Coach Horse Company as such. As we have stated above, neither the contract nor the note was entered into by the Douglasville German Coach Horse Company, or refers to it. The Hartman Stock Farm is not a party to the contract or agreement of the subscribers who agreed to form this corporation. There is no evidence that the Hartman Stock Farm ever delegated to any of its agents the authority of forming corporations. In the absence of such evidence, authority to form a corporation cannot be implied as one of the duties of one employed to sell a horse. The statement of Johnson that that was one of his duties could not be sufficient evidence of his authority to bind the Hartman Stock Farm in that respect. But, even if a jury could infer all of these things from the evidence, there is certainly evidence in behalf of the plaintiff that Johnson had no such authority; and therefore it became such an issuable fact as rendered it necessary that the question should be submitted to the jury if the question was material. In our view of the matter, however, if the horse was delivered to any one of the individuals who signed the contract or the note in accordance with the terms of the contract, and in the absence of any express direction that the horse should be delivered to a specified individual, the delivery of the horse to any one of the persons who purchased him jointly would be delivery to all of them, for the person to whom the horse was thus delivered could hold him in his own right and as agent for all of the other subscribers. Considering the case in the view most favorable to the defendants, there is nothing said in the original contract about a formation of a corporation, and the defendants were bound to know that no legal corporation had in fact been formed. There is therefore nothing in the point that the horse was not delivered to any officer of the corporation. The agreement to form a corporation, if it had any effect at all, might have created a partnership between the subscribers thereto, even though the name imported a corporation; but, if that were the case, delivery of the horse to any one of the partners would be as good as delivery to the partnership as a whole. It is obvious, therefore, that the testimony in regard to the nondelivery of the horse is ineffectual for that purpose. If the subscribers to the contract of August 10, 1905, bound themselves jointly and severally to pay the amount specified and agreed to execute the note to cover the total amount, it seems to us that those who signed the note could not be relieved from its payment merely because others may not have signed the note as all agreed to do. The joint and several obligations to pay would survive, though the joint and several obligations to make a note were not complied with. And it is questionable if one who does not deny having assumed several liability for the whole of the debt evidenced by a promissory note will be heard to say that he should be relieved from payment which he has undertaken merely because one of his co-obligors declines to perform one of the duties which they jointly and severally assumed.

The court did not err in refusing to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, because it is never error to refuse to direct a verdict; but we are clear that the verdict should not have been directed in favor of the defendants upon the plea as filed.

The court did not err in ruling out the bill of sale purporting to have been made by the Hartman Stock Farm to the Douglasville German Coach Horse Company. There was no evidence that it had ever been delivered to the defendants or either of them or that they had any knowledge of such a paper.

All of the other exceptions, though not specifically referred to, are sufficiently dealt with in the opinion.

Judgment reversed.

EDWARDS & WALTER v. ENTERPRISE BANK.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 30, 1910.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 346*)—SPECIAL CONTRACTS—RECOVERY.

Under a complaint based on a special contract plaintiff may not recover on a quantum meruit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1748; Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 349*)—SPECIAL CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where the existence and terms of a special contract for services are in dispute, evidence of the reasonable value of the services rendered is admissible to show which statement as to the special contract is probably correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 349.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 346*)—SPECIAL CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for architect's services, the complaint alleged a special contract for the services and their reasonable value, and the answer raised an issue on the allegations of the complaint, evidence of the reasonable value of the services was admissible as responsive to the issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1718-1748; Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 349*)—SPECIAL CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where defendant, in an action for architect's services, alleged that under the contract the price was to be made satisfactory to him, plaintiff could show the reasonable value of the services and the usual price paid therefor to show the price which defendant should regard as satisfactory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1795; Dec. Dig. § 349.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 204*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED IN TRIAL COURT.

An exception to the admission of evidence is not reviewable where it does not appear that any objection was made to the introduction of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1258-1280; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for architect's services, the pleadings raised an issue as to the reasonable value of the services, and whether full compensation had been made on that basis, a charge that if defendant was to pay what the work was reasonably worth, taking in consideration the amount which had been paid, and that if defendant had paid as much as the work was reasonably worth, the verdict must be for him, was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 706*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—RECORD.

An exception to the refusal to grant a new trial on the ground of improper argument of the attorney of the successful party cannot be considered on appeal, where there is nothing in the record on which to base it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2944-2947; Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; C. C. Featherstone, Special Judge.

Action by Edwards & Walter against the Enterprise Bank. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dial & Todd and Simpson, Cooper & Babb, for appellant. Nichols & Nichols and Richey & Richey, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. The plaintiffs, who are architects, brought this action to recover a balance of $571.22 alleged to be due them by defendant for drawing plans and specifications, inspecting and advising as to bids, and supervising the construction of defendant's bank building, alleging that defendant had agreed to pay plaintiffs for their services 5 per cent. of the gross cost of the building, including ornamental plaster, electric wiring, heating, bank furniture, and plumbing; that the gross cost of the building was $31,424.50. The complaint further alleged that plaintiffs were entitled to receive for their services under the contract $1,571.22, and that plaintiffs' services so rendered were reasonably worth the said 5 per cent.; but that defendant has only paid $1,000 on their account for said work. The answer denied the allegations of the complaint, alleged that defendant did engage plaintiffs to draw plans and specifications for a bank building but that no specific sum was agreed upon for said services, and that plaintiffs promised to make the price satisfactory to defendant, that the work was performed in a dilatory and careless manner, and that the sum of $1,000 paid them was sufficient and full satisfaction for the services rendered by plaintiffs, and that defendant owed them nothing. The verdict and judgment was in favor of plaintiffs for $471.

While the exceptions relate to the admission and rejection of testimony, the refusal of the presiding judge, Hon. C. C. Featherstone, to grant the motion for a new trial, and the charge of the presiding judge, the controlling question presented is whether under the pleadings it was competent for plaintiffs to introduce evidence as to what their services were reasonably worth, as to what was paid in the same town about the same time for similar services. Waiving the point that the objections to the testimony were practically withdrawn at the trial by counsel for appellant, we think the testimony was competent. The general rule is that, under a complaint based upon a special contract, plaintiff cannot recover upon a quantum meruit. Fitzsimons v. Guanahani Co., 16 S. C. 192; Birlant v. Cleckley, 48 S. C. 306, 26 S. E. 600. But it does not follow that under a complaint for services based upon a special contract testimony as to the reasonable value of the services is wholly irrelevant and its admission reversible error.

While such testimony may not be admitted as a ground of recovery, it is admissible and relevant, when there is conflict as to the existence and terms of the special contract, for the purpose of showing which statement as to the special contract is probably correct. Tarrant v. Gittelson, 16 S. C. 234; 9 Cyc. 767, and note 74.

In the case at bar the complaint not only alleges a special contract, but contains an allegation that the services rendered were reasonably worth the amount claimed, and the answer raised an issue on these matters. The testimony was therefore responsive to the allegations and issues raised, and hence was also admissible on that ground. 22 Ency. p. 1876. The contention of defendant was that under the contract the price for the services was to be made satisfactory to it. Upon this issue it was competent for plaintiffs to show the reasonable value of the services and the usual price paid therefor as tending to show a price which defendant should have regarded as satisfactory. For these reasons the testimony was admissible.

The exception to the admission in evidence of a certain list showing the items upon which plaintiffs based their charge for services, and items excluded as a basis for such charge, cannot be sustained, first, because it does not appear that any objection was made to the introduction of the list, and, second, because we fail to see how defendant was prejudiced. Exception is taken to the second sentence in the following charge: "If you find that the plaintiffs have made out to your satisfaction, by the greater weight of the evidence, that this defendant did make an express contract, and that this defendant was to pay them 5 per cent. on the gross cost of that building, then you find from the testimony what that cost was, get 5 per cent. of that amount, deduct what has been paid, and write your verdict for the plaintiffs. If you find, on the other hand, that there was no express contract, and that this defendant here was simply to pay the plaintiffs what the work was reasonably worth, then you find from the testimony what that work was worth, take into consideration the $1,000 which it is admitted has already been paid, and write your verdict accordingly. Of course, if the defendant has already paid as much as the work was reasonably worth, provided you find there was no express contract, there is an end of the case, and you write your verdict for the defendant." As the pleadings raised an issue as to the reasonable value of plaintiffs' services and whether full compensation had been made on that basis, the charge was not prejudicial to plaintiffs.

The exception that a new trial should have been granted because one of the plaintiffs' attorneys in his argument to the jury brought in foreign and extraneous matter cannot be sustained or considered, as there is nothing in the record upon which to base the exception.

The exceptions not directly referred to are either involved in the rulings made or are not deemed of sufficient importance to require further notice.

The exceptions are overruled, and the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Chas. G. Dantzier, Judge.

Action by the Southern Seating & Cabinet Company against the First National Bank. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. B. Barnwell, for appellant. Buist & Buist, for respondent.

WOODS, J. On March 9, 1907, Bishop H. P. Northrop sent to the plaintiffs a check for $500 on the First National Bank of Charleston, S. C. This check has never been presented for payment. The plaintiffs having written Bishop Northrop asking payment of the balance of a debt which the check was intended to pay, Bishop Northrop sent another check written in these words: "Charleston, S. C. 8th April, 1907. No.

_____. The First National Bank of Charleston, S. C. Pay to the order of the Southern Seating and Cabinet Company, $500, five hundred 00/100 dollars. If previous check for $500, dated March 9th, is still unpaid. H. P. Northrop." This check having been duly presented and payment having been refused when Bishop Northrop had to his credit on his deposit account over $5,000, the plaintiffs sued the bank thereon. The circuit court sustained the bank's defense that it could not be required to pay the second check when it had notice by the writing on the check that the original check covering the same debt was outstanding. The case does not call for a discussion of the rights of the bank and the depositor and the payee when ordinary original and duplicate checks are given; for the depositor on the face of the check gave explicit directions as to the application of his funds which the bank was bound to follow. Having abundant funds to pay both checks, he directed the bank in language which could not be made plainer to pay the plaintiffs the sum of $500 and charge it to his deposit account, unless the bank had already paid another check for a like amount dated March 9th in favor of the same payees. As the bank had not paid such other check, this check, under the law of South Carolina, became on presentation an assignment pro tanto of the deposit account, and the bank became liable to the payee for the amount of the check. Loan & Savings Bank v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 74 S. C. 210, 54 S. E. 364.

There is no risk to the bank in paying the check. The depositor, Bishop Northrop, by the express direction to pay the second check if the first had not been paid, chose to assume all risks as to the first check given by him, including the risk that it might be necessary for the bank's protection that it should hold $500 of his funds to meet the first check in case it should be presented by a bona fide indorsee for value.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed.

PARK v. FUNDERBURK et al.

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 146*)—INDORSEMENT OF NOTE—GENUINENESS.

Where a note executed to a firm was presented for transfer by one of the members thereof with the indorsement of the name of the payee thereon, such act constituted the adoption of the indorsement, and was sufficient proof of the genuineness thereof.

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 373*)—NATURE OF PAPEER—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Fraudulent representations of the payee of a note as to the nature of a paper which can be plainly read will not avail the maker in a suit brought on the note by an indorsee for value before maturity and without notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 968; Dec. Dig. § 373.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lancaster County; J. C. Klugh, Judge.

Action by Howard C. Park against W. A. Funderburk and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Williams & Williams and Ernest Moore, for appellants. J. Harry Foster, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The defendants bought a stallion called "Capuchin" from McLaughlin Bros., of Columbus, Ohio, at the price of $3,500, for which they gave three plain negotiable notes. At the same time McLaughlin Bros. gave the defendants a separate paper containing certain guaranties with respect to the soundness and capacity of the horse. The plaintiff, claiming to be an indorsee and purchaser for value before maturity, brought this action on the note for $1,166 due December 1, 1907. The defendants denied in a qualified way that they had given the note, and set up the failure of McLaughlin Bros. to make good their guaranties, and the return of the horse to them. They denied the transfer of the note to the plaintiff, and alleged that, if the transfer had been made, the plaintiff took it with notice of their defenses. On the trial the circuit judge directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and the question made by the appeal is whether the evidence admitted of any other inference than that the plaintiff had acquired title to the note by indorsement before maturity without notice of a valid defense thereto.

The plaintiff introduced the note with the name of the payees written on the back, and testified that he bought it in the regular course of business, giving his bank check for the purchase money without notice of the consideration or of any collateral agreement or of any defense. The check for $1,100 indorsed by McLaughlin Bros. was also introduced. The defendants insist that there was no evidence that the indorsement of the name of the payees was made by them or by their authority, but this position is untenable, since the plaintiff testified that the note was delivered to him by one of the members of the firm of McLaughlin Bros. with the firm name written thereon. Obviously this was an adoption by the firm of the signature on the back of the note; and a signing authorized by a party or adopted by him is quite as good as a signature written by his own hand. But, aside from this evidence, the holder of a promissory note with the name of the payee indorsed thereon is presumed to be the indorsee for value before maturity without notice. First National Bank v. Anderson, 28 S. C. 143, 5 S. E. 843; Id., 11 S. E. 379, 32 S. C. 538; Cyc. 229. There was no evidence whatever offered by the defendants on this point contrary to that of the plaintiff, or tending to overcome the presumption of law.

The defendants next contend that the court should have submitted to the jury the question whether the note was invalid in the hands of the plaintiff, because there was evidence that it had been procured from the defendants by the fraudulent representations of the payees of the note to the effect that it was not a negotiable promissory note, but a paper expressing conditional liability. No principle is better established than that the fraudulent representations of the payee of a promissory note as to the nature of a paper which can be plainly read will not avail the maker in a suit brought by the indorsee for value before maturity without notice. Sims v. Lyles, 1 Hill, 39, 26 Am. Dec. 155; Hand v. Savannah & Charleston Railroad Co., 17 S. C. 219.

The position on behalf of the defendants M. C. Gardner, Samuel Laney, and W. S. Langley that there was no evidence of their signing the note is not well taken. The defendants T. M. Belk, L. M. Clyburn, and L. S. Elliott testified, in effect, that all the defendants signed the note, and there was no evidence to the contrary.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

3. EVIDENCE (§ 457*)—ADMISSION—EXPLAINING WRITING.

The appellate court will not say that the trial court erred in admitting oral testimony defining the terms "loose delivered Bennettsville," "shipment buyer's option," "dry salt," and "margins to cover any decline in the market shall be deposited by the buyer promptly on demand of the seller, and the failure to deposit same promptly shall entitle the seller to close out his contract and hold the buyer for any loss," in a contract; the judge having admitted it on the ground that he did not understand such terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2104, 2107, 2108; Dec. Dig. § 457.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—EVIDENCE EXPLAINING A WRITTEN CONTRACT—ADMISSION OF—HARMLESS ERROR.

Defendants cannot complain on appeal that a witness was permitted to explain the meaning of the terms of a written contract; the explanation being in accordance with their own contention as to such meaning.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

5. GAMING (§ 13*)—GAMBLING CONTRACTS—FUTURE DELIVERY OF GOODS—OPTIONS.

An option in a contract for the future delivery of goods that will allow another settlement of the contract than the actual delivery is not invalid; it being also provided that there should be an actual delivery of the goods.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

6. GAMING (§ 12*)—GAMBLING CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—FUTURE DELIVERY OF GOODS—INTENTION THE CRITERION.

Although a contract contained the provision that on the decline of the market price of goods before delivery the seller may close out the contract and hold the buyer responsible for any loss, yet, if there was a bona fide intention of the parties that the goods should be actually delivered, the contract was valid under the statute making such bona fide intention of both parties at the time of making the contract the criterion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1046*)—REVIEW—VERDICT—REMARKS OF JUDGE.

Remarks of the trial judge implying that the preponderance of the evidence was contrary to the verdict could not afford ground for the granting of a new trial by the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1046.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marlboro County; G. W. Gage, Judge.

Action by W. S. Forbes & Co. against W. M. & J. J. Pearson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Townsend & Rogers, for appellant. Newton & Owens, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The question involved in this case was whether a gambling venture on the future price of meat, or a real sale of meat to be actually delivered in the future, was contemplated by the following contract: "W. S. Forbes & Co. have sold to M. W. & J. J. Pearson, Bennettsville, S. C., the following product: 25,000 pounds 55-60 Av. Ribs at 9.55 loose delivered Bennettsville. Shipment buyer's option. The above price is based on shipment on or before January 31st, 1907. A carrying charge of 7½ cents per one hundred pounds per month, or fraction thereof to be added to the above price if the meat is carried beyond January 31st, 1907, and the entire contract to be completed by May 31st, 07. Margins to cover any decline in the market shall be deposited by the buyer promptly on demand of the seller, and the failure to deposit same promptly shall entitle the seller to close out this contract and hold the buyer for any loss. Ribs exchangeable for other cuts of Dry Salt meat at ruling difference in price 'day of shipment. [Signed] W. S. Forbes & Co. Accepted: [Signed] M. W. & J. J. Pearson. January 18, 1907." After the contract was made, there was a decline in the price of meat, upon which plaintiffs made a draft on defendants for the margins according to the agreement. Defendants refused to pay the draft, and plaintiffs then wrote that, the time for ordering out the meat having expired, they would ship it according to the contract unless defendants arranged promptly for the margin. The defendants failed to comply with this demand, and by letter of May 31, 1907, directed the plaintiffs not to ship the meat. Thereupon the plaintiffs sold the meat on the market below the contract price and brought this action to recover the loss of $260.25. The verdict and judgment was in favor of the plaintiffs for the amount claimed.

The first exception assigns error in allowing the witnesses McKellar and Exum to give their opinions as to whether the written contract contemplated an actual delivery of the meat. The exception cannot be sustained, for the court refused to allow plaintiff's counsel to elicit from the witnesses any opinion as to the meaning of the contract, until defendant's counsel had himself opened the subject by examination of the witnesses as to their understanding of the true meaning of contracts like this, appearing to contemplate future delivery, and as to the dealings of the witnesses with the plaintiffs.

The defendant next contends that the witness De Pass should not have been allowed to define the meaning of these expressions found in the contract: "Loose delivered Bennettsville"; "shipment buyer's option"; "dry salt"; "margins to cover any decline in the market shall be deposited by the buyer promptly on demand of the seller, and the failure to deposit same promptly shall entitle the seller to close out this contract and hold the buyer for any loss." Where doubt arises as to the meaning of the words used in a contract, for the enlightenment of the judge or jury, parol evidence may be admitted of the signification the words have according to the usage of those accustomed to make contracts of this kind; but such evidence is not admissible when the meaning of the language is plain. Fairly v. Wappoo Mills, 44 S. O. 227, 22 S. E. 108, 29 L. R. A. 215; Kentucky Co. v. People's Supply Co., 77 S. C. 92, 57 S. E. 676, 122 Am. St. Rep. 540. In this case, the circuit judge having admitted the evidence on the ground that he himself did not understand the meaning of the terms used, surely this court cannot say that they were too plain to need explanation. Furthermore, the defendants have no ground for complaint, for the meaning expressed by the witness was that which appellants' counsel contend was perfectly plain.

There was no error in the following instruction to the jury: "An option in a contract for future delivery of goods that will allow another settlement of the contract than the actual delivery of the goods is not invalid, if it is also provided in the contract, and it was the intention of the parties to the contract, that there should be an actual delivery of the goods sold." The defendants insist on this point that, although the parties may have entered into the contract with the bona fide intention that the goods contracted for should be actually delivered, yet the contract was made illegal by the provision giving the seller the right on decline of market price before delivery "to close out this contract and hold the buyer responsible for any loss," on failure of the buyer to put up margins as security against loss. As to this contention it is enough to say that the court can add nothing to the statute, which makes the test of validity of such a contract the bona fide intention of both parties at the time of making the contract that the article sold shall be actually delivered by the seller and received by the buyer.

There is no ground to ask this court to reverse the order of the circuit court refusing a new trial. There was strong evidence on both sides of the issue whether the contract contemplates merely betting on the market or a bona fide delivery of the meat. We do not understand the following language used by the circuit judge to imply that he thought there was a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the defendants: "Candidly, I should have drawn a different conclusion from that which the jury drew; but I do not know how largely my judgment was affected by my antipathy to gambling contracts, and by my suspicion that such transactions are of too common occurrence. Viewing the testimony apart from these prejudices, I cannot say the verdict was against the clear preponderance of the testimony." But even if such an inference could be drawn as to the opinion of the circuit judge, it would not be ground for this court to order a new trial. Beaudrot v. Southern Ry., 69 S. O. 163, 48 S. E. 106; Hall v. Northwestern Ry., 81 S. C. 522, 62 S. E. 848.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

ALLEN PFEIFFER CHEMICAL CO. v. OWINGS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 26, 1910.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 264*)—ADMISSIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

An unqualified admission that a tender was made amounts to an admission that the tender was made at the proper time.

2. SALES (§ 64*)—INTERPRETATION—SALE OF MEDICINE.

Under a contract of sale of medicines providing that, "if the goods are not satisfactory, we agree to credit $36 at the end of six months, and exchange other goods for goods of our manufacture," the buyer had a right to make the deduction after the expiration of six months, on finding that the goods were unsaleable, though he did not exercise the option within six months, the contract being interpreted in view of the nature of the goods and the situation of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by the Allen Pfeiffer Chemical Company against O. Y. Owings. Judgment for defendant in the magistrate's court reversed on appeal to the circuit court, and now defendant appeals. Judgment of the magistrate's court affirmed.

De Pass & De Pass, for appellant. A. M. Lumpkin, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The defendant made a written contract with the plaintiff for the purchase of medicines; the price agreed upon being $68.75. On the contract the plaintiff's agent indorsed and signed this condition: "If goods are not satisfactory we agree to credit $36.00 at the end of six months, and exchange other goods for goods of our manufacture." The plaintiff sued in a magistrate's court for the entire purchase money. On trial the defendant testified that the goods were not satisfactory, in that he had been able to sell only $2.50 worth of them; that he had tendered $32.75, the sum due after deducting the credit of $36 to be allowed by the contract, and the defendant offered to allow judgment against himself for $32.75. The magistrate sustained the defense, and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for only the sum admitted by defendant to be due, but, upon appeal, the circuit court held "that, the defendant having failed to make the exchange of goods within six months as shown by notation above mentioned or avail himself of the option thereby given him within the six months, defendant has become liable for the full amount sued for at the regular price." The record does not indicate the date of the execution or of the maturity of the contract, or the date of the tender or of the commencement of the action. It does, however, contain an admission by plaintiff of tender; and a general and unqualified admission of tender must be held to be an admission of the tender of the amount stated at the proper time. The words expressing the condition of the contract, "If goods are not satisfactory we agree to credit $36.00 at the end of six months and exchange other goods for goods of our own manufacture," are to be interpreted in view of the nature of the goods and the situation of the parties. The drugs were of a kind not before dealt in by the defendant, and the purpose of the condition was doubtless to allow the defendant to try their salability and value before paying full price for them; but, to provide for a fair trial of the goods, it was agreed that the defendant could claim the credit only after the expiration of six months. When, therefore, at the expiration of six months, the defendant found the goods unsatisfactory because unsaleable, he had a right to be discharged on payment of the purchase price, $68.75, less the credit of $36 stipulated in the contract.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the judgment of the magistrate's court be affirmed.

Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Spartanburg County; R. Withers Memminger, Judge.

Action by Roxana Walker against Selva Alverson and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Nichols & Nichols and Wm. M. Jones, for appellants. Johnson & Nash, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. Mary Ann Johnson disposed of her property real and personal by her will as follows:

"Item 2. I give, bequeath and devise all of my property * * * unto my beloved husband, Thomas P. Johnson, for his sole use and control, during his natural life.

"Item 3. After the decease of my husband, it is my will and desire that my cousin, Roxana Sowell or her heirs, shall come into possession of all my property, both personal and real, forever.

"Item 4. In the event, if my cousin Roxana Sowell shall decease before my husband, Thomas P. Johnson, leaving no heir or heirs, I will and desire that the heirs of my brother S. James Ellis, or their heirs shall inherit all of my estate, after the death of my husband, Thomas P. Johnson."

During the life of Thomas P. Johnson the interest of Roxana Sowell (now Walker) in the real estate was sold under execution against her. The defendant is in possession, claiming under the purchaser at that sale. After the death of the life tenant, Roxana brought this action to recover the possession of the land. If the limitation to her was a contingent remainder, the purchaser at the sheriff's sale took nothing, and she is entitled to recover. But, if her interest was a vested remainder, it was conveyed by the sheriff's deed, and the defendant is entitled to retain the possession. Allston v. Bank, 2 Hill Eq. 235; Roundtree v. Roundtree, 26 S. C. 450, 2 S. E. 474.

The sole question, therefore, is: Was the limitation to Roxana a contingent or a vested remainder? The master and circuit court held that it was contingent, and gave judgment for plaintiff. The law favors the vesting of estates at the earliest time possible; and no remainder will be construed to be contingent which may consistently with the intention be deemed vested. 4 Kent, 195. "Whenever there is a doubt as to the quantity of the estate devised, or whether it is vested, the rule is to presume that the testator intended to give an absolute rather than a qualified estate, and a vested rather than a contingent interest; and even where the words import a contingency, but do not create a condition precedent, they give a vested interest to the devisee, subject, however, to be divested if the contingency should not happen." Smith v. Hilliard, 3 Strob. Eq. 223, 224. In considering the difference between vested and contingent remainders, Mr. Fearne calls attention to the confusion which sometimes arises from the failure to observe the distinction between the uncertainty which makes a remainder contingent and the uncertainty of its ever taking effect in possession, "a distinction," he says, "not always attended to, but absolutely requisite to complete an accurate notion of what is in law considered as a contingent estate; for, wherever there is a particular estate, the determination of which does not depend on any uncertain event, and a remainder is thereon absolutely limited to a person in esse and ascertained, in that case, notwithstanding the nature and duration of the estate limited in remainder may be such, as that it may not endure beyond the particular estate, and may therefore never take effect or vest in possession, yet it is not a contingent, but a vested, remainder. As if a lease be to A. for life, remainder to B. for life or in tail, here notwithstanding B. may possibly die, or die without issue in the lifetime of A. and consequently never come into possession; yet is his remainder vested in interest, and by no means comprised in the legal notion of a contingent estate. It is not the uncertainty of ever taking effect in possession that makes a remainder contingent; for to that every remainder for life or in tail is and must be liable, as the remainderman may die, or die without issue before the death of the tenant for life. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, and not the certainty that the possession will become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, universally distinguishes a vested remainder from one that is contingent." Fearne, Rem. p. 215. Again, at page 216, he says: "Wherever the preceding estate is limited, so as to determine on an event which certainly must happen, and the remainder is so limited to a person in esse, and ascertained, that the preceding estate may by any means determine before the expiration of the estate limited in remainder, such remainder is vested." Chancellor Kent thus expresses the difference: "It is not the uncertainty of enjoyment in the future, but the uncertainty of the right to that enjoyment which marks the difference between a vested and contingent interest." 4 Kent, 198. Mr. Washburne says: "A vested remainder is one the owner of which has the present capacity of taking the seisin in case the particular estate were to determine. But no degree of uncertainty as to the remainderman's ever enjoying his remainder will render it contingent, provided he has by the limitation a present absolute right to enjoy the estate the instant the prior estate should determine." 2 Wash. Real Prop. § 1541. In Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. 376-387, this court pointed out the distinction between vested and contingent remainders as follows: "The most marked distinction between the two kinds of remainders is that in the one case the right to the estate is fixed and certain, though the right to the possession is deferred to some future period; while in the other the right to the estate as well as the right to the possession of such estate is not only deferred to a future period, but is dependent on the happening of some future contingency."

With these rules and distinctions before us, let us examine the will to ascertain the intention of the testatrix, for to that we must give effect, unless it conflicts with some rule of law. After the death of her husband (a certain event), she gives the property to Roxana (a person in esse, and ascertained) or her heirs. If she had said no more, there would be no difficulty. But, after having given her property unqualifiedly to Roxana, she says, in the next clause: "In the event, if my cousin, Roxana, shall decease before my husband, I will and desire that the heirs of my brother, S. James Ellis, or their heirs, shall inherit all of my estate, after the death of my husband." The previous devise to Roxana manifests the intention that she should take in preference to the Ellis heirs. But the context shows that, after testatrix had given Roxana the estate, it occurred to her that she might die before the life tenant, without leaving heirs, and, to provide for that contingency, she made the devise over. It is contended that the contingency expressed in the limitation over cut down the absolute interest previously given to Roxana, and made it contingent upon her sur-living the life tenant. That depends upon whether the contingency expressed in the devise over is so incorporated into the substance of the gift to Roxana as to make her right to the estate depend upon her surviving the life tenant; or whether the testatrix, having in mind the uncertainty of her actual enjoyment of the estate, intended merely to provide for that contingency. We think the two clauses of the will taken together show the latter to have been her intention. If there had been no limitation over, precisely the same uncertainty as to Roxana's actual enjoyment of the estate would have existed. It is more consistent, therefore, with the intention expressed in the third clause of the will to give the estate to Roxana to hold that the fourth clause creates only a condition subsequent upon the happening of which the estate already vested will be divested. When a gift is made in one clause of a will in clear and unequivocal terms, the quantity or quality of the estate given should not be cut down or qualified by words of doubtful import found in a subsequent clause. To have that effect, the subsequent words should be at least as clear in expressing that intention as the words in which the interest is given. While a contingent remainder is one limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person or upon a dubious and uncertain event, it does not follow that every remainder which is subject to a contingency or a condition is therefore a contingent remainder. The condition may be precedent or it may be subsequent. If the former, the remainder is contingent; if the latter, it is vested, though it may be divested by the happening of the condition.

There is a class of cases which closely resemble in the rules of construction applicable the case under consideration, in which vested remainders are limited in terms which seem to import contingency; but the contingent expressions are construed to denote merely the time when the estate is to take effect in actual possession; as, for example, when an estate is limited to one, "if," or "when," or "as soon as" he attains a certain age, with a limitation over, in case he dies under the age specified, or dies under that age without issue, etc. There the words of apparent contingency are held, not to create a condition precedent to the right of enjoyment, or to denote the time when the interest shall vest, but merely the time when enjoyment in possession shall commence, or when an estate already vested shall be divested.

The case of Rivers v. Fripp, 4 Rich. Eq. 276, is an illustration of the rule. In that case the devise was to testator's wife for life, and, after her death, to his son for life; "and from and immediately after the death of my wife and son, unto the issue of my said son living at the time of his death, who shall live to attain the full age of twenty-one years, or who, dying before that time, shall leave issue to live until the time at which the parent or parents, if alive, would have reached the age of twenty-one years," and, in default of such issue, then over. Held to give a vested, but defeasible, interest, with immediate right to the rents and profits to a child of the son who survived both the wife and son, although such child died under 21 years of age, leaving no issue which lived until the time at which the parent, if alive, would have been 21 years of age. Seabrook v. Gregg, 2 S. C. 68, is another case construing the limitations of a will which, if not identical, are not materially different from those contained in the will construed in Rivers v. Fripp. In both these cases the English cases which established the rule of construction are reviewed at some length. The doctrine of these cases has never been questioned, and they are in accord with the current decisions, English and American, upon the point decided. In Rivers v. Fripp, at page 278, the court said: "The authorities concur that this inquiry must be determined by the sense in which the testator intended the devisee's interest in the property to depend upon his attaining the specified age. Thus, a devise to a person, if he shall live to attain a particular age, standing alone, would be contingent; yet, if it be followed by a limitation over in case he die under such age, the devise over is considered as explanatory of the sense in which the term is used, to wit, that at that age the estate should become absolute and indefeasible. The interest in question, therefore, is construed to vest instant. 1 Jarman on Wills, 738." So here the devise over is explanatory of the sense in which the testatrix intended the devise to Roxana to depend upon her surviving the life tenant, to wit, that at that time (the death of the life tenant) the estate should become absolute and indefeasible.

In Haynsworth v. Haynsworth, 12 Rich. Eq. 114, donor conveyed real and personal property to the use of his granddaughter M., wife of H., for life, and, after her death, to the use of H. for life, and, after his death, to the use of the children born and hereafter to be born of the said M. and their heirs; but, should the said M. and the said H. both die without leaving children living at the time of their decease born of the said M., then over. M. afterwards died, leaving H. and one child surviving her, and the child then died, leaving H. surviving him. Held, that the child took a vested transmissible interest, which became indefeasible at the death of M. leaving him surviving her, and consequently that the limitation over could not take effect. In the circuit decree, which was affirmed upon that point, Chancellor Carroll uses the following language: "If the words employed be in other respects sufficient to pass a present interest, the mere circumstance of its being limited over on a contingency does not in itself prevent the interest from vesting. Rutledge v. Rutledge, Dud. Eq. 205; Skey v. Barnes, 3 Meriv. 340. On the contrary, there is high authority for the proposition that it has precisely the opposite effect." A limitation over in case of the prior devisee dying under certain circumstances, or before attaining a certain age, or in case of his dying before the life tenant, etc., is an argument in favor of the prior devisee's taking an immediately vested interest; for, as said by Tindall, C. J., in Phipps v. Ackers, 9 Clarke & Fin. 583, the limitation over "sufficiently shows the meaning of the testator to have been that the first devisee should take whatever interest the party claiming under the devise over is not entitled to, which, of course, gives him the immediate interest, subject only to the chance of its being divested on a future contingency." It shows, therefore, that the prior devisee is the preferable object of the testator's bounty from which a presumption arises of an intention that the estate should vest in him subject to the divesting contingency. Smith v. Hilliard, supra. See, also, Rutledge v. Rutledge, Dud. Eq. 205; Kersh v. Yongue, 7 Rich. Eq. 100; Boykin v. Boykin, 21 S. C. 529; Brown v. McCall, 44 S. C. 503, 22 S. E. 823; and Woodley v. Calhoun, 69 S. C. 290, 48 S. E. 272.

There is another class of cases which are analogous to the one we are now considering, in which Mr. Fearn says: "The contingency upon which an estate is limited has been considered as a condition subsequent instead of precedent, so that the estate becomes vested immediately, subject to be defeated by the condition when it happens, in the room of not taking effect till such condition happens." He gives the case of Stocker v. Edwards, 2 Snow. 398, as an instance. In that case there was a surrender of copyholds to the use of the surrenderor for life, and afterwards to the use of his youngest son, and the heirs of his body, if he attained the age of 18, and, if he died before 18 without issue male, then to the right heirs of A. It was held to be a condition subsequent with respect to the youngest son, and therefore the remainder vested immediately, subject to be defeated by the condition of his dying without issue male before he attained the age of 18. The doctrine of Stocker v. Edwards upon this point was recognized in Bromfield v. Crowder, 1 New Rep. (B. & P.) 313, where testator devised all his estate to D. and R. for their lives successively, and after the death of the survivor to B. if he lived to attain the age of 21, but not otherwise, and, in case he died before attaining that age, over. Both D. and R. died while B. was under 21. Held, that B. took a vested estate in fee simple, defeasible on his dying under the age of 21. In Phipps v. Ackers, 9 Clarke & Fin. 583, the earlier English cases were reviewed and the doctrine established by them reaffirmed.

There is still another class of cases to which this case belongs, in which the same rule of construction is applied, and that is where the contingency is the devisee's surviving the life tenant. In Williamson v. Field's Executors, 2 Sand. Ch. 533, it is said: "When the person to whom a remainder after a life estate is limited is ascertained, and the event upon which it is to take effect is certain to happen, it is a vested remainder, although by its terms it may be entirely defeated by the death of such person before the termination of the particular estate." In Blanchard v. Blanchard, 1 Allen (Mass.) 223, there was a devise to the wife for life, and, after her death, to five children by name, with a proviso that, if any of the children named should die before the wife, the property should be equally divided amongst the survivors, except those so dying should leave issue, and, in that case, to the issue. Held, that the portion of the will preceding the proviso was a devise to the wife for life, remainder, at her death, to the children named; and, there being in that portion of the will no words of contingency such as "if they shall be living at her death," or "to such of them as shall be living at her death," or other words apt and proper to create a condition precedent, and thereby make the remainders contingent, the remainders were vested, subject to be divested by the happening of the condition. In Mercantile Bank v. Ballard, 83 Ky. 481, 4 Am. St. Rep. 160, the devise was to the use of B. for life, after her death, to be conveyed to her children and their descendants in the same proportion as if it had descended from her; but, if she left no child, nor descendant of a child, to the use of C. Held, that the children of B. living at the death of testator took a vested fee simple, subject to be divested by their dying before B. The court said: "A devise to A. for life, remainder to B., but, if B. is dead at the termination of the life estate, then to C., passes to B. a vested estate, and a contingent interest to C." In Avery v. Everett, 110 N. Y. 317, 18 N. E. 148, 1 L. R. A. 284, 6 Am. St. Rep. 368, a devise to the testator's wife for life, remainder to his son, C. H., and, in case C. H. should die without children, then, after the wife's death and the son's death, to A. S., a nephew, was held to give C. H. a vested fee at testator's death, subject to be defeated by his death without children. In Ducker v. Burnham, 146 Ill. 9, 34 N. E. 558, 37 Am. St. Rep. 135, a devise to the testator's wife for life, with full power of sale, remainder to five children named, to be divided equally amongst them, in case of the death of any of them, without issue, either before testator, or before receiving the portions given them, the share of such to be equally divided amongst the survivors. Held, each of the children took a vested remainder, subject to be divested by the exercise of the power of sale or by death, without issue, before the life tenant. In Finch v. Lane, L. R. 10 Eq. 501, the devise was to testator's wife for life, remainder, as to part, to his brother for life, and after the death of the wife, subject to the brother's interest in the part, to M. in fee, if she should be living at the death of the wife, but, if she should die before the wife without leaving issue, then over. M. died before the widow, but left issue. Held, that M. took a vested remainder. That case seems to be directly in point, and as near on all fours with this case as well can be. It was decided on the authority of Phipps v. Ackers.

Both the master and the circuit judge seem to have based their conclusion in part, at least, upon the application of a test laid down in Faber v. Police, 10 S. O. 388, for determining whether a remainder is vested or contingent, to wit: "To inquire whether the person claiming such remainder, being sui juris, could, by uniting with the owner of the particular estate, convey a fee-simple title. If he could, such a remainder must be regarded as vested; otherwise, it is contingent." Whatever may be said of the applicability and reliability of that test in ordinary cases, it is obvious that it fails when applied to the case of a remainder which is vested subject to a divesting contingency, and also to the case of a vested remainder to a class some of whom are not in esse. That there are such vested remainders all the authorities are agreed.

The cases above cited fully illustrate the principles upon which this case must be decided. Our conclusion is that Roxana took a vested interest, subject to be divested by her death before the life tenant, leaving no heir or heirs. Her interest therefore passed under the sheriff's deed, and she cannot recover.

Judgment reversed.

COMMISSIONERS OF BEAUFORT COUNTY v. BONNER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 21, 1910.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 82*)—COMPENSATION—NECESSITY.

Land lying between a creek and a public road running parallel to it is not a part of the easement of the road, as to allow its being summarily taken for a ferry, but can only be done so under the power of eminent domain.

Appeal from Superior Court, Beaufort County; Ferguson, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the Commissioners of Beaufort County against L. D. Bonner. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff's appeal. Affirmed.

The record disclosed that at January session, 1910, of the board of commissioners of Beaufort county, on a petition to condemn about an acre of defendant's land for a public landing, at a point in said county where the "public road runs along the banks of Durham creek," the following order was made and entered: "At the January session, 1910, of the board of commissioners of Beaufort Co., the following order was passed, to wit: 'Record of Commissioners. In the Matter of the Petition of Gilbert Bonner and Others. The board of commissioners having heard all the evidence in these matters, and argument of counsel, and having duly deliberated upon the matters and questions at issue, it is now unanimously ordered by the board as follows: First. The petition to remove the draw and establish a new road is continued. Second. The petition to establish a public landing is granted, and the board offers to pay for the same the sum of seventy-five dollars. If this offer is refused, the board having decided same is necessary, the county attorney is instructed to take all necessary steps looking to this end and as early as practicable.'"

Thereupon the present proceedings were instituted before the clerk for the purpose of condemning the land and assessment of the damages therefor and filed complaint in terms as follows: "The plaintiff for cause of complaint alleges and says: First. That it is a corporation duly created, organized, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of North Carolina, and as such has the power to discharge the duties set out in chapter 23 of the Revisal of 1905 of North Carolina. Second. That among other powers conferred upon the board is the right to establish such public landings as the board of commissioners may think proper. Third. That it is necessary for a public landing to be established on Durham's creek at some place on the land of the defendant L. D. Bonner. That the land which the defendant desires to condemn as a public landing is described as follows: 'About one acre, fronting on Durham's creek and the public road.' Fourth. That L. D. Bonner, the defendant above named, is the only one who owns or has any interest in said land; that the land described as aforesaid is required for a public landing, and L. D. Bonner is a resident of Beaufort county."

A demurrer of defendant having been overruled and exception duly noted, defendants answered, denying the power of commissioners to condemn defendant's land for the purpose indicated, denying that necessity existed for such condemnation, and demanding a jury trial of the issue as to the necessity, etc. The motion was overruled, and on the hearing before the clerk plaintiff offered in evidence the record of the order of the county commissioners above quoted, and introduced a witness who testified "that one acre of defendant's land is available for a public landing site at the point described in the complaint," and rested. Defendant offered to prove that it was not necessary to establish the landing, and the evidence was excluded on the ground that the necessity for the land was conclusively established by the action and order of the county commissioners, and defendant excepted. The clerk gave judgment of condemnation, and appointed commissioners to go upon the land, lay out and make the site and assess the damages. On appeal this order of the clerk was reversed by the judge, and plaintiff excepted and appealed.

W. C. Rodman, for appellants. Ward & Grimes, for appellee.

HOKE, J. Whatever rights may arise to the public in this case by reason of the fact stated that a public road lay along the banks of the creek (presumably a navigable stream), they did not include or embrace the easement sought to be established in this proceeding—the appropriation of an acre of defendant's land “for the purposes of a public landing.” This right as proposed and described entirely exceeded the easement of a public highway, and could only be acquired in invitum, by condemnation, and under the power of eminent domain. Barrington v. Ferry Co., 69 N. C. 169; Pipkin v. Wynns, 13 N. C. 402; Chambers v. Furry, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 167; 3 Kent's Commentaries, p. 420.

The claim of the petitioners admits and proceeds upon the theory that the exercise of such power is required to uphold it as made; and we concur with the appellee and the ruling of the clerk thereon that, if this right of condemnation has been granted to the board of commissioners, the occasion and necessity for its exercise rests very largely in their discretion. Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, cited and approved in several recent cases, notably in Burgin v. Smith, 151 N. C. 567, 66 S. E. 607; Board of Education v. Board of Commissioners, 150 N. C. 116, 63 S. E. 724; Ward v. Commissioners, 146 N. C. 534, 60 S. E. 418, 125 Am. St. Rep. 489.

Nor is the issue as to the quantum of damages one entitling the private owner to a common-law jury trial as a matter of right. State v. Jones, 139 N. C. 613, 52 S. E. 240, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 313; Railroad v. Parker, 105 N. C. 246, 11 S. E. 328; Railroad v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 966, 42 L. Ed. 270; 2 Lewis, Eminent Domain, § 311. After giving the matter, however, the full and careful consideration which its importance demands, the court is of opinion that the statutes controlling the question have not conferred upon the commissioners the right to acquire defendant's property for the purpose indicated by condemnation, and that the judgment of the superior court to that effect and dismissing the petition on that ground must be affirmed. There is general consensus of authority to the effect that the right of condemnation may not be exercised unless conferred by the lawmaking power in express terms or by necessary implication. In 1 Lewis, Eminent Domain, § 240, the author says: “The exercise of the power being against common right, it cannot be implied or inferred from vague or doubtful language, but must be given in express terms or by necessary implication. If the act is silent on the subject, and the powers given by it can be exercised without resort to condemnation, it is presumed that the Legislature intended that the necessary property should be acquired by contract. Thus the authority to construct and maintain booms or bridges does not carry with it the right to condemn property. If the act makes no provision for compensation, it is presumed that the Legislature did not intend that the power of eminent domain should be exercised.” And well-considered decisions support the doctrine as stated. U. S. v. Rauhers (D. C.) 70 Fed. 748; Schmidt v. Densmore, 42 Mo. 225; Tacoma v. State, 4 Wash. 64, 29 Pac. 847; Chaffee's Appeal, 56 Mich. 244, 22 N. W. 871; Allen v. Jones, 47 Ind. 438; People ex rel. Hayden v. City of Rochester, 50 N. Y. 525. And, while the courts may have differed at times in defining the necessity required for the grant of this power by implication and are disposed to be less exacting in cases where the right is claimed in behalf of public corporations exercising their powers strictly for the public benefit (Lewis, § 240), there is eminent authority for the proposition that the right of condemnation will not arise by implication unless the necessity for it is so strong that without it the grant itself will be defeated. Thus in Pennsylvania R. R.'s Appeal, 93 Pa. 159, Gordon, J., delivering the opinion, said: “It is true that a franchise is property, and as such may be taken by a corporation having the right of eminent domain, but in favor of such right there can be no implication unless it arises from a necessity so absolute that, without it, the grant itself will be defeated. It must also be a necessity that arises from the very nature of things, over which the corporation has no control. It must not be a necessity created by the company itself for its own convenience or for the sake of economy. To permit a necessity such as this to be used as an excuse for the interference with or extinction of previously granted franchises would be to subject these important legislative grants to destruction on a mere pretense; in fact, at the will of the holder of the latest franchise.” A position referred to and on a given state of facts approved by this court in Street Ry. v. Railway, 142 N. C. 435, 55 S. E. 345. True, there is a well-recognized general principle, stated and approved in Dewey v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 392, 55 S. E. 292, and in other cases, “that, when a power is conferred by statute, everything necessary to make it effective or requisite to attain the end is inferred.” But, in applying the principle to the question of condemnation, this being in derogation of common right, the necessity must be determined in view of the principles heretofore stated, and in Dewey's Case the court was careful to note that the power of condemnation in that case had been given in express terms.

Again, the courts have held that in certain instances the fact that an act of the Legislature conferring a given power had failed to provide any method of procedure for awarding compensation to the individual owners would of itself afford sufficient evidence that the right of appropriation by condemnation was not intended. Chamberlain v. Steam Cordage Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 43, 2 Atl. 775. And a decision of our own court is to the effect that a statute which purports "to authorize the seizure of private property, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, but making no provision for compensation to the owner, would be void." State v. Lyle, 100 N. C. 497, 6 S. E. 379, a case that has been referred to with approval in several recent decisions of the court. State v. Wells, 142 N. C. 594, 55 S. E. 210; State v. Jones, 139 N. C. 619, 52 S. E. 240, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 818.

In the present case the power in question is claimed under and by virtue of chapter 23, Revisal 1905, § 1318, subsec. 19, in terms as follows: "The board of commissioners shall have power [subsection 19] * * * to establish such public landings and places of inspection as the board of commissioners may think proper and to appoint such inspectors in every town or city as may be authorized by law." The statute purports to contain an enumeration of the general powers conferred on boards of commissioners throughout the state, and this subsection quoted, being section 1318, subsec. 19, expresses all the provisions of our statute of law relating to the subject to which we were referred by counsel or which we have been enabled to discover. It will be noted that the law does not confer in express terms the power of condemning the lands of the citizen for the purpose indicated, and we are of opinion there is no such necessity shown as would justify the exercise of the power by implication. Furthermore, there is no provision made for awarding compensation to the owner. And, applying the principles approved and sustained by the authorities referred to, we are impelled to the conclusion that in establishing these public landings provided for in section 1318, subsec. 19, the commissioners are confined to lands already dedicated to a public use sufficient to embrace or include the purpose proposed, or that they must acquire a site by agreement or purchase.

We are confirmed in the view we have taken of this subsection by a perusal of the other portions of the statute. Thus, in subsection 8, the commissioners are authorized to lay out, alter, or discontinue public roads to establish and settle ferries, to build and keep up bridges, etc., and this subsection further provides that, in exercising the powers thus conferred, the commissioners shall act under the "rules, regulations, restrictions and penalties prescribed and imposed in the statute on roads, ferries and bridges." In this chapter referred to express provision is made for condemning land and awarding compensation therefor "in the case of roads and ferries," showing that the Legislature in framing this very statute had in mind the necessity of expressly granting the right of condemnation where they considered it desirable to confer it. We are not inadvertent to the great importance of having these public landings established at places convenient to the citizens of different communities, and if it is demonstrated that the well ordering of the affairs of the county require it. The Legislature will no doubt be quick to confer the power of condemnation for the purpose. But the granting or withholding such power is for the Legislature, and not for the courts. And, until the Legislature has seen fit to grant the power for a public use and in express terms or by necessary implication, we are not permitted to sanction or uphold its exercise. There is no error, and the judgment of the court below dismissing the action is affirmed.

The court in construing a bond whose payment was conditioned on the building of a permanent railroad from T. to H., and to a depot to be erected within "or" adjacent to the southern limits of the town of H., could not change the word "or" to "and"; the real purpose of the contract being to secure the building of a road between the points named.

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Gulon, Judge.

Action by Henry Clark Bridgers against W. W. Ormond. There was a nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. New trial.

Plaintiff seeks to recover $1,120 upon the following bonds: "$1,050.00. For and in consideration of the building and equipment of a permanent standard railroad from Farmville to Hookerton, N. C., to a depot to be erected within or adjacent to the present southern limits of the town of Hookerton and on the south side of Contentnea Creek, within twenty-four months from the 29th day of March, 1906, we promise to pay to Henry C. Bridgers, or order, the sum of one thousand and fifty dollars. It is agreed and understood that this note shall be held and kept by W. W. Ormond, J. I. Beaman, J. E. W. Sugg, F. M. Taylor, and B. F. D. Albritton, committee, or by either of them, as may be agreed by the others; and when said depot is erected as set out above, and said railroad is completed and equipped to within one-half mile of the Academy building in the town of Hookerton, then this note shall become due and payable, and said W. W. Ormond and others may proceed to collect the same and hold the proceeds, to be paid to said Henry Clark Bridgers when he shall have built and equipped said road and depot as set out above in first paragraph; and it is further understood and stipulated that if said Henry C. Bridgers should fail to build and equip said railroad and erect said depot by the 29th day of March, 1908, as first set forth herein, then this note is to be null and void. Witness our hand and seal, this the 19th day of April, 1906. W. W. Ormond. [Seal.] Elias Turnage. [Seal.] Y. T. Ormond. [Seal.] The above change in date and time for the completion of the railroad referred to in this note was made with my knowledge and consent. W. W. Ormond." The defendant W. W. Ormond executed another note, of like tenor and purport, for the sum of $70. At close of evidence the court intimated that plaintiff could not recover and he submitted to a nonsuit and appealed.

John L. Bridgers, for appellant. Y. T. Ormond, for appellee.

BROWN, J. Plaintiff introduced evidence tending to prove that he had constructed, equipped, and had in operation, within the time required by the contract, a permanent standard railroad from Farmville to Hookerton, N. C., to a depot erected within the town of Hookerton, and on south side of Contentnea creek. These facts are not controverted.

But it is contended that the contract requires that the depot shall be erected in Hookerton "and" adjacent to the present southern limits of the town. The learned judge below seems to have so construed the contract. We are unable to adopt such construction, as we feel unauthorized to strike out the word "or" in the contract and substitute in its place the word "and." The one purpose of a written contract is to make certain what the contract is. "Words must not be forced away from their proper signification to one entirely different, although it might be obvious that the words used, either through ignorance or inadvertence, express a very different meaning from that intended." 11 Parson's Law Cont. p. 7. The terms being explicit, the construction is for the court. Wilson v. Cotton Mills, 140 N. C. 52, 52 S. E. 250; Banks v. Lumber Co., 142 N. C. 49, 54 S. E. 844. In the phrase under consideration an important word is the disjunctive "or." We have no more right to strike it out than we have to strike out the word "Hookerton." To substitute the conjunctive

"and" for it in the contract is not warranted by either the uses of language or the context of the writing. There have been such changes in the words of a written instrument when clearly demanded by the context. Such a substitution would put upon the plaintiff in this case a double liability, and a condition he did not contract for. The substitution of a conjunctive for a disjunctive attaches such a qualification that of necessity changes the terms and meaning of the contract; and, in effect, materially alters it in an essential feature.

The real purpose of the contract was to secure the building of a standard railroad from Farmville to Hookerton, and that is the only consideration expressed upon its face. One of the termini was to be a depot erected in Hookerton, or adjacent to its southern limits. There is nothing doubtful or ambiguous in the words used. They plainly confer upon the plaintiff the optional right to erect the depot in Hookerton, or, if not in Hookerton, then adjacent to its southern boundary. It is admitted that the plaintiff has constructed the depot and located it within the corporate limits of Hookerton.

His honor should have instructed the jury that upon the uncontradicted facts as presented in this record the plaintiff is entitled to recover.

New trial.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wise County.

Bill by the Newberry Shoe Company against M. D. Collier and others. From a decree dismissing the bill, complainant appeals. Reversed.

Bond & Bruce, for plaintiff in error. Burnett & Bremner, for defendants in error.

HARRISON, J. On May 7, 1908, the bill in this cause was filed by the appellant in the circuit court of Wise county to have set aside a deed, dated January 14, 1908, from M. D. Collier to Martha Collier, the wife of the appellee J. A. Collier, conveying to her two lots or parcels of land, upon the ground that J. A. Collier had paid for the lots with his own means and had them conveyed to his wife for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors. On the same day that the bill was filed the complainant had recorded in the clerk's office a lis pendens under section 2460 of the Code.

The defendants not appearing, and the suit being duly matured, the court on July 20, 1908, entered a decree in favor of the complainant for the amount of its debt, set aside the deed, and declared the debt to be a lien upon the property thereby conveyed as of May 7, 1908, the date of the recordation of the lis pendens, and referred the cause to a commissioner to ascertain the liens.

On the 27th of April, 1909, the appellees, J. A. Collier and wife, appeared and by leave of court filed their joint and several answer to the bill, admitting the debt asserted in the bill, but alleging that, after the institution of the suit, J. A. Collier had filed his petition in bankruptcy, and had filed therein a schedule of his debts, including that of the complainant, and that he was adjudged a bankrupt and discharged from all debts and claims provable under the law in bankruptcy proceedings. The answer further alleged that Martha Collier had on June 20, 1908, conveyed the lots in question to her husband, J. A. Collier, and that the referee in bankruptcy had allowed them to J. A. Collier as a part of the homestead exemption claimed by him under the laws of the state. It is further alleged that the appellant and other creditors had objected to the lots being allowed to J. A. Collier as part of his homestead, but that the objection was overruled by the referee, and that the appellant had appealed from that action to the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia, where the action of the referee had been affirmed. Portions of the record in bankruptcy showing these facts are filed with the answer in support of the contention there made, that the right of the appellee J. A. Collier to hold these lots as a part of his homestead exemption as against the lien thereon acquired by the appellant in this cause had been decided by the United States District Court between the same parties, and was therefore res adjudicata.

Upon the filing of this answer the circuit court of Wise county rendered the decree complained of, setting aside all of the decrees theretofore entered in the cause, and dismissing the complainant's bill, with costs.

We are of opinion that this was error. The rights of the complainant in this cause were not affected by the proceedings in bankruptcy, but remained as they were before any petition in bankruptcy had been filed by the defendant J. A. Collier. A discharge in bankruptcy does not necessarily affect a specific lien, but only releases the bankrupt from personal liability. A lien on property of the bankrupt acquired within four months of the time he was adjudged a bankrupt is void, provided the bankrupt was insolvent at the time the lien was obtained. It is not alleged, and there is no evidence in the record showing, that J. A. Collier was insolvent at the time the lien in this cause attached.

In the case of Jackson v. Valley Tie Co., 108 Va. 718, 62 S. E. 965, this court, citing Simpson v. Van Etten (O. C.) 108 Fed. 199, says: "Not all liens obtained against one afterwards and within four months adjudged bankrupt are deemed null and void. It must appear that the person whose property is subject to the lien was insolvent at the time of the creation of the lien. It is evident a lien might be obtained against one who is adjudged a bankrupt within four months thereafter, but who was not insolvent at the time the lien was obtained. The act of bankruptcy and the insolvency might have occurred at some period subsequent to the creation of the lien. If so, the adjudication of bankruptcy would in no way determine whether or not the party was insolvent at the time the lien was created." And, further, at page 719 of 108 Va., 62 S. E. 966, it is said: "No presumption arises from the adjudication in bankruptcy that the bankrupt was insolvent for four months, or any period, before his petition was filed, and hence it is incumbent on the trustee to prove the insolvency."

It is clear that the lien herein asserted was not satisfied or affected by the appellee's discharge in bankruptcy.

The only evidence in this record that J. A. Collier claimed a homestead in the two lots involved here is a recital in the report of the referee in bankruptcy that the bankrupt had on the 25th of June, 1908, filed his homestead deed in the clerk's office of Wise county, claiming his homestead, among other things, in these two lots. Assuming, however, that such a homestead is shown to have been claimed, the bankrupt court had no jurisdiction of homestead property, and therefore it could not adjudicate the rights of the parties with respect thereto.

When a bankrupt dedicates property as a homestead, all the bankrupt court can do is to set it aside to him. A creditor desiring to subject such property to the payment of a debt paramount to the homestead must pursue his remedy in the state court. Lockwood v. Bank, 190 U. S. 294, 23 Sup. Ct. 751, 47 L. Ed. 1061.

In the case cited, it is said, quoting from the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley in Re Bass, Fed. Cas. No. 1,091: "In other words, it is made as clear as anything can be that such exempted property constitutes no part of the assets in bankruptcy. * * * The exemption is created by the state law, and the assignee acquires no title to the exempt property. If the creditor has a claim against it, he must prosecute that claim in a court which has jurisdiction over the property, which the bankrupt court has not."

It is plain from the record that the United States Court for the Western District of Virginia followed the authority of the case cited and the plain terms of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, and simply announced that the bankrupt court had no jurisdiction over the two lots set apart as a homestead, and never intended to adjudicate the rights of the appellant with respect thereto. This being so, there is no foundation for the contention that the issues involved in this case are res adjudicata.

For these reasons, the decree appealed from must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not in conflict with the views herein expressed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Dickenson County.

Bill by H. H. Viers against the Clinchfield Coal Company and others. From a decree for complainant, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Phlegar & Powell, Ayers & Fulton, W. H. Rouse, Vicars & Peery, and A. A. Skeen, for appellants. Roland E. Chase and S. H. Sutherland, for appellee.

HARRISON, J. The bill in this case was filed by the appellee, H. H. Viers, asserting title to and possession of a strip of land containing 81.99 acres in the county of Dickenson, and alleging that, by reason of divers conveyances, the appellant Clinchfield Coal Company claimed to be the owner of the coal and minerals of said strip of land, and the appellants T. K. Colley and wife the owners of the surface thereof, and seeking to have the conveyances under which the appellants claimed set aside as alleged clouds upon his title.

The title of the appellee to the strip of land was put in issue by the pleadings, and upon that issue a final decree was rendered by the circuit court, sustaining the contention of the appellee and ordering the deeds mentioned in the bill to be canceled and annulled. This decree is brought under review by the present appeal.

It appears that about the year 1858 Robert Fugate, a surveyor, ran a line through the section of country where the lands here involved are situated. The true location of this line is the vital question upon which this controversy turns.

At the time this Fugate line was run, James Colley owned a large body of land in its neighborhood, and it is through him that both parties to this controversy claim title. In the year 1884 James Colley, who had been selling off portions of his land, had the line run which is known in the record as the Thornbury line. This line is $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, is well marked and identified, and the appellants contend that it is the alleged Fugate line re-established by Thornbury.

A careful examination of the record leads us to the conclusion that this contention is sustained by the weight of evidence, both oral and documentary. It satisfactorily appears that throughout the entire length of this Thornbury line, and, as far back as the records shed any light upon the subject, the citizens on both sides thereof have recognized it as the true line by which their titles were determined. In numerous deeds passing title from one to the other on both sides of this line, it is referred to, sometimes as the Thornbury line and sometimes as the Fugate line, the metes and bounds in the respective deeds showing that the several tracts of land conveyed ran to this well-established line, thus recognizing the Fugate line and the Thornbury line as one and the same. The appellee, in effect, recognized this as the true line by deed of July 23, 1904, in which he unites with others in conveying to the grantee all the coal on a certain tract of land, the boundary lines called for in the deed going exactly to and no further than the Thornbury line.

The line contended for by the appellee as the true Fugate line is located by him on an average of about 55 poles north of the Thornbury line, thus leaving the disputed strip between the two contending lines. In support of the contention that the true Fugate line is that insisted upon by him, appellee mainly relies upon certain marked timber in the neighborhood of the disputed land. Some of these marked trees were blocked and the blocks exhibited with the record, and considerable evidence given concerning them. The few blocks adduced were from trees embraced within a very short distance. They were all located in the neighborhood of and within the length of the boundary line to one side of appellee's tract of 105 acres. The evidence shows that these marks vary in age as much as 12 years, and one of them does not appear to have been made by an axe or hatchet, but to have been the result of a bruise on the tree. The evidence with respect to these marks wholly fails to show their value as tending to establish the true Fugate line. It very clearly appears that they were not made by Robert Fugate. One of the surveyors called by the appellee states positively that the marks in question were made by a surveyor by the name of Looney. These marks, so far as made by a surveyor, were evidently never made as indicating the Fugate line, but were made in running some other and much shorter line. Outside of these marks, there is not an object shown having the slightest tendency to establish the true Fugate line as being upon the location contended for by the appellee, which location, if established, would unsettle numerous titles and almost certainly precipitate much litigation.

It is not necessary, and we will not attempt in this opinion, to review all of the voluminous evidence adduced by both the appellants and the appellee in support of their respective contentions as to the true location of the Fugate line. It must suffice to say that in our judgment the appellee falls far short of sustaining his claim, and that the great preponderance of evidence establishes the Thornbury line to be, as claimed by the appellants, the true Fugate line. It follows from this conclusion that the disputed strip of land is not within the calls of the deeds of the appellee, but is covered by the deed of the appellants.

It is further claimed by the appellee that he has held adverse possession of the disputed strip of land for a sufficient length of time to acquire the legal title thereto as against the true owner.

It is only necessary to say in answer to this contention that the record clearly shows that the appellee never claimed title further north than the true Fugate line, and had no intention of claiming land that did not belong to him. The great weight of authority is in favor of the view that when the occupation of the land is by a mere mistake, and with no intention on the part of the occupant to claim as his own land which does not belong to him, but intends to claim only to the true line, wherever it may be, the holding is not adverse; the intention to hold adversely being an indispensable element of adverse possession. Schaubach v. Dillemath, 108 Va. 86, 60 S. E. 745.

For these reasons, the decree appealed from must be reversed, and this court will enter such decree as the circuit court ought to have entered, dismissing the appellee's bill with costs.

The burden is on one suing for injuries to show defendant's negligence, and, if the injury may have resulted from one of two causes, for only one of which defendant is responsible, plaintiff cannot recover, nor can he recover if it is just as probable that the damage was caused by the one as by the other.

Error to Circuit Court, Wise County.

Action by John Neece against the Stonega Coke & Coal Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

Bullitt & Chalkley, for plaintiff in error.
Vicars & Peery and Morton & Parker, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This action was brought to recover damages for injuries suffered by the defendant in error while employed as a car pusher at the plaintiff in error's coal mine.

The defendant company demurred to the plaintiff's evidence, but the court overruled the demurrer, and rendered the judgment under review in favor of the plaintiff for $5,000, the damages conditionally assessed by the jury.

The negligence charged was the failure of the defendant to use ordinary care to provide the plaintiff with reasonably safe mine cars and couplings with which to discharge the duties of his employment; that, while the plaintiff was pushing a detached car along the track to the tipple to be dumped, other loaded cars, which were controlled by an electric motor, by reason of defective couplings, parted from the train, and ran down upon the plaintiff from the rear by force of gravity, catching him between the detached cars and the car he was pushing, and inflicting the injuries of which he complains.

The track from the inside of the mine to within a short distance of the mouth is slightly upgrade, from which point to the mouth of the mine it is level, and thence there is a light downgrade for the distance of about 240 feet to the dump on the tipple. Loaded cars are gathered on the main track in the mine, and pushed out in the direction of the tipple by an electric motor, near which they are successively released from the trip by the car pushers, shoved down to the mouth of the tipple and dumped. The empties are then switched on to another track and carried back into the mine to be reloaded, and the process of unloading is repeated. The cars were connected by three-link couplings attached to drawheads by a clevis and pin.

On the occasion of the accident, after the plaintiff had dumped from five to eight cars and had gone back for another car, he found the coupling so taut that it would not uncouple. Thereupon, he got upon the bumper of the forward car, and by pressing the links down with his foot produced sufficient slack to enable him to withdraw the clevis pin and uncouple the car. His account of the accident is as follows: "I had run five or six cars, and went back after another one, and I uncoupled it and started to push it and it stopped on me, was so hard I couldn't push it, and I pushed it a little ways apart, and went to step down between the cars on the ground, and just as I let my foot down it caught me—just in a dash—done so quick I couldn't tell how it was done. I didn't get my foot down to the ground, and they struck it with something. I suppose the motor struck it and caught me."

Continuing, the witness testifies that the detached car was driven forward a distance of three feet from the other cars by the force of the impact, and, before he could extricate himself (having sustained a fracture of the small bone of his right leg and other injuries from the first collision), the cars came together again, catching him about the calf of the injured leg, and holding him fast until some of his fellow servants set the brakes on the rear cars and released him.

The statement of the brakeman, Everidge, which is chiefly relied on to sustain the plaintiff's theory, is as follows: "I was brakeman and saw John Neece when he got hurt. John Neece had uncoupled one car and was shoving it down to dump it. The cars behind Neece, supposed to be coupled to the train of cars, ran against Neece and caught him between the bumpers of the car he was shoving and the bumpers of the car behind him. I signaled the motorman to stop, which he did, but some of the cars, all but five or six, had broken loose from the motor, and these were the cars which caught Neece. In going to where Neece was I walked between the cars which had broken loose from the motor and the cars which were still attached to the motor. As I did so, I noticed that the clevis of the coupling was sprung so much that the pin wouldn't hold and pulled out. I caught the brakes and stopped the cars as soon as I could."

Now, it will be observed that Everidge does not undertake to say that the cars broke away from the five or six cars which remained attached to the motor before the accident. On the contrary, he says they were "supposed to be coupled to the train," and at the moment of the accident the entire train was moving in the direction of the tipple. It will also be remembered that the plaintiff himself attributed the collision to the force exerted by the motor in pushing the train. He expressed that opinion in his evidence in chief, and adhered to it throughout his testimony. The evidence of the motorman, Sopshur, the remaining witness for the plaintiff who speaks to the point, is strongly corroborative of Neece's opinion. He was on his motor some 35 or 40 feet inside the drift mouth with a trip of about 30 cars. These cars had been pushed slowly some 12 or 15 feet in the direction of the tipple when Everidge signaled him with a lantern to stop, which he did as quickly as possible. He thereupon walked toward the drift mouth to see who was hurt, and in passing the trip discovered that some 15 cars had pulled apart a distance of from 8 to 12 feet. When stopped, the rear end of these cars was still inside the drift mouth. He could not say whether the cars broke loose before or after he got the signal to stop, but he is satisfied they did not run apart until after he had stopped the motor. He could "tell by the feel of them that they were up against the motor," which was pushing them along the track. It is not pretended that Sopshur was guilty of any negligence in handling these cars. He was a motorman of long experience, and was pushing the cars out in the customary way. Moreover, the plaintiff was well apprised of the prevailing method of handling trains in connection with loading and unloading cars, and it was his duty and that of his working mate to set a sufficient number of brakes to prevent collisions.

Sopshur's testimony shows that the fugitive cars did not part from the rest of the train until after the motor was stopped, and consequently the collision resulted from the force exerted by the motor in pushing the cars, and not from force of gravity. If this be true, it is not possible that the defective clevis could have been the proximate cause of the accident, and that is the sole issue presented by the pleadings.

The rule is firmly established by the decisions of this court that, "where damages are claimed for injuries inflicted through the alleged negligence of the defendant, the burden of showing negligence by a preponderance of the evidence is on the plaintiff, and if the injury may have resulted from one of two causes, for one of which the defendant is responsible but not for the other, the plaintiff cannot recover; neither can he recover if it is just as probable that the damage was caused by the one as by the other." N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Poole, 100 Va. 148, 40 S. E. 627; Northington v. Norfolk Ry., etc., Co., 102 Va. 446, 46 S. E. 475; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Heath, 103 Va. 64, 48 S. E. 508; Moore Lime Co. v. Johnston, 103 Va. 84, 48 S. E. 557.

The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, which we have alone considered, does not sustain the allegation of negligence upon which his claim to damages is predicated, and in such case there can, of course, be no recovery.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the circuit court erred in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, for which error the judgment must be reversed and the demurrer to the evidence sustained.

INSURANCE (§ 594*)—ASSIGNMENT OF BENEFITS.

Appeal from Corporation Court of Radford.

Suit by Nannie McCraw against Rena Vernon and another. Decree for defendant Vernon, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Longley & Jordan, for appellant. J. C. Wysor and W. S. Tipton, for appellee.

HARRISON, J. This controversy is over the proceeds of a life insurance policy for $500, issued May 15, 1905, by the Life Insurance Company of Virginia on the life of Calvin A. McCraw. The discussion of the case has taken a much wider range than is justified by the controlling facts which are clearly established and decisive of the question at issue.

It appears that at the time the policy was issued the insured was a single man and his sister, Rena Vernon, was named therein as his beneficiary, with the understanding that the beneficiary might be changed at any time. Three months after the policy was issued the insured married the appellant, and a short time thereafter he instructed the agent of the insurance company to change the policy by substituting his wife's name as the beneficiary therein. This request was repeated by the insured to the agent who had secured the policy several times, and he promised to attend to it. In April, 1909, the insured died, and it was found that the agent had failed to change the name of the beneficiary as requested, an oversight which he says resulted wholly from his neglect and forgetfulness.

On the 28th day of April, 1909, Rena Vernon, the beneficiary named in the policy, executed under her hand and seal the following paper:

"Know all men by these presents that I do hereby of my own free will and accord and do by these presents assign, transfer and set over all of my interest, title and ownership in policy No. 1,550,315 in the Life Insurance Company of Virginia on the life of Calvin A. McCraw, now deceased, in which policy I was named as beneficiary, and do by these presents and this assignment relinquish all of my interest in said policy, and any and all claims against the Life Insurance Company of Virginia, pertaining to said policy No. 1,550,315."

It will be observed that this assignment fails to name the intended assignee, but the proof of the justice of the peace who wrote the paper and others is conclusive that the intended assignee was Nannie McCraw, the appellant, who is the widow of the deceased Calvin A. McCraw, and that the omission of her name as assignee was a mere inadvertence of the scrivener.

Soon after the execution of this assignment the appellee, Rena Vernon, repented of her act, and in her answer to the bill in this case charges that she is the rightful beneficiary of the policy, and that the assignment was procured from her by fraud. This charge of fraud is wholly unsustained. On the contrary, it is satisfactorily shown that the assignment of the policy was freely made by the appellee in the presence of her husband and with his approval, and that it was made for the purpose of enabling the appellant to secure from the company the proceeds of the policy.

The paper executed by the appellee is more than a mere assignment. It is an absolute relinquishment by her of all right in and title to the policy, and this paper under seal is delivered to the admitted agents of the appellant, thus investing her with the indisputable right to the policy and its proceeds. Under such circumstances, equity will write the inadvertently omitted name of the appellant into the paper as assignee, and direct the insurance company to pay the proceeds of the policy to her.

The decree appealed from, which directs the proceeds of the policy to be paid to the appellee, must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a final decree in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

Appeal from Circuit Court of City of Roanoke.

Bill by one Chambers against the Roanoke Industrial & Agricultural Association and another. From decrees for respondents, complainant appeals. Reversed.

Smith & Wingfield, for appellant. Hall, Woods & Jackson, for appellees.

HARRISON, J. On January 16, 1906, the appellant entered into a contract in writing with the appellee, by which he agreed to sell and convey to it 10 acres of land in the city of Roanoke, the eastern line to be the line of Trueman and Plunkett, the northern line to be Pleasant avenue, the southern line to be Roanoke river, and the western line to run through the lands of appellant at such point as 10 acres surveyed will locate it. Subsequently appellant had the land surveyed, and in conformity with such survey executed and delivered a deed to appellee which both parties supposed contained 10 acres.

The bill in this case was filed in July, 1906, by the appellant, alleging that, shortly after the deed was executed and delivered to the appellee by him, he discovered that the tract of land thereby conveyed contained more than 10 acres as the result of a mistake in the survey which he had followed in making the deed, and that the survey by which the deed was made did not conform to the boundaries prescribed by the contract. The bill further alleged that the appellee association, claiming to act under the authority of a resolution of the city council of Roanoke, was fencing up a strip of Pleasant avenue 35 feet wide, extending the full length of the land conveyed, and that which remained in the ownership and possession of appellant, and was engaged in erecting upon that part of Pleasant avenue so fenced up sheds, stables, and other buildings to be used for fair-ground purposes. Appellant further alleged that the effect of this action of appellee was to deprive him of his frontage on Pleasant avenue; that said avenue was his only outlet and right of way, except with great inconvenience in distance and travel; that he occupied the property as a home; and that the sheds, stables, and other buildings being placed in the avenue for the purpose intended would amount to a nuisance, and be a menace to the health of his family, and greatly depreciate and damage the value of his property.

The bill makes the appellee association and the city of Roanoke parties defendant, and prays that each be enjoined and restrained from obstructing Pleasant avenue in the manner alleged in the bill, or in any way interfering with the right of appellant to the unlimited enjoyment of the use of the entire street or highway. The prayer of the bill, further, is that the alleged mistake in the deed executed and delivered by the appellant to the appellee association be corrected, and the deed made to conform to the intention of the parties.

The city of Roanoke answered the bill, asserting its power to authorize the fencing up of part of Pleasant avenue to be used for fairground purposes, and denying that the appellant was injured thereby. The answer of the appellee association asserts the same propositions contended for by the city of Roanoke, and claims that the tract of land conveyed to it by the appellee contained .13 of an acre less than 10 acres, and asks that the purchase price be abated accordingly.

The circuit court granted an injunction in accordance with the prayer of the bill, and subsequently, on August 6, 1906, dissolved the same. On September 21, 1908, the cause was heard on the right of appellant to have the deed reformed as prayed for, and a decree was rendered holding that according to the terms of the contract, in pursuance of which the deed was made, the south line of the land sold was the low-water mark of the Roanoke river; and further holding that Pleasant avenue, the northern line of the land sold, was 75 feet wide, and appointing a surveyor to survey the land in accordance with the decree. From these two decrees this appeal was allowed.

We are of opinion that the court erred in its decree of August 6, 1906, dissolving the injunction theretofore granted restraining the appellee association from obstructing Pleasant avenue in the manner alleged in the bill.

The record shows that Pleasant avenue is a public highway, and, this being so, the city of Roanoke had no power or authority, in the absence of a grant from the General Assembly, to confer upon the appellee association the right to fence up any part of such highway and to erect the buildings complained of thereon. No such authority is found in its charter or the general law.

It is well settled that public highways, whether they be in the country or in a city, belong, not partially, but entirely, to the public at large, and that the supreme control over them is in the Legislature. It is also an established general rule that any unauthorized obstruction which unnecessarily impedes or incommodes the lawful use of a highway is a public nuisance at common law.

The city of Roanoke having no legislative authority to grant the use of Pleasant avenue for the purposes here complained of, its ordinance was a nullity, and furnished no warrant for the act of the appellee association in fencing up one-half of this public highway and building sheds, stables, and other buildings thereon for fairground purposes. Richmond City v. Smith, 101 Va. 161, 43 S. E. 345.

We are further of opinion that the circuit court properly held that the southern line of the 10 acres sold by the appellant was the low-water mark of the Roanoke river, but that it erred in holding that Pleasant avenue, the northern line of the land sold, was 75 feet wide.

The appellant contends that Pleasant avenue is 65 feet wide, and we think that contention is sustained by the evidence. The effect of the conclusion that Pleasant avenue is 75 feet wide is to put its southern line in and upon the inclosed property of the appellant, a distance of 10 feet, thus making it necessary to move the western line of the land sold considerably upon the property reserved by the appellant in order to make up the 10 acres sold to appellee.

It appears from the record that the land in controversy is part of a tract of about 70 acres, which was conveyed in October, 1890, by the Roanoke Land & Improvement Company to the Pleasant Valley Land Company. This last-named company, with the purpose of selling the land off into lots for residences, had a map prepared showing the 70 acres laid off into streets and alleys, and among other streets shown thereon was Pleasant avenue, with a width of 75 feet. This map is the basis of the claim now made that in ascertaining the northern boundary of the 10 acres sold by appellant to appellee Pleasant avenue must be held to have a width of 75 feet. The Pleasant Valley Land Company sold a few lots with reference to this map, but none of the lots so sold were near to the property involved in this controversy. Like all similar enterprises started at and about that time, the Pleasant Valley Land Company failed, and in May, 1896, reconveyed the tract of land to the Roanoke Land & Improvement Company in discharge of a large balance of purchase money secured thereon by deed of trust, making certain reservations not material in this connection. Some time before this conveyance was made, the grantor, recognizing the failure of its scheme of selling the land off in lots for building purposes, rented out a large portion of it for purposes of agriculture. In the meantime Pleasant avenue, with a width of 65 feet, was fenced on its southern side by those interested. This fence was built along the southern line of the avenue, as then established, 65 feet south of its northern line, and has remained there ever since, regarded and treated by the public, and especially by those particularly interested, as the southern line of Pleasant avenue. Since the Roanoke Land & Improvement Company reacquired the land in 1896, it has sold off a number of parcels to different parties, including both the appellant and the appellee; the parcels thus sold, lying south of Pleasant avenue, front thereon, and run to the fence, long before built, marking the southern line of that avenue.

It is not necessary to determine whether or not the map which the Pleasant Valley Land Company had made in 1890 was recorded in accordance with the statute, for, if its recordation were admitted and constituted at that time a dedication, it was never acted upon by opening the streets and alleys designated thereon for the public use, and it would be, as said by this court in a very similar case, nevertheless true that, so far as the unopened streets are concerned, the dedication was inchoate merely, and had been abrogated by subsequent events. The general purpose of the dedication has failed, the property has been sold with a view to changed conditions, and these circumstances, coupled with the continuous failure of the public, during all these years, to open and maintain these streets, together with the systematic diversion of the land included in them to uses foreign to the dedication, all furnish unmistakable evidence of their abandonment. Any other conclusion would work great injustice to the present holders of the property.

Pleasant avenue being established and used by the public as a highway 65 feet wide with its southern line marked by a fence 65 feet south of its northern line, and upon which the 10 acres of land sold by appellant to the appellee fronts, and the southern line of the ten acres being fixed at the low-water mark of the Roanoke river, there can be no difficulty in ascertaining by survey the proper metes and bounds of the ten acres to be conveyed by the appellant to the appellee.

For these reasons, the decrees appealed from must be reversed and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court for further proceedings not in conflict with this opinion.

2. CONTRACTS (§ 130*)—RESTRAINT OF BIDDING—JUDICIAL SALES.

Any agreement restricting competition at a judicial sale is void, except that creditors can make a fair and open compact, with the debtor's assent, that particular debts will be taken care of if the holders will abstain from bidding.

Error to Circuit Court, Wise County.

Action by one Bolling and another against one Mullins. From a judgment dismissing the declaration, plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Ayers & Fulton, Dotson & Bond, and C. Q. Counts, for plaintiffs in error. Vicars & Peery and Bond & Bruce, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This writ of error brings under review a judgment dismissing the plaintiffs' declaration on demurrer on the ground that the contract sued on is contrary to public policy and void.

The essential allegations of the declaration are that the plaintiffs, as sureties of W. R. Gilley, had paid off liens against him aggregating $2,400, of which amount $1,750 remained due from the principal debtor; that Gilley was insolvent with the exception of his ownership of a tract of land which was the subject-matter of a lien creditor's suit; that the defendant, Mullins, who desired to purchase the land, had entered into an agreement with the plaintiffs to the effect that, if they would not become bidders at the sale, he, Mullins, would, if necessary, bid as much as $1,500 for the property, or would procure some one else to do so, and, if he should purchase the land either directly or through some other bidder for less than $1,500, that he would pay the plaintiffs the difference. Under this arrangement Mullins bought the land for $940, but refused to pay the plaintiffs the sum of $560, in accordance with his agreement.

We are of opinion that the case is controlled by the decision of this court in Camp v. Bruce, 96 Va. 521, 31 S. E. 901, 43 L. R. A. 146, 70 Am. St. Rep. 873. In that case the purchaser at a judicial sale before confirmation sold his bargain at an advance price; and it was held that the tendency of such contracts was to prevent the property from bringing the best price, and was therefore contrary to public policy. With respect to such agreements generally, the court at page 524 of 96 Va., at page 901 of 31 S. E. (43 L. R. A. 146, 70 Am. St. Rep. 873), observes: "We have no statute declaring that contracts like the one under consideration are unlawful, yet under the principles of the common law any contract that is made for the purpose of, or whose necessary effect or tendency is to lessen competition and restrain bidding at judicial sales, is held to be illegal because opposed to public policy. The object in all such sales is to get the best price that can be fairly had for the property. The policy of the law therefore is to secure such sales from every kind of improper influence. To allow one bidder to buy off another, which is but a species of bribery, and thus prevent the property from bringing the best price, is condemned by the law, and the courts will not enforce contracts founded in such practices. Underwood v. McVeigh, 23 Grat. 409, 428, 429; Cocks v. Izard, 7 Wall. 559, 562, 19 L. Ed. 275; Fry on Spec. Per. § 308; Pomeroy's Contracts, § 283; Greenhood on Public Policy, pp. 183-189."

In Cocks v. Izard, supra, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice Davis, says: "The law will not tolerate any influence likely to prevent competition at judicial sales, and it accords to every debtor the chance for a fair sale and full price."

Indeed, the governing principle of all judicial sales is that there shall be untrammelled, free, and open competition, to the end that the rights of all parties in interest may be protected and a fair price obtained for property which has been withdrawn from the control of the owner and is being administered by the courts. Any agreement, therefore, however speciously devised or craftily worded, which contravenes that policy, will not be tolerated, and will be condemned as illegal and void.

The contention that this particular contract was calculated to promote rather than to stifle bidding is met by the obvious answer that the sum in addition to his bid, which Mullins stipulated to pay, was not intended to reach the right pocket. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 355, 46 Am. Dec. 58, 65. The neat result of the transaction was to deprive the judgment debtor of a credit of $560, at the least, on his indebtedness to which he was justly entitled.

In condemning this agreement, we are not unmindful of the qualification of the general rule which sanctions a fair and open compact between creditors (made with the knowledge and assent of the debtor), that certain debts will be taken care of, provided the holders thereof will abstain from bidding. Such adjustments are often convenient and beneficial to all concerned, but this agreement is not of that class. It is even more clearly violative of the policy of the law than was the agreement in Camp v. Bruce, and it is not our purpose to relax the stringency of the just rule announced in that case.

The judgment of the circuit court is without error, and must be affirmed.

Error to Circuit Court, Tazewell County.

Action by Crockett's administrator against W. A. Barnes and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Chapman & Gillespie and Greever & Gillespie, for plaintiffs in error. Henry & Graham and T. C. Bowen, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. Numerous errors are assigned on this writ of error, but most, if not all, of them depend upon the question whether or not the bonds sued on which were given for an existing indebtedness were a novation of the prior contract.

It appears that Robert Barnes, the father of the petitioners (his three sons), made a conveyance to them of valuable lands, by which, among other things, he required each of them to pay certain sums to their three sisters at designated periods, but with the provision that, if either of the sisters died without issue living before any part of the amount directed to be paid her became due and payable, then such amount as was not due was not to be paid. The sums directed to be paid the sisters were made a charge or lien upon the lands conveyed. One of the sisters, the intestate of the defendant in error, died before all the money directed to be paid her became due and payable. Before her death her brother, W. A. Barnes, desiring to sell the lands conveyed to him free of the lien or charge upon it, made an arrangement with his sisters by which they agreed to release the said lien and charge, and agreed to accept the bonds of their said brothers for the amounts due and unpaid, and to become due under the provisions of the conveyance of their father. The lien was released by deed entered of record and bonds executed for the then value of the sums due and to become due each of the sisters, payable one day after date with interest from date. The bonds thus executed and delivered to the intestate of the defendant in error not having been paid during her life this action of debt was instituted by her administrator for their collection.

The obligors in those bonds claimed that there was a failure of consideration, to the extent that the sum evidenced by the bonds was not due and payable to their sister at the time of her death. She having died without issue living before said sum became due and payable they were not liable for it under the terms of their grantor's deed, and made defense on this ground.

If the transaction or arrangement between the brothers and sisters by which the latter released the lien or charge on the lands and the former executed their bonds for the payment of said sums was a novation of the contract evidenced by their father's conveyance to his sons, the defense relied on was not good. If that transaction or arrangement was not a novation of the original contract, then the defense was a valid one.

Whether or not the taking of a new security of equal dignity is to be treated as a novation or substitution for and an extinguishment of a prior indebtedness is a matter of intention, to be determined from all the facts and circumstances of the case. Morris v. Harvey, 75 Va. 726, 732; State Bank of Va. v. Dom. Sewing Machine Co., 99 Va. 411, 39 S. E. 141, 86 Am. St. Rep. 891; Coles v. Withers, 33 Grat. 186, 187; Fid. Loan, etc., Co. v. Engleby, 99 Va. 168, 37 S. E. 957.

The principles which govern in determining whether or not there has been a novation are pretty fully discussed in the cases cited, and need not be reiterated.

The effect of the transaction between the brothers and sisters was not only to release the lien which the latter had upon the lands to secure the payment of their debt, but it merged the implied simple contract of the brothers under the deed into an express promise under seal. The brothers, though grantees in the deed, did not seal it, and therefore were not bound by it as a deed, but, having accepted the deed and entered into the estate conveyed, it became their duty to pay the sums required to be paid their sisters, and the law implied a promise to pay, upon which in case of failure to pay assumpsit would lie. Taylor v. Forbes, 101 Va. 658, 663-665, 44 S. E. 888, and authorities cited. Having released their lien and accepted the express undertakings of their brothers under seal to pay a debt evidenced by a simple implied contract, it would seem clear that the transaction and arrangement between the brothers and sisters for the release of the lien and the execution of the bonds discharged and extinguished all their rights and liabilities under the deed, unless there had been an agreement that it should not have that effect. The sisters could not afterwards enforce the lien created by the deed for they had expressly released it. They could not assert a personal liability against their brothers on the implied simple contract arising out of the deed and the acts of the grantees after accepting their express promise under seal to pay the same debt. It is well settled that, the parties being the same, the giving and acceptance of a bond for the payment of money due by a simple contract extinguishes the simple contract liability. Ward v. Motter, 2 Rob. 536; 2 Chitty on Contracts, 1160; Notes to Cumber v. Wane, 1 Smith's Lead. Cases, 458, and cases cited; 3 Min. Inst. 157.

The action of the court in refusing to admit certain evidence offered by the plaintiffs in error, and in admitting certain evidence offered by the defendant in error, did not prejudice the plaintiffs in error. The object of the evidence rejected was in effect to show that at the time the agreement between the brothers and sisters was entered into by which the said lien or charge was released and the said bonds executed no other or further agreement was made, and that nothing was said in reference to the effect of that transaction upon the rights of the parties under the deed of their father—in other words, that the entire transaction between the brothers and sisters was that the daughters should release their lien and the sons should execute their bonds for the sums due and to become due from them. If the plaintiffs in error had been permitted to prove this, it could not have benefited them, for, as we have seen, the legal effect of releasing the lien and the execution of the bonds was a discharge and extinguishment of the rights and liabilities of the parties under their father's will.

Nor were the plaintiffs in error prejudiced by the evidence introduced over their objection by the defendant in error. Even though the plaintiffs in error were not bound by the recital in the release deed that the debts due the daughters were discharged, that, as we have seen, was the legal effect of the transaction between them and their sisters.

The rejection of evidence which could not benefit, and the admission of evidence which could not prejudice, even if erroneous, is no ground for reversal.

Nor were the plaintiffs in error prejudiced by the action of the court in giving and refusing instructions, for upon the case made and offered to be made there could not have been properly found any other verdict than that which the jury rendered. Bryan v. Nash, 110 Va. 329, 66 S. E. 69.

Upon the whole case we are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment complained of and that it should be affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Roanoke County.

Suit by Ida Bachrach against Isaac Bachrach. Decree for complainant, and respondent appeals. Affirmed.

Hart & Hart and Halrston & Halrston, for appellant. Scott, Attizer & Watts, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. The question involved in this appeal is whether or not the trial court erred in holding that the deed from Jamison, trustee, to the appellant, Isaac Bachrach, conveying a house and lot in the city of Roanoke, which was absolute on its face, was in fact a mortgage to secure a debt due to him from the appellee, Mrs. Ida Bachrach.

It appears that the appellee in the year 1889 purchased the said house and lot, for which she agreed to pay the sum of $725. She paid $250 in cash and assumed the payment of certain notes evidencing the balance of the purchase money due from her vendor. The payment of these notes was secured by a deed of trust. In December, 1891, there remained due and unpaid on these notes about $200 or $225, when the trustee in the deed of trust sold the house and lot at public sale and the appellant became the purchaser at the price of $250, which sum seems to have been sufficient to satisfy the balance due on the notes secured by the deed of trust and the costs of sale. The trustee, upon the payment of the purchase price, executed a deed, absolute on its face, conveying the property to the appellant.

The appellee claims that the appellant purchased the house and lot for her under an agreement that he would do so, advance the purchase price for her, and take the legal title to himself to secure the repayment of the sum so advanced. The appellant denies that there was any such agreement, and claims that he purchased and paid for the property for himself.

It is well settled in equity that, although a deed is absolute on its face, it may be shown by oral evidence that it was intended as a mortgage, and that such evidence is not restricted to cases of fraud, accident, or mistake. See Snively v. Pickle, 29 Grat. 27; note to Thornbrough v. Baker, 2 White & Tudor's Lead. Cas. in Eq. (4th Ed.) pt. 2, 1983-1985, and cases cited.

The presumption is that a deed absolute on its face is what it purports to be, and, while oral evidence is admissible to show that it is a mortgage, it must be clear and convincing. Snively v. Pickle, supra; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 1196.

Whether such an instrument is to be regarded as a mortgage depends upon the circumstances under which it was made, the relations, and negotiations between the parties.

It appears that at the time of the trustee's sale the appellee was financially embarrassed, and was unable to pay the balance of the debt secured by the deed of trust. Shortly prior to that time she entered into negotiations with one of her creditors, Mr. Hughes, of Lynchburg, to purchase the house and lot at the price of $700, which would be sufficient to satisfy the debt ($450) which she owed him and to pay the residue of the deed of trust debt. Mr. Hughes agreed conditionally to make the purchase if upon examination he found that the house and lot was worth that sum. The appellee thereupon consulted with her counsel as to the best method of perfecting her title to the property so that Mr. Hughes could get good title to it in the event he concluded to take the property. She was advised by her counsel to have the trustee advertise and sell the property, to get Mr. Hughes to bid it off in his name, pay the balance due on the deed of trust debt, and cancel her indebtedness to him. The trustee at her request did advertise the property for sale, but Mr. Hughes before the day of sale examined or had the property examined, declined to bid upon it, and did not attend the sale because he was unwilling to pay $700 for it, the price asked by the appellee, but a few days afterwards offered her $525 for it, which she declined to accept. The appellee, as she claims, applied to her father and the appellant, her brother-in-law, who was in the habit of aiding her financially, and requested that one or the other of them should bid in the property for her when it was sold by the trustee; that at her instance and her father's the appellant agreed to bid off the property for her at a sum sufficient to satisfy the balance due upon the debt secured by the deed of trust, to advance that sum for her, and to have the house and lot conveyed to him to secure the payment of the sum. The appellee, her father, and the appellant were all present on the day of sale, and the property was bid off by the latter at the price of $250, and upon the payment of that sum the trustee conveyed the property to him by a deed absolute on its face.

The appellant in his examination-in-chief denies positively that there was any agreement between himself and the appellee as to the purchase of the property, and asserts that he purchased it for himself. On his cross-examination he states that, when he went to the sale with the appellee's father, there was some arrangement between them by which one or the other was to bid for the property, but it had not been determined which of them should do so; and, when asked the direct question on cross-examination, if the arrangement or agreement between himself and Mr. May was not substantially as claimed and testified to by the appellee—that he should bid off the property for her and advance the money to pay for it—his reply was, "If there was anything of the kind I have forgotten it," but that he did not think there was.

The conduct and admissions of the appellant are inconsistent with the claim he now asserts. The evidence of the other witness and the circumstances surrounding the transaction strongly corroborate and sustain the appellee's contention. It clearly appears by the appellant's own admissions that he did not bid off the property for himself. It was knocked off to him for less than half its value, for within a few days afterwards the appellee was offered $525 for it by Mr. Hughes, which offer she declined to accept. The appellee collected the rents from the property as her own for more than two years, and until she and the appellant's wife, who was her sister, had some disagreement, when the appellant notified the tenant in the property to pay the rents to him. The appellee at once consulted her counsel in reference to the matter, and he advised her to permit the appellant to collect the rents until he had received a sum sufficient to pay the advances made by him for her. The latter never asserted any claim to the rents collected by the appellee or sought to recover them from her, and never, so far as the record shows, made the claim that he had purchased the property for himself until just before the institution of this suit, when the appellee and her husband, upon the advice of her counsel, called upon him for a statement of his collections and disbursements, so that there might be a settlement between them.

After a careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record, we are of opinion that the trial court did not err in holding that the deed in question, although absolute on its face, was a mortgage, and in enforcing it as such.

The decree complained of must be affirmed. Affirmed.

1. EQUITY (§ 447*)—BILL OF REVIEW—REQUISITES.

After dismissal of a suit to avoid a sale of stock for false representations, the court should have allowed plaintiff to file a bill of review, based on newly discovered evidence, the bill being verified and accompanied by an affidavit as to the false representations, and it appearing that plaintiff had unsuccessfully tried to obtain such evidence for the trial from the affiant.

In a suit to declare a sale of stock void for false representations that a certain person had bought some of the stock and had paid a certain price for it, plaintiff's request to such person to testify as to whether he had made such purchase was the use of such reasonable diligence to obtain that evidence as should sustain a bill of review on the ground of the subsequent procurement of such evidence.

Appeal from Corporation Court of City of Roanoke.

Suit by Becker against Johnson. From the decree for defendant, and the decree overruling the motion to file a bill of review, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. B. Hunt, for appellant. Price & Kyle and S. H. Graves, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. This suit was brought by the appellant, Becker, to rescind the sale of 20 shares of stock in the Universal Spring Motor Corporation and cancel 4 negotiable notes made by him for the purchase price thereof, on the ground that the sale was procured by false representations fraudulently made to the plaintiff by the appellee, Johnson. Upon the allegation that the notes in question had been placed in the custody of S. H. Graves and subsequently transferred to Tatum, Davis, and Adams, those parties were impleaded along with Johnson. Graves disclaimed all interest in or possession of the notes, but the other defendants asserted ownership of them as holders in due course.

The material allegations of the bill on the main features of the case are, in substance, that the defendant, Johnson, sold to the plaintiff the 20 shares of stock for $1,200, taking his four negotiable notes therefor; that, as an inducement to the purchase, Johnson represented (among other matters not necessary to be mentioned) that A. E. King, an influential and prosperous citizen of Roanoke, had subscribed for 100 shares of the stock at the reduced price at which it was offered to the plaintiff, and had actually paid $2,000 on his purchase; that he, moreover, represented that S. H. Hieronimus, another influential and prosperous citizen, had likewise subscribed for 25 shares of the stock; that the plaintiff knew nothing of the existence of any such company as the Universal Spring Motor Corporation, or of its organization and objects or the value of the stock, but relied and acted solely upon the representations of Johnson, which constituted the inducement to the purchase; and that the representations in both instances were false and made with intent to deceive and mislead the plaintiff and induce him to purchase stock which was worthless.

The bill called for an answer under oath, and Johnson filed his answer denying the allegations of the bill, and averring that his codefendants were bona fide transferees for value of the notes.

The depositions of the plaintiff and King were taken, and the charge in the bill as to the alleged false representations of Johnson of the sale of 100 shares of stock to the latter was substantially proved. But the plaintiff, after diligent effort, failed to discover evidence to establish the untruth of the representation touching the sale of the 25 shares to Hieronimus.

In this state of the proof the case came on to be heard, and the court was of opinion that the allegations of the bill were not sustained; that Johnson was the bona fide holder of the plaintiff's notes on June 18, 1908, and, establishing the titles of his respective transferees, passed the decree complained of dismissing the bill with costs.

Shortly thereafter and within the time prescribed by statute, the plaintiff presented a bill of review for newly discovered evidence, and moved the court for leave to file the same and to reinstate the original case on the docket. This motion the court overruled, and from that order and the former decree dismissing the original bill this appeal was allowed.

The allegation of the bill of review, with respect to the newly discovered evidence, is substantially as follows: That prior to the hearing of the case the plaintiff had used due diligence to obtain evidence of the falsity of Johnson's representation that Hieronimus had purchased 25 shares of the stock at the price at which he was offering it to the plaintiff, and to that end sent his attorney to Hieronimus to ascertain the facts, but without avail, as he positively declined to furnish any information on the subject; that since the entry of the decree Hieronimus had voluntarily made the affidavit exhibited with the bill of review, to the effect that he did not own a single share of stock in the Universal Spring Motor Corporation, and had never at any time subscribed for any of the stock of that company, either in his own name or in the name of any one else; that he at one time made a partial agreement with Arthur Seibert by which they conditionally agreed between themselves that they would take some of the stock, but afterwards determined not to do so; and that he had never made an agreement with any agent or representative of the company to subscribe for stock; that, when he was first approached by counsel for the plaintiff to ascertain if he was a subscriber, he did not see fit to furnish any information on the subject; but that, since he and Seibert had agreed between themselves not to become subscribers, he had no hesitancy in disclosing the real facts.

This bill of review complies with the rule of practice of courts of chancery with respect to such bills. It is sworn to by the plaintiff, and sustained by the affidavit of Hieronimus. The evidence relied on is new and could not have been discovered by the use of ordinary diligence in time for the former trial; and it is relevant to a distinct charge of misrepresentation in the bill and is such as, if true, ought to produce a different result on a rehearing of the case. Durbin v. Roanoke Building Co., 108 Va. 468, 62 S. E. 339; Campbell's Ex'r's v. Campbell's Ex'r, 22 Grat. 649, 696.

The appellant by his counsel in good faith made inquiry of Hieronimus to ascertain, if possible, the facts concerning the representation touching his ownership of the stock, but without success. He did all that reasonable diligence could demand in that behalf; and that satisfied the rule of practice, which only imposes the duty upon the applicant for a new trial of exercising ordinary (not extraordinary) effort in the search for evidence bearing upon the matter under investigation. 29 Cyc. 892.

It is obvious that the corporation court was of opinion that the evidence of the plaintiff was not sufficient to satisfy the rule that, when the bill calls for an answer under oath and an answer under oath responsive thereto is filed, it furnishes evidence for the defendant, and will be taken as true, unless overcome by the testimony of two witnesses or of one witness and corroborating circumstances or by documentary evidence. Coldiron v. Ashville Shoe Co., 93 Va. 364, 25 S. E. 238. This rule of practice, however, is answered by the affidavit of Hieronimus, which shows that he stands prepared to testify to the falsity of Johnson's representation that he had subscribed for 25 shares of stock.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the corporation court erred in denying the plaintiff leave to file his bill of review, and for that error the order of refusal must be reversed and annulled, and the case remanded for further proceedings to be had therein not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

Reversed.

2. STATUTES (§ 236*)—REMEDIAL STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

The court in construing a remedial statute should keep in mind the old law, the mischief to be remedied, and the remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 317, 324, 325; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

3. LIS PENDENS (§ 22*)—PURCHASERS PENDING SUIT—EFFECT.

The rule as to the effect of a lis pendens is founded on its necessity to give effect to judicial proceedings, for, without it, the administration of justice might be frustrated by alienations of that which is the subject of the litigation, pending the suit, and the rule, in the absence of statute, applies even in cases in which there is a physical impossibility that the purchaser could know with any possible diligence of the existence of the pending suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lis Pendens, Cent. Dig. §§ 31, 34-37; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

4. LIS PENDENS (§ 18*)—RECORDING—INDEXING—NECESSITY.

Code 1904, § 3566, providing that no lis pendens shall affect a bona fide purchaser without actual notice unless a memorandum setting forth the description of the land, and the name of the person whose estate is intended to be affected by the suit "shall be left with the clerk of the court * * * who shall forthwith record the said memorandum in the deed book and index the same in the name of the person aforesaid," makes the recording of the memorandum and the indexing of it essential to the docketing of a lis pendens; the object of the statute being to provide a means by which one desiring to purchase land may by an examination of the deed books ascertain whether or not there is a pending suit which may affect the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lis Pendens, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

5. LIS PENDENS (§ 22*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

In the absence of record notice the knowledge required by statute which will affect a purchaser pending a suit must affect the conscience of the purchaser, and the notice may be either actual or circumstantial or presumptive; but it is not sufficient if it merely puts the purchaser on inquiry, but it must be clear and strong and such as to fix on him the imputation of bad faith in making the purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lis Pendens, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Russell County.

Suit between one Vicars and one Salyer. From a decree for Salyer, Vicars appeals. Affirmed.

Vicars & Peery, for appellant. Bond & Bruce, W. W. Bird, and R. S. Meade, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. The appellee, Salyer, was a purchaser of land whilst a suit was pending to set aside a conveyance thereof (upon the ground that it was made to hinder and defraud the creditors of the grantor) and to subject the land to the payment of certain debts due from the grantor. Such proceedings were had in the cause as resulted in a sale of the land. The trial court held that the rights of the pendente lite purchaser were superior to those of the purchaser at the judicial sale. From that decree this appeal was taken.

The contention of the appellant is that the suit to subject the land was properly docketed under the provisions of section 3566 of the Code of 1904, or, if it were not, that the appellee had actual notice of the pendency of the suit when he purchased, and that the trial court therefore erred in holding his purchase valid.

The appellee, on the other hand, denies that the lis pendens was properly docketed, and also denies that he had actual notice of the pendency of the suit.

The ground upon which the appellee denies that the lis pendens was properly docketed is that it was not indexed as to the grantee in the deed sought to be set aside—the person from whom the appellee purchased.

The language of section 3566 of the Code is as follows: "No lis pendens, or attachment under chapter one hundred and forty-one, shall bind or affect a bona fide purchaser of real estate, for valuable consideration, without actual notice of such lis pendens or attachment, unless and until a memorandum setting forth the title of the cause, the general object thereof, the court in which it is pending, a description of the land, and the name of the person whose estate is intended to be affected thereby, shall be left with the clerk of the court of the county or corporation in which the land is situate, who shall forthwith record the said memorandum in the deed book, and index the same in the name of the person aforesaid."

The question presented for our decision is whether "indexing" is a part and a necessary part of docketing of a lis pendens. In other words, is the docketing incomplete until the lis pendens is properly indexed in the name of the defendants, as provided by section 3566?

The meaning of that section is, of course, to be derived from the statute itself; but, as was said by Judge Moncure in Fox's Adm'r v. Commonwealth, 16 Grat. 1, 10: "In the exposition of a statute the leading clue to the construction to be made is the intention of the Legislature, and that may be discovered from different signs. As a primary rule, it is to be collected from the words. When the words are not explicit, it is to be gathered from the occasion and necessity of the law, being the causes which moved the Legislature to enact it."

Section 3566 being a remedial statute, in construing it there should be kept in mind the old law, the mischief intended to be remedied, and the remedy. Clafin & Co. v. Steenbock & Co., 18 Grat. 860, and authorities cited by Judge Joynes.

It is not explicitly or distinctly stated in section 3566 that indexing is necessary to complete the docketing of the lis pendens. Neither is it explicitly or distinctly stated that recording in the deed book the memorandum left with the clerk is necessary to complete the docketing. Yet, if the recording of the memorandum in the deed book is not essential to the docketing of the lis pendens, little good would be accomplished by the section—at least, the statute would fall far short of remedying the mischief which existed under the old law.

In Newman v. Chapman, 2 Rand. 93, 102-105, 14 Am. Dec. 768, the doctrine upon which lis pendens rests is clearly, and, as we understand it, correctly, stated by Judge Green. He says that: "The rule as to the effect of a lis pendens is founded upon the necessity of such a rule to give effect to the proceedings of courts of justice. Without it the administration of justice might, in all cases, be frustrated by successive alienations of the property which was the object of litigation, pending the suit, so that every judgment and decree would be rendered abortive where the recovery of specific property was the object. This necessity is so obvious that there was no occasion to resort to the presumption that the purchaser really had or by inquiry might have had notice of the pendency of the suit to justify the existence of the rule. In fact, it applied in cases in which there was a physical impossibility that the purchaser could know, with any possible diligence on his part, of the existence of the suit. * * *

After showing that the rule of lis pendens was less harsh as administered by courts of chancery than by the common law courts, he continues: "This principle, however necessary, was harsh in its effects upon bona fide purchasers, and was confined in its operation to the extent of the policy on which it was founded. * * *

Because of the hardship which frequently resulted from the enforcement of the rule, especially to bona fide purchasers, statutes have been passed in England and in many of the states of this country intended, as far as practicable, to remedy the mischiefs of the old law, or to lessen its hardships. One of the objects of the Legislature in enacting section 3566 manifestly was to provide a means by which a person desiring to purchase land might by an examination of the deed books in the county where the land was situated ascertain whether or not there was pending a suit which might affect the title to the land. This object could not be accomplished by the mere leaving of the memorandum required with the clerk. An examination of the deed books would disclose nothing in regard to the pending suit, unless, as the section provides, that memorandum was spread upon or recorded in the deed book. As before stated, if indexing the lis pendens after it has been spread upon or recorded in the deed book is not an essential part of its docketing, then copying the memorandum in the deed book is not, for the language of the section cannot be mandatory as to the one and merely directory as to the other. The provision of the statute is that the memorandum required "shall be left with the clerk of the court of the county or corporation in which the land is situate, who shall forthwith record the said memorandum in the deed book and index the same in the name of the person aforesaid."

The provisions of the section as to recording the memorandum in the proper deed book and indexing it being the same, both are essential to the complete docketing of a lis pendens or neither is. To hold that neither is, not only renders the index to the deed books an untrustworthy guide in the examination of a title, but renders the deed books themselves an untrustworthy guide and makes it necessary, if a purchaser would be safe, to have the clerk's office searched to see if a memorandum of a pending suit had been left with the clerk. Such a construction would not remedy the mischief of the old law and accomplish the manifest intention of the Legislature of making the deed books of the county show the state of the title to land so far as affected by pending suits. It seems to us that to require a purchaser to look to any other source of information than the deed books—that which the statute has provided for him—would be contrary to the spirit and policy if not the letter of the statute.

We are of opinion, therefore, that section sary that such intention should be expressly declared, but it may be gathered from the whole and every part of the instrument. But the will must be reasonably construed, even where by so doing the parties are put to an election. Penn. v. Guggenheimer, supra, and cases cited; Wilkinson v. Dent, L. R. 6 Chan. 339.

The difficulty of ascertaining the testator's intent is generally, if not always, greater where he has a partial interest in the property devised than where he undertakes to dispose of an estate in which he has no interest. In the former case the presumption is that he intended to dispose of that which he might properly devise and nothing more; and this presumption will always prevail unless the intention is clearly manifested by demonstration plain or necessary implication on the part of the testator to dispose of the whole estate including interests other than his own. Usually where he has an undivided interest in certain property, and he uses general words in disposing of it, as "all my lands," or "all my estate," no case of election arises; for it does not plainly appear that he intended to dispose of anything not his own. Penn. v. Guggenheimer, supra, and authorities cited; Note to Noys v. Mordaunt, 1 White & Tudor's Lead. Cases, pt. 1, 514, and cases cited. But, if a testator having an undivided interest in a particular property devises the property specifically to his co-owner, a case of election does arise, and the devisee must elect between his own interest in the property and the interest given him by the will. Same authorities; Miller v. Thurgood, 83 Beavan, 496; Padberry v. Clark, 2 McNaughton & Gordon, 297.

Let us apply these principles to the case under consideration. By the first clause of the will, the testator devises the dwelling house and land connected therewith occupied by him and his wife as a homestead. That property consisted of two parcels—one lot upon which the dwelling house was situated and in which he only owned an undivided moiety, and another lot connected with and used as a part of the homestead, of which he was the sole owner. The devise is not limited to his interest in the lands devised. The property is described specifically as that occupied as a homestead and as an entirety. The language of the devise is such as would be suitable in disposing of the whole property. It is ample, complete, and correct for that purpose, but wholly inapplicable to a gift of a moiety merely in the lot on which the dwelling house was located.

It seems to us that there can be no reasonable doubt that it was the intention of the testator to dispose of the entire homestead property.

Having reached the conclusion that the appellant by the provisions of her husband's will was put to her election, and that she could not and cannot choose both her own estate and the bequests made in her favor, the next question is: Has she made such election?

The proof of an election may be express or it may be implied from the acts and conduct of the party, but in either case it must have been with knowledge of the party's rights and with the intention of making an election. See Showalter v. Showalter, 107 Va. 713, 720, 60 S. E. 48, and authorities cited.

There was no express election in this case. The acts and conduct of the appellant in holding and using the property actually owned by her husband and in claiming it in her bill show that she was claiming under the will. But there is nothing in her acts and conduct nor in the allegations of her bill which show that in claiming her husband's property given her by the will she knew that she must surrender her fee-simple interest in the dwelling house property, or that she intended to do so. There is nothing to show that she has not always placed the same construction upon the will that she now contends for, and that she did not in good faith shape her conduct by such interpretation. So far as the record shows, no one placed a different construction upon it prior to the filing of the answer of the adult appellees, or that she was ever called upon by any party in interest to elect which of the two interests she would take—her own fee-simple interest in the dwelling house property or the interest given her by the will.

Where an election is once made by a party bound to elect, either expressly or impliedly, with full knowledge of all the facts, it binds him and those who claim under him, although made in ignorance of the law. Penn. v. Guggenheimer, supra, 76 Va. 850, 851. Ignorance of law is no excuse for a party's conduct. But, as was held in Burton v. Haden, 108 Va. 51, 56, 60 S. E. 736, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1038, the maxim that ignorance of the law is no excuse is confined to matters of the general rules of law, and has no application to the mistakes of persons as to their own private rights and interests. The latter, as was said in that case, stand upon the footing of mistakes of fact.

"It is true," said Lord Chancellor Westbury in Spread v. Morgan, 11 H. of L. Cases, 588, 602, "as a general proposition, that knowledge of the law must be imputed to every person, but it would be too much to impute knowledge of this rule of equity (election). * * *

Treating this rule of equity as a matter of fact and not as a matter of law, it would seem that the appellant's election to claim under the will of her husband was made under a misconception of her rights.

Where a party has elected to claim under an instrument under a misconception of fact, such election may not be binding.

In 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 515, it is said: "To raise an inference of election from the party's conduct merely, it must appear that he knew of his right to elect and not merely of the instrument giving him such right, and that he had full knowledge of all the facts concerning the parties. As an election is necessarily a definite choice of the party to take one of the properties and to reject the other, his conduct, in order that an election may be inferred, must be done with an intention to elect and must show such intention."

In 1 Jarman on Wills, m. p. 435, it is said: "In order to presume an election from the acts of any person, that person must be shown to have had full knowledge of all the requisite circumstances, as to the amount of the different properties, his own rights in respect to them, etc., and a person having elected under a misconception is entitled to make a fresh election."

In 2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) at page 1006, quoted with approval in Showalter v. Showalter, supra, it is said: "It is well established that no one shall be constrained to make an election until the interests to which the election relates are clearly defined and their relative values ascertained, and an election made before that is done will for the most part be disregarded, at least if made under mistaken impressions as to the facts; but only upon the terms (supposing the election to have been unambiguously made) of restoring other persons, whose rights are affected by the party's act of election, to the same situation substantially as if the act had not taken place." And at page 1008 it is said: "Clear proof of an election made must be furnished, and ambiguous acts and conduct will in general not be so construed, unless in those cases where the interests of others have been affected by the acts and require that they should be interpreted to amount to an election. * * *"

Where a person bound to elect between two properties continues in possession or enjoyment or receipt of the rents and profits of both, without being called upon by the other party interested to elect, this conduct indicates no intention of taking one and rejecting the other, and does not therefore amount to an election. 1 Pom. Eq. (1st Ed.) § 575, citing among other cases, Spread v. Morgan, supra. See, also, Padbury v. Clark, supra.

From these authorities it would seem clear that, where a party elects to take under a will under a misconception of fact as to his rights and interests under the will, such election will be disregarded where the other parties affected by such election can be placed substantially in the same situation as if no such election had been made.

The only person affected by the election made by the appellant is her infant son, and nothing has grown out of her action which will work wrong or injury to him.

It is earnestly insisted by the appellees' counsel that it is too late now for the appellant to make a new election, since the statute (Code 1904, § 2271) requires that a widow must renounce, if at all, the provisions of her husband's will within one year after its admission to probate.

That section has no application to a case like this. "It was intended to provide how a widow must proceed who desires to reject the provisions made for her by her husband's will out of property other than her own and take such interest in his lands as the law gives her. Where a testator disposes of property belonging to his wife in her own right, and also makes provision for her by his will, she has the same right of election as to such property as any other person, and whether or not she has elected to take under or against the will is to be determined as in other cases." Pence v. Life, 104 Va. 518, 521, 52 S. E. 257, and cases cited; Showalter v. Showalter, supra.

We are of opinion that the appellant has not yet made an irrevocable election, and that the trial court erred in holding that she had.

We are further of opinion that the trial court in the decree appealed from properly construed the will, and that the cross-error assigned is without merit.

For the error in the decree holding that the appellant had made a binding election, the decree must be reversed, and the cause remanded to be further proceeded in not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion and with liberty to the appellant to make her election between her fee-simple interest in the dwelling house property and the life estate or less in all the property disposed of by her husband's will.

Reversed.

WILBURN et al. v. RAINES et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 15, 1910.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 72*)—PROCEEDINGS—RES JUDICATA.

Where the good faith of applicants for changes of a road was not questioned, and it was not alleged that the requested changes were the same as those involved in previous applications, the decision on the previous applications was not res judicata, notwithstanding prior decisions on similar applications; the doctrine of res judicata not being strictly applied to such proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 280*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Acts 1908, c. 346, providing for the establishment, alteration, and discontinuance of roads in a county, and for the appointment in each magisterial district thereof of a board of road commissioners, with power to establish and alter roads on notice to the landowners, who may attend and offer evidence, and who may appeal to a commission from another district, and to the circuit court and the Supreme Court of Appeals on the question of just compensation, etc., is not invalid as depriving the owners of their property without due process of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 1*)—NATURE OF POWER—JUDICIAL QUESTIONS.

The condemnation of private property for road purposes involves the exercise of the power of eminent domain as an attribute of sovereignty, which may be exerted by the Legislature directly or through such agencies as it pleases, and the matter of ascertaining compensation, which is judicial, so that the owner may have that question investigated and determined by an impartial tribunal, and under Const. 1902, § 88 (Code 1904, p. ccxxx), may appeal to the Supreme Court of Appeals, but the Legislature may limit the right of appeal to the judicial question only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 123*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

The title of Acts 1908, c. 346, relating to the establishment, alteration, discontinuance, and working of roads of a designated county, and to the punishment of obstructions of the road commissioners in the discharge of their duties, and the punishment of road officials for neglect of their duties, expresses the general purpose of the act, and the subordinate features of it are germane to the general object, so that the act does not contravene Const. 1902, § 52 (Code 1904, p. ccxxi), in that it embraces more than one object.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 109*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

A title fairly expressing the general subject of a statute covers provisions for all proper means and instrumentalities, which will, or may, facilitate the accomplishment or enforcement of the purpose expressed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 130-139; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

6. HIGHWAYS (§ 157*)—OBSTRUCTIONS—STATUTES.

The Legislature may invest road officers with power to remove obstructions from public highways, and Acts 1908, c. 346, relating to roads in a designated county, is not unconstitutional because it gives the road officers provided for authority to remove obstructions from such roads.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

7. HIGHWAYS (§ 19*)—ESTABLISHMENT—STATUTES.

Acts 1908, c. 346, providing for the establishment of roads in a designated county, must be construed in connection with the general road law, and the provisions of the general law prevail as to the establishment of a road through an orchard, cemetery, or home, where the special act is silent on that subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

8. STATUTES (§ 97*)—HIGHWAYS—SPECIAL LAWS—VALIDITY.

Const. 1902, § 64 (Code 1904, p. ccxiv), prohibiting local laws in enumerated cases, does not forbid the passage of special road laws, where, in the judgment of the Legislature, the matter cannot be provided for by general law.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Giles County.

Suit by one Wilburn and others against one Raines and others. From a decree of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Jackson & Williams and Williams & Farrier, for appellants. McCormick, Henson & Broun, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. This appeal is from a decree dismissing on demurrer a bill in equity by the appellant, impleading the board of road commissioners of Walker's creek magisterial district in Giles county, to have an act to provide for "the establishing, altering, discontinuing, and working and keeping in repair the roads and bridges of that county," and for incidental purposes, as amended, approved March 14, 1908, declared unconstitutional. Acts 1908, p. 611, c. 346.

Before considering the constitutional questions relied on, we shall notice the assignment of error, that the matters prayed for in the application for a change of road are res adjudicata. This assignment rests upon the allegation that on three previous occasions, covering a period of 17 years, some of the present applicants had petitioned for the location or change of the same road through the land of the appellants.

The question whether the state ever exhausts its power of eminent domain in the matter of establishing public highways need not now be considered. It is an important public question, and too rigid an application of the doctrine of res adjudicata to such proceedings by a few individuals so as to bind the state or the community at large might be attended with embarrassing consequences. Conditions are constantly changing and circumstances which did not exist at the time of the first refusal may subsequently arise and render the establishment of a new road or a change in an old one imperative. On the other hand, courts of equity are always open to restrain the abuse of the power.

In this case the good faith of the applicants is not questioned, and, moreover, it is not alleged that the proposed changes are the same as those involved in previous applications.

The bill assails the constitutionality of the act on two grounds: (1) Because it deprives the owners of their property for public use without due process of law; and (2) because it denies them the right of appeal to this court except on the question of damages.

The act, to some extent at least, seems to have been modeled after the Pulaski county road law. Acts 1897-98, p. 97, c. 95. That act provides that the application of five freeholders for changes in the location of roads shall be made to the road board composed of the chairman of the board of supervisors and the member of the board and road commissioners from the district affected. This board viewed the location, and, if deemed advisable, made the changes, assessed damages to the landowners, and reported its action to the county court. The county court was not empowered to supervise or review the action of the road board, but merely directed the report to be recorded and notified the landowners of its action in order that they might appeal on the question of damages. Such appeal was either to a supplemental commission or to the county court. In other words, the road was established ex parte and without the intervention of the court with right of appeal to the county court and jury only as to damages, and was final except on questions of law.

The Giles county act provides for a similar commission, the supervisor, and road commissioner, who in case of disagreement can call in the county surveyor. Their view is not ex parte, but notice of time and place is given the landowners who may attend and offer evidence which the commission must consider, and be heard; and, to avoid local prejudice, with right of appeal to a commission from another district. Likewise, in all cases an appeal lies to the circuit court and jury on the question of just compensation; and upon that question a further appeal lies from the decision of the court and jury to this court, both on law and fact, by virtue of the general law. The act thus provides for the location of the road only after notice and hearing, with right of appeal to a second commission, and unrestricted appeal to the court and jury and ultimately to this court on the question of just compensation.

This act is far more liberal to the landowner than the Pulaski county act. The latter act was construed by this court in Painter v. St. Clair, 98 Va. 85, 34 S. E. 989, and it was there held that it did not authorize the taking of private property without "due process of law." On that point the court said: "The act is also assailed as unconstitutional in that it takes the property of the citizen 'without due process of law.' The power of eminent domain is an incident of sovereignty. It is vested in the Legislature, and it can only be set in motion by virtue of legislative enactment, by which the time, manner, and occasion of its exercise are directed and controlled, except as restrained by the Constitution. The Legislature is clothed with exclusive authority to determine when the necessity exists for exercising the power. It may exercise it directly, or it may select such agencies as it pleases, and confer upon them the right, subject only to the limitations contained in the Constitution, and with respect to it 'due process of law' only requires that it shall be exercised in subordination to the established principle, that private property cannot be taken for public use without the consent of the owner, save upon payment to him of just compensation. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 309; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226 [17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979]; Lewis on Eminent Domain, §§ 237, 238, 240, 242, 253, 254." Commission of Fisheries

v. Hampton Roads Oyster, etc., Ass'n, 109 Va. 565, 64 S. E. 1041, 3 Va. App. 290.

The second ground of objection is that the act is in conflict with section 88, art. 6, Const. Va. (Code 1904, p. ccxxx), in that it denies an appeal to this court in a controversy "concerning the condemnation of property * * * and a roadway," except as to the amount of damages.

This contention grows out of a misconception of the scope of the foregoing provision. The condemnation of private property for road purposes involves the exercise of dual functions. The one, the power of eminent domain, as an attribute of sovereignty, may be exerted by the Legislature "directly, or it may select such agencies as it pleases, and confer upon them the right." Painter v. St. Clair, supra. The other, the matter of ascertaining a just compensation for the property condemned, is judicial in its character, and the owner is entitled to have that question investigated and determined by an impartial tribunal, and by section 88 of the Constitution, with the ultimate right of appeal to this court. And this latter right is, as we have seen, fully safeguarded.

It is true that under the general road law there is an unrestricted right of appeal to this court; but it is also true that it is within the competency of the Legislature by special enactment to limit that right to judicial questions only.

It was urged in argument that the act contravenes section 52, art. 4 (page ccxi), in that it embraces more than one object. It is a sufficient answer to this objection to say that the general purpose of the act is expressed in the title, and that the subordinate features of it are not incongruous with, but are germane to, the general object.

The rule in such case is well stated in 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, p. 588: "A title fairly expressing the general subject covers provisions for all proper means and instrumentalities which will or may facilitate the accomplishment or enforcement of the purpose expressed, such, for instance, as a provision prohibiting violations of the act, or prescribing a penalty or other punishment for violations."

This general statement of the law is in harmony with the decisions of this court. See Bertram v. Commonwealth, 108 Va. 902, 62 S. E. 969, and cases cited.

It was also contended that the act is unconstitutional because it gives the road board authority to remove fences, woodpiles, or other obstructions which may be in the road. The part of the Constitution which this section of the act is supposed to infringe is not pointed out, and no objection is perceived to investing road officers with power to remove obstructions from public highways. Indeed, it is a right possessed by any citizen having occasion to travel the public roads of the commonwealth.

It was argued, however, that, as no express limitations are imposed on the road board with respect to the location of roads, they could invade the precincts of the citizen's home, yard, garden, orchard, or cemetery for purposes of expropriation. This is a total misapprehension of the act, which must, of course, be construed in connection with the general road law, and, when silent on any subject, the general law, which prohibits such taking, prevails.

Other questions relied on in argument have been considered, but are not deemed of sufficient importance to demand special notice. The Constitution of Virginia does not forbid the passage of special road laws where in the judgment of the General Assembly such enactment cannot be provided for by general law. Article 4, § 64 (page cccxiv). And it is matter of common knowledge that for time out of mind such laws have been enacted in this state many of which are now in force throughout the commonwealth, and it would lead to disastrous consequences for the courts to declare them invalid upon an overstrict construction of legislative discretion.

Upon the whole case, we find no error in the decree under review, and it must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—THEORY OF CASE IN TRIAL COURT.

Where a case was tried in the lower court on a theory not presented by the pleadings, the court on appeal will review the case on the same theory.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 69*)—POLLUTION OF STREAM—RIGHTS OF RIPARIAN OWNERS.

Any use of a stream that materially fouls the water, or a deposit therein of any filth that so far affects the water as to impair its value for ordinary purposes, or anything which renders the water offensive to taste or smell, or which is calculated to excite disgust in those using it for ordinary purposes, is a nuisance, which equity will enjoin at the suit of a riparian owner injured thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 60, 61; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 69*)—POLLUTION OF STREAM—RIGHTS OF RIPARIAN OWNERS.

An operator of a sawmill on a stream threw sawdust into the stream, so that the same was deposited in it and in springs near to it. The deposits discolored the water, and in warm weather the decaying sawdust gave it an offensive odor. Live stock in some instances refused to drink the water, and it was less fit for domestic purposes and was unwholesome.

Physicians believed that the decaying sawdust deposits affected the purity of the water, and generally caused disease along the streams where found. Held, that the use of the stream was in violation of the rights of a lower riparian owner, who could sue to restrain such use.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Dickenson County.

Suit by J. E. L. Sutherland and J. M. Powers against J. E. Shoffner. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Vicars & Peery, R. E. Chase, and A. A. Skeen, for appellant. S. H. Sutherland, for appellees.

BUCHANAN, J. This is a suit brought by lower riparian landowners to restrain a sawmill operator higher up the stream from casting into the stream sawdust and other substances which it is alleged polluted the water, and rendered it unwholesome and unfit for domestic purposes.

The relative rights of an upper and lower riparian owner were carefully considered by the court in the recent case of Trevett v. Prison Association, 98 Va. 332, 36 S. E. 373, 50 L. R. A. 564, 81 Am. St. Rep. 727, and the conclusion reached, as correctly stated in the syllabus of the case, that "the natural pollution of water in its flow through populous regions of country cannot ordinarily be restrained. But any use of a stream that materially fouls and adulterates the water, or the deposit or discharge therein of any filth or noxious substance that so far affects the water as to impair its value for the ordinary purposes of life, or anything which renders the water less wholesome than when in its ordinary state, or which renders it offensive to taste or smell, or which is naturally calculated to excite disgust in those using the water for the ordinary purposes of life, will constitute a nuisance which courts of equity will enjoin, or for which a lower riparian owner injured thereby is entitled to redress."

It is insisted by the appellees' counsel in argument that the appellant was not a riparian owner, and therefore did not have the rights of such an owner. Whether he was or not does not appear, and, as no such question was raised in the pleadings, this court will consider the case as if he were a riparian owner, as seems to have been done in the trial court.

It is a conceded fact in the case that the appellant was operating a sawmill on said stream and had been for some months, and that, except during the dry season, he did cast the sawdust from his mill into the stream. The appellant seeks to justify such use of the stream on the ground that he was almost entirely engaged in sawing poplar lumber upon his mill which was a band mill; that sawdust from poplar cut on a band mill is very light, floats readily upon the water, and is carried down the creek into larger streams, and could not from the character and rapidity of the stream damage any one by lodging or sinking therein; and that even if it were deposited in and along the stream, which is denied, it is not a noxious or unwholesome substance, and did not pollute the stream or render it less valuable for domestic purposes.

The contention of the appellees, on the other hand, is that all the sawdust did not float into other streams, but was deposited in quantities in and along the stream, and in times of high water was backed and deposited in springs near the stream, thereby discoloring the water, causing it to have an offensive odor, impairing its value for domestic purposes, and rendering it unwholesome, offensive and injuriously affecting the health of the people dwelling along the stream.

The evidence is conflicting, but it clearly preponderates in favor of the appellees' contention. The weight of evidence not only shows that sawdust was deposited in and along the stream on which the sawmill was located and in springs near to the stream, but that these deposits discolored the water; that in warm weather the decaying sawdust gave the water an offensive odor; that stock in some instances refused to drink it; that it was less fit for domestic purposes, was unwholesome, and in the opinion of physicians decaying sawdust deposits affected the purity of the water, and were frequently, if not generally, the cause of disease along the streams in which the deposits were found.

It is insisted by the appellant's counsel that restraining sawmill operators from casting sawdust into the streams along which they are operating will be very hurtful to the vast lumber interests of the southwestern part of the state, and will hinder the development of that great source of wealth.

"It would," as was said in Townsend v. Norfolk Ry. Co., 105 Va. 49, 52 S. E. 978, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 115 Am. St. Rep. 842, "be a source of regret if, in the administration of justice by the establishment and enforcement of sound principles, the prosperity of our people should be hindered or checked, but it would be not only a source of regret, but of reproach, if material prosperity were stimulated and encouraged by a refusal to give to any citizen a remedy for wrongs he may sustain, even though inflicted by forces which constitute factors in our material development and growth. Courts have no policies, and cannot permit consequences to influence their judgment further than to serve as warnings and incentives to thorough investigation and careful consideration of the causes submitted to them."

Upon the facts disclosed by the record, we are of opinion that the use made of the stream by the appellant in casting sawdust into it was in violation of the rights of the appellees, and that the trial court did not err in enjoining the appellant from such use. The decree complained of must therefore be affirmed.

Affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Russell County.

Bill by J. D. King and another against Robert B. Meade and another. From a decree for complainants, defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. W. Bird and R. S. Meade, for appellants. E. S. Finney, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. This is a suit in equity brought by the appellees, J. D. and Esther King (who assert ownership and possession of the land in controversy, and title to certain personal property, by deed from Margaret E. Patrick dated July 13, 1907), to set aside a deed of August 25, 1906, from Isaac L. Patrick and Margaret E. Patrick, his wife, conveying the same property to the appellants, Robert B. and Alice M. Meade, as creating a cloud on their title to the land. The consideration for both deeds was the support and maintenance of the grantors. The deed to the appellants also stipulated that they should add a room to their dwelling for the occupancy of the grantors, which was done, and Patrick and wife moved to the residence of appellants where they dwelt until November 25, 1906, when Isaac L. Patrick died.

In July, 1907, Mrs. Patrick, who was in very feeble health at the time, against the remonstrance of the appellants, left their home and was taken to the home of the appellees, where, having executed the deed of July 13, 1907, she died on August 25th following.

The alleged source of power in Mrs. Patrick to execute the deed of July 18th is a will made by her late husband, dated April 7, 1906, in which, after providing for the payment of debts, he gives his entire estate to his wife. Appellants insist that this will was revoked and rendered wholly inoperative by the subsequent deed from the testator and wife which invested them with the complete title to the property, subject to be divested only by their failure to perform the conditions subsequent contained in their deed.

It was, moreover, contended that the breach of a condition subsequent does not ipso facto operate a reverter of the title, and the estate continues in full force until proper proceedings are taken to consummate the forfeiture, either by the grantor in his lifetime or his heirs at law, and that an unenforced right of reverter in property is not the subject of devise.

In our view of the case, it is not necessary to consider the issues of law and fact raised by these contentions. The sole ground of equitable jurisdiction set up in the bill is for the cancellation of the appellants' deed, as casting a cloud on the appellees' title.

The principle has been frequently enunciated and steadfastly adhered to by this court, that to maintain such a suit it is indispensable for the plaintiff to allege and prove that he holds both the legal title and possession of the land in controversy.

In Smith v. Thomas, 99 Va. 86, 37 S. E. 784, Cardwell, J., after laying down the foregoing rule, observes: "• • • And, even where such a bill avers title and possession of the lands in plaintiff, if, upon the hearing of the cause, the evidence failed to show his possession, the bill would be dismissed for the want of jurisdiction in a court of equity." Carroll v. Brown, 28 Grat. 791; Stearns v. Harmon, 80 Va. 48; Otey v. Stuart, 91 Va. 714, 22 S. E. 513; Va. Coal & Iron Co. v. Kelly, 98 Va. 332, 24 S. E. 1020; Kane v. Va. Coal & Iron Co., 97 Va. 329, 33 S. E. 627; Glenn v. Brown, 99 Va. 822, 38 S. E. 189; Steinman v. Vicars, 99 Va. 595, 39 S. E. 227; Neff v. Rymon, 100 Va. 521, 42 S. E. 314; Glenn v. West, 103 Va. 521, 49 S. E. 671; Tax Title Co. v. Denoon, 107 Va. 201, 57 S. E. 586.

In this case the evidence fails to sustain the allegation that the plaintiffs were in possession of the land at the time of the institution of the suit in January, 1908.

The foundation of their claim to possession rests upon the alleged attornment to them by Davenport, who acquired possession under a lease from Isaac L. Patrick. This lease expired in the fall of 1907, but possession was continued under it until March 1, 1908. The rights of Patrick under the lease devolved upon the appellants as his grantees, and the attempted attornment by their tenant to the appellees by delivery of the keys to the premises was a fraud on the rights of the landlord, in which the appellees participated, and they took in subordination to those rights.

In Emerick v. Tavener, 9 Grat. 220, 223, 58 Am. Dec. 217, Lee, J., says: "A tenant cannot be permitted to question or impugn the title of his landlord during the continuance of the tenancy, nor until he has restored the possession or done what would be regarded as equivalent; nor can he be permitted to deny that the possession so received was the possession of his landlord. And the rule is extended to the case of a tenant acquiring the possession by wrong against the owner, and to one holding over after the expiration of his lease; and it applies, whether the question arises directly in an action brought against the tenant to recover the possession, or in a collateral form in some other action." Again, at page 225, of 9 Grat. (58 Am. Dec. 217), the learned judge remarks: "Thus Alton acquired by the conveyance from Emerick and his transfer of the possession, as against the lessor Tavener, no greater right than that by which Emerick held the possession. He took the premises in the same plight and condition in which they were held by him, and with all the duties and responsibilities, so far as Tavener was concerned, which could attach to Emerick himself. This doctrine, that a tenant cannot be permitted, by any act of his during the tenancy, or until he surrenders the possession, to call in question his landlord's title, is as well sustained in reason and justice as it is supported by numerous authorities."

In Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 237, 21 S. E. 347, 350, the court says: "The relation of landlord and tenant is one carefully guarded by the law, and it will not allow one who has come into the possession of land under another to set up an adverse claim to it without full notice of his disclaimer or assertion of adverse title." Hulvey v. Hulvey, 92 Va. 182, 23 S. E. 233; Neff v. Rymon, supra.

Applying these principles to the evidence, it is clear that the plaintiffs were not in possession of the land at the institution of this suit, and therefore were not entitled to invoke the equitable jurisdiction of the court.

For these reasons, the decree appealed from must be reversed and the bill dismissed. Reversed.

3. CARRIERS (§ 316*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

4. CARRIERS (§ 316*)—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a suit by a passenger against a carrier for personal injuries, proof of the accident shows negligence prima facie, and requires the carrier to disprove negligence, and show that the accident was inevitable, or resulted from a cause against which human care and foresight could not provide.

Error to Circuit Court, Roanoke County.

Action by Mary E. Sterrett against the Roanoke Railway & Electric Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Hall, Woods & Jackson and Kime & Fox, for plaintiff in error. Scott, Attizer & Watts, N. H. Hairston, and Hoge & Penn, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This case is before us the second time. See Roanoke Ry. & E. Co. v. Sterrett, 108 Va. 533, 62 S. E. 385, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 316, 128 Am. St. Rep. 971.

At the last trial the plaintiff, Mary E. Sterrett, was awarded $5,700 damages for injuries sustained by her while a passenger on a motor car of the defendant caused by the falling in of its bridge over Tinker creek between Vinton and Roanoke. On the morning of the accident Mrs. Sterrett boarded the car in question near Vinton for Roanoke. The car continued to take on passengers until it reached the bridge, and entered upon it in an overcrowded condition, moving slowly, and, when upon the extreme western section, the structure suddenly collapsed, and in the fall the plaintiff, who was standing in the aisle about midway of the car, received the injuries for which she sues.

On the last as upon the first trial, two wholly distinct theories were presented as to the cause of the accident. On behalf of the plaintiff it was insisted that the original plan of the bridge called for stringers with sufficient lap, resting upon eye-beams, and securely fastened together so as to prevent the possibility of slipping; that some eight or ten months prior to the accident the stringers originally used in the bridge by the Virginia Bridge & Iron Company, who constructed it, were removed and replaced by new stringers laid end to end and unfastened; and that the slipping of some of these stringers from their supports caused the bridge to collapse. On the other hand, the theory of the defendant is that there was a defective weld in one of the iron cords, upon which the bridge was dependent for support; that the cord broke at the weak point and the bridge fell; and that the defect was latent, and could not be discovered by inspection.

On the first appeal the evidence was found entirely insufficient to sustain the plaintiff's theory. Indeed, the plaintiff introduced no expert evidence on the subject, and the opinion witnesses for the defendant testified that the conditions described by the nonexpert witnesses, even if true, could not possibly have caused or contributed to the accident. They explained the mechanism of the bridge—that it was built in sections, united by iron cords, which bound them in one span and held up the structure, and that it fell by reason of the latent defect in the weld of one of the eye-bars forming the bottom cord, as before described. The judgment was consequently reversed by this court and a new trial awarded.

It would serve no good purpose to discuss in detail the evidence as disclosed by the present record. It is enough to say that it is to the last degree conflicting. The expert testimony of the plaintiff controverts utterly the defendant's theory, and sustains the opposing hypothesis, that the accident resulted from the slipping of the substituted stringers from the eye-beams caused by the negligent manner in which they were placed and maintained in the bridge. Upon familiar principles, therefore, the verdict of the jury is conclusive upon that phase of the case.

The assignments of error touching instructions involve the amendment of instructions "C" and "D" as offered by the defendant.

Instruction "C," as amended, told the jury "that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff unreasonably refused to submit to the treatment of physicians, or unreasonably refused to follow their instructions in regard to her injuries, and that in consequence of her refusal so to do her injury was aggravated and increased, then she cannot recover * * * to the extent her conduct resulted in damage to her, and which might have been avoided and prevented by submitting to the treatment and following the directions of her physicians."

The objection goes to the interpolation of the word "unreasonably" in the instruction. The physicians alluded to were the surgeons of the defendant employed by the company to attend the plaintiff. She had also engaged physicians of her own selection, and by the instruction as originally offered was held bound at the risk of curtailing her recovery of damages to submit to the treatment prescribed by the defendant's surgeons whether reasonable or unreasonable. The amended instruction correctly told the jury that the plaintiff's right of recovery could only be affected by her unreasonably refusing to submit to the treatment or follow the instructions of physicians.

The concluding paragraph of instruction "D," as amended, is as follows, the italicized words indicating the amendment to which exception was taken: "Now, if the jury believe from the evidence that the proximate cause of the collapse of the bridge might have been the slipping of one or more of the stringers from the eye-beams, and that the defendant was negligent in the method it adopted in placing and maintaining said stringers in the bridge, they must find for the plaintiff; and, if they believe from the evidence that the proximate and sole cause of the collapse of the bridge was the breaking of said loop-bar, owing to a hidden or latent defect therein, then they must find for the defendant."

It is true the burden rested upon the plaintiff primarily to establish the negligence of the defendant, but, as was said on the former appeal, "where the plaintiff has shown that she was injured by the breaking down of the bridge and overturning of the car, then this is sufficient proof of negligence on the part of the defendant company to meet the requirements above stated."

In an action by a passenger against a common carrier for personal injuries, proof of the accident raises a prima facie presumption of negligence, and shifts upon the defendant the burden of proving that it has not been guilty of negligence, and that the accident resulted from inevitable casualty, or some cause against which human care and foresight could not provide. Accordingly, this court, on the first appeal, approved the following instruction: "The slightest neglect against which human prudence and foresight might have guarded, and by reason of which the injury may have been occasioned, renders the Roanoke Railway Company liable in damages for such injury. B. & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. 431, 26 Am. Rep. 384; B. & O. R. Co. v. Noell's Adm'r, 32 Gratt. 394."

The amendment objected to is in the language of the foregoing instruction, which correctly measures the high degree of responsibility owing from a common carrier to a passenger and is conclusive on the point at issue.

Upon the whole case we find no error in the judgment, and it must be affirmed.

Error to Circuit Court, Tazewell County.

Action by the Bank of Pocahontas against James Browning. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Sexton & Roberts and Henry & Graham, for plaintiff in error. Henson & Bowen, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. The facts in this case are agreed. They show that James Browning was indebted to the Bank of Pocahontas in the sum of $26,217, of which $2,200 had been reduced to judgment, and suit was pending to obtain judgment for the residue. In this situation Browning applied to the bank for an extension of time, which was granted, upon the terms that he would execute his notes with his wife as indorser, at 30 and 60 days, for the full amount of his indebtedness, and, in addition thereto, that he would pay $600 due from the bank to its attorneys for their services in prosecuting the suits, and would also pay all costs of such suits. The bank on its part was to mark the $2,200 judgment satisfied and dismiss the pending suit.

The notes executed in pursuance of this agreement, which included the $600 debt due by the bank to its attorneys, were subsequently paid in full by Browning. The costs of the suits, amounting to $87.74, which Browning had agreed to settle as part of his undertaking, not being paid, this suit was brought to recover that sum.

Browning, under proper pleas, claimed that the $600 due from the bank to its attorneys which he had been required to pay was usury, which he was entitled within the year to recover back, and set up that amount as an offset to the demand of the bank. There was a judgment against the bank in favor of Browning for the $600 claimed by him, subject to a credit of $87.74, the unpaid costs claimed by the bank, which we are asked to review.

The objections suggested to the proceedings in this case are without merit. The real question involved is: Was the transaction between the bank and Browning for the forbearance of money, and, if so, was the $600 to that extent in excess of 6 per cent. and therefore usurious?

This question was decided in the case of Toole v. Stephen, 4 Leigh, 581, the only difference in the facts being that in the case cited the attorney's fees were paid directly to the attorney while in the present case they were paid to the bank. In that case the whole argument was directed to the question whether or not the agreement to pay the attorney for the bank his commissions of 5 per cent. in addition to the principal and interest of the debt rendered the transaction usurious, and this court held that it did.

It is contended that there were other considerations than the forbearance and extension of time in the case at bar, viz., marking the judgment satisfied and dismissing the suits. In the case cited the new obligation given was in satisfaction of existing judgments, but that fact did not make the transaction less usurious. Marking the judgment satisfied and dismissing the suits followed as the result of taking the new obligations, with other sureties, due after date.

The question here involved is clearly controlled by the case of Toole v. Stephen, supra, and the judgment complained of must therefore be affirmed.

Error to Circuit Court, Russell County.

Action by A. J. Wheeler, administrator, against the Clinchfield Coal Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded.

See, also, 108 Va. 448, 62 S. E. 269.

Phlegar & Powell, for plaintiff in error.
W. H. Werth, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. There is no error to the prejudice of the defendant in error in the proceedings by which this writ of error has been matured for hearing, nor is the bond taken open to the objections urged against it. The motion to dismiss is therefore overruled.

This is the second appearance of this case upon our docket. Upon the former hearing the judgment of the circuit court was reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial, if the plaintiff should be so advised; the court expressing the opinion that under the facts established by the record no verdict could be rightfully found for the plaintiff under any instructions. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Wheeler, 108 Va. 448, 62 S. E. 269.

The salient facts of the case are fully stated in the former opinion, and need not be repeated here. On the part of the plaintiff the only additional evidence presented by the present record consists of innumerable figures and calculations relating to the mechanical efficiency of the motor, and the opinions of a number of witnesses, that it was not reasonably safe to operate a motor on a 10 per cent. grade. In the view we take of the case, it is not necessary to recite or comment in detail upon this new evidence. Taken as a whole, it has little or no bearing upon the crucial question upon which this case must turn if rightly decided. Much of it is incompetent, being the mere opinions of witnesses who are shown to be without sufficient knowledge or experience to express an opinion on the subject as to which they undertake to speak, and most, if not all, of it is misleading and calculated to divert the attention of the jury from the real issue to be determined by them.

The record shows that all grades and machinery used in coal mining operations are more or less dangerous, and that the degree of safety secured in doing such work is measured largely by the care and skill exercised by the operator in performing the duties undertaken by him.

In the case at bar, it is as true now as it was on the former hearing that every fact which it is claimed contributed to the accident was as fully known to the deceased as it was to the defendant. He was a man of intelligence and considerable experience in such work, and he knew that he was undertaking to operate a traction motor on a 10 per cent. grade. The uncontradicted evidence shows that he was fully instructed in this particular operation by a highly competent and experienced expert, under whose immediate supervision he ran the motor time and again up and down the road; that under this instructor he stopped the motor and started it, applied and released the brakes, and tested its operation generally; and that, when his attention was especially called to the grade, he said he had not run on a 10 per cent. grade, but had run on one nearly as heavy. He was cautioned to make repeated examinations of the motor, and to report anything that might be wrong.

A servant when he enters the service of the master assumes all of the ordinary risks of such service, and also as a general rule assumes all risks from causes which are known to him, or should be readily discernible by a person of his age or capacity, in the exercise of ordinary care. When the employé is not placed by his employer in a position of undisclosed danger, but is a mature man, doing the ordinary work which he has engaged to do and whose risks are obvious to any one, he assumes the risk of the employment, and no negligence can be imputed to the employer for an accident to him therefrom. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Wheeler, supra, and authorities there cited.

It is clear from the record before us that whatever danger may have attended the use of the traction motor and the operation generally in which the deceased was engaged was a risk assumed by him with full knowledge of all the facts.

The refusal of the circuit court to give the following instruction asked for by the defendant is assigned as error: "If the jury believe from the evidence that Jack Wheeler knew the railroad track, its grades, curves, and its length and condition that he represented to the defendant or its representative that he understood and could run the motor on that track, that he was a man of sufficient intelligence to know that the steeper the grade the faster a motor and train would run down it, and the harder it would be to hold them, and that he knew what load he was attempting to haul down the grade, he assumed the risk, and the jury must find for the defendant."

This instruction announced the well-settled doctrine of assumed risk. It was applicable to the case, and should have been given. The evidence tended strongly to establish every fact stated in the instruction, and, if those facts were proven to the satisfaction of the jury, the conclusion of the instruction, that the deceased assumed the risk and the jury should find for the defendant, was inevitable.

The judgment must be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

DENNISTON v. SAUL et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 15, 1910.)

1. TAXATION (§ 710*)—TAX SALES—REDEMPTION—PAYMENT OR TENDER.

Under Code 1904, § 651, providing that, where the purchaser at a tax sale refuses to receive the redemption price, it may be paid within the redemption period to the clerk of the court, a tender of the redemption price by the owner, through his attorney with power to act, to the clerk, made within the redemption period and immediately after the refusal of the purchaser, through his attorney, to receive the same, is sufficient to permit of a redemption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1436, 1437; Dec. Dig. § 710.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 710*)—TAX SALES—REDEMPTION.

Where the purchaser of record at a tax sale and his attorney refused to receive the redemption price tendered within the redemption period by the owner, through his attorney with power to act, and there was no intimation that the purchaser was not the proper person to receive the payment or that a corporation had been created to which the redemption price should be paid, the owner could properly tender the price to the clerk of the court, and, when he did so, the right to redeem could not be defeated on the ground that the corporation to whom the land had been conveyed was ignorant of the owner's perfected right of redemption.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Roanoke County.

Suit by A. C. Denniston against J. P. Saul and another. From a decree of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Thomas W. Miller, for appellant. Kime & Fox, for appellees.

HARRISON, J. The bill in this case was filed by the appellant, asking to have a tax deed conveying certain lots to the Salem Land Corporation declared null and void, and that he be allowed to redeem said lots by paying the taxes due thereon.

The lots in question were returned delinquent by the treasurer of Roanoke county in the name of the appellant, A. C. Denniston, and sold in January, 1907, to J. P. Saul for $24, and in June, 1907, the sale was confirmed by an order of the circuit court of Roanoke county. In June, 1908, by direction of J. P. Saul, a deed from the clerk was recorded, conveying the lots to the Salem Land Corporation.

The record shows that within four months after the sale was confirmed the appellant, through T. W. Miller, his attorney, offered to redeem the lots by paying to J. P. Saul, the purchaser, all that was due him on account of his purchase of the lots. The purchaser declined to receive payment, saying that R. W. Kime was counsel for the syndicate for which he had bought the lots, that he had the treasurer's receipt for what had been paid, and that appellant must deal with said counsel. Soon thereafter the owner of the lots, through his same attorney, tendered the amount due to R. W. Kime, the attorney for the purchasers who refused to receive the same upon the sole ground that under instructions from his client he could not receive the price of redemption until the attorney for the owner should produce in writing his authority to act in the matter of redeeming the lots. Thereupon T. W. Miller, the attorney for A. C. Denniston, the owner of the lots, made a sufficient tender of the amount due to C. D. Denit, the county clerk of Roanoke county, who declined to receive the same upon the ground that he did not consider himself authorized to do so by the statute.

Upon these facts, which are satisfactorily established by the record, the circuit court denied the prayer for relief, and dismissed the bill, with costs.

A. C. Denniston, the owner of the lots in question, lived in Philadelphia, and it clearly appears that T. W. Miller, of the city of Roanoke, was his duly authorized attorney, with full power to act for him in the matter of redeeming these lots. It is unnecessary to decide whether or not the purchaser of the lots at the tax sale had the right to decline to receive the redemption price from the attorney of the owner until he had produced a writing showing his authority to redeem. A sufficient tender of the redemption price was made to the clerk immediately after the refusal of the purchaser, through his attorney, to receive the same, and the statute expressly provides that, where the purchaser shall refuse to receive the redemption price, the same may be paid, within the redemption period, to the clerk of the circuit court of the county whose officer may have sold such real estate. Code 1904, § 651.

The Salem Land Corporation contends that its title, under the deed of June, 1908, cannot be disturbed because it had no notice of the tenders made by appellant in his efforts to redeem the lots.

It appears that at the time of the purchase of these lots by J. P. Saul he was acting for a syndicate composed of himself and others, and that it was then understood that a corporation was at some time thereafter to be formed, to which the lots should be conveyed. Pursuant to this understanding, the Salem Land Corporation was formed, with J. P. Saul, the purchaser of the lots, as its president, but when it was created does not appear. So far as the record shows, there is no evidence of its existence until the deed was made to it in June, 1908, which was months after the day of redemption had passed. It is hardly credible, under the circumstances of this case, that the Salem Land Corporation did not know of the offers of the appellant to redeem his lots. It is, however, immaterial whether it knew of such offers or not. J. P. Saul was the purchaser of record, and the only person to whom the offer to redeem could be made. When Saul and his attorney successively refused to receive the redemption price, there was no intimation from either that J. P. Saul was not the proper person to receive the payment, or that a corporation had been created to which the redemption price of the lots should be paid.

In this case the owner had done all that the statute required of him in order to redeem his lots. He had tendered the amount due to the purchaser of record, and upon his refusal to receive it had tendered the same to the clerk. When the owner has done all that is required to entitle him to redeem his land, the purchase cannot defeat that right by having the land conveyed to a third person, although such third person be ignorant of the owner's perfected right of redemption. If this device were to prevail, the right of the owner to redeem could be easily defeated in many cases. The grantee in such a deed takes no higher or greater rights than the purchaser of record had.

The purchaser at the tax sale having refused to receive the amount due for the redemption of the lots, and a sufficient tender thereof having been made to the clerk and refused by him, the prayer of the bill should have been granted.

The decree appealed from must therefore be reversed and set aside, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

Error to Circuit Court, Washington County.

Action by Fred Clawson's administrator against the Virginia-Carolina Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

White & Penn and G. E. Penn, Jr., for plaintiff in error. J. J. Stuart and L. P. Summers, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. In our view of this case the only assignment of error which calls for extended notice is the action of the trial court in overruling the motion of the plaintiff in error, the defendant below, to set aside the verdict of the jury on the ground that the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's intestate was the proximate cause of the accident.

It is insisted in that connection that if it be conceded that the crossing at which the accident occurred was a public crossing, which imposed upon the railway company the duty of giving signals of the approach of its trains, and that it negligently failed to give such signals by blowing the whistle or ringing the bell, and to keep a reasonable lookout for persons on the crossing, as charged in the declaration, nevertheless the plaintiff's own evidence shows such contributory negligence on the part of his intestate as would bar a recovery.

The essential facts of the case may be summarized as follows: Fred Clawson, plain-tiff's intestate, a boy about 12 years and 10 months old, was run over and killed by an engine and tender of the defendant in the daytime, at the extract company's crossing in the town of Damascus. The engine was drifting downgrade at a rate of speed variously estimated at from 8 to 20 miles an hour. At the point of accident the track of the defendant's railway, the Virginia-Carolina, and that of the extract company run parallel with each other, with an intervening space of 25 feet between rails. Clawson was playing with several other boys on the east side of the Virginia-Carolina track near the crossing, when the yard foreman of the extract company, who was shifting a box car on their track, called to them from the top of the car to come over and remove a plank which was lying across the rails. In response to his request two of the boys, Clawson and Tolley, crossed over to the west side of the Virginia-Carolina track, and Clawson removed the obstruction. Tolley was at the crossing and Clawson 15 feet above when they undertook to recross the Virginia-Carolina track. Tolley preceded his companion, and the engine was within a few feet of him when he cleared the eastern rail. Clawson was struck "just as soon as he got on" the track. This, in varying language, is substantially the account of the accident given by eyewitnesses of the plaintiff.

The engineer testified that he saw Tolley on the track at the crossing and Clawson at the side of the track a few feet above, but did not know of his attempt to cross in front of the engine until after the accident. It is clear from all the evidence that it was not possible for the engineer to have discovered Clawson's peril in time to have saved him.

Clawson being under 14 years of age at the time of the accident, the burden rested upon the defendant to rebut the legal presumption that he was incapable of contributory negligence. To meet that burden, the defendant, without contradiction, proved that he was a very intelligent boy; that he had formerly kept a stand in Damascus from which he sold pop and candy, and frequently drove his father's one-horse wagon, hauling wood and hay and other feed. (His father testified that he had a hired driver, and that, if his son ever drove the wagon unattended, it was without his knowledge.) The evidence also showed that the elder Clawson had been an engineer on the Virginia-Carolina Railway for about 16 or 18 months, and that young Clawson had lived for several years in the immediate vicinity of the railroad; that he was frequently about the track, and crossed it in going to school when his father lived at Louderdale.

Ordinarily a less degree of care is required of an infant than of an adult, but his responsibility is always to be measured according to his maturity and capacity, and de-terminated by the circumstances of the case as shown by the evidence. Washington, etc., R. Co. v. Quale, 95 Va. 741, 30 S. E. 391; Roanoke v. Shull, 99 Va. 419, 34 S. E. 34, 75 Am. St. Rep. 791. See, also, 29 Cyc. 535.

In McDaniel v. Lynchburg Cotton Mills Co., 99 Va. 146, 37 S. E. 781 (an elevator case), a boy 12 years and 8 months old was held guilty of contributory negligence, "with which he was properly chargeable by reason of his maturity and intelligence," and his administrator was denied a recovery for an accident which occasioned his death.

So, also, in Seaboard & C. R. Co. v. Hickey, 102 Va. 394, 46 S. E. 392, it was held "that an intelligent boy upwards of eight years of age, who was familiar with railroad trains and who had been repeatedly warned to keep off of moving cars," was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to get on a flat car while the train was in motion, and could not recover for resulting injury.

These cases serve to illustrate the general principle with respect to the age and degree of intelligence and capacity necessary to render a child responsible for failure to exercise reasonable care for his own safety.

While the law sedulously guards the safety of an infant who is too young and inexperienced to be conscious of danger, or to exercise judgment and discretion in protecting himself, the rule is otherwise where he has attained sufficient age and experience to observe and avoid danger. In the latter case the law imposes upon him the obligation of using the reason he possesses, and of exercising a degree of care for his protection commensurate with his maturity and capacity, and for failure to do so will visit upon him the consequences of his own negligence.

In Thompson on Negligence, § 1492, the author observes: "In case of a child old enough to be in the language of the law sui juris, which roughly speaking means able to take care of himself, the question of his contributory negligence in attempting to cross a railroad track would be a question for a jury under much the same circumstances that it would in case of an adult."

The evidence which as we have seen was undisputed on the point leaves no room to doubt that plaintiff's intestate possessed ample capacity to have appreciated the danger of his surroundings, and his own negligence proximately contributed to the accident which cost him his life.

The oft-repeated language of Riely, J., in Johnson v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 91 Va. 171, 179, 21 S. E. 238, 240, is very much in point: "The track itself was a proclamation of danger. It was his duty before going upon it to use his eyes and ears. He should have both looked in either direction from which a train could come and listened; and, if his faculties warned him of the near approach of a train, it was his duty to keep off the track. If he had done so in this instance, he could not have failed to hear and see the coming train, and be made sensible of the danger of going upon the track. It was in plain view. And if he failed to look and listen, as duty required of him, and attempted to cross the track in front of a rapidly moving train, and was caught before he got across and killed, his own act, his own negligence, so contributed to the injury that a recovery therefor cannot be sustained."

In the instant case there was an unobstructed view of the track in the direction from which the engine was coming for more than 1,500 feet.

In Southern Railway Co. v. Daves, 108 Va. 378, 61 S. E. 748, it was said: "A railroad company cannot be held liable for the failure of its engineer to anticipate that a person, whether infant or adult, approaching a crossing, is going to step upon the track immediately in front of a moving engine, unless there is something to suggest to the engineer that such person does not intend to remain in a place of safety until the train has passed."

As the case must go back for a new trial, it is proper to say that upon evidence similar to that at the first trial instruction No. 1—that the duty to keep a reasonable lookout does not necessarily require that both the engineer and fireman should be on the lookout at the same time—ought to be given. Brammer v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 104 Va. 150, 51 S. E. 211.

For these reasons, the judgment complained of must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

VIRGINIA IRON, COAL & COKE CO. v. BOND.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 15, 1910.)

1. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 58*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—NOTICE.

A purchaser at a judicial sale donated land for school purposes on condition that it should revert to him on its ceasing to be used for that purpose. A public school was conducted thereon. The court directed a resale of the land for nonpayment of the price. The purchaser again purchased and transferred his interest to a third person who obtained a deed on payment of the price, and who conveyed the land to a grantee, excepting the interest of the school authorities. The grantee had no notice that the purchaser had any claim to the reversionary interest in the school land, and the proceedings in which the third person became the purchaser failed to disclose any such arrangements, and showed that the whole tract had been directed to be sold. Held, that the grantee was a purchaser of the entire tract without notice of the claim of the purchaser, and the title to the land used for school purposes reverted to the grantee on the school authorities ceasing to use the land for such purpose.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wise County.

Suit by W. H. Bond against the Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Company. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed in part, and entered.

D. D. Hull, Jr., and Vicars & Peery, for appellant. Bond & Bruce, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. If the appellant, the Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Company, is a purchaser for value without notice, or holds under such a purchaser of the land in controversy, the appellee, W. H. Bond, is not entitled to the relief sought.

It appears that in the year 1853 by a decree of the circuit court of the city of Richmond certain lands known as the De Tubeuf lands upon which the state held a mortgage were directed to be sold to satisfy the mortgage debt. The lands were sold in November of that year. One of the purchasers was a man by the name of Niel. The sale was reported and confirmed by the court. No provision having been made in that case for conveyances to the purchasers upon the payment of the purchase price, the General Assembly passed an act in 1873 (Acts 1872-73, c. 79) authorizing the circuit court of Wise county, where all or a large part of the land was situated, to appoint a commissioner to collect the unpaid purchase money, and upon its payment in full by the respective purchasers to make conveyances therefor. In 1874 a decree or order was entered by that court pursuant to the act, appointing George W. Kilgore such commissioner, with directions to convey to the parties who had paid and to resell the lands where the purchase money was not paid in full within six months from the date of that decree. In December of that year an 86-acre parcel of the Niel tract was sold under that decree by the commissioner to the appellee. The sale was reported to the court and confirmed. The appellee failing to pay, a bill was filed in the circuit court of Wise county to subject the land for the unpaid purchase price, and a decree was entered therein, directing Commissioner Kilgore to sell the said land. It was sold, the appellee bidding it off. Before the sale was reported to the court, the appellee transferred his purchase to D. K. Banner. All these facts were reported to the court, which by a decree entered in 1878 confirmed the said sale and transfer and directed the commissioner to convey the land to Banner upon the payment of the purchase price. Banner having complied with the terms of the sale, the commissioner conveyed the land to him by deed dated May 1, 1888.

Prior to the institution of the last-named suit, the appellee, Bond, had by parol donated a small parcel of the land to the proper authorities for public free school purposes, with condition that, when the land so donated ceased to be used for public free school purposes, it should revert to him. A schoolhouse was erected thereon, and a public free school conducted there for a number of years.

In the year 1891 D. K. Banner conveyed the said 86-acre tract of land, together with other lands to the Virginia & Tennessee Coal & Iron Company. That conveyance, however, excepted from its operation the interest which the public free school authorities had in the schoolhouse lot under a deed or writing executed by the said Banner prior thereto. By mesne conveyances the appellant, the Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Company, acquired title to the interests of the Virginia & Tennessee Coal & Iron Company in the said lands purchased from D. K. Banner.

In the year 1907 the appellee brought this suit in which he claims, in substance, that the public free school authorities had abandoned the lot donated by him for public free school purposes; that the said property which he had taken possession of had reverted to him, although Banner and the appellant were each asserting title thereto, and prayed that the rights of the parties be adjudicated, and that the school district authorities be compelled to convey the legal title thereof to him (the appellee), and for general relief.

The lower court upon a final hearing of the cause held that the lot had been abandoned by the public free school authorities, that the appellee was entitled to the schoolhouse lot in controversy, and ordered the appellant and the school district authorities to make and file deeds releasing to the appellee all their right, title, and interest in and to the said lot.

The effect of the proceedings had in the cause of Kilgore, commissioner, against the appellee, Bond, for a resale of the 86-acre tract of land was to clothe Banner with all the appellee's title and interest in the land, including his reversionary interest in the schoolhouse lot. The appellee's bill concedes that the legal title to the whole tract passed, but claims that Banner or his successor in title, the appellant, holds the title to the schoolhouse lot as trustee for his benefit. This claim is based upon the theory that, when the appellee transferred his bid to Banner, he did not intend to include the reversionary interest in the schoolhouse lot, and that Banner knew this and did not intend to buy it.

The evidence relied on to show such an understanding or agreement between the appellee and Banner is vague and unsatisfactory, and inconsistent with the proceedings in the cause of Kilgore, commissioner, against the appellee and with the subsequent conduct of both the appellee and Banner. But whether the evidence be sufficient to establish any such understanding between the appellee and Banner is immaterial in the view we take of the case. The record wholly fails to show that, when the Virginia & Tennessee Coal & Iron Company purchased and received its conveyance from Banner, it had either actual or constructive notice that the appellee had or made any claim to the reversionary interest in the schoolhouse lot. The proceedings in the case in which Banner became the purchaser of the 86-acre tract of land not only failed to disclose any such arrangement, but showed that the whole of the 86-acre tract had been directed to be sold, and was sold in that cause. The effect of the proceedings in that cause was to convey the land to Banner, and to clothe him with the title of all the parties to the suit. Zollman v. Moore, 21 Grat. 313, 327-329. When the Virginia & Tennessee Coal & Iron Company purchased, the public free school authorities were in possession of the schoolhouse lot, and therefore, under the doctrine of Chapman v. Chapman, 91 Va. 397, 21 S. E. 813, 50 Am. St. Rep. 846, in force at that time, it was affected with notice of whatever claim or interest the public free school authorities had in the schoolhouse lot. Before receiving its deed, it had actual notice of their interest in that lot. It obtained from the school authorities of the district a copy of a paper which purported to be a writing signed by Banner by which he granted, bargained, and sold to the trustees (naming them) for that district the schoolhouse lot, in which it was provided that, when the property was no longer used for school purposes, it was to revert to Banner. There is some conflict of evidence as to whether or not Banner had executed the paper of which the paper obtained purported to be a copy; but the evidence of disinterested witnesses shows directly that said copy was present when Banner executed his deed, that he had full knowledge of the contents of the paper, recognized its validity, received pay for the schoolhouse lot, and included it in his conveyance, subject, however, to the estate or interest the school trustees had therein. Neither before nor at the time of its purchase did the Virginia & Tennessee Coal & Iron Company have notice of the appellee's claim. Its rights were therefore superior to the claim of the appellee, even if its existence had been clearly and satisfactorily established; for it is settled law that a complete purchaser for value and without notice, actual or constructive, is not affected by any latent equity founded upon trust, fraud, mistake, incumbrance, or otherwise. Carter v. Allan, 21 Grat. 241; Snyder v. Grandstaff, 96 Va. 478, 31 S. E. 647, 70 Am. St. Rep. 863; Kerr on Fraud & Mistake, 312, 436.

A brief has been filed in the cause by counsel for the school district, in which it is insisted that the trial court erred in holding that the schoolhouse lot had been abandoned by the school district for school purposes; but, as the school district did not appeal and was not made a party to this appeal, the question of whether or not the trial court erred in holding that the schoolhouse lot had been abandoned will not be considered.

We are of opinion that upon the abandonment of the schoolhouse lot by the school authorities the title to it reverted to the appellant and not to the appellee, and that the trial court erred in not so decreeing. The decree appealed from, to that extent, must be reversed, and this court will enter such decree as the trial court ought to have entered.

Petition for mandamus by one Miller against one Turner, Judge. Mandamus awarded.

Keith & Richards and H. G. Moffett, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The case of Miller, Trustee, v. Smith et al., lately pending in this court was remanded to the circuit court of Rappahannock County for further proceedings. That court referred the cause to a commissioner to make a report distributing the fund under its control in accordance with the decree of this court. The commissioner reported on the 6th of November, 1909, returning with his report a paper in the nature of a petition from Edward T. Jones, one of the parties in interest, in which he claimed that there were other sums which should be allowed him, and with this claim the report of the commissioner deals.

Miller filed an answer to the petition of Jones, in which he insists that the matters set out in the petition are res judicata. When the case came before the circuit court upon the papers formerly read, the commissioner's report, the petition of Jones, and the answer of exceptions to the report, the court, holding that the claims of Jones were not valid debts against the fund, dismissed the petition and directed the commissioner, to whom the report was recommitted, to make a distribution of the fund in accordance with the decree of the Supreme Court of Appeals and the written opinion therein filed, and to carry out the decree, with the exception that after directing the appellees interested in the subject-matter of the litigation, to wit, E. T. Jones, Mary Ann Smith, and R. E. Miller, to pay the costs assessed against them by the Court of Appeals, the said circuit court expressed the opinion and directed that one-third of the costs, being the share of E. T. Jones, should be paid by John B. Miller, by reason of his obligation to pay costs as contained in his bond for $400 to said Jones, dated February 5, 1903, which is filed in the cause.

The petitioner contends that these costs directed by the circuit court to be paid by Miller as the share of E. T. Jones were the costs incurred in the Court of Appeals, and were by that court decreed to be paid by Jones, and that the circuit court was without jurisdiction or authority to do otherwise than carry out the order of this court.

In the bond referred to for $400 Miller binds himself to pay all costs decreed against Edward T. Jones in the suit of Smith, trustee, against J. B. Miller and R. E. Miller, trustees, but it is plain, we think, that the costs there referred to were such as Jones had at the date of the bond incurred in the suit or which might be incurred by him, the attitude of the parties remaining unchanged, but that it does not bind Miller to pay costs when Jones became hostile to Miller, and these very costs were incurred in defending a litigation to which Jones was an active party.

However this may be, the rights of the parties growing out of the bond which was given were the subject of litigation before this court at the former hearing, which is irrevocable and finally disposes of this question. Not only is this so, but Jones appeared before this court at the September term, 1909, and asked for a rehearing of the decree of this court rendered on the 25th of June, 1909. In that petition the whole subject was again presented to this court, and the attention of the court specifically directed to the stipulation in the bond of $400 given by Miller to Jones—that he was to pay all costs decreed against Jones in the suit of Smith, Trustee, v. Miller. That petition was considered by this court and its prayer denied, so that the whole subject had been fully adjudicated and cannot be reopened.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the writ of mandamus should issue as prayed in the petition. It is further ordered that E. T. Jones pay to the petitioner his costs in this behalf expended.

HERALDS OF LIBERTY v. BOWEN.
(No. 2,358.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 814*)—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—ACTIONS—SERVICE OF PROCESS.

The method of service on fraternal beneficial associations, provided by the act of 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 71), is only cumulative. Service may be perfected upon an insurance association by serving its agent who procured the issuance of the contract which is the basis of the suit, provided the agency continues until service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

2. TRAVERSE OF ENTRY OF SERVICE OF PROCESS PROPERLY OVERRULED.

It appearing that such an agent was served, the traverse of the entry of service was properly overruled.

3. INSURANCE (§ 687*)—FRATERNAL BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS.

An association which issues policies of insurance, but, so far as appears, has no ritual, nor any initiation, cannot be legally classed as a fraternal beneficial association under the laws of Georgia, and may be treated as an ordinary insurance company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1824; Dec. Dig. § 687.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 671*)—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

For the want of a proper brief of evidence, the exceptions depending upon a consideration of the evidence cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2872; Dec. Dig. § 671.*]

5. PETITION SUFFICIENT.

The petition amply disclosed the fact that the plaintiff sued in his representative capacity as administrator on the estate of the insured.

6. INSURANCE (§ 715*)—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—REQUISITES OF POLICY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The act approved August 17, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 107), which provides that, wherever a policy of insurance contains any reference to the application for insurance or the constitution, by-laws, or other rules of the company as forming a part of the policy or contract between the parties, the policy shall contain, in itself or in some exhibit attached thereto, a correct copy of the application, by-law, or rule, as the case may be, and that otherwise the application, by-law, etc., shall not be regarded as a part of the contract, applies to fraternal as well as to other insurance companies.

ALLEN v. STATE. (No. 2,765.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 922*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Under the undisputed evidence, the error of the court in not limiting the jury to a consideration of sales by the defendant within the two years preceding the indictment was not harmful to the defendant, and therefore affords no ground for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2218; Dec. Dig. § 922.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1129*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

The assignment of error complaining that the judge "failed to charge the jury upon the law of gifts and sales," is too general and indefinite for consideration.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1160*)—WRIT OF ERROR—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT.

The evidence, while not wholly satisfactory, is sufficient to authorize the conviction of the defendant; and, the verdict being approved by the trial judge, the finding of the jury cannot be disturbed.

SALES (§ 474*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—ATTACHMENT—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Under the ruling in Conder v. Holleman & Ballard, 71 Ga. 93, it was error to decline to allow the claimant to prove that the indebtedness of the defendant in attachment to the plaintiff arose before the date of the conditional sale and the claimant's reservation of title; and for this reason, if for no other, the judge of the superior court properly sustained the certiorari.

1. PLEA IMPROPERLY STRICKEN.

The court erred in striking, on motion of the plaintiffs, that portion of the defendants' plea which set up fraud and misrepresentation as to the mule sold to them by the plaintiffs, and which alleged a failure of consideration because of the worthlessness of the mule.

2. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

By reason of this error the verdict and the proceedings amendatory thereof were nugatory.

3. SALES (§ 479*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—REMEDIES OF SELLER.

It was not error to overrule the defendants' demurrer. Even if the attachment and the levy thereof had failed for defects, the plaintiff might recover a general judgment on the declaration, of which notice had been given.

(a) The holder of a note, in which there is a reservation of title of personal property and also a mortgage of the property to the payee, may sue out an attachment for purchase money, instead of pursuing the other remedies available to him.

4. SALES (§ 479*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—REMEDIES OF SELLER.

To perfect the attachment and levy, the holder of the legal title must file and record a reconveyance to his debtor, and if he fails to do this the levy of the attachment fails. But where a declaration has been filed and the prescribed notice given, the plaintiff may recover a general judgment, even though the attachment is dismissed.

QUINN v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF FITZGERALD. (No. 2,207.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 365)—ACTIONS—DEFENSES.

In order to let in a meritorious defense, the maker of a promissory note who is sued thereon may show that the plaintiff is not a bona fide holder of the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 944; Dec. Dig. § 365.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 101*)—ACTIONS—DEFENSES—ULTRA VIRES TRANSFER.

The maker of a promissory note which has been transferred by one banking corporation to another (for the purpose of liquidating the affairs of the corporation originally named in the note as payee) cannot defend upon the ground that the contract whereby the note was transferred was ultra vires. Generally one who is not a party to a contract cannot attack it as ultra vires.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 237, 238; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

3. USURY (§ 100*)—DEDUCTION FROM PRINCIPAL DEBT AND LAWFUL INTEREST.

Any payments made upon an usurious debt, even though the suit be upon notes given in renewal thereof (but without purging out the usury), are to be deducted from the principal debt and the lawful interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Usury, Cent. Dig. §§ 219-234; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

4. USURY (§ 47*)—COLLECTION OF INTEREST MONTHLY.

Error from City Court of Fitzgerald; E. Wall, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Fitzgerald against J. H. Quinn. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed, with directions.

O. H. Elkins, for plaintiff in error. B. J. Reid and Haygood & Cutts, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The First National Bank of Fitzgerald sued Quinn on two notes which were payable to the order of the Citizens' Bank of Fitzgerald, and the trial resulted in the court directing a verdict for the plaintiff. The notes were apparently indorsed in blank by the Citizens' Bank of Fitzgerald by

J. C. Bush, cashier. The defendant pleaded that title to the two notes was not vested in the plaintiff, and that what appeared to be the indorsement of the Citizens' Bank was merely a receipt for interest; and, if the signature of the cashier was intended to be an indorsement, still the National Bank was not a bona fide holder, because it had notice of the equities in favor of the maker; furthermore, that the effort to transfer the note by indorsement was ultra vires, because the purported cashier was in fact not the cashier, and because the attempted transfer to the National Bank was with the purpose, on the part of the Citizens' Bank, of illegally liquidating its assets and discontinuing business. These pleas were stricken by the court, but the court allowed evidence upon certain pleas setting up usury. At the conclusion of the testimony, however, the court directed a verdict for the full amount of the note without any allowance for the usury in another note, of which it appeared the notes in suit were renewals.

We think the trial judge erred in striking the pleas, because, as was held in Andrews v. John Church Co., 1 Ga. App. 560, 58 S. E. 130, the defendant had the right to show that the plaintiff was not a bona fide holder of the notes in question, in order to let in a meritorious defense. We think the court erred, also, in directing a verdict, because it is unquestioned that the plaintiff had reserved usury in the first note, of which the subsequent notes were renewals. Inasmuch, however, as it appears from the evidence, as well as from the answer of the defendant, that the payment of the usury is the only defensive matter really presented by the pleadings or the evidence, and as the defendant was permitted to offer his testimony upon this subject, the only effect of a reversal of the judgment would be to send the case back to reduce the finding against the defendant by the amount of interest exacted from him in excess of the legal rate. It is not to the public interest to retard the proper disposition of causes or indulge in needless litigation, and for this reason we will exercise our right of effecting a final disposition of the case in accordance with what can be its only proper termination under the pleadings and the evidence (Finley v. Southern R. Co., 5 Ga. App. 723, 64 S. E. 312) by directing that, upon writing off by the plaintiff in the court below of the sum of $106.66, the excess of interest reserved when the $2,800 note was originally given to the Citizens' Bank of Fitzgerald, the judgment of the court below be affirmed, and that, upon failure to do this, the judgment be reversed.

It is not disputed in the evidence that, when the note for $2,800 was originally executed by Quinn, the Citizens' Bank of Fitzgerald reserved $300 as interest from September 28, 1906, to September 28, 1907, and credited his account with a deposit of $2,500. The two notes for $1,100 each which are the subject-matter of this suit were given in renewal of the note for $2,800, upon which Quinn received only $2,500, and as held in McGee v. Long, 83 Ga. 156, 9 S. E. 1107, "all payments made upon an usurious debt are to be deducted from the principal and lawful interest, where the suit is upon renewal notes executed after such payments but without purging out the usury." To the same effect are the rulings in Archer v. McCray, 59 Ga. 546, and Wilkinson v. Wooten, 59 Ga. 584. The defendant and the cashier of the bank agreed that the amount actually paid by Quinn upon the $2,800 note was $638.30. It appears that in taking the new notes $600 of this amount was credited upon the original note, because the renewals amount only to $2,200, but it is evident that the usury which had been originally exacted when the $2,800 note was given was not purged from the renewal notes. The $38.30 does not exceed the legal rate of interest on $2,800 from September 28, 1907, when the $2,800 note was due, to February 26, 1908, when the renewal notes were given, but it appears that there was an additional payment of $24 on September 24, 1907; and, whether this be considered or not, it is evident from the amount of the new notes that all of the usury included in the original note was not purged. Consequently, Quinn had the right which he would not ordinarily have of inquiring into whether the First National Bank of Fitzgerald was a bona fide holder for value or not, and for this reason we hold that the court erred in striking his plea to the effect that the bank had notice of the equities in his favor.

The court did not err in striking so much of the defendant's plea as set up that the transfer of the notes by the Citizens' Bank of Fitzgerald to the First National Bank of Fitzgerald for the purpose of liquidating the affairs of the first-named bank was ultra vires, because, under the ruling in Weed v. Gainesville, etc., R. Co., 119 Ga. 576, 46 S. E. 886, Quinn, not being a party to the contract between the two banks, was not in a position to assert that either party thereto acted ultra vires. If the court had overruled the demurrer and had not directed the verdict, the defendant would have only been entitled to have proper deduction made for usury. This amount under the ruling in Harrell v. Blount, 112 Ga. 712 (5), 38 S. E. 56, is determined by eliminating the interest exceeding 7 per cent. which is included in the nominal principal. See, also, Parker v. Lowry, 79 Ga. 740, 4 S. E. 678. The defendant is really entitled to a credit of $125, with interest thereon, because the bank reserved $300, or interest at the rate of 12 per cent. on the amount actually paid the borrower. The interest at the rate of 7 per cent. on the $2,500 would be $175, and the difference between the two is $125. But, inasmuch as he only pleaded for $106.66, it is beyond our power to increase the amount. The contention that the sum of $10.40 is usury cannot be sustained, because interest may be collected monthly at the option of the parties, if only interest is collected and no part of the principal is paid, and if the interest collected does not exceed the rate of 8 per cent. per annum for the period of time covered by the payment.

Judgment affirmed, with direction.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. JONES. (No. 2,153.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL PROPERLY REFUSED.
There was no error in refusing a new trial.
2. CARRIERS (§ 357*)—FAILURE OF PASSENGER TO PROCURE TICKET—RIGHTS OF CARRIER.
Railroad companies have the right to exact the train rate from passengers who without good and sufficient reason have failed to purchase tickets and the consequent right to eject one who refuses to pay the train rate. But the conductor or other agent of the railroad company who passes upon the merits of the excuse offered by the passenger for not having provided himself with a ticket or refuses to hear the excuse does so at the peril of the company.
[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1433; Dec. Dig. § 357.*]
3. CARRIERS (§ 355*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—BOARDING TRAIN WITHOUT TICKET.
One who boards a train intending to pay for his passage therein is not a trespasser, even though he be in error as to the amount due for his fare.
[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1416; Dec. Dig. § 355.*]
4. DEFECTIVE CHARGES CURED BY OTHERS.
The defects in portions of the charge upon which error is assigned are cured by fuller instructions in other portions of the general charge.
5. REVIEW ON APPEAL.
The evidence in behalf of the defendant would have authorized the jury to relieve it from liability, but the plaintiff's evidence in conflict therewith authorized the finding which was returned in his favor.

Error from City Court of Baxley; C. H. Parker, Judge.

Action by I. L. Jones against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. B. Moore and J. E. De Lacy, for plaintiff in error. Padgett & Watson, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The plaintiff brought a suit against the Southern Railway Company for damages, alleging that he endeavored to buy a ticket from Baxley to Prentiss; that he went to the depot 20 minutes before the train was due to arrive for the purpose of purchasing a ticket, and looked in the ticket office for the agent, but the door was closed.

ed, and there was no one there to sell him a ticket; that after waiting for some time, and no agent being yet in sight, and the train approaching, he went to the point on the railroad where passengers were accustomed to enter the trains of the defendant, and boarded the train upon its arrival; that, when the conductor or auditor came for his fare, he handed him 10 cents, and told him he wanted to go to Prentiss, this being the ticket rate for passage to that place; that the conductor demanded 15 cents in addition because he had not bought a ticket; that he endeavored to explain to the conductor the reason why he had not bought a ticket, but that this agent of the company would not hear his explanation, and, instead, told him in rough and insulting language that he would either have to pay the 15 cents additional or get off the train; that he endeavored to explain to the conductor why he had no ticket, but the conductor refused to hear any explanation, and in a very insulting manner led him to the platform, and, after having checked the speed of the train considerably, but before the train was stopped, ordered him to get off or accept the consequences; that not wishing to be kicked off the train, he endeavored to get off; that the place at which he disembarked was unsuited for that purpose, as it was some distance from the steps of the coach to the ground, and, when he got off, he slipped or fell from the step, and skinned and bruised his leg. He alleged special damages in the sum of $5 paid a physician for treating his wounds; and he asked for damages for the pain and anguish inflicted upon him, and also vindictive damages for the humiliation he suffered in being publicly and wrongfully ejected from the train in the presence of acquaintances and friends. The plaintiff's evidence did not make out quite as strong a case as was depicted in his petition, but in the main his testimony proved the case as laid. The charge of the court, considered as a whole, clearly presented the respective rights and duties of the plaintiff and the defendant in such a case. There appears to have been no error in the trial which could have caused the verdict to be for the defendant instead of the plaintiff. Consequently we find no error in the judgment of the court overruling the motion for a new trial.

2. Several special assignments of error are predicated upon extracts from the charge of the court. We will merely say, in regard to the complaint that in the third special ground of the motion for new trial the judge erred in his instruction upon the subject of contributory negligence (which is excepted to as being inapplicable to the facts in the case and liable to confuse the jury), that, even if this instruction was erroneous, it was manifestly not harmful to the plaintiff in error. The instruction might have had the effect of reducing the findings in favor of the plaintiff in the court below, but inasmuch as the court instructed the jury that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover at all, unless he had used reasonable diligence in endeavoring to procure a ticket, and as the evidence nowhere pointed to any contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, it is evident that this instruction was not the cause of the jury finding for the plaintiff instead of for the defendant. It is alleged that this charge was error "because the judge failed to charge in the language of the rule of the Railroad Commission of Georgia that the plaintiff should have exercised reasonable diligence to procure a ticket before boarding the train, and because the judge failed to charge the jury that it was the duty of the plaintiff to exercise reasonable diligence to procure a ticket." The instruction complained of is as follows: "I charge you further that one who without having provided himself with a ticket may be compelled to pay fare at the train rate instead of the ticket rate, and if he refuses to pay at the train rate, he may be ejected from the train, without subjecting the defendant company to liability for damages, provided the failure of the passenger to provide himself with a ticket is due to his own fault or negligence, and provided, further, that only such force is used as is necessary to eject him from the cars, and that the expulsion be made in a decorous and proper manner." There is an evident lapsus of the words "boards a train," after the word "who" and before the word "without," in the first line of the above extract, but, supplying that, we find no error in the instruction. The statement of the judge that the plaintiff could be required to pay the train rate, and could be ejected in case he refused to pay it, without subjecting the carrier to any liability, if the failure of the passenger to provide himself with a ticket was due to his own fault or negligence, if not a stronger method of stating the plaintiff's duty of exercising reasonable diligence to procure a ticket than that suggested by the plaintiff in error, is at least sufficient. In the absence of a written request for more specific instructions.

3. Complaint is made as to another portion of the judge's charge, because it is insisted that, under the evidence, the plaintiff was not a passenger, but merely a trespasser. It is insisted that the judge erred in instructing the jury as to the duties of a carrier to a passenger, because the evidence showed the plaintiff had no ticket. It does not require a ticket to make one a passenger upon a railroad train. The law does require that one who intends to become a passenger shall use reasonable diligence to obtain a ticket. This is a regulation of public policy. But if an intending passenger uses ordinary diligence to obtain a ticket, and is prevented from doing so by any cause beyond his own control, and thereafter enters the train of a common carrier with the intention of paying for his journey and complying with all of the proper rules and regulations of the carrier, he is not a trespasser, but a passenger. One who boards a train intending to pay for his passage therein is not a trespasser, even though he be in error as to the amount due for his fare.

4. As to other defects alleged by defendant in the motion for a new trial, it is plain, upon a review of the charge as a whole, that every instruction needful to the jury in its consideration of this case is given in some portion of the general charge.

5. The finding in favor of the plaintiff was very moderate in amount. We do not say this in any spirit of criticism, because it was perhaps fully as large as the plaintiff was entitled to recover under his own evidence. We refer to it simply because it is apparent from this record that the case was one for the jury, and that no reason appears why the jury's finding should be disturbed. Numerous witnesses testified in behalf of the defendant, some of them apparently disinterested; and there was some testimony on the part of the defendant which flatly contradicted every material statement made by the plaintiff in his own behalf. If the testimony for the defendant is true, the conductor returned to the plaintiff the money which he had tendered, and the train was stopped and the plaintiff allowed to disembark at his own request. According to this testimony, there was no unkind or discourteous language used by the conductor, and the plaintiff alighted on ground perfectly smooth and level, and consequently the skinning of his leg must have been the result of his own negligence. But, while the evidence for the defendant would have debarred any recovery on the part of the plaintiff, the testimony of the plaintiff warrants the finding in his favor.

Judgment affirmed.

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 190*)—VIOLATION OF BOND BY PRINCIPAL—REMEDY OF SURETY.

A surety upon a criminal recognizance who, in order to protect himself from a forfeiture of the bond and the liability consequent thereon, is forced to procure the issuance of a requisition and to expend money to compel the presence of the principal in accordance with his obligation, may recover of the principal on the appearance bond any expense necessarily incurred by himself as surety in preventing a breach of the bond by his principal and in enforcing the presence of the principal, in accordance with the latter's obligation to be present and to abide the judgment and sentence of the court in the criminal case against him. From the promise of the principal to be present without expense or trouble to his surety there arises an implied promise on the part of the principal to pay his surety any loss or damage the surety may sustain by reason of the violation of his promise.

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 271*)—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT—AMENDMENT.

An affidavit made to foreclose a mortgage under the provisions of section 2754 of the Civil Code of 1895, and which stated that the defendant mortgagor has "placed himself in some one of the positions where process of attachment could legally issue against him," was amendable, and the plaintiff should have been allowed to amend, as he offered to do, by stating that the defendant was a nonresident of the state, and that this was the ground of attachment relied upon.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 271*)—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT—AMENDMENT.

The copy of mortgage attached to the foreclosure affidavit was verified in this case by the statement in the affidavit; but in any event the offer of the plaintiff to amend the affidavit by signing it should have been permitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 271*)—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT—AMENDMENT—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

The provisions of section 5122 of the Civil Code of 1895 relative to the amendment of affidavits are to be given a broad and liberal construction. Collins v. Taylor, 128 Ga. 789, 58 S. E. 448.

(8 Ga. App. 263)

SMITH v. BERMAN. (No. 2,330.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BANKRUPTCY (§ 51*)—CUSTODY OF BANKRUPT'S PROPERTY.

Upon the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, followed by an adjudication, all property in the actual or constructive possession of the bankrupt passes into the custody of the bankruptcy court, subject to its exclusive jurisdiction to determine by plenary action of summary proceeding all adverse or conflicting claims with reference thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

2. EXEMPTIONS (§ 16*)—PROPERTY—PRESUMPTION OF HUSBAND'S OWNERSHIP.

"In this state, notwithstanding his reduced importance as a domestic factor," the husband is still recognized by law as the head of his family, "and, though his wife may reside with him, she does not thereby divest his possession of the homestead," nor does her co-residence alone rebut the legal presumption that the house and all the household effects belong to the husband as the head of the family.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Cent. Dig. §§ 15-19; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

3. COURTS (§ 489*)—STATE COURTS—JURISDICTION OVER OFFICERS OF FEDERAL COURTS.

State courts have jurisdiction against officers of the United States courts, such as marshals, referees, and trustees in bankruptcy, to recover damages for wrongful acts entirely beyond the legitimate scope and performance of official duties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1328, 1336; Dec. Dig. § 489.*]

4. BANKRUPTCY (§ 296*)—ACTION AGAINST TRUSTEE FOR CONVERSION.

Where, in a suit brought in a state court by the wife of a bankrupt against the trustee in bankruptcy to recover damages for an alleged trespass by the trustee in the wrongful conversion of personal property to which the wife claimed the title and the right of possession, it appeared, from the evidence, that the trustee was not a trespasser, but was in possession as trustee of the personal property involved in the controversy, the res being in the possession of the court of bankruptcy through its trustee, a verdict should have been directed for the defendant and the plaintiff left to her remedy in the court of bankruptcy, which, under the law, has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions relating to the right of possession and title to the res in its custody.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

Error from City Court of Blakely; W. A. Jordan, Judge.

Action by Fannie Berman against H. G. Smith. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Mrs. Fannie Berman brought suit in the city court of Blakely against H. G. Smith to recover damages for alleged trespass, and the jury found a verdict in her favor for the sum of $8,000. The cause of action arose on the following state of facts: The defendant, H. G. Smith, was trustee in bankruptcy of Morris Berman, the husband of the plaintiff. Morris Berman filed in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, and on this petition an adjudication was entered January 8, 1909. In his schedule the bankrupt listed "merchandise debts amounting to $7,461.11, and assets consisting of a stock of goods valued at $3,000," and "household goods and furniture, household stores, wearing apparel and ornaments of the person valued at $150." He claimed an exemption of "the household and kitchen furniture and wearing apparel of himself and wife, all in the house then occupied by him in Blakely, Georgia, and valued at $150," and the remainder of the $1,600 exemption out of the proceeds of any other property belonging to him. On January 21, 1909, he amended his schedule, as to his claim of homestead, "by striking therefrom his claim for household furniture, and by praying that his homestead amounting to $1,600 be set apart and allowed to him out of any property belonging to the bankrupt estate." The house in which the bankrupt lived with his wife and child and a relative was rented by him. When the trustee qualified, the wife of the bankrupt was sick, and at the request of the bankrupt the trustee permitted him to remain in possession of the household and kitchen furniture, as there was no immediate necessity for its sale. The merchandise stock of the bankrupt was sold by the trustee at public outcry for $1,580 cash. On investigation the trustee found that on January 7, 1908, the inventory showed merchandise on hand valued at $2,006.84. On January 10, 1909, the inventory of the bankrupt's stock by the appraiser showed that its value was then $3,162.73. No money or other property outside of this stock of goods was ever delivered by the bankrupt to the trustee. His scheduled and other debts being over $7,500, the trustee found no explanation, after diligent research, of the apparently large shortage in the assets of the bankrupt during the year 1908. In 1908 the bankrupt's tax returns included the following item: "Household and kitchen furniture, piano, libraries, pictures, etc., $200." His wife, Mrs. Fannie Berman, made no return whatever of any property for taxation. Among the bankrupt's bills, invoices, and paid checks, the trustee found a number covering purchases by him and payment therefor of household goods and furniture, and he also found that all of this household furniture, including libraries, pictures, etc., was covered by three policies of insurance which the bankrupt had taken out in his own name.

The trustee in bankruptcy employed as his counsel Glessner & Park of Blakely, Ga.; and on March 20, 1909, his attorney, Mr. Park, informed him that in passing the bankrupt's house he had observed that the furniture and household effects were being packed up preparatory to shipment, and advised him that in his opinion the bankrupt was preparing to move this furniture to Birmingham, Ala. The furniture and household goods being the same that had been intrusted to the bankrupt by the trustee as above mentioned, the attorney advised the trustee that he should go ahead and take possession of these effects. At the request of the trustee, his attorney telephoned to the referee in bankruptcy, stating these facts, and asked him for instructions, and in reply to this telephone message the referee directed the trustee to take possession of the furniture and household effects, and stated that to authorize him to do so he needed no written instructions or other papers; that he was authorized to do so by the fact of his appointment as trustee. Up to this time Mrs. Fannie Berman had made no claim or assertion of title to any of the household or kitchen furniture, and the trustee was therefore advised by his attorney and the referee to take possession of all the furniture and household effects which were being packed up, and which it was apprehended would be shipped from the state unless prompt action was taken. Following these instructions from the referee and the advice of his counsel, the trustee took with him two young men, one of whom was to check out the personal property at Berman's house and the other to check it in upon its deposit in a warehouse, and repaired to the bankrupt's house for the purpose of carrying out the instructions which had been given him. When he reached the house, he found that the husband, the bankrupt, was not at home, but that the wife was present with a servant, a child, and a neighbor, and the trustee informed her of his mission. The wife objected to the trustee doing anything until her husband came, and at her request the trustee telephoned to her husband to come to the house, and he also called up Mr. Pottle, the attorney for the trustee. In a short time the bankrupt and his attorney arrived, and both demanded of the trustee his authority for entering the house and taking possession of the effects therein. The trustee replied that his authority was his appointment as trustee in bankruptcy. An altercation took place between the bankrupt and the trustee; the bankrupt taking the trustee by the arm and attempting to eject him from the house, and the trustee becoming angry and using profane language in the presence of the bankrupt's wife. The attorney for the bankrupt also warned the trustee that he would act at his peril in taking possession of the furniture and effects in the house. The bankrupt and his counsel left the house, and, after their departure, the trustee informed Mrs. Berman that he would be compelled to take possession of all the household and kitchen furniture as the property of the bankrupt, and she stated to him that all the personal property in the house belonged to her and that nothing belonged to the bankrupt. The trustee stated that the question of title would have to be passed upon by the court, but that he would not take possession of her wearing apparel, or that of her child and husband. There was a trunk in the house, and the trustee asked Mrs. Berman what the trunk contained, and she stated that it contained only wearing apparel for herself and child. The trustee refused to take her word, and asked to be permitted to see in the trunk. Permission was refused by her, and after some controversy, in which she testified that the trustee used offensive and insulting language to her, the trunk was taken possession of by the trustee, and, not being able to obtain the key to the trunk from her, the trustee carried the trunk to a locksmith and had it opened, and in it found concealed in some clothing a man's leathern wallet containing $1,940 in bank bills. After the trunk had been opened and the money found, Mrs. Berman stated for the first time that this money was her property; that it had been given to her in part by her relatives when she married in 1907; that $600 of it had been paid to her by a former employer, being the amount of her wages which she had saved; that she had kept this money in her trunk all this time, except that she had loaned to her husband about $1,000 of the money, which he had paid back from time to time. The money was deposited by the trustee to his credit in the bank, and the trunk, with all the other articles therein, was returned by the trustee to the wife, who at first refused to accept it without the money, but subsequently did so. The furniture was removed by the trustee from the house and stored, some was left in the house, and the house locked by agents of the trustee; but in a few days thereafter the house was delivered to the bankrupt by the trustee, with a large amount of the personalty still therein.

On March 21, 1909, Mrs. Fannie Berman filed a petition in the United States District Court claiming that this sum of $1,940 in currency "was gotten and accumulated by her at and prior to her marriage in May, 1907, and kept by her since that time in that shape; that she cannot assert her claim to the specific money in the court of bankruptcy, because the trustee has deposited it and it has become commingled with other currency; that she is about to file in the city court of Blakely a suit to determine her title to said money, 'so that she may have the proper basis upon which to seek necessary relief in the court of bankruptcy'; and that unless this court will enjoin the trustee from paying out and distributing the money she is in danger of loss." She prayed for an injunction to restrain the trustee from disposing of the money and household furniture. Judge Newman, of the United States District Court, upon considering the petition, passed an order, on March 22, 1909, "that the defendant, H. G. Smith, trustee, be enjoined and restrained as prayed in the petition, until the matters to which said petition relates can be brought before and passed on by B. T. Castellow, the referee in bankruptcy, and heard and determined; all of said matters being hereby referred to the said referee to be passed on by him as such referee." On the day on which this order was passed, Mrs. Berman filed in the city court of Blakely her suit against the defendant, H. G. Smith, for the recovery of $1,940, the value of the money claimed by her and alleged to have been wrongfully converted by the defendant. On March 25, 1909, Mrs. Berman filed another suit in the city court of Blakely against H. G. Smith for the recovery of the value of their furniture, etc., taken from the house, alleging the value to be $1,000, and also filed the present suit, in which she sought to recover the $1,940 in money, which she alleged belonged absolutely to her, and $1,000, the value of the furniture taken possession of by the trustee, alleging that both the money and the furniture were wrongfully converted by the defendant, and sought to recover, in addition to these actual damages, punitive and exemplary damages for the tortious acts of the defendant in connection with the trespass and conversion, setting out in her petition, in substance, all the foregoing facts as a basis for recovery.

On March 30, 1909, the trustee in bankruptcy filed a petition in the bankruptcy court setting forth the status and the different suits and prosecutions brought against him; he having also been indicted by the grand jury of Early county for using profane language in the presence of a female and for forcible entry and detainer, and he prayed for an injunction against these suits and prosecutions, and that the entire subject-matter of controversy be referred to the referee for decision. On this petition the following order was passed: "Upon reading and considering the foregoing petition, it is ordered that Fannie Berman be, and she is hereby, enjoined and restrained, as prayed in the petition, from proceeding further with the prosecution of the civil suits referred to in the foregoing petition, or from instituting others of like character against H. G. Smith, on account of his acts as trustee in bankruptcy for Morris Berman, until the matters to which said petition relates have been passed upon by B. T. Castellow, referee in bankruptcy. In open court, this 30th day of March, 1909. W. T. Newman, U. S. Judge." On April 30, 1909, Mrs. Berman filed a petition to Judge Newman in the court of bankruptcy, alleging the pendency of the three suits above mentioned, in the state courts, setting forth the order by which the dispute was referred to the referee for decision, and complaining of delay in the determination thereof, and asking that the restraining order heretofore granted be dissolved; and on July 31, 1909, Judge Newman filed an elaborate opinion in the case, reviewing the various suits and matters in litigation and the authorities bearing on the case, and passed the following order: "After argument had upon the foregoing matter, and upon consideration thereof, it is ordered and adjudged that as to the suit in the city court of Blakely to recover $1,940, and as to the suit to recover furniture and other personalty, an injunction be granted, restraining Fannie Berman from the further prosecution of same. And as to the suit for $10,000 damages an injunction is denied, and the restraining order heretofore granted dissolved. Wm. T. Newman, U. S. Judge." Thereafter, at the August term of the city court of Blakely, the suit for damages was tried, and all the foregoing facts were in substance shown by the evidence, and a verdict in behalf of the plaintiff rendered.

The defendant first demurred to the petition as amended, and this demurrer was overruled and exceptions pendente lite duly preserved. The defendant then filed a plea to the jurisdiction of the state court, alleging in substance that the United States court alone had jurisdiction to determine the questions made by the petition. The court found against this plea, and to this judgment exceptions pendente lite were filed. The defendant then filed a plea in abatement setting up the pendency of the former suits against him for the recovery of the $1,940, and the value of the furniture alleged to have been wrongfully taken possession of by the defendant. To meet this plea the plaintiff took an order dismissing the suit for the recovery of the personalty, and the court granted the order of dismissal and then sustained a demurrer to this plea, and exceptions pendente lite were filed. The case then went to trial on the merits, when the facts heretofore stated were shown by the evidence, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. The defendant filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepts to this judgment. The motion for a new trial contains, besides the general grounds, 57 special assignments of error. In the view entertained by this court of the controlling questions in this case, it will not be necessary to consider and determine many of the assignments of error, and we will therefore decide only those which we deem essential to a determination of the substantial questions involved. Premitting any discussion on the many incidental and collateral questions raised by the record, we prefer to confine the opinion of this court to the merits of the controversy.

Smith, Hammond & Smith and W. F. Weaver, for plaintiff in error. Spencer R. Atkinson, J. W. Walters & Sons, and Hawes & Pottle, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). The conduct of the defendant relied upon by the plaintiff as constituting a trespass may be condensedly stated as his acts in entering the house without warning and in the absence of the bankrupt, taking possession of the house and the household effects therein, and taking possession of the trunk, removing it from the house, having it opened, and taking therefrom the $1,940 in currency. The plaintiff claimed that the house was her home, which the trustee had no right to enter; that the household effects and the money belonged to her, and the trustee had express notice of her title, and she insists that the acts and conduct of the trustee above stated were tortious and entitled her to damages, not only to actual damages for the value of the property which it is alleged the trustee unlawfully took possession of, but also to punitive and exemplary damages arising from circumstances of aggravation in connection with the alleged trespass. The pivotal question, therefore, in the case around which every other question revolves, and upon the decision of which depends the right of recovery, is: In whom was the right of possession at the time the house was entered and the property seized by the trustee? If the right of possession, under the law and the facts, was in the trustee in bankruptcy, it is clear he could not have been guilty of any trespass in asserting that right. If the right of possession was in the plaintiff, of which fact the trustee had notice either actual or constructive, and he nevertheless disregarded that right and violated it, he was guilty of trespass and should be responsible to the plaintiff for the wrongful conversion of her property, and if the jury believed that there were circumstances of aggravation, either in act or intention, in the commission of the tort, she would also be entitled to punitive or exemplary damages.

It is admitted that the defendant was not acting in his individual capacity, but was acting as trustee in bankruptcy for Morris Berman, the husband of the plaintiff. It is admitted that he was duly appointed as such trustee on a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, on which there had been an adjudication, and that he had given bond and had qualified as such trustee. Under the provisions of the bankruptcy law, upon the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, followed by an adjudication, all the property in the possession of the bankrupt of which he claims ownership passes into the custody of the bankruptcy court, subject to its jurisdiction to determine by plenary action or summary proceeding all adverse or conflicting claims. White v. Schoerb, 178 U. S. 542, 20 Sup. Ct. 1007, 44 L. Ed. 1183; In re Schermerhorn, 145 Fed. 341, 76 C. C. A. 215, 16 Am. Bankr. Rep. 507. As is said by the Supreme Court in the White Case, supra: "Property in the actual possession of the bankrupt on the day his case is referred to the referee in bankruptcy thereby becomes property in the lawful possession of and custody of the referee in bankruptcy, and of the bankruptcy court, whose representative and substitute he was." "In short, the adjudication operates as a seizure of all the property of the bankrupt, by which it is taken in custodia legis. * * * The possession of the bankrupt, without more, is transferred to the trustee. No demand for the surrender and possession of the bankrupt's property is necessary." 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, § 1807, pp. 1101, 1105, 1106, 1107. On page 1107 of this work the learned author states that "possession of the bankrupt may give jurisdiction to the bankruptcy court, even if the possession is not exclusive, and regardless of the capacity in which he holds, whether in his own right or as agent for another." And again: "The trustee's right summarily to seize the property found in the possession of the bankrupt or his agent, or in the possession of one not claiming any beneficial interest in it, or to get an order from the bankruptcy court requiring the surrender, is not affected by the fact that liens in favor of third persons exist on the property, or that third persons, not themselves in possession, are laying claim to the property, for the property is brought into the bankruptcy court subject to all liens and claims, and the rights of lienholders and claimants will be fully protected, and can be worked out through the machinery of the bankruptcy court." Id. § 1816, p. 1113.

It is clearly deducible from the above authorities that the title to all the property in the actual or constructive possession of the bankrupt at the date of the filing of the petition, followed by an adjudication, becomes ipso facto vested in the trustee in bankruptcy when appointed and qualified, subject to be administered by the bankruptcy court for the benefit of all claimants, lienholders, and creditors. Being vested with the title, the trustee is not only authorized by the statute to take possession of all the property in the actual or constructive possession of the bankrupt, but it is his imperative duty to do so. The question, therefore, recurs: In whom was the right of possession of the personal property in question and the house in question when the trustee entered the house and took possession of the personal property found therein? If the bankrupt had the custody or possession of the property when he filed his petition, it follows as a corollary that the trustee in bankruptcy had the right, under the plain provisions of the bankruptcy law, to enter the house and take possession of the property therein, notwithstanding any adverse claim as to title set up by a third person. In other words, if the right of possession was in the trustee in bankruptcy, he had the right to take the property into his possession, and the title to the property was not affected by his possession, but the possession in the trustee was subject to the title to be subsequently determined by the proper tribunal.

A general principle of law well settled in this state is pertinent at this point, and, when concretely applied, would seem to be controlling. "In this state the husband is the head of the family." Civ. Code 1895, § 2473. "Possession by the husband with the wife, he being the head of the home, is presumptively his possession." Broome v. Davis, 87 Ga. 584, 13 S. E. 749. "In this state," declares Chief Justice Bleckley, "notwithstanding his reduced importance as a domestic factor, the husband is still the head of his family, and, though his wife may reside with him, she does not thereby divest his possession of the homestead, and make the possession her own." Broome v. Davis, supra. "When husband and wife live together upon land, the possession is presumptively in him as the head of the family, and such joint residence would not alone be sufficient to give notice of any claim of interest in the land by the wife." Garrard v. Hull, 92 Ga. 787, 20 S. E. 357. These decisions establish the doctrine that, when husband and wife live together, the house in which they live, and all the property in the house, is, in the legal possession of the husband as the head of the family, and presumptively the title to such property is also in the husband. The question of title, however, is not important, as possession is the determining factor in every case of this character. In the present case the trustee in bankruptcy is not compelled to invoke the general principle just considered, because the facts proved would seem fully to have justified his official conduct. Of course, when we say official conduct we leave out of consideration, as immaterial and irrelevant, the mere manner or method in which he asserted his rights as an official. It is conceded that the house was rented by the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, and was in his possession under a rental contract when the adjudication in bankruptcy was made. The trustee was therefore entitled to the possession of the house for the remainder of the term of the lease, whatever it may have been. In re Chambers, Calder & Co. (D. C.) 98 Fed. 865; 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, 1118. It is conceded that the bankrupt had scheduled his household goods and had claimed them as the head of the family, and that the goods so scheduled and so claimed were in the house when the trustee entered and took possession. It is shown, by the undisputed evidence, that the house and the household effects had been left in the possession of the bankrupt by the trustee because of the sickness of the bankrupt's wife. The plaintiff, the wife of the bankrupt, made no claim, prior to the seizure of the household goods by the trustee, to any part of the household goods; nor at the time of the seizure of the household goods did she make any specific claim to any part of them; nor did she at that time notify the trustee that there was any money in the trunk which was in the house, or that she claimed title to any money therein. The money was subsequently found concealed in the trunk, and it was only after the trunk had been seized by the trustee and opened and the money found therein, and the trunk, with the wearing apparel of herself and child, returned to her, that she made claim to the money.

Without extending the discussion, we conclude that the house, the household furniture, and the trunks in the house were all legally in the possession of the bankrupt at the date of the adjudication, and that at the date of the alleged trespass by the trustee all this property was held by the bankrupt by the permission of the trustee, and simply as the agent of the trustee. In other words, the trustee, instead of being a trespasser, was endeavoring to assert and maintain his possession of the property which presumptively belonged to the bankrupt, and to which the trustee was entitled by virtue of his trust, and of which he had previously taken constructive possession when he left the bankrupt in the actual possession thereof. The trustee in bankruptcy, not being guilty of any trespass against the rights of the plaintiff in connection with the matters charged against him, could not be legally liable in damages to her. Under the facts of this case and the law applicable thereto, we are satisfied that "there is not enough in the suit, independently of the effort to recover the $1,940 and the personal property, to make a case for damages." And it follows that, with the question of trespass and the right to recover damages eliminated, there only remains in the case the claim of the plaintiff's ownership of the money and the other personal property which the trustee is alleged to have wrongfully converted by his seizure. This question of title is, in our opinion, under the evidence and the law, cognizable only in the bankruptcy court. As stated by Judge Newman in this very case, "the suit is in effect a proceeding to recover the property in the possession of the trustee." This personal property, having been taken possession of by the bankruptcy court through its lawfully appointed trustee, is thereby withdrawn from the jurisdiction of all other courts. The court, having possession of the property, has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions respecting the title, possession, or control of the property. Wabash R. Co.

v. College, 208 U. S. 38, 28 Sup. Ct. 182, 52 L. Ed. 379. See opinion of Mr. Justice Moody in Murphy v. Hofman, 211 U. S. 562, 29 Sup. Ct. 154, 53 L. Ed. 327, where the learned justice collates the decisions bearing on the question, and deduces from them the proposition that when the court of bankruptcy, through the acts of its officers, such as referees, receivers, or trustees, has taken possession of the res as the property of the bankrupt, it has ancillary jurisdiction to hear and determine the adverse claims of third persons to it, and that its possession cannot be disturbed by the process of another court.

The foregoing opinion is not at all in conflict with the rule that an action may be brought in the state courts to recover damages for wrongful acts of officers of the bankruptcy court clearly beyond their duty to the prejudice of third persons. Berman v. Smith (D. C.) 171 Fed. 735, and cases cited. We are clear that the evidence in the present case does not make this rule applicable, for here the trustee in bankruptcy was guilty of no wrongful acts, as we have endeavored to show, in taking possession of the property in controversy, but was only in the exercise of his duty in the premises. The plaintiff's title to the property can be fully determined by the court of bankruptcy where the matter was duly referred by Judge Newman, and where such matters are properly and orderly cognizable. That court has lawful possession of the res, and its officer, the trustee in bankruptcy, is under bond to deliver the property to the plaintiff, if she proves her title and if the court decides in her favor.

We conclude that when it appeared from the facts proven before the trial court that there was nothing in the suit but the question of title to the res, which was in the rightful possession of the bankruptcy court, and that the defendant was not guilty of trespass, a verdict should have been directed for the defendant, and the plaintiff left, without prejudice, to pursue her remedy in the court of bankruptcy, to recover therefrom the res to which she claimed title.

Judgment reversed.

RUSSELL, J. (concurring specially). Errors in the charge of the court (which are not referred to in the opinion, but as to the quality of which we all agree) require the grant of a new trial, and hence I admit that there must be a reversal of the judgment refusing a new trial. However, I do not assent to the reasons upon which the reversal is predicated. Conceding that the state court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the title, or right of property, as against the bankrupt, and that if the bankrupt had even a constructive possession of the personal property in question it would be and become the possession of his trustee in bankruptcy, I do not think the testimony required the jury to find any such constructive possession. On the contrary, I think there is sufficient evidence to have authorized the jury to find that the trunk and its contents were in the possession of the plaintiff at the time it was taken from her by the defendant, who happened also to be trustee in bankruptcy, and not in the possession, either actual or constructive, of her husband. I think the evidence authorized the conclusion that the money which was taken from the trunk was the plaintiff's and I am clearly of the opinion that it was within the power of the jury to award the plaintiff punitive damages, in addition to the general damage consequent upon her being deprived of the possession of her money. The jury were not required to find that the trunk was in the possession of the bankrupt. While the furnishings of a home are presumptively in the possession of the husband as head of the family, the wearing apparel of a wife need not be treated as even constructively in the possession of her husband. Certainly there is no presumption that a wife's clothing is not her own. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, a satchel or a trunk which contains a married woman's garments, in my opinion, is to be treated merely as the receptacle which segregates the wife's indispensable belongings from other household effects over which, presumptively, her lord and master exercises dominion. It is to be treated as a mere wrapping which aids to maintain a portion of that privacy to which every female, married or single, is entitled. I think the seizure and entry into the plaintiff's trunk, even by a trustee in bankruptcy, could be adjudged to be a trespass, and that it was for the jury to say whether the circumstances of the case were such as to call for the allowance of punitive damages.

POWELL, J. (concurring specially). I agree with the Chief Judge in the main, but do not go quite so far as he does as to some of the salient points of the case.

There is no question but that the trial court's jurisdiction in this case rests on possession, and not on title. The petition presented a prima facie case of possession unlawfully invaded by the trustee in bankruptcy, and was not subject to demurrer. The question is: How far did the proof sustain the petition?

In order for the plaintiff to recover, it was necessary for her to show not merely that she had title to the personal property, but also and specifically that she held possession of it exclusively of her husband, the bankrupt, and that the trustee in bankruptcy invaded this exclusive possession. The state court has no jurisdiction to settle the title of the property in a suit against the trustee in bankruptcy; but if the trustee, in the attempt to discharge his duties, violates an actual possession of property lawfully held by an adverse claimant, he can be held liable in a state court for the trespass—the violation of the possession being the gist of the trespass.

Under the bankruptcy act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3418]), as construed by authoritative decisions, all possession of property held, actually or constructively, by a bankrupt, at the time of the filing of the petition, passes to the bankruptcy court and confers on it exclusive jurisdiction to settle contests as to the ownership. So that the possession of the bankrupt becomes the possession of the trustee in bankruptcy whenever the latter qualifies; the possession of the trustee being constructive or legal possession until he reduces the property to his actual detention and corporeal control.

In the case at bar, therefore, if the bankrupt at the time of the adjudication had the possession (actual or constructive) of the property involved, the subsequent transaction which gave rise to the present action was not a taking of possession by the trustee, but the mere retention and enforcing of a possession which in the eye of the law he already had.

As to the house and as to the household furniture, it is clear that the bankrupt had the possession, and that the possession passed to the trustee. The court plainly erred in submitting to the jury any right of the plaintiff to recover because the trustee went into the house (though the plaintiff, being the wife of the bankrupt, was using it as a home), or because he took the furniture, irrespective of whether in point of fact it was the wife's furniture or not.

As to the money: While the husband is prima facie in possession of the family home, where he and his wife jointly reside, and of the things located therein, yet this presumption is rebuttable. A wife may, even as against her husband, maintain such exclusive corporeal control of property that he will not in law be regarded as having possession of it, either actual or constructive. In this case, if the plaintiff, notwithstanding she was the wife of the bankrupt, and notwithstanding she resided in the house with him, had exclusive physical control and detention of the trunk and the money, her possession would be such as to make the defendant's act in taking the trunk and the money away a trespass, provided, of course, the trunk and the money did not in fact belong to her husband. Compare Pollock & Wright on Possession, 38, 40. I think, therefore, that so far as the money was concerned (the trunk and the remainder of its contents having been returned), the plaintiff might recover in the state court; and my Associate, Judge RUSSELL, concurs with me in this view.

As to the punitive damages I am inclined to agree with Judge HILL. The alleged invasion of the house and the seizure of the household goods being out of the case, for lack of jurisdiction in the state court, the question is: Did the defendant's act in taking and keeping the money indicate such wantonness as to authorize the assessment of punitive damages? I think not. Any prudent man under similar circumstances would have kept it till the title to it could have been decided; and it must be remembered, so far as the mere taking of it is concerned, that the defendant did not even know that there was any money in the trunk when he took and carried it away from the defendant's possession. It is true that the trustee and the bankrupt had an altercation in the presence of the plaintiff, and that in the course of it the defendant used profane language to the bankrupt; but this was a separate affair, and not a part of the damage of taking the trunk and the money, which the trustee did not even decide to take until after this altercation was ended. Besides, it is impossible for an impartial mind to overlook the glaring fact that the bankrupt and his wife were acting very suspiciously and in apparent bad faith. The money and the furniture may have belonged to the plaintiff (personally, I think that the money and most of the furniture probably did belong to her); but, with all that, there are many things which would have fully justified the trustee in believing that the property belonged to the estate in bankruptcy, and that the plaintiff and her husband were about to move it away to another state. However, as the question of punitive damages is dependent purely on the facts, which may vary in the different trials, we deem it unnecessary to make an authoritative ruling on this point at this time.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, but I concur specially upon the points mentioned above.

MCNEILL v. MORGAN et al. (No. 2,348.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

JUDGMENT (§ 366*)—VACATION—ABSENCE OF COUNSEL.

The court did not err in setting aside the verdict, and vacating the judgment. A judgment rendered against a party whose sole counsel is absent by express leave of the court is properly vacated and set aside when that fact is properly called to the attention of the court by a timely motion in writing. Especially is this true where it was shown that the sole counsel for the defendant and appellant in an appeal from a justice's court, and who had promised to notify his clients when to be present, was taken seriously ill, and was in that condition when the judgment was rendered, and the only evidence in behalf of the respondent was that counsel for the plaintiff did not know that the movant had a lawyer.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by Malcolm McNeill against H. W. Morgan and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Scott & Davis, for plaintiff in error. E. D. Thomas and Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson, for defendants in error.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant in error filed the following motion, which is verified by the record and amply supported by evidence, and not contradicted in any way: "Georgia, Fulton County. To the Hon. John T. Pendleton, Judge of said Court: The defendants herein respectfully represent that on September 15, 1909, a verdict by a jury was rendered in said court, and a judgment was duly entered thereon; said verdict and judgment being in favor of the plaintiff and against your defendants. Same was rendered in their absence because of the following facts: Prior to August, 1909, they had employed E. D. Thomas, an attorney, to represent them, and was told by said Thomas that their case would be tried at the September term of said court, and because the time was uncertain he would give them due notice. Nevertheless, about the 1st of September, 1909, defendant Morgan called up the office of said Thomas to inquire the time of trial of said case, and for the purpose of getting a subpoena, that he might duly subpoena a witness for the defendant in said case, and was told by whoever answered the phone that said Thomas was sick and was confined in a sanitarium, and that his case had been checked until he could get well. That as a matter of fact said Thomas was sick and confined to his bed from August 25, 1909, until about October 5th, and was unable to attend to any business until the latter part of October. That said suit was an open account for alleged commissions for procuring a loan, and that these defendants had a good defense and were willing to and able to prove, had they an opportunity, that they had never employed the plaintiff to procure for them a loan, and in fact no loan was ever procured, and now are able, ready, and willing to go to trial with the defense. That the said Thomas in fact had a leave of absence from this court at the time said verdict was rendered against them. That the first knowledge they had of the judgment against them in said case was on Saturday, November 13, 1909, when the sheriff of said county threatened to make a levy on their property. They showed that they relied on (1) that their said attorney would notify them, and, after exercising all caution in calling the office of said Thomas, they relied upon the fact that their case had been checked, wherefore they pray that the verdict rendered against them be vacated, that the judgment thereon be set aside, and for such other and further relief as the court may deem proper, and that the plaintiff be required to show cause why the prayers herein should not be granted."

There was no evidence for the respondent except the statement of his counsel that he did not know that movants were represented by any attorney until after the rendition of the judgment. No significance is to be attached to the fact that the name of counsel for the movants does not appear on the dockets of the superior court, except that it corroborates the testimony of Mr. Davis to the effect that he did not know, when the judgment was taken, that the movants had a lawyer. An appeal may be taken from the judgment of a justice court without employing counsel, and in many cases tried in justices courts there would be nothing in the record to show whether a party had or did not have a lawyer. The point in this case is that it was shown that the movants had employed a lawyer to represent them in the superior court. He was their sole counsel, and not only providentially absent (which might not have excused him if that had not been brought to the attention of the court), but was absent by express leave of the court. Judgment affirmed.

BRANCH v. BISHOP.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 21, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. GROUNDS FOR NEW TRIAL INSUFFICIENT.

The grounds of the motion for new trial, based on rulings of the court as to the admissibility of evidence, so far as they were approved by the judge, and the grounds relative to the charge to the jury, so far as approved by the judge, do not disclose any such error as to require the grant of a new trial.

2. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

The action was damages for malicious prosecution. In his answer the defendant did not specially plead that, although there might not have been probable cause for causing the arrest, yet upon information he believed there was such cause and acted in good faith and not in a spirit of malice, and rely on allegations of that character either as a defense to the action or as mitigation of damages. But there was evidence tending to establish the facts above enumerated, and it was complained in one of the grounds of the motion for new trial that the court, although not requested in writing, omitted to charge such theory of defense. It appears from other portions of the charge that the judge instructed the jury in effect that there could be no recovery unless the defendant in causing the warrant to issue was "moved by malice." The matters alleged to have been erroneously omitted from the charge were merely elaborative of the instructions actually given to the jury, in so far as they bore on the non-liability of the defendant, and were collateral in so far as they related to mitigation of damages. In either case, in the absence of appropriate and timely written requests, the omission to charge was not sufficient cause for the grant of a new trial. *Savannah Electric Co. v. Peterson [the applicant] surveyed on the 28th day of November, 1879, and that the same is not worth two thousand dollars specie," which affidavit and return of the surveyor was made the 1st day of December, 1879, and on the date last stated there was indorsed upon the schedule of personal property the following: "Passed upon and approved Dec. 1st, 1878 [1879?]. Phil. McRae, O. M. C."—and upon the plat of the realty the following: "Plat of the homestead of M. D. Peterson. Passed upon and approved Dec. 1st, 1879, by Phil McRae, Ody. M. C.," which papers and the indorsements thereon were duly recorded in the office of the clerk of the superior court—held, that the court did not err in the trial of a claim case in excluding the homestead papers above set forth, together with the orders and returns thereon, when they were offered as the basis of the claim filed, as they did not show a valid homestead and exemption of the property claimed as exempt. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2828, 2834, 2837.

1. TRIAL (§ 253*)—CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on the trial of a claim case, the claimant introduced, in connection with other evidence to support her contention that she was the owner of the property levied upon, a mortgage given by the defendant in execution to his vendor for the purchase money of a part of the property, which mortgage contained a clause retaining title in the vendor, and which had been transferred to the claimant, it was error for the court to charge the jury as follows: "In considering the question of fraud you look to the date of the papers; if the mortgage was transferred to the claimant prior to the date of the execution, the claimant would have a prior lien, and the property would not be subject," although the mortgage and the transfer thereof were of an older date than the judgment upon which the execution was based, there being some evidence from which the jury might have found that the mortgage was a part of a fraudulent scheme between the defendant and the claimant to defeat the collection of the debt due plaintiff in execution, as the charge complained of had the effect of excluding such testimony from consideration by the jury.

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. O. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Nettie Daniel against the Georgia Railroad. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Jos. B. & Bryan Cumming and Jas. M. Hull, Jr., for plaintiff in error. C. Henry and R. S. Cohen, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. This was a suit brought by Nettie Daniel to recover the value of the life of her husband, Columbus W. Daniel, who was run over and killed by a train of the defendant railroad, which was being operated on the Augusta Belt Line Railway, then controlled and managed by the defendant. The plaintiff's husband was a yard conductor in the employ of the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company. The track of the Belt Line railway where Daniel was killed was distant from the yard track of the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company 10 or 11 feet. The petition shows the following: At some time during the day on which he was killed, it became Daniel's duty as yard conductor to make up his train and to do certain shifting in front of McCoy's brickyard, which is located on the southeastern boundary of the city of Augusta. In front of McCoy's brickyard there appears in succession as you go from the brickyard north, first, a spur track, then a track of the Belt Line railway, and then about six parallel tracks. The Belt Line track and the nearest of the parallel tracks "almost meet in a point in front of McCoy's brickyard, where the two tracks diverge." On the day of the homicide, Columbus Daniel was engaged in directing the movement of a train of the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway from about McCoy's brickyard in the direction of the city of Augusta, and at a point where he was engaged in superintending the movement of the train the track upon which the train was being moved had such a curve that it was necessary for Daniel, in the discharge of his duty, to "take positions from which he could communicate with the engineer of the train which he was directing between and on the tracks of the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway and the Belt Line tracks." While engaged in signaling his train from the position taken by him, and while facing his own train, with his back towards the Georgia Chemical Works, a train of the defendant railroad, consisting of an engine with a tender in front attached to two cars, going at a very rapid rate of speed, "negligently struck the said Columbus W. Daniel, the engine and two cars passing over his body," killing him. It is alleged that the defendant was negligent in running its train with the tender in front, thus preventing those on the engine from seeing whether any person was on the track: and in running the same at an unlawful rate of speed within the city limits, with no lookout on the tender or other precautions, and in failing to give warning to the deceased of the proximity of the train, and in that its engineer, or the fireman on its engine, failed to see the deceased on the track engaged in the performance of his duty of signaling trains, although the deceased could have been seen had the occupants of the engine been looking in the direction they were going, and exercising ordinary care. It was further alleged that the deceased was free from fault, and not guilty of any negligence. Upon the trial of the case the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the plaintiff for the sum of $7,500. A new trial was refused, and the defendant excepted.

1. While upon its face this case is exceedingly close, we are of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to authorize a finding by the jury in favor of the plaintiff. Although the original petition may have been framed on the theory that the husband of the plaintiff was killed in the yard of the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway, and while occupying a position between a track in the yard and the Belt Line track, the petition was so amended, without objection so far as appears from the record, as to authorize the introduction of evidence to show that he was killed after taking a position on the Belt Line track and while giving signals from that position to direct the movement of the train which he was directing as yard conductor, and while he was engaged in the performance of his duty. And there was evidence which tended to prove, and which the jury were authorized to accept as establishing the fact, that in taking such a position on the track of the Belt Line the deceased was but doing that which other employes of the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway did continuously, one witness testifying that he had done the same thing "a thousand times," and that it was the "common practice of our men." Another witness testified that "very often employes of the Charleston & Western Carolina yards

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

...to go upon the Belt Line for the purpose of giving instructions and directions for the drilling of trains." It was also in evidence that the place at which the killing occurred was where the presence of people on the track was anticipated, and where one would look for people to be on the track. There was also evidence from which the jury would have been authorized to find that the engine which struck Daniel was running at a high and dangerous rate of speed (when the character of the place is considered), and that the engine was being run with the tender in front, without a lookout and without the giving of signals. We are of the opinion that, when all of the evidence which is most favorable to the plaintiff's contentions is considered (and it was for the jury to say whether that evidence presented the truth of the case), there was sufficient evidence to authorize a finding in favor of the plaintiff.

2. Complaint is made in the motion for a new trial of the admission of certain testimony, and certain reasons are stated to show that the evidence should have been excluded; but it does not appear that these grounds of objection were urged at the time of the admission of the testimony which plaintiff in error now insists it was error to admit. A mere statement that testimony was admitted over objection, and that this was error for certain stated reasons is not sufficient, where it does not appear that these reasons were urged before the trial judge when he ruled upon the question of admitting or repelling the evidence objected to. See Andrews v. State, 118 Ga. 1, 43 S. E. 852, and cases there cited.

MCLELLAN et al. v. MCLELLAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DEEDS (§ 75*)—EXECUTION THROUGH COERCION—RATIFICATION—INCONSISTENT REMEDIES.

A person cannot prosecute two inconsistent remedies. If a wife was coerced by her husband into making a deed to her brother-in-law, she could, at her option, repudiate the conveyance and proceed to have it canceled and to recover the land. If, instead of so doing, with full knowledge of the facts she elected to bring suit against a bank where certain funds had been deposited by her husband, claiming that such funds were the proceeds of the conveyance to her brother-in-law and belonged to her, and such suit was compromised by paying to her a portion of the amount sued for, this amounted to a ratification of the conveyance, and she could not thereafter successfully bring suit against one to whom the heirs at law of her brother-in-law had conveyed the land, seeking to repudiate the conveyance made by her and to recover the land. Board of Education v. Day, 128 Ga. 156, 163, 57 S. E. 359; Dolvin v. American Harrow Co., 125 Ga. 699, 706, 54 S. E. 706; Equitable Life Assurance Society v. May, 82 Ga. 646, 9 S. E. 597; 15 Cyc. 259-262.

(a) The charge of the court which in substance hypothetically stated the facts set out in the preceding headnote, but merely instructed the jury that if such were the facts they could consider them along with other evidence in the case in determining the question of ratification, was error.

(b) And under the state of facts thus hypothetically stated, relative to the execution of the deed, if the wife received a part of the purchase money for the lot, knowing the source from which it was derived, and her husband, by her consent and authority, received the balance, this would also have amounted to a ratification of the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 207; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 51*)—PROCEEDINGS—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court erred in charging the jury as follows: "The relations between husband and wife are considered in law confidential, and you may consider that relation in passing upon the acts of the husband of Mrs. M. T. McClellan, as shown by the evidence, in arriving at what, if any, influence his relation to her had in respect to her own acts. The confidential relationship, if so established, would prevent the acquisition by one party, by influence produced by such relationship, of an adverse right to himself, as against the party so influenced; and this would apply to a third party who knew of the relationship, and of the undue influence, if any there be, if such party actually participated in the matters leading up to the acquisition of such adverse interest." This charge authorized the jury to find in favor of the wife, who sought to have the deed declared void, though the "third party" referred to, the grantee in the deed, had participated in no act amounting to coercion, or duress, or fraud, inasmuch as the "influence produced by such relationship" (that is, of husband and wife) might not have in it any element necessarily affecting the validity of the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 103; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 250*)—PROCEEDINGS—INSTRUCTIONS.

The effect of a conveyance by a wife of her separate estate to a creditor of her husband for the purpose of paying the latter's debts was not involved under the pleadings and evidence in this case, and the charge of the court upon that subject, though it correctly stated the law upon the question, should not have been given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 584-586; Dec. Dig. § 250.*]

4. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The other charges of the court complained of are not erroneous upon any of the grounds taken upon exception thereto.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 273*)—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF EXCEPTIONS.

The exceptions to the rulings of the court upon the admissibility of evidence present no question for determination by this court, as they do not show what objections to the admission of the evidence were urged upon the trial of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1620-1630; Dec. Dig. § 273; * Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 256, 689, 690, 692.]

INSURANCE (§ 623*)—ACTION ON POLICY—TIME FOR BRINGING—WAIVER.

An insurance policy provided that no action on it should be sustainable "unless commenced within six months after the date of the fire," and that "no officer, agent, or other representative of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as by the terms of this policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and as to such provisions and conditions no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto, and signed by the president, vice president, treasurer and general manager, or assistant secretary, nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached." The assured sued on the policy after the expiration of such six months. Amendments to the petition were offered, making, among other allegations, the following: After plaintiff employed an attorney, the general counsel of the defendant "insisted and persuaded the plaintiff's attorney to defer the matter of filing said suit, that he, the said attorney, had taken the matter up with the company, and said also that he had very great hopes of being able to adjust the matter without litigation, and also informed the attorney for plaintiff that he would give him notice in plenty of time to file his suit, and repeatedly declared to the plaintiff's attorney that plaintiff's attorney should not be hurt by the delay, and plaintiff's attorney, relying on these promises of the general counsel of the company, deferred filing suit until counsel for the defendant * * * finally told plaintiff to file suit. Plaintiff's counsel could and would have filed the suit at once when the matter was turned over to him, and it was turned over to him before the six months had expired from the date of the fire, but relied on the statement of the general counsel of the company in the general office in the city of Atlanta that they were making an effort to adjust the matter, and * * * that they were anxious to call the board of directors together and see if they could not settle the matter without litigation. Petitioner alleges that as a matter of fact the general counsel for the defendant in this case had charge of its entire legal business, and was directed by the president and secretary to look after the claim of plaintiff, and in looking after it and making these promises he was acting for the company and within the scope of his authority, and his declaration that the company was trying to adjust the matter and insisting that counsel for the plaintiff defer the filing of the suit until he could see that it was adjusted was the sole cause of the suit not being filed within the six months prescribed by policy." Held, that under the allegations in the amendment offered, the defendant was estopped from setting up the defense that the suit on the policy was not brought within the time prescribed therein, and the court committed no error in allowing the amendments over objections of the defendant that they were insufficient in law, "because they sought to vary a written contract by parol, because they were not in accord with the declaration originally filed and were inconsistent therewith, because they sought to vary a written contract without setting up any sufficient reason therefor," and properly refused to dismiss the petition as amended on the ground that "it appeared on the face of the pleadings that the cause of action was barred." *McDaniel v. Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by McVickers Bros. against the American Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Suit was brought on April 15, 1907, on a fire insurance policy on account of the destruction by fire on October 10, 1906, of the property on which the insurance was issued. The policy provided that no action on the policy should be sustainable "unless commenced within six months after the date of the fire, and not afterward." Upon motion to dismiss the petition because the suit was filed more than six months after the fire occurred, the plaintiff offered amendments, making, among other allegations, substantially the following: Soon after the fire the general counsel for the defendant, and the one holding the office of secretary and treasurer of defendant, "both being authorized to make a waiver and both being in charge of the office, made the only excuse for not adjusting and settling the policies that the board of directors had not met, and asked plaintiff to wait until the board of directors could get together, and plaintiff visited the office and talked to these gentlemen six or seven times, and each time they would put him off until the next week, begging him to wait until the board of directors could meet, * * * and plaintiff, being misled by these statements and believing from their statements that they were bona fide making an effort to pay his claim, deferred even turning the case over to an attorney." After plaintiff employed an attorney, the general counsel of the defendant "insisted and persuaded the plaintiff's attorney to defer the matter of filing said suit, that he, the said attorney, had taken the matter up with the company, and said also that he had very great hopes of being able to adjust the matter without litigation, and also informed the attorney for the plaintiff that he would give him notice plenty of time to file his suit, and

repeatedly declared to the plaintiff's attorney that plaintiff's attorney should not be hurt by the delay, and plaintiff's attorney, relying on these promises of the general counsel of the company, deferred filing suit until counsel for the defendant * * * finally told plaintiff to file suit, that he would see that the company furnished him some blanks of the policies, and that he would still see if he could not settle the suit before trial term, and was in hopes that they could adjust the matter. Plaintiff's counsel could and would have filed the suit at once when the matter was turned over to him, and it was turned over to him before the six months had expired from the date of the fire, but relied on the statement of the general counsel of the company in the general office in the city of Atlanta that they were making an effort to adjust the matter, and * * * that they were anxious to call the board of directors together and see if they could not settle the matter without litigation. Petitioner alleges that, as a matter of fact, the general counsel for the defendant in this case had charge of its entire legal business, and was directed by the president and secretary to look after the claim of plaintiff, and in looking after it and making these promises he was acting for the company and within the scope of his authority, and his declaration that the company was trying to adjust the matter, and insisting that counsel for the plaintiff defer the filing of the suit until he could see that it was adjusted, was the sole cause of the suit not being filed within the six months prescribed by policy," and that the general counsel, after suit was filed, "approached the counsel for the plaintiff, and stated that he did not then intend to make any objection to the fact that the suit was not filed within the six months, and had no idea that he would make any such point, and filed his plea without making any point of this sort, but finally approached the attorney for plaintiff with an agreement and asked plaintiff's attorney to sign it, that, if he decided to file or make this point, he would not be precluded by not making it the first term of the court, and plaintiff's attorney signed this agreement, stating to him at the time and believing and still believing that the time of filing the suit, six months, had been waived by him, and that a plea of that sort would not avail him." Defendant is "estopped from claiming that the suit was not filed within the six months from the date of the fire. Petitioner further alleges that there is a stipulation in the policy that suit should not be filed within three months from the date of the fire, and that the conditions in the policy that suit should be filed within six months from the date of the fire would only give plaintiff right to sue within three months from the time of right of action accrued, and that this time is so short as to be unreasonable, and renders that condition that plaintiff must sue in six months void. Said company through its agents above referred to claimed to your petitioners and their attorney all along up to the 15th day of April, 1907, that they were taking up the matter of loss, and seeking to call a board of directors together, and would probably settle the claim and at the time referred to in this paragraph, when they finally refused to pay same."

The policy contained the following provisions: "No suit, or action on this policy, for the recovery of any claim, shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity until after full compliance by the assured with all the foregoing requirements, nor unless commenced within six months after the date of the fire and not afterward. * * * No officer, agent, or other representative of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as by the terms of this policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and as to such provisions and conditions no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto, and signed by the president, vice president, treasurer and general manager or assistant secretary, nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached." The defendant objected to the allowance of the amendments "because they were insufficient in law, because they sought to vary a written contract by parol, because they were not in accord with the declaration originally filed and were inconsistent therewith, because they sought to vary a written contract without setting up any sufficient reason therefor." After the amendments were allowed, the defendant "moved to dismiss the declaration as amended, because the same as amended was insufficient in law, as it appeared on the face of the pleadings that the cause of action was barred." The motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted to this, as well as to the allowance of the amendments.

ATLANTIC COMPRESS CO. v. CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CARRIERS (§ 153)—EXEMPTION FROM LIABILITY FOR LOSS OF GOODS—EXPRESS CONTRACT.

A compress company in possession of a certain number of bales of cotton belonging to another issued to the latter a receipt acknowledging receipt of the cotton "to be compressed and loaded for Central of Georgia. Subject to all the conditions of bill of lading of above-named carrier [a railway company] which may be issued in exchange for this receipt." "The form of the bill of lading alluded to in such receipt was well known" to the party receiving the receipt. The owner of the cotton obtained from the railway company in exchange for the receipt a bill of lading, one of the conditions of which was, "No carrier or party in possession of all or any of the property herein described shall be liable for any loss thereof or damage thereto, by * * * fire." For compressing and loading the cotton the railway company was to pay the compress company. Before the cotton was compressed and loaded, it was destroyed by fire while in possession of the railway company through its agent, the compress company. The freight was prepaid by the owner of the cotton. The railway company paid the owner the value of the cotton destroyed, and, to recover the amount thus paid, sued the compress company on a contract of the latter to indemnify the former against any liability to the owner of cotton lost or damaged after it was received by the compress company for compressing and before it was loaded by the compress company for shipment. Held, there was no express contract between the owner of the cotton and the railway company respecting the condition in the bill of lading wherein the latter was to be exempted from liability on account of the loss of the cotton by fire, and such condition was not binding on the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 687-690; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

2. INDEMNITY (§ 15*)—ACTION ON CONTRACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Proof of loss of the cotton by fire and payment to the owner by the railway company for the value of the cotton made a prima facie case of liability of the compress company to the railroad company on the indemnity contract between them.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Action by the Central of Georgia Railway Company against the Atlantic Compress Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

King & Spalding and E. M. Underwood, for plaintiff in error. Lawton & Cunningham and H. W. Johnson, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. The Central of Georgia Railway Company (hereinafter called the plaintiff) sued the Atlantic Compress Company (hereinafter called the defendant) on an indemnity contract, wherein the latter agreed to indemnify the former against any liability to the owner of cotton lost or damaged after it was received by the compress company for compressing and before it was loaded by the compress company for shipment. One hundred and twenty-five bales of cotton received by the defendant from the owner to be compressed and loaded for the plaintiff were destroyed by fire after the bill of lading was issued to the owner by the plaintiff, in exchange for the receipt given the owner by the defendant, and while it was in the possession of the defendant as the agent of the plaintiff and before it had been compressed. The plaintiff paid the owner the value of the cotton, and sued the defendant to recover the amount thus paid. The case was submitted to the judge on an agreed statement of facts, and to his judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount for which suit was brought the defendant excepted.

The defendant contends that the owner of the cotton made an express contract, whereby the plaintiff was exempted from liability to the owner for loss of the cotton by fire. The plaintiff makes the contrary contention. Unless the plaintiff was in law liable to pay the owners of the cotton on account of its destruction, the defendant would not be liable to reimburse the plaintiff for the amount so paid by the latter. Civ. Code 1895, § 2276, is as follows: "A common carrier cannot limit his legal liability by any notice given, either by publication or by entry on receipts given or tickets sold. He may make an express contract, and will then be governed thereby." Counsel have argued the case on the theory that the receipt of the compress company was given on its own account, and also on the opposing theory that it was given as agent of the railway company. In considering the question whether the conditions in the bill of lading created an exemption from liability in the event the cotton was destroyed by fire, let us first consider the receipt as having been issued by the defendant on its own account, and not as agent for the plaintiff. The bill of lading issued by the plaintiff had in it this condition: "No carrier or party in possession of all or any of the property herein described shall be liable for any loss thereof or damage thereto, by * * * fire," etc. The words "party in possession" are broad enough to cover the compress company, which, as agent of the railroad company, was in actual possession of the cotton when it was destroyed by fire. The receipt of the compress company acknowledged receipt of the cotton from the shipper "to be compressed and loaded for Central of Georgia. Subject to all the conditions of bill of lading of above named carrier, which may be issued in exchange for this receipt." Treating the receipt as that of the compress company on its own account, and assuming that the bill of lading became a part of the agreement between the compress company and the shipper, or that the receipt was given subject to conditions of bill of lading that might be issued in exchange for it, or that the cotton was to be compressed and loaded subject to such conditions, one of which was that any party other than the railway company in possession of the property would not be liable for its loss by fire, the meaning of the receipt would be that should the cotton be lost by fire in the possession of the compress company after the receipt was given, and bill of lading issued, the compress company would not be liable therefor to the shipper. If the receipt was treated in this way and given the effect and meaning above referred to, no violence would be done to the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 2264, as the provision therein contained, that the common-law liability of a common carrier shall not be limited by any notice given, etc., but, in order to do so, there must be an express contract, only applies to common carriers, and the compress company is not a common carrier. The condition in a writing issued by the compress company, or in another writing made a part thereof, that the one to whom the writing was delivered would not hold the company liable for losses by fire might be binding on such person when it would not be binding if issued by a common carrier. If it is proper to treat the receipt in this way, and give it the meaning that the compress company was not to be liable to the shipper if the cotton was lost by fire before it reached its destination, this fact alone would not relieve the railway company from liability if the cotton was destroyed by fire. The railway company would not be relieved of liability to the shipper for loss of the cotton by fire while in its possession because the shipper had bound himself, with the knowledge of the railway company, not to hold another liable for the loss of the cotton by fire while in possession of the railway company. The railway company could not properly say to the shipper, "You should not hold me liable because you have agreed not to hold another liable." The railway company is not seeking to hold the compress company liable because of negligence of the latter, but on its indemnity contract with the railway company, to which the shipper was no party, and, as far as disclosed by the record, never knew there was such a contract. What has just been stated has been said on the theory that the receipt of the compress company was one given by it on its own account, not as an agent of the railway company. If the receipt be dealt with on the theory that the railway company was no party to it, and as plainly evidencing a contract by the shipper not to hold the compress company liable for loss of the cotton by fire occurring at any time before delivery at its destination, we do not think this fact would be sufficient to show that there was an express contract by the shipper that the railway company would be likewise relieved of liability, although the receipt was delivered to the railway company in exchange for a bill of lading, and it was contemplated by the parties when the receipt was given that this should be done.

Nor would the facts in the record warrant the conclusion that there was an express contract regarding the exemption of the railway company from liability if the cotton was lost by fire if the compress company's receipt be treated as having been given by that company as an agent for the railway company. On this theory, it would simply be an exchange of the receipt of one agent of the railway company for a bill of lading from another agent. The main office of the receipt of the compress company on this theory would be to evidence from one agent of the railway company the number of bales of cotton for which the other agent of the railway company should give a bill of lading in exchange. While the receipt of the compress company and the bill of lading issued to the shipper were on forms in general use between shippers and the parties, it does not appear that the attention of the shipper was especially directed to the particular statements in them and gave his assent thereto, and neither the receipt nor the bill of lading was signed by the shipper. The mere fact that the receipt stated that the cotton was to be compressed and loaded, or that the receipt was given "subject to all the conditions of bill of lading" of the carrier, could not alone make the condition in the bill of lading a subject-matter of express contract, as every bill of lading issued and accepted by a shipper is for a shipment subject to the conditions in the bill of lading, except that the limitations on the common-law liability of the carrier are not binding unless made the subject of an express contract. Treating the receipt as that of the compress company as agent of the railway company, the statement in it is but a notice given and an entry on a receipt undertaking to do what the statute says cannot be done, to wit, limit its legal liability. The fact that one agent of a common carrier in giving a receipt for goods to be transported by the carrier and to be exchanged for a bill of lading enters a notice or makes an entry which of itself, or, taken in connection with the bill of lading to be issued in exchange for it, limits the legal liability of the carrier, is without effect so far as the shipper is concerned, unless he makes an express contract with reference to such condition.

The question of whether or not a bill of lading evidences a special contract between the carrier and the shipper within the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 2276, so as to make valid a limitation on the legal liability of the carrier contained in the bill of lading, is not determined by the fact that the shipment is tendered by the shipper, and received by the carrier, subject generally to the conditions of the bill of lading which the carrier issues. Every shipment for which a bill of lading is issued to the shipper is subject to the legal conditions of the bill of lading which constitutes the contract of carriage, as well as a receipt for the goods, and the recipient of the bill of lading impliedly agrees thereto. But a shipment being governed by the ordinary legal conditions of a bill of lading is one thing, and an express assent by the shipper to a stipulation therein which limits the legal liability of the carrier, so as to make such a condition valid against the shipper when it otherwise would not be, is another and a different proposition. To give rise to the latter so as to bind the shipper, there must be an express assent on his part to the stipulation itself. He must evidence in some way an intention to be bound thereby. We do not see that the mere exchange of a receipt prepared by another for the carrier's bill of lading, although the shipper may be advised as to the form of the bill of lading customarily issued by the carrier in such instances, and although the receipt may contain the statement, "Subject to all the conditions of bill of lading of above-named carrier, which may be issued in exchange for this receipt," is an act on the part of the shipper showing an express assent by him to a stipulation in such bill of lading whereby the carrier undertakes to limit his legal liability. And we think the result is the same whether the receipt thus exchanged by the shipper be one given him by a third person who holds the goods as his bailee, or by an agent of the carrier (other than the one issuing the bill of lading), who holds them for the carrier. Under such circumstances, the receipt is primarily intended as an evidence of the shipper's right to the possession of the goods which are in the hands of another, and its exchange with the carrier for a bill of lading effects a surrender of the right of possession to the carrier, as a common carrier, for shipment, and no more affects the contract of carriage expressed in the terms of the bill of lading than would a physical delivery of the goods themselves and the taking of a similar bill of lading where no receipt had been previously issued therefor. One transaction calls no more attention to a limitation of liability than the other; for, as above stated, a shipment for which a bill of lading is given is subject to the general conditions of shipment and requirements of the bill of lading, and the shipper adds nothing to his implied acceptance of its terms by stating generally that he accepts it subject to its conditions. In neither of the instances above outlined are the facts such as to denote an express assent on the part of a shipper to limitations on the liability of the carrier which the law treats as invalid in the absence of an express contract with respect thereto. The fact that the form of the bill of lading alluded to in the receipt was well known to the parties, and that the shippers themselves frequently filled out these forms and tendered them to the carriers for signature, and it was contemplated by all the parties that the railway company would so issue its bill of lading in lieu of the compress company's receipt, would not make the condition in the bill of lading an express contract between the shipper and the railway company.

The agreed statement of facts recites: "The rate of freight named in the bills of lading was the rate fixed by the Railroad Commission of Georgia, in effect at the time. * * * The classification of the Railroad Commission of Georgia contains only the one set of rates on cotton in bales, and does not contain any other set of rates on cotton in bales as under 'owner's risk.'" It appears from the record that the rate charged the shipper by the railway company was the maximum rate for a shipment of bales of cotton, and no reduced rate was given the shipper in this matter. The record does not show that the shipper got any reduced rate because the cotton was to be compressed, or that it could or would have refused to have carried it if it had not been compressed.

2. The cotton was burned after the bill of lading was issued by the railway company, and the agreed statement of facts shows that the cotton was destroyed "while in the possession of the Atlantic Compress Company as agent of the railway company, under the provisions of the contract between the two latter." It will be seen that the railway company, through its agent, the compress company, was in possession of the cotton when it was destroyed, after the railway company had issued its bill of lading to the shipper. Nothing remained to be done by the shipper before the cotton was to be transported. The record shows that the freight had been prepaid. There was no duty on the shipper to have the cotton compressed and loaded for shipment. The receipt of the compress company stated that it had received from the owner a specified number of bales of cotton "to be compressed and loaded for Central of Georgia." When this receipt was given, the cotton was in the possession of the compress company, subject to whatever disposition the owner saw fit to make of it. The compressing and loading was to be done by the railway company through its agents, the compress company, and under the contract between the two companies the former was to pay the latter for this work. The contract has in it the following statement: "Whereas, during the cotton season of 1905-1906, the railway company will accept uncompressed cotton for through transportation, but, for convenience in forwarding same, desires that a portion thereof shall be compressed at said compresses of the compress company. * * * That, as and when requested by the railway company so to do, it will promptly receive and receipt for, unload from cars or wagons, shelter when practicable, compress and load on cars in the order of its receipt, or as may be otherwise instructed by the railway company, all cotton of such dimensions as to make it practicable to compress it to a density, as hereinbelow specified, intended for shipment over the lines of the railway company and its connections and tendered to the compress company for that purpose by the railway company or by shippers, and for such cotton as is so tendered by shippers it will issue to shippers tendering same one single certificate only covering each lot of cotton designated by one mark." When the cotton was destroyed, it was exclusively in the possession of the railway company, through its agent, the compress company, with nothing to be done by the shipper before it was transported by the railway company, and the latter held it at the time of its destruction in its capacity as a common carrier, and its liability as a common carrier had accrued. When it was shown that the cotton was destroyed after the liability of the railway company as a common carrier had accrued, the presumption was that the carrier was liable to the shipper on account of the loss of the cotton. The record does not show anything to rebut this presumption. Civ. Code 1895, § 2896, is as follows: "In all cases of bailment, after proof of loss, the burden of proof is on the bailee to show proper diligence." The record shows that the cotton at the time of its destruction by fire was in the actual possession of the compress company as bailee of the railroad company. The carrier was suing the compress company to recover from it by virtue of the contract of indemnity existing between them the amount the carrier had paid the shipper to make good the loss of the cotton. To authorize the recovery, it was only essential to show that in paying the shipper it had discharged a legal liability. It made a prima facie showing of liability on its part to the owner, and on the part of the defendant to the plaintiff on the indemnity contract, when it was proved that the cotton in the custody of the defendant as agent of the plaintiff, the latter having such possession as a common carrier, was destroyed; and, nothing appearing in the record to rebut the presumption of liability which the law raises under this state of facts, the court was authorized to render judgment holding the defendant liable to reimburse the plaintiff.

SMITH v. MADDOX-RUCKER BANKING CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 977*)—REVIEW—NEW TRIAL.

Where the verdict was not demanded by the law and evidence, the Supreme Court will not disturb the first grant of a new trial, though it was upon a single ground, nor will it determine whether the trial court was right in granting the motion on a special ground. This is a rule without an exception.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3863; Dec. Dig. § 977.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 76*)—GROUNDS—EXCESSIVENESS OF VERDICT.

The trial judge, upon motion for a new trial containing the usual grounds, and a further general ground that the verdict is excessive, may set aside the verdict in a case of libel, slander, or other similar cases where the sole measure of damage is for the jury, when in his opinion the verdict is unreasonably large, though there is nothing in the record to show that it is the result of gross mistake or undue bias, and the rule applies in an action by a depositor against a bank for dishonoring a check drawn by him upon the bank against adequate funds out of which the bank should have paid it; the bank's refusal not being willful or malicious, but merely the result of mistake or negligence, and no special damages being shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 153-156; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

Certified Question by Court of Appeals.

Action by N. K. Smith against the Maddox-Rucker Banking Company. A verdict for plaintiff was set aside, and plaintiff brought error to the Court of Civil Appeals. On certified questions. Questions answered.

The Court of Appeals certified to the Supreme Court the following questions:

"(1) Has the judge of a trial court, upon a motion for a new trial containing the usual grounds of a further general ground that the verdict is excessive, the power to set aside the verdict in a case of libel, slander, or in other similar cases in which the sole measure of the damage is the enlightened conscience of the jury, when in his opinion the verdict is unreasonably too large, and there is nothing in the record to show that the verdict is the result of gross mistake or undue bias?

"(2) Where the jury returns a verdict in a case of the kind mentioned above, and the trial judge sets it aside on the ground that in his opinion it is excessive, and it is the opinion of this court that the verdict is not so large as to raise the inference that it was the result of gross mistake or bias or prejudice, is it proper that this court reverse the judgment of the trial court awarding the first grant of a new trial on this ground alone, there being undisputed evidence tending to show that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in some amount (see Holland v. Williams, 3 Ga. App. 636 [60 S. E. 331], and cases cited therein, and Brown v. Autrey, 78 Ga. 756 [3 S. E. 669], and cases cited)?

"(3) Is an action by a depositor against a bank for dishonoring a check drawn by him upon the bank against adequate funds, out of which the bank should have paid it, within the rule of damages and of discretion or lack of discretion (as the case may be found to be) referred to in the foregoing questions, the refusal of the bank not being willful or malicious, but merely the result of a mistake or simple negligence on its part, and no special damages being shown?"

R. B. Blackburn, for plaintiff in error.
Smith, Hammond & Smith, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. We are of the opinion that the rule announced in the case of Cox v. Grady, 132 Ga. 368, 64 S. E. 262, is comprehensive enough to embrace cases of the character of the instant case to which the certified questions relate. The ruling there announced answers in the affirmative the first and third questions, and requires an answer in the negative to the second question; and the scope of the discussion in the opinion and in the cases cited in the Cox Case render further argument unnecessary. We are satisfied with the reasoning in that case and in the case of Holland v. Williams, 3 Ga. App. 636, 60 S. E. 331. All the Justices concur, except LUMPKIN, J., disqualified.

R. R. Arnold and Van Aster Batchelor, for plaintiff. McDaniel, Alston & Black and Z. D. Harrison, for defendants.

HOLDEN, J. Mrs. Margaret Smyth filed a complaint against C. K. Nelson, as trustee for the congregation of St. Luke's Church, and the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Atlanta, a corporation, which was the successor in Fulton county, "as regards the subject-matter of this litigation, of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Georgia." Along with other allegations, the petitioner made substantially the following: On April 25, 1904, she owned a certain piece of property in Atlanta, Ga., hereinafter referred to as the residence lot, and on that date executed a writing of which the following is a copy; the detailed description of the property being omitted: "Georgia, Fulton County. Having this day sold to the Rt. Rev. C. K. Nelson, as trustee for the congregation of St. Luke's Church, the property described as follows: [Here follows description of a lot on Peachtree street, Atlanta, Ga.]—and having been informed by Messrs. Lambert, De Saussure, Williams, and Harrison, acting as a committee of the vestry of said church, that, in procuring the purchase of said property to be made, they were influenced by the fact that I had made a codicil to my will bequeathing to the Diocese of Georgia, to be used as a residence of the bishop of Georgia, the lot adjacent to the property hereinbefore described, on which adjacent lot is located my residence: Now, therefore, in consideration of the foregoing premises, and of the sum of ten dollars paid by the said trustee, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I hereby agree and covenant with him, should I at any time be constrained by any cause to sell the said lot on which my said residence is located, the said trustee or his successor in the office of bishop shall have the option to buy the same at and for the sum of $25,000.00 for the said diocese, to be used as a residence for its bishop. This paper is not intended and should not be construed to indicate any purpose on my part to revoke said codicil by selling my said residence; but on the contrary it means that said codicil shall stand, and that my residence will not be sold unless I shall be constrained by circumstances requiring said sale. Witness my signature hereto affixed, this April 25, 1904. [Signed] Mrs. Maggie Smyth."

The above writing was recorded in the office of the clerk of the superior court of Fulton county. At the date of its execution there was in existence a will of the plaintiff, in which she bequeathed her residence lot to the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Georgia, to be used as a residence for the bishop of Georgia. She did not by the writing undertake to make the will then in existence irrevocable, nor was there any suggestion by any one that she would by said writing abridge her rights testamentary in said premises. Petitioner's right to revoke the will is recognized in the writing. Circumstances were alleged by virtue of which it was averred she was constrained to sell the property, and on the 5th of May, 1909, she notified the trustee in writing of this fact and gave him the right to buy within a specified time for $25,000, and this option was later extended. Defendants refused to avail themselves of the opportunity to purchase the property, and ignored the notice, and threatened prospective purchasers to follow the property in their hands should they buy from the plaintiff, and are using the writing to injure and vex petitioner in her enjoyment of the property and to prevent her from selling it. It was prayed that the defendants be required to surrender up the writing, and that the same be canceled, and that the defendants be barred from asserting or claiming any interest in the residence lot. Defendants denied the right of the plaintiff to have the writing canceled. They contended that under the writing the plaintiff had no right to sell the residence property and revoke the codicil to her will, unless she was constrained for financial reasons to sell the residence lot. Defendants prayed for relief which will be fully set forth in this opinion. The case was heard before the trial judge upon evidence taken by counsel and submitted to him. The plaintiff excepted to certain portions of the decree rendered by the court, and to other portions the defendants excepted.

1. Defendants excepted to that portion of the decree which is as follows: "It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed: (1) That the causes of constraint, as that term is used in the writing marked Exhibit A to the petition, do not refer alone to financial causes. The plaintiff's financial condition is not passed upon by the court in this cause, but the court finds that there are causes other than the plaintiff's financial condition which justify the cancellation of said Exhibit A. (2) That the said contract or writing marked Exhibit A be and it is hereby canceled, annulled, and held for naught, and is directed to be surrendered and canceled of record." A copy of the writing sought to be canceled (set out in full in the statement of facts) was attached to the petition, and is the "Exhibit A" referred to in the decision. The court committed no error in holding "that the causes of constraint as that term is used in the writing marked Exhibit A to the petition do not refer alone to financial causes." In one clause in the writing the plaintiff covenanted and agreed that, should she at any time "be constrained for any cause" to sell the residence lot, the trustee, or his successor, should have the option to buy it at $25,000. In the last clause preceding the attestation clause, it is stated that the lot would not be sold "unless I shall be constrained by circumstances requiring the sale." Evidently the words "constrained by any cause," and the words "constrained by circumstances requiring the sale," did not mean that she could not sell unless constrained to do so because her financial condition or estate was such as to constrain her to do so. It did not bind her not to sell unless compelled to sell to raise money with which to support herself. The court treated the effect of the writing as creating a binding obligation on the maker not to sell unless constrained to do so from some cause or circumstance requiring it. Conceding, without deciding, that such was its legal effect, the evidence was such as to authorize the finding by the court that the plaintiff was constrained to sell the residence lot from causes other than her financial condition, and the judgment of the court to this effect will not be disturbed. The record shows that the plaintiff gave to the defendants the option to buy the residence lot at $25,000, and they declined to avail themselves of the right to purchase it at that price. The defendants claimed that no cause or circumstances existed constraining the plaintiff to sell the residence lot, and that therefore she had no right to do so, and notified one to whom the plaintiff sought to sell the property that, should he buy it, they would at the proper time claim it. Having found that the plaintiff had the right to sell under existing causes and circumstances, the court committed no error in ordering the writing canceled.

2. The plaintiff excepted to that portion of the decree which is as follows: "That the plaintiff is estopped by her conduct from erecting a building or any part thereof further westward or nearer the sidewalk line of Peachtree street on her lot referred to in the petition as her residence lot, than her building is now located, and she is enjoined from so doing." In their answer the defendants, among other allegations, made substantially the following: They were moved to purchase the lot on which the church building was erected at the sum of $18,000 by reason of the fact that it was represented by the plaintiff that the residence lot would become the property of the diocese, under the will of the plaintiff bequeathing it as above stated. The church building was erected after the writing hereinbefore referred to was executed. When the church building was about to be erected, the plaintiff requested that it be erected back from Peachtree street on a line with the body of the residence of the plaintiff, and defendants, at a cost of about $65,000, so erected the building about 50 feet from the sidewalk on Peachtree street because of such request, relying upon the writing above referred to and be-believing that the residence lot would, in the course of time, by virtue of the contract, become the property of the diocese. The church lot is about 60 feet in width fronting on Peachtree street, and the church building covers the entire width of the lot, and the use to which the residence lot adjoining it on the north side would be put was a most important factor in determining the authorities of the church in purchasing the property and in erecting the church building where it was erected as hereinbefore set out. Defendants understood the language in the writing above referred to to mean that Mrs. Smyth would not sell the property voluntarily, and that she would have the right to sell it only when circumstances arose which required her to sell it against her will. The plaintiff frequently represented, outside of the contract, that it was her purpose to give the residence lot to the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Georgia for a residence for its bishop.

Defendants contend that the facts above stated work an easement in favor of St. Luke's Church and the defendant Nelson, as trustee therefor, for a building line which prevented the erection of any part of a building on the residence lot nearer Peachtree street than the residence on the same was at the time located, and that these facts constitute an easement in their favor for light and air from the residence lot so as to prevent the exclusion thereof by the erection of any building on the same closer to Peachtree street than the residence on such lot as now located. One witness for the defendants testified that the authorities of the church recommending the purchase of the lot on which the church is erected were informed by the plaintiff that in a codicil to her will the residence lot had been given to the diocese to be used by it as a residence for its bishop, and by reason of such information the church was influenced to buy the church lot, it being known that the codicil was revocable, but Mrs. Smyth insisting that there was no intention to revoke it, and acting upon the assumption that there was no intention to revoke the codicil, except for the reason stated in the writing, such writing was drawn "to cover the conditions as I understood them to exist at that time, and to state them as fairly and as conclusively as I could, and in accordance, as I understood it, with Mrs. Smyth's purpose and desire. * * * I do not believe that the church would ever have been located on that lot, or that the lot would ever have been bought, had the committee thought it probable that the lot on the north side could have been" used so as to erect a building towards Peachtree street farther than the residence of the plaintiff then located on the same. There was other evidence to the effect that the plaintiff requested the authorities of the church to locate the church as they did and that it was agreed between her and them that it should be so located. There was evidence that the writing referred to and the deed by the plaintiff to the lot on which the church was located were executed at the same time.

We think the court committed error in granting the injunction to which the plaintiff excepted. The fact that the defendants erected the church building back from Peachtree street on a line with the body of the residence of the plaintiff because of the facts shown by the record before us would not create in favor of the defendants any right which would prevent the plaintiff from erecting a building on her residence lot towards Peachtree street farther than her residence thereon was located at the time the church was built. The fact that the church was erected the same distance from the street that the residence of the plaintiff was located at the request of the plaintiff would not prevent the latter from erecting a building on the residence lot between the residence and the street. She made no contract not to erect a building on such portion of her residence lot, and, under any view of the effect of the writing, she had the right to sell the residence lot if at any time she should be constrained by circumstances or any cause to do so. There was nothing in the writing to restrict the use of the residence lot by any purchaser of it from her by way of erecting other buildings on it, if she was constrained to sell it as therein stated, and did sell it. If she sells the lot, as she has a right to do under the judgment of the court, the purchaser will obtain title to the entire lot with no restrictions on his right to erect buildings on it between the residence and Peachtree street because such buildings will tend to exclude air and light from the church lot across this portion of the residence lot. The fact that the defendants erected the church building on the lot they bought from the plaintiff on a line with the residence of the plaintiff because she requested them to do so, and because they relied on her not selling in the exercise of her rights under the writing signed by her, would not prevent her, or a purchaser from her, from erecting a building on it towards the direction of Peachtree street beyond the point where her residence was located when the church was erected.

EMPIRE LIFE INS. CO. v. WIER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 22, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. INSURANCE (§ 185)—LIFE INSURANCE—DIVIDENDS—CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY.

A life insurance policy was issued on the 6th day of February, 1906. The annual premium specified to be paid was $150.75, payable in advance on delivery of the policy, and thereafter on or before the 6th day of February in every year until premiums for 20 full years should have been paid, or until the prior death of the insured. The policy had attached as a part of it certain coupons bearing even date with the policy, one of which contained a stipulation that the company one year after date should pay to the insured the sum of $150.75 "as a dividend guaranteed to be declared upon that day upon the policy above named, provided the insured is alive at that date, and the policy in force, and all premium notes and premiums due, including the one due upon that date, if any, shall have been paid, and provided the subsequent year's premium has been satisfactorily secured; provided, further, that this dividend coupon when earned may be used to pay any premium or other indebtedness to the company." Held that, under a proper construction, the dividend coupon "when earned" might be applied to pay any premium or other indebtedness to the company, but actual payment of the premium on the policy of insurance due February 6, 1907, is one of the conditions precedent to the earning of the dividend. And such payment does not result automatically by mere force of the contract, when, under the terms of the policy, there was nothing otherwise due to the insured which the company might appropriately have applied as payment of the premium.

2. INSURANCE (§ 665*)—LIFE INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY—EVIDENCE.

In a suit on a life insurance policy which contains provisions for forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums, where forfeiture is pleaded, and the uncontradicted evidence shows affirmatively that there was no payment of one of the premiums, unless payment resulted from a right of the insured to a dividend upon his policy of the character mentioned in the preceding headnote and a duty upon the part of the company to declare a dividend, and apply it to the premium due on the day the forfeiture was claimed to have occurred, a verdict against the company in favor of the assured was unauthorized by the evidence.

RUSH v. HOWKINS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 22, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)INSURANCE (§ 116)—INSURABLE INTEREST—BUSINESS PARTNER OF INSURED.

George W. Rush and J. S. Howkins formed a partnership to conduct an apriary. "The business was conducted by the said George W. Rush, as he knew and understood a bee culture enterprise, and was to manage and direct the cultivation of the bees and the maintenance of the apriary at West Savannah, Georgia." Each made application for insurance on his own life, and a policy for $1,000 was issued on the life of each, payable to the other. The premiums on the policies were paid with funds of the partnership. The policy on the life of Rush was payable to "J. S. Howkins, business partner of insured." Rush died during the existence of the partnership, and at the date of his death the business had made a profit of $104.94. Howkins collected the amount due on the policy on the life of Rush, and appropriated the same to his own personal use, for which amount thus collected the administrator of the estate of Rush sued Howkins. Held that, as the continuance of the partnership afforded a reasonable expectancy of advantage and benefit to Howkins, he had an insurable interest in the life of his copartner, and, as the beneficiary named in the policy issued on the life of such copartner, was entitled to receive and retain the entire proceeds thereof. GARR et ux. v. WOOD.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1910.)

Error from Superior Court, Butts County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by C. A. Garr and wife against W. J. Wood. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

C. A. Garr and Kittle Garr, his wife, brought an action against W. J. Wood. The material allegations were as follows: Defendant is a cotton factor and money lender, and does considerable business with farmers and others, "making advances on cotton and handling [it] for his customers for the purpose of selling the same at the best advantage, taking his pay in commissions." Prior to 1904 C. A. Garr was a farmer, engaged in running several farms in Butts county, and for about 10 years did business with the defendant, who, by straight dealing and apparent honesty, completely won his confidence. "Petitioner [C. A. Garr] would call on [defendant] for money from time to time to run petitioner's farms; and, when the cotton was gathered, petitioner would turn the same over to [defendant] as his cotton factor to hold or sell * * * from time to time, as the market would permit, or the necessity of petitioner would require, and a settlement was had whenever petitioner called for the same each year." In January, 1901, this petitioner, for the purpose of erecting a house on one of his farms, borrowed $275 from the defendant, and, to secure the loan, gave him a mortgage on this farm. In the fall of 1904 C. A. Garr contemplated moving to Atlanta, and engaging in the grocery business, and under the advice of the defendant, who was his confidential friend as well as factor, he decided to settle a portion of his property on his wife and to use the remainder, or its income, in his proposed mercantile business. On December 10th of that year he executed and delivered to defendant a deed to a described tract of land, the title to which the grantee was to hold as security for the then existing indebtedness of the grantor to him, which indebtedness consisted solely of that to secure which the above mentioned mortgage had been previously given; and thereupon the defendant executed and delivered to Kittle Garr his bond for title, whereby he obligated himself to convey the title to this land to her when the debt of her husband to him should be paid. At this time the defendant had in his possession 26 bales of cotton which C. A. Garr had raised during that year and delivered to him, with instructions to hold the same until said Garr ordered it sold, it being understood and agreed that, when this cotton was sold, there would be a full and final settlement between them. C. A. Garr, being in easy financial circumstances, decided to hold this cotton until the next season, and so notified the defendant as his factor, who acquiesced therein, "stating that he would not insist on the immediate payment of the balance on said mortgage, but would be glad to carry it over and to advance petitioner C. A. Garr money on said cotton if it were needed." In April, 1906, "when cotton was selling for about 11 cents, C. A. Garr went to Jackson, Ga., and requested defendant to sell said cotton and have a full settlement, and make his deed to petitioner Kittle Garr, conveying to her" the land embraced in the deed and the bond for title. Defendant agreed to do this, but stated that he was too sick to attend to business that day, but would on the next day "close up all pending matters relative to the sale of the cotton and the making of the deed to petitioner Kittle Garr." C. A. Garr then returned to Atlanta. In September, 1906, defendant informed C. A. Garr "that he had sold said cotton and sent by mail to [him] the above-described canceled mortgage, * * * and certain of petitioner's (C. A. Garr's) notes given for advancements on said 26 bales of cotton amounting to $909. * * * Defendant furnished to C. A. Garr no account sales of said cotton nor any other data whereby said petitioner might understand the exact date of sale, the amount and price paid for said cotton, and the purchaser and number of bales sold. And defendant has continued to fail and refuse to properly account to petitioner C. A. Garr for the proceeds of said 26 bales of cotton, but has only delivered said petitioner by mail as aforesaid his notes and mortgage, amounting to $1,184." In April, 1906, when C. A. Garr instructed defendant to sell the cotton, it was worth in the market at least $1,500, "which was, at least, $300 more than the advances made thereon to C. A. Garr by the defendant. Instead of conveying the land in question to petitioner Kittle Garr, defendant took possession of the same, and, when she urgently entreated him to convey it to her, he offered to purchase it from her, but she refused to sell the same to him, and again demanded that he comply with his obligation to convey it to her, which he failed and refused to do." Since then defendant has sold and conveyed the land to an innocent purchaser. The land is reasonably worth $2,500, and the defendant, "having put it beyond his power to deed said land to petitioner Kittle Garr, he is due her said sum as the value thereof." Attached to the petition as exhibits were copies of the deed, the bond for title, the mortgage, and notes, referred to therein. One of these exhibits was a combination note and mortgage, the mortgage being on described land, which was dated January 5, 1901, for $275, payable on or before December 1, 1901, to the defendant or bearer, upon which appeared the following entry: "The within mortgage having been paid in full, the Clerk of Butts Superior Court is hereby authorized to cancel the same of record. This Nov. 7, 1906. [Signed] W. J. Wood." This was followed by an entry of cancellation signed by the clerk. The defendant demurred to the petition, upon the grounds that it set forth no cause of action, that there was a misjoinder of parties plaintiff, and that there was a misjoinder of causes of action, one cause of action being ex contractu and the other ex delicto. The court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the petition, whereupon the petitioners excepted.

F. Z. Curry and N. E. & W. A. Harris, for plaintiffs in error. Lane & Park and Y. A. Wright, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). In our opinion there was clearly a misjoinder of parties plaintiff, and for this reason the demurrer was properly sustained. There was also a misjoinder of causes of action, although both arose ex contractu, as each was distinct from the other and in favor of a different party. The husband's alleged cause of action was the indebtedness of the defendant to him arising out of their relations and dealings as principal and factor, which, it was alleged, would be shown by a fair and just accounting between them. The husband therefore needed to have an accounting between his factor and himself. The wife's alleged cause of action was the breach of the bond for title which the defendant had executed and delivered to her, and from the allegations of the petition it was not necessary, in order to show this breach, for her to have an accounting between the defendant and her husband. The wife was not legally interested in the debt alleged to be due by the defendant to her husband, and the husband was not legally interested in the alleged breach of the bond for title given to his wife by the defendant. The whole of the debt which the deed from the husband to the defendant had been given to secure had been paid, and therefore the condition upon which the defendant was to convey the title to the wife had occurred; but the combination note and mortgage which had been the written evidence of the existence of this debt had by an entry thereon signed by the defendant become the written evidence of its payment, and this evidence was in possession of the petitioners. There was no matter in this suit in which the petitioners had a common interest. While the wife might have needed the husband as a witness in her case, she did not need him as a party thereto; and there was no reason why the husband should join the wife as a party plaintiff in his suit against the defendant. "Courts will not in one suit take cognizance of distinct and separate claims of different persons; but, where the damages as well as the interest is several, each party injured must in that case sue separately." Civ. Code 1895, § 4946; Ga. Railroad Co. v. Tice, 124 Ga. 459, 52 S. E. 916.

Of course, the ruling here made does not adjudicate the question as to whether the plaintiffs separately have a cause of action. Judgment affirmed.

STEWART v. MUNDY et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 21, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ESTOPPEL (§ 98*)—ACTS OPERATING AS ESTOPPEL.

An attorney at law who signed his name as counsel for the plaintiff to a petition in a suit by the latter is not thereby estopped from assailing the truth of the averments made in such petition in a subsequent litigation wherein the attorney is a claimant of the property involved in the former litigation, and to which the plaintiff in fi. fa. in the claim case was not a party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 290; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—EXECUTION (§ 194*)—CLAIM OF THIRD PERSON—PROCEEDING TO ESTABLISH—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Where, upon the trial of a claim case, the plaintiff in fi. fa. contends that the defendant in fi. fa. bargained for the land levied upon from the owner and obtained title from him and from his heirs at law after his death, and the claimants contend that they obtained title from such heirs at law, it was not error requiring a new trial to admit in evidence in behalf of the claimants a deed purporting to convey the land to such owner, over objection of the plaintiffs that neither title nor possession was shown in the one making such deed.

(a) Upon the trial of the claim case, the record of a suit for damages to the property brought by such heirs at law against a municipal corporation and a railroad company, and the verdict and judgment therein for the defendant, were not admissible in behalf of the plaintiff in fi. fa. upon the ground that upon the trial of the claim case the claimants contended that the defendants in fi. fa., who bargained for the land from the owner above referred to, had no equitable interest in or title to the property by reason of having paid and tendered to the latter and his heirs at law all the purchase money, and "one of the things pleaded and sought to be proven" by the railroad company in the suit for damages was that the plaintiffs therein had no right to recover because "a complete equitable title was in" one of the defendants in fi. fa. by reason of payment and tender of the purchase money to such owner and his heirs at law, and because, when they bought the property, the claimants had notice that there was a suit for damages to the property brought by the plaintiffs in the suit against the defendants therein, and that a verdict and judgment therein were rendered for the defendants.

3. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

In view of the entire charge, there was no error requiring a new trial in the charges complained of, nor in failing to charge as complained of in the absence of a written request to so charge. The evidence supported the verdict, and the court did not abuse his discretion in refusing a new trial.

BURSON v. STONE & CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 21, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 217*) — ACTIONS — EVIDENCE.

Burson, Stone, and Sharpe composed the mercantile partnership of Burson & Co., and Stone and Sharpe composed the mercantile partnership of Stone & Co. The office of Burson & Co. was in the place of business of Stone & Co., where the books of the former were kept by Stone, who looked after the office business of Burson & Co. Stone and Sharpe, without the knowledge or consent of Burson, took and lost, by speculation in cotton futures, money belonging to the firm of Burson & Co. The account for the purpose of speculation was kept in the office of a New York broker in the name of Stone & Co., and was kept in the office of Stone in the name of G. W. Burson & Co. There was evidence that Stone & Co., with the funds of that partnership, had previously speculated in the name of and for the benefit of such partnership, which received the profits made by the speculation. Stone delivered to Burson a note executed by him in the name of Stone & Co. for one-third of the amount of the money of Burson & Co. taken and lost as above stated, and upon his note Burson brought suit against Stone & Co. Held, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to find that the speculation with the funds of Burson & Co. was for and on behalf of the firm of Stone & Co.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 78*)—LIABILITY OF PARTNERSHIP FOR ACTS OF PARTNERS.

Where Stone and Sharpe took the funds of Burson & Co. and deposited them to the credit of Stone & Co. with a New York broker, and speculated with such funds in the name of and for the benefit of the firm of Stone & Co., the latter firm would be liable to Burson & Co. for the amount of funds so used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 126; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 236*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

If the partnership of Stone & Co. were so liable, a note for one-third of such funds given to Burson by Stone in the partnership name of Stone & Co. after its dissolution would bind such partnership, if Burson at the time the note was given had no notice, and was not chargeable with notice of the dissolution. LEVY v. MAYOR, ETC., OF CITY OF BRUNSWICK.

MAYOR, ETC., OF CITY OF BRUNSWICK v. LEVY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 20, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DESCRIPTION OF LAND SUFFICIENT.

This was an action of ejectment in the fictitious form, and the description of the land sued for in the petition was sufficient.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 85*)—JUDGMENT (§ 682*) — EVIDENCE — CONCLUSIVENESS OF JUDGMENT.

A certified copy of an application for partition of the premises in dispute and the judgment entered thereon within less than seven years from the institution of the action of ejectment, to which neither the plaintiff in ejectment nor any one claiming under him was a party, though the plaintiff in ejectment claimed under one of the parties to the partition proceeding by deed executed and duly recorded prior to the filing of the partition proceeding, was not admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing title out of the plaintiff, or as color of title, and was properly excluded on the ground of irrelevancy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 85; * Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1203-1205; Dec. Dig. § 682.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 810*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

There was no error in ruling out evidence of the attorney of a former owner of the land that he returned it for taxation for such owner after its conveyance by him to the plaintiff in a suit by the latter against the city, which claimed title under tax sales against such former owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 810.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 814*)—EQUITABLE RECOVERY BY DEFENDANT.

If the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the city, the latter was not entitled to recover from the former, under equitable pleadings, the amount paid by such city at a marshal's sale under a tax s. fa. in its own favor, and at a sheriff's sale for state and county taxes, at which the city bought; such sales being invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 814*)—EJECTMENT—EQUITABLE RECOVERY BY DEFENDANT.

Where a city claimed title to land, and for a time was in possession thereof, and subsequently a recovery in ejectment was had against the corporation, it was not entitled to have the court, under equitable pleadings, declare that city taxes of a certain amount might have been assessed on the land for certain years and to recover such amount against the plaintiff; no assessment having in fact been made for such years for taxes on the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

6. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

Under the evidence there was no error in overruling the motion for a nonsuit, or in directing a verdict for the plaintiff for the land. But it was erroneous to direct a recovery in favor of the defendant against the plaintiff for municipal taxes never assessed, but claimed by the city as the proper amount of taxes for certain years during which the city claimed title to the land.

7. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

No other assignment of error in either of the bills of exceptions requires a reversal.

8. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

There was no merit in the motion to dismiss the writ of error.

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by L. N. Levy against the Mayor, etc., of the City of Brunswick. From the judgment, both parties bring error. Reversed in one case, and affirmed in the other.

Twitty & Reese, for plaintiff in error. Bolling Whitfield and Crovatt & Whitfield, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. Judgment reversed, and affirmed in the second. All the Justices concur.

JACOBS' PHARMACY CO. v. ATLANTA & W. P. R. CO.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 21, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 181*)—FAILURE TO PERFORM DUTY—ACTIONS—PLEADING.

When a plaintiff elects to bring an action against a railroad company for damages arising from a failure on its part to perform its duty as a common carrier, instead of suing on a contract of affreightment, it is not incumbent on him to set out the precise terms of such contract. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Cody, 119 Ga. 371, 46 S. E. 429.

(a) In Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Warfield, 129 Ga. 473, 59 S. E. 234, one of the rulings made in the Cody Case, supra, was overruled; but the decision on the point dealt with in the above headnote was not overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 569, 570; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 150*)—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

By Civ. Code 1895, § 2264, it is declared that a common carrier "as such is bound to use extraordinary diligence. In cases of loss the presumption of law is against him, and no excuse avails him unless it was occasioned by the act of God or the public enemies of the state."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 654-659; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 150*)—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 2265, "in order for a carrier or other bailee to avail himself of the act of God or exemption under the contract as an excuse, he must establish not only that the act of God or excepted fact ultimately occasioned the loss, but that his own negligence did not contribute thereto."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 654-659; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 150*)—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

Construing the sections above cited in connection with section 2276, it has been established that, as a general rule, a common carrier may relieve itself by express contract from its common-law liability as an insurer, but cannot relieve itself from liability for damages resulting from its own negligence. Georgia Railroad & Banking Co. v. Keener, 93 Ga. 808, 21 S. E. 287, 44 Am. St. Rep. 197; Central of Georgia Railway Co. v. Hall, 124 Ga. 322, 52 S. E. 679, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170; Southern Express Co. v. Hanaw, 134 Ga. 445, 67 S. E. 944, and cases there cited, including The Kensington, 183 U. S. 263, 268, 22 Sup. Ct. 102, 46 L. Ed. 190, Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Little, 71 Ala. 611, and Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. McGuire & Co., 79 Ala. 395.

(a) The rulings in regard to limiting liability except for gross negligence in contracts for the transportation of live stock will not be extended so as to include the transportation of goods generally by common carriers. Moreover, such contracts in regard to live stock have been dealt with by statute. Civ. Code 1895, § 2313 et seq.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 654-659; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 107*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—CARE REQUIRED.

The diligence required of a common carrier in regard to preserving goods in the course of transportation by him from loss by fire is not limited to avoid setting fire to such goods, but extends also to protecting and preserving them from destruction after a peril from fire has become apparent. Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. White, 88 Ga. 806, 15 S. E. 802.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 501-507; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 121*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—LOSS DURING TRANSPORTATION—LIABILITY.

If the loss was caused by the wrong or fault of the shipper, without negligence on the part of the carrier, the latter will not be responsible; as, for instance, if the shipper or his agent should improperly pack the goods by reason of which breakage occurs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 531-536; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 181*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—LOSS DURING TRANSPORTATION—ACTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

If a common carrier relies upon the defense that the loss was occasioned by the fault of the shipper or his agent, he must, as in the case where he relies upon the loss having occurred by the act of God or the public enemy, bring himself within the defense by negating contributing fault on his own part. McCarthy v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 102 Ala. 193, 14 South. 370, 48 Am. St. Rep. 29; Grey's Executor v. Mobile Trade Co., 55 Ala. 387, 23 Am. Rep. 729; South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Henlein, 52 Ala. 606, 23 Am. Rep. 578, 584; 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1492.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 578; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

8. CARRIERS (§ 121*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—LOSS DURING TRANSPORT—LIABILITY.

If a shipper is guilty of negligence in packing a car, and from breakage of certain of the goods a fire originates therein, and if, after knowledge by the carrier of the existence of the fire, the condition is such that the goods may be preserved, or the fire extinguished, by the use of extraordinary care on his part, he will not be relieved from liability, if he is negligent in this regard, by setting up the original negligence of the shipper in loading the car prior to the beginning of the transportation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 531-536; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

9. CHARGE NOT GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL.

In the light of the pleadings and evidence, of the entire charge of the court, and of the note appended to the ground of the motion for a new trial on that subject, the charge complained of in reference to the measure of damages was not such as to require a new trial.

10. NEGLIGENCE (§ 12*)—CARRIERS (§ 137*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 302*)—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—QUESTION FOR JURY—"EXTRAORDINARY DILIGENCE."

Except where a particular act is declared, either by statute or a valid municipal ordinance, to constitute negligence, the question as to what acts do or do not constitute negligence is for the determination of the jury; and it is error for the presiding judge to instruct them what ordinary care or extraordinary care requires to be done in a particular case. Atlanta & West Point R. Co. v. Hudson, 123 Ga. 108, 51 S. E. 29.

(a) Extraordinary diligence is defined as "that extreme care and caution which very prudent and thoughtful persons use" under like circumstances. Civ. Code 1895, § 2899. In determining what very prudent and thoughtful persons would do under certain circumstances, the situation and surrounding facts, including the existence of an emergency, if there was one, are to be considered.

(b) There was no error in refusing, upon request, to charge that if a conductor of a freight train ascertained that a car was on fire, and an emergency arose without negligence on the part of the defendant, and if the conductor in good faith took a certain course which he thought was that offering the best prospect of saving the goods from destruction, although the course so taken was a mistake, and another course might have been better, "such a mistake is not chargeable to the defendant as an act of negligence."

(c) In the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error it was urged that, if this request was not properly worded, the court should, nevertheless, have charged on the doctrine of emergency; but the motion for new trial contains no such assignment of error as that the court failed entirely to charge on the subject, the only complaint being that the court declined to charge as stated in the written request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 12.* Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 594, 595; Dec. Dig. § 137.* Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1744-1752; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2627, 2628.]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1006*)—REVIEW—SECOND VERDICT FOR PLAINTIFF.

No other ground of the motion for a new trial requires a reversal. This being the second verdict found in favor of the plaintiff, the evidence being sufficient to sustain the finding, and the presiding judge having approved it, this court will not interfere.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3951-3954; Dec. Dig. § 1006.*]

12. CROSS-BILL—DISMISSED.

The judgment complained of in the main bill of exceptions being affirmed, the cross-bill is dismissed.

Error from Superior Court, Coweta County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Action by the Jacobs' Pharmacy Company against the Atlanta & West Point Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error; plaintiff filing cross-exceptions. Judgment affirmed on main bill of exceptions, and cross-bill dismissed.

HARRIS v. P. H. & W. D. BRANDON et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 22, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 434*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—FRAUD.

In a suit upon a promissory note given in part payment of the purchase of timber upon several lots of land, where the contract for the sale and purchase is in writing, signed by the vendor and purchaser, and where the defendant pleads that he was ignorant of the numbers of the lots and relied upon the plaintiff for their correct designation, and that the plaintiff fraudulently omitted from such writing one of the lots which was intended to be conveyed, although he had pointed out the timber on that lot, indicating it as a part of the timber sold, and that as a consequence the consideration has failed to that extent and the defendant has sustained damages because thereof, which plea contains no prayer for the reformation of the contract, held that, as the defendant was claiming and had actually enjoyed the fruits of the contract relative to a part included in the sale, he cannot insist upon a defense depending upon a parol contract of a date anterior to the writing, by virtue of which a part of the land so alleged to have been omitted from the written contract because of fraud of the maker or mistake on his part was to have been included, without first praying for a reformation of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2005-2020; Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

2. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The court erred in admitting in evidence the parol agreement and understanding in reference to the sale of the timber anterior to the execution of the written contract, and in his charge to the jury in reference thereto.

ALL v. WILLIAMS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 6, 1910.)

VENUE (§ 32*)—BRINGING ACTION IN WRONG COUNTY—REMEDY.

Though an action to recover personal property should, under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 144, be brought in the county where the property is at the time the action is brought, yet, it having been brought elsewhere, the remedy is not by demurrer to the jurisdiction, but by motion to transfer the case; section 147 providing that the court may change the place of trial when the county designated therefor in the complaint is not the proper county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; T. S. Sease, Judge.

Action by J. H. C. All against James A. Williams. From a judgment overruling a demurrer, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. G. Mayfield, for appellant. James M. Patterson, for respondent.

WOODS, J. In this action, brought in Barnwell county, for the recovery of possession of two mules, the plaintiff alleged in his complaint that the defendant "with a high hand and wanton spirit took and forcibly carried away said mules to the county of Bamberg, where the defendant resides." The defendant interposed the following demurrer: "The defendant, by his attorney, for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court, appears and respectfully shows unto the court by demurrer: (1) That defendant, as shown by the affidavit hereto attached, is not a resident of the county of Barnwell, but is a resident of the county of Bamberg. (2) That defendant demurs to the jurisdiction of the court, and will move the court to dismiss said complaint." The demurrer having been taken up for consideration by consent, and having been overruled by the circuit judge, the defendant appeals on this ground: "Because his honor erred in overruling defendant's demurrer, it appearing upon the face of the pleadings that the defendant resides in the county of Bamberg, and that the property has been removed from the county of Barnwell."

The action should have been brought in the county of Bamberg, where the mules, the subject of the action, were at the time of the commencement of the action. Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 144. Nevertheless, demurrer on the ground that the court of common pleas for Barnwell county had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action was not available to the defendant; for, while that court did not have jurisdiction to try the action, it did have jurisdiction, under section 147 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902, to order a change of the place of trial to Bamberg county. Steele v. Exum, 22 S. C. 276; Rafeld v. A. C. L. Ry., 86 S. C. 324, 68 S. E. 631. It follows, therefore, that the remedy of the defendant was not by demurrer for want of jurisdiction, but by motion to transfer the case to Bamberg county.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

ILER v. JENNINGS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 3, 1910.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 121*)—NATURE AND FORM—COMPLAINT—ALLEGATIONS.

A complaint which alleges that plaintiff purchased from defendant certain shares of corporate stock at a stated price, and that at the time of the purchase defendant represented to plaintiff that the corporate assets and liabilities on a date prior to the sale were as specifically stated, and that defendant represented to plaintiff that the condition of the corporation was better at the time of the sale than on the date stated, that the representations were made to effect the sale and that plaintiff relied on them, and was thereby induced to purchase said stock, and that said representations were an express warranty of the condition of the corporation, and were untrue and misleading, states a cause of action upon an express warranty, and not on an implied warranty, nor for fraud in the sale.

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 120*)—SALE OF STOCK—WARRANTY—SCIENTER—EFFECT.

Where a seller makes an affirmation as to the financial condition of a corporation, and stock therein is bought on the strength of it, the absence of any scienter on the part of the seller does not affect the purchaser's right to recover for breach of the warranty.

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 121*)—SALES OF STOCK—WARRANTY—BREACH—ACTION—INSTRUCTION.

Where it appeared that the seller of corporate stock referred the purchaser to the bookkeeper for information as to the status of the business, and that the statement given was affirmed by the seller to be correct according to the books, and that the purchaser relied thereon to his prejudice, the instruction that the jury should find for the seller if he merely stated that the books of the company showed that condition was erroneous.

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 120*)—EXPRESS WARRANTY—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

The statement as to the financial condition of a corporation affirmed by a director as being correct with the books to induce the purchase of stock is an express warranty if relied upon by the purchaser.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenwood County; C. C. Featherstone, Judge.

Action by A. S. Her against J. P. Jennings. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Grier & Park, for appellant. T. P. Cothran and Tillman & Watson, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. This suit was brought to recover damages for breach of warranty in the sale by defendant to plaintiff of 35 shares of the capital stock of the Gambrell Hardware Company, and was tried before Hon. C. C. Featherstone, special judge, and a jury, at Greenwood, S. C., resulting in a verdict for defendant.

The complaint alleged substantially: That on the 26th day of October, 1907, and prior thereto, the defendant Jennings was a director in the Gambrell Hardware Company, a corporation under the laws of this state, and doing business at Greenwood, S. C., and was actively employed in the business. That on October 26, 1907, plaintiff purchased of defendant 30 shares of the capital stock of the Gambrell Hardware Company of the par value of $100 per share, paying therefor $3,900. That, at the time of said purchase, defendant represented to plaintiff that the assets of the corporation on April 1, 1907, were as follows: Accounts due, $4,418.39, Farmers' warehouse stock, $100, cash on hand, $87.51, merchandise stock on hand, $24,850.09, total assets, $29,455.99. And that its liabilities on that day were as follows: Capital stock paid in, $15,700; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank overdraft, $752.30; bills payable, $5,416.41; due on merchandise, $4,490.05; gain, net, $3,097.23—$29,455.99. That defendant represented to the plaintiff that the condition of the corporation was better at the time of the negotiation than on April 1, 1907. The said representations were made for the purpose of effecting a sale of said stock to plaintiff, that plaintiff relied thereon, and was thereby induced to purchase and did purchase said stock. That, instead of said corporation having a surplus of over $3,000 at the time of the purchase as represented, there was a deficit of about $3,000, and that said representations were untrue and misleading. That said representations were an "express warranty" by defendant to plaintiff that the condition of the said corporation and its assets and liabilities were as represented. That, at the time of said representations, defendant was a director in said corporation, and actively engaged in the management of its business, and knew or ought to have known the condition of said corporation, and plaintiff, relying upon defendant's means of knowledge and said representations, was induced to purchase said stock. That, immediately before the purchase and sale of said stock pending the negotiations for the same, the defendant expressly warranted the value of the stock and the condition of the said corporation. That the conditions of said warranty have been broken, and plaintiff has suffered damage on account thereof in the sum of $2,000. That upon discovery that said representations were untrue plaintiff offered to return said stock and demanded a return of the purchase price, and that the sale be rescinded, and that defendant refused.

One of the questions raised by appellant is as to the nature of the action. We are satisfied with the ruling of the circuit court that it is an action upon an express warranty. This is manifest from the language of the complaint. Moreover, the record shows that, when the court inquired of counsel for plaintiff whether the suit was for breach of an express warranty, counsel answered, "Yes, sir; and the misrepresentations of a director in this concern as to the condition of the concern at the time the plaintiff bought the stock—that is, actual misrepresentations. We don't charge that Mr. Jennings did it intentionally or willfully, but we take the position that where a man is in that position—any man—and makes a statement as being true, he must know it is true." This was not an action based upon fraud or deceit, nor an action upon an implied warranty, and the court correctly restricted the issues on the trial and in his charge to the case as one upon an express warranty. Hence all exceptions based upon any other theory of the case are not well taken.

In Bryce v. Parker, 11 S. C. 337, the court quotes with approval from 1 Pars. on Contracts, § 580: "Any distinct assertion or affirmation of quality made by the owner during a negotiation for the sale of a chattel which it may be supposed was intended to cause the sale and was operative in causing it will be regarded either as implying or constituting a warranty." And again: "It is certain that the word 'warrant' need not be used, nor any other of precisely the same meaning. It is enough if the words actually used import an undertaking on the part of the owner that the chattel is what it is represented to be or an equivalent to such undertaking." In Shippen v. Bowen, 122 U. S. 581, 7 Sup. Ct. 1285, 30 L. Ed. 1172, the Supreme Court of the United States declared that "an affirmation of the quality or condition of the thing sold (not uttered as matter of opinion or belief) made by the seller at the time of sale for the purpose of assuring the buyer of the truth of the facts affirmed, and inducing him to make the purchase if so received and relied on by the purchaser, is an express warranty." It is a well-settled rule that, in actions upon an express warranty, it is not necessary to allege or prove a scienter. Hence in considering this case, if defendant made any direct affirmation as to the quality or condition of stock sold by him, which was untrue, it may be assumed that he was ignorant of the falsity, and honestly believed the statement to be true.

With this preliminary, we proceed to consider what we regard the vital questions presented by the exceptions. The court instructed the jury: "If Mr. Jennings here did not warrant that stock, if he simply referred Mr. Iler to the bookkeeper to get a statement, and Mr. Iler got that statement and bought upon his own book, why Mr. Jennings is not liable for it." And again, in response to defendant's request, the court instructed the jury as follows: "The plaintiff's action is based upon an alleged express warranty by the defendant that the financial condition of the company at the time the plaintiff bought the stock was as alleged in the complaint. This he must prove to the satisfaction of the jury by the greater weight of the evidence. If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant merely stated that the books of the company showed that condition, their verdict must be for the defendant." To which the court added: "Now you see, gentlemen, right there it comes back to that question of warranty—what were these statements? What did they amount to? Were they intended to be a statement that the statement was correct, and did Mr. Iler act upon it?" We do not think this modification or anything in the general charge operated to cure what we regard as erroneous in the instruction: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant merely stated that the books of the company showed that condition, their verdict must be for the defendant." The plaintiff testified that, when he asked defendant about the worth of the stock, defendant referred him to the bookkeeper for a statement, that he immediately went to the bookkeeper and received from him the written statement of the assets and liabilities of the corporation (introduced in evidence as Exhibit A, and showing condition of the corporation to be as the complaint alleged it was represented to be by defendant); that, when he received this statement, he carried it back to defendant where he was standing at the showcase in the storeroom, and that defendant said that the statement showed the true condition of the stock when it was taken, and that the business was in better condition than at the time that was taken; that defendant was a director of the corporation, and was a clerk working in the store, and that he relied upon the statements of Mr. Jennings, believing them to be true.

John M. Major, the bookkeeper, who was brother-in-law to plaintiff, testified that defendant asked him to take plaintiff back to the office and show him the statement of the business; that he gave plaintiff a copy of the statement (Exhibit A), and that defendant went back to the front of the store with the statement, and had some conversation with defendant; that the statement showed the stock to be worth about 119 at that time. This witness testified that Mr. Gambrell, the president, manager, and treasurer of the corporation, died about April 1, 1908, and at that time a new inventory was taken, and it was discovered that the stock of merchandise which was put down as $24,850.09 on April 1, 1907, footed up only $18,651.65, an error of $6,198.44. This error was the result of mistake or design on the part of Mr. Gambrell, who used an adding machine in adding up the stock inventories. This witness testified that defendant participated in taking the stock to the extent only of taking the stock in the crockery department, as to which no error was found except in the failure to add in certain items, which diminished to some extent the statement of stock in that department. The fact of the error in stating the amount of the merchandise stock on April 1, 1907, was also testified to by the expert, J. R. Nichols, who ascertained the error by an examination of the books of the company, who also stated that the book value of the stock on April 1, 1907, was $65.96 a share.

Defendant testified that, when plaintiff asked him as to the value of the stock, he told him: "Mr. Iler, these stock books will show it is worth about 119, but so far as making a statement as to what the stock is worth, or anything about the condition of the business, I won't do it. I will refer you to your brother-in-law, John Major, who is bookkeeper, and he can give you more information about it than I can. He knows more about the business. He has been in here all the time as bookkeeper, and knows the hardware business better than I do. I don't know anything about it. * * * I told him at the time he could get a statement from Mr. Major and referred him to Mr. Major, and I told Mr. Major myself to let Mr. Iler have a statement and any information he wants about the business. He is thinking of buying my stock." Defendant further testified that, when plaintiff came back after applying to Mr. Major, he had the statement. When asked whether he stated to plaintiff that the statement he got from Mr. Major was absolutely correct, he answered: "I might have done so—the statement was correct so far as taking from the books was concerned. I did not state to him that it was a correct statement of the stock taken. I would not have ventured to do such a thing because I didn't do it all myself. I might have stated to him that was a correct copy of the books. I don't remember even doing that." When asked what he said to plaintiff about the value of the stock, defendant replied: "I told him I thought the books would show about 119½, but not to take my word for anything. * * * 'Go to your brother-in-law, John Major, and get all the information you want and I will tell him to show you the books,' and I did so." He testified that at that time he knew nothing of any error in the statement, and believed it to be absolutely correct, and only learned of the error after the death of Mr. Gambrell. When asked later on if he did not tell plaintiff that the books would show the stock was worth 119, he answered: "My words were I thought the books would show the stock was worth 119. Those are my words exactly."

In view of the foregoing testimony, it was harmful error to give the instructions stated above.

The jury may have inferred from the testimony that, when defendant referred plaintiff to the bookkeeper of the corporation of which defendant was director and salesman, he intended and expected that the bookkeeper would do as he did, give plaintiff the written statement of the condition of the corporation. A delivery of the statement under such circumstances may well have been considered by the jury the same as if defendant had delivered it with his own hand in response to plaintiff's inquiry as to the worth of the stock. Such use of a statement of the corporate business by a director negotiating a sale of his stock therein could not be regarded as other than a direct affirmation of its correctness, and, if it was delivered for the purpose of assuring the buyer of the truth of the facts therein stated and to induce him to purchase and the buyer purchases in reliance thereon, there is an express warranty.

Having reached the conclusion that there should be a new trial on the above ground, we do not deem it necessary to consider the exceptions based upon the ground that the undisputed facts show that defendant not only caused such written statement to be given to plaintiff, but actually affirmed its correctness in words.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

GILLESPIE BROS. v. PAGE et al.
GOODALE v. SAME

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 27, 1910.)

1. SALES (§ 353*)—ACTION FOR VALUE—PLEADING.

Allegations in a suit against an individual and a railway company that plaintiffs delivered ties to defendants, that defendants received, unloaded, and used the ties on the railroad, but only a specified sum had been paid, and that "they" were indebted to plaintiffs in a specified sum, was not bad as to the individual defendant as omitting to allege an express contract between him and plaintiffs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 985-1004; Dec. Dig. § 353.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 8*)—ALLEGATIONS—NATURE.

An allegation of indebtedness is an allegation of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28½; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Chesterfield County; J. C. Klugh, Judge.

Consolidated actions by Gillespie Bros. and by S. O. Goodale against J. W. Page and another. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendant Bennettsville & Cheraw Railroad Company appeals. Affirmed.

Stevenson, Matheson & Stevenson, for appellants. W. P. Pollock and Edward McIver, for respondents.

HYDRICK, A. J. The allegations of the complaint in this case are identical, so far as the issue involved is concerned, with those in the case of S. O. Goodale against the same defendants. The cases were therefore heard together both in the circuit court and in this court, and the same decision applies to both. The complaint set out two causes of action. The railroad company demurred for misjoinder of causes of action on the ground that the second cause of action set out does not affect all the parties to the action, and requires different places of trial. The force of the objection depends upon whether the plaintiff has in the second cause of action stated a cause of action against both defendants. If so, the objection is untenable. The allegations of the second cause of action are as follows: "That on or about the 4th day of July, 1907, and subsequently, the plaintiffs furnished and delivered unto the defendants f. o. b. cars at Patrick, S. C., billed to J. J. Heckart, an agent or officer of the defendant Bennettsville & Cheraw Railroad Company, 5,800 cross-ties for use in the construction and repair of the said railroad, which said ties were reasonably worth the sum of one thousand and four hundred and fifty dollars ($1,450.00), and the said defendants received the same, unloaded same, and used them in the construction and repair of the said railroad. That the said defendants have only paid unto the plaintiffs on account thereof the sum of $500.25, and they refuse to pay any further sums, and they are indebted to the plaintiffs on account thereof in the sum of $949.75."

The contention of appellant is that no cause of action is alleged against the defendant Page, because there is no allegation of an express contract between him and plaintiffs, and the facts are not alleged from which a promise to pay will be implied.

We deem it necessary to point to only one allegation of the complaint to show that the demurrer was properly overruled. After the previous allegations that the ties had been furnished and delivered to the defendants, and that they had received and used them and had paid only a certain amount on account thereof, it is further alleged "that they (that is, Page and the railroad company) are indebted to plaintiffs on account thereof" in the amount sued for. The allegation of indebtedness is an allegation of fact. Miller v. George, 30 S. C. 526, 9 S. E. 659; Greene v. Tally, 39 S. C. 333, 17 S. E. 779.

Orders affirmed.

BANK OF SALUDA v. FEASTER et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 4, 1910.)

1. PLEADING (§ 20*)—ALLEGATIONS IN THE ALTERNATIVE.

An allegation in the alternative in a pleading as a general rule is bad; but it is sometimes permissible, when from the nature of the case the party pleading cannot fairly know with certainty which of two conditions exists, either of which would sustain his defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 43; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 8*)—CONCLUSIONS—ALLEGATIONS OF FACTS.

When the answer requires the allegation of notice to plaintiff, and it is permissible to state, in the alternative, that plaintiff had or ought to have had the knowledge which would defeat his recovery, the facts relied on to constitute knowledge should be alleged, otherwise there would be but an expression of defendant's opinion as to an inference that ought to be drawn from undisclosed facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28½; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 367*)—MOTION TO MAKE MORE CERTAIN.

Ordinarily the remedy for the defect of an answer in alleging that plaintiff had or ought to have had the knowledge which would defeat his recovery without allegation of the facts is by motion to make more definite and certain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1173-1193; Dec. Dig. § 367.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 364*)—STRIKING OUT IRRELEVANT MATTER.

Where the answer alleges that from certain facts plaintiff was chargeable with notice, and the facts have no tendency to support the inference, the allegation is properly stricken out as irrelevant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1173-1174½, 1176; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

5. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 337*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

That plaintiff, indorsee of a check given by F. to M., held a chattel mortgage on a mule given by A., did not tend to show notice to it that the check was fraudulently procured by M. in the sale to F. of a junior mortgage on the mule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 818; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1042*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Striking out of a defense an allegation of notice to plaintiff which would defeat recovery, if error, was harmless; the allegation being made in better form in another defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4111; Dec. Dig. § 1042.*]

7. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 370*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—DEFENSES.

Failure of consideration for a check and consequent undertaking of the drawer to stop payment is no defense to an action by the indorsee of the check who is not charged with notice of such failure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 963; Dec. Dig. § 370.*]

8. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 335*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

That plaintiff, before paying anything for a check as indorsee, had notice of want of consideration for it, is a defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 817; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

9. PLEADING (§ 34*)—SEPARATE DEFENSES.

As against the allegation in a separate defense in an action on a check that plaintiff, before paying anything for it as indorsee, had notice that it was without consideration, it cannot be assumed that it was meant to be alleged that such notice was to be inferred from the same facts alleged in another defense as notice, but insufficient to constitute it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 67; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

10. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 363*)—INDORSEMENT OF CHECK FOR COLLECTION—RECOVERY BY INDORSEE.

An indorsee for collection of a check can recover thereon only such part of the amount thereof as he advanced to the payee before receiving notice of want of consideration therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 790, 791; Dec. Dig. § 363.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Saluda County; R. C. Watts, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Saluda against L. R. Feaster and another. From an order, defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Barrett Jones, for L. R. Feaster. Geo. Bell Timmerman, for Citizens' Bank of Batesburg. Thurmond & Ramage, for respondent.

WOODS, J. This appeal is from an order of Hon. R. C. Watts, circuit judge, striking out certain paragraphs of the answers of the defendants as sham and irrelevant. The complaint alleges that on the 15th December, 1909, the defendant L. R. Feaster made his check on the defendant Citizens' Bank of Batesburg for $226.67, payable to the order of B. Matthews; that thereafter B. Matthews for value duly indorsed the check to the plaintiff, Bank of Saluda; that notice was immediately given to the defendant bank of the indorsement of the check to the plaintiff bank; that, when the check was drawn and the notice given, Feaster had on deposit in defendant bank funds sufficient to pay the check; that the defendant bank afterwards allowed Feaster to withdraw his funds; that the check was duly presented and payment refused; and that the check was duly protested and notice of nonpayment given to Feaster. The answers of the two defendants are practically the same; and hence it will be necessary to set out for consideration only the defenses of the defendant bank which the circuit judge ordered struck out as sham and irrelevant. For a second defense the defendant bank alleged that Feaster gave the check in payment of a chattel mortgage over a mule, said to have been executed by one Joe Artemus, under the false and fraudulent representation that the mule was free from incumbrance, whereas there was, in fact, a senior mortgage on the mule held by the plaintiff bank, under which the mule was seized the day after the check was given; and "that the plaintiff knew, or ought to have known, of the foregoing conditions before it parted with any money or valuable thing for said check, if it ever did, which is denied." An allegation in the alternative, as a general rule, is bad, but it is sometimes permissible when from the nature of the case the party pleading cannot fairly be expected to know with certainty which of two conditions exist, either of which would sustain his action or defense. When, in such a case, the allegation of notice is necessary, and it is stated in the alternative form that the plaintiff had, or ought to have had, the knowledge which would defeat his recovery, the facts relied on to constitute notice should be alleged; otherwise, the allegation in such form is hardly anything more than the expression of the defendant's opinion as to an inference that ought to be drawn, it may be without any facts leading to it. The remedy, however, for a defect of that sort is ordinarily by motion to make more definite and certain.

In this case it seems to us that the pleader meant to say that from the facts alleged the plaintiff was chargeable with notice that the check was procured by fraud. If so, then the allegation was properly struck out as irrelevant, for, if the allegations be assumed to be true, they have no tendency to support the inference of notice. The fact that the plaintiff bank held a chattel mortgage on a mule given by Joe Artemus did not tend to show notice that a check given by Feaster to Matthews was fraudulently procured in the sale of a junior mortgage on the same mule. But even if it be assumed that the allegation of notice was intended to be entirely independent of the other allegations, and that it was properly pleaded in the alternative, the order of the circuit judge should not be reversed on this point, because the same allegation of notice is made in better form in the statement of the fourth defense of the answer, and a judgment of the circuit court should not be reversed or modified for error which has done no harm. While an order striking out allegations of a pleading is appealable, it is of great importance to the prompt administration of justice that appeals on immaterial questions of this sort should not be encouraged.

The sixth defense set up is also entirely without substance. The allegation here is that payment of the check was refused because Feaster had undertaken to stop payment for want of consideration consisting in the failure of Matthews, the drawee, to carry out his agreement to assign the chattel mortgage on the back thereof. This is no defense to the action of the plaintiff as indorsee, for there is no charge of notice to the plaintiff of the alleged failure of consideration before it became indorsee of the check for value.

The fourth defense is as follows: "It is alleged upon information and belief that, before plaintiff ever parted with anything of value for the said check referred to in the complaint, it had due and adequate notice that the said check was without consideration, and that the same would not be paid, and when it parted with anything of value for said check, if it did, which is denied, it did it at its own risk." Here is an allegation that the defendant, before paying anything for the check as indorsee, had notice of want of consideration, and therefore did not stand in the position of a bona fide indorsee for value without notice. If entire want of consideration and notice of it to the plaintiff before indorsement for value be proved, there can be no recovery. McCaskill v. Ballard, 8 Rich. Law, 470; Loan & Savings Bank v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 74 S. C. 210, 54 S. E. 364, 114 Am. St. Rep. 991. This allegation is made in the statement of a separate defense, and the court cannot assume that the defendant meant to allege that the notice of want of consideration was to be inferred from the fact that plaintiff was the holder of a mortgage on the same property senior to that for the purchase of which the check was given.

The fifth defense was also substantial. It is thus set out: "That plaintiff was duly and adequately notified on the 17th day of December, 1909, that the said check referred to in the complaint was procured by fraud, and that it was without a good and valuable consideration, and it is alleged upon information and belief that, at the time of the said notice, the plaintiff had parted with only a small part of the proceeds of the said check, if any, but that said check was placed in the hands of plaintiff by the said B. Matthews for collection, the proceeds of which were to be placed to his credit in plaintiff bank when collected, and, the check not having been plaintiff's, it is not now, nor was it at the time of receiving the notice aforesaid, out of any money or the loser by said transaction." This allegation means, as we understand it, that plaintiff was an indorsee for collection, and, when it received notice of the alleged want of consideration for the check, had advanced to the payee only a small sum, if anything. This is a statement of a good defense which, if established by evidence, would prevent the plaintiff's recovery of any amount beyond that advanced by plaintiff as indorsee before notice of the want of consideration. It may be that the plaintiff has a right to an order requiring the defendant to make the fourth and fifth defenses more definite and certain by alleging the manner in which notice was given to the plaintiff of want of consideration for the check; but that point is not before us.

The judgment of this court is that the order of the circuit court be affirmed as to the second and sixth defenses of the answer of the Citizens' Bank, and the second and fifth defenses of the defendant L. R. Feaster, and that the order of the circuit court be reversed as to the fourth and fifth defenses of the answer of the Citizens' Bank, and the third and fourth defenses of L. R. Feaster.

MONTGOMERY v. SOUTHERN POWER CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 4, 1910.)

1. TRESPASS (§ 43*)—PLEADING—VARIANCE.

In an action against an electric company for trespass, there was no material variance between an allegation of a trespass beyond a right of way limited to 80 feet and evidence of a trespass by the cutting of timber in excess of what was reasonably necessary for the construction and maintenance of defendant's line; the contract granting only an easement necessary to the proper operation of the line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

2. TRESPASS (§ 40*)—DAMAGES.

In an action against an electric company for trespass, under an agreement granting it a right of way over plaintiff's land to the extent reasonably necessary to maintain its line, an allegation of wanton or willful negligence in cutting trees was unnecessary; the cutting beyond the right of way granted showing a trespass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

3. TRESPASS (§ 46*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against an electric company for trespass in cutting timber outside of the right of way granted by plaintiff, evidence held insufficient to show an intentional or willful trespass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 123-127; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 474*)—COMPETENCY OF OPINION EVIDENCE.

In an action against an electric company for trespass in cutting timber outside of the right of way granted by plaintiff, testimony of a witness, who had made an examination and testified that he would know how to make the estimate about as well as any one else, as to the amount of timber cut, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2219; Dec. Dig. § 474.*]

Gary, J., dissenting, and Hydrick, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lancaster County; Ernest Moore, Special Judge.

Action by Mary A. Montgomery against the Southern Power Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Osborne, Lucas & Cocks and John T. Green, for appellant. J. Harry Foster, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff by her deed of conveyance granted to the defendant an easement "to go in and upon that tract of land, situated in said county and state, bounded by lands of W. K. Pylor, Dr. W. M. Crawford estate (et al.), and to construct and maintain in, upon, and through said premises in a proper manner, with poles, towers, wires, and other necessary apparatus and appliances, a line for the purpose of transmitting power by electricity, together with the right at all times to enter upon said premises for the purpose of inspecting said lines and making necessary repairs and alterations thereon, together with the right to cut away and keep clear of said lines all trees and other like obstructions that may, in any way, endanger the proper operation of the same." As the consideration, the defendant by the same deed agreed to pay $250 and "to cut and cord all timber, except such trees as may be selected by Mary A. Montgomery for milling purposes, those to be cut into lengths named by owner."

This paper meant that the defendant should have a right of way over the land to the extent reasonably necessary to the construction and operation of its line, to be used in transmission of power by electricity. The defendant entered upon the land and cut out a way for its line. Thereupon the plaintiff brought this action for damages, alleging that the defendant had agreed that the right of way should be limited to 80 feet; that the failure to express this agreement in the conveyance was due to the fraud and misrepresentation of the defendant as to the purport of the paper; that the defendant in a reckless, wanton, and willful manner had cut through the plaintiff's woods an opening varying in width from 50 to 100 feet beyond the 80 feet right of way which the plaintiff had agreed to convey. The defendant by its answer set up the deed of conveyance of the right of way above recited, denying that it had been procured by fraud or misrepresentation, and alleged that no injury had been done to the land beyond that authorized by the grant from the plaintiff. The defendant appeals from a judgment of $500 in favor of the plaintiff.

The exception assigning error in the admission of evidence as to a parol agreement at variance with the written agreement of the right of way was taken under a misapprehension; for the court held the plaintiff bound by the written contract, and, whenever objection was made, either excluded or struck out all testimony offered for the purpose of showing that the right of way was to be limited to 80 feet.

The position was taken on the motion for nonsuit that there was a fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint and the evidence, in that the allegation was of a trespass beyond a right of way limited to 80 feet, and the evidence offered by the plaintiff was of a trespass by the cutting of timber in excess of what was reasonably necessary for the construction and maintenance of defendant's line for the transmission of power by electricity. The position is not well taken. That which gave character to the action was the allegation in the complaint of defendant's trespass on the land of the plaintiff by cutting more of the timber than was authorized by the contract. The difference between the pleadings and the proof as to the extent of the cutting which was authorized by the contract was a mere detail, having no effect except to reduce the damage recoverable. The variance was not such as to change materially the issue presented by the pleadings, or to subject the defendant to surprise or other disadvantage.

The defendant further contended on the motion for nonsuit that the plaintiff could not in this action recover actual damages without proof of willfulness or wantonness, because there was no allegation of negligently cutting trees beyond the right of way granted. The unsoundness of this position is made evident by observing that the complaint would have stated a cause of action if it had contained no charge either of negligence or willfulness or wantonness, and merely alleged that the defendant had cut the plaintiff's timber beyond the right of way granted. Obviously no degree of care could save the defendant from liability for the value of any of plaintiff's timber cut without her consent. No allegation of negligence, therefore, was essential to the recovery of compensatory damages. Baldwin v. Postal Co., 78 S. C. 419, 59 S. E. 67. As there was evidence of at least an unintentional trespass beyond the right of way, a nonsuit as to the entire case was properly refused.

We are unable, however, to agree with the circuit judge that there was evidence of a willful or wanton trespass, and are of the opinion that there should have been a nonsuit as to the cause of action for punitive damages. These facts appear from the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. L. B. Sloop, the agent of the defendant, who acquired for it the grant from the plaintiff, put a number of men to work cutting out the way for the line. According to the survey the width of the way cut by these men ranged from 100 to 207 feet, and was in several places greater than was necessary to protect the defendant's towers and wires from falling timber. But there was no evidence of willfulness or wantonness on the part of the cutters.

The contention of plaintiff's counsel that like evidence was held sufficient to carry the case to the jury on the issue of willfulness and wantonness in Faris v. American Tel. Co., 84 S. C. 102, 65 S. E. 1017, is not well founded. There the trespass was committed when the agent of defendant in charge knew that he had not obtained the requisite signatures to the paper under which the defendant entered, the subordinate agent in charge of the cutting paid no attention to a warning that the company had no right whatever to cut the trees, and no measurements or other precautions were taken, although the special and great value of the trees to the church for shade and beauty, as well as association, was so evident that the mind even of a careless man could not have failed to advert to the duty to take careful measurements, so as to spare all valuable trees not endangering the wires and poles. The facts are very different in this case. Indeed, evil intent and wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights were practically disproved by the testimony of Hugh Montgomery, plaintiff's son, who testified that he complained to the men that they were cutting a way unnecessarily wide; that they referred him to Mr. Sloop, the man in charge; that he saw Mr. Sloop, and "he got after the hands about it, and told them not to cut any more." This evidence leads to the inference of negligence in not providing more careful supervision of the cutters; but it leads away from any inference of intentional or wanton wrong, and shows a purpose to respect and guard the rights of the plaintiff. We think, therefore, that the circuit judge erred in not holding that the defendant could be held liable only for actual damages.

The defendant was not allowed by the court to elicit from its witness N. B. Cousar his estimate of the number of trees unnecessarily cut in opening the right of way. This evidence was clearly competent and important. The witness did not claim to be specially expert in making such estimates. But he had made an examination, and testified that he would know how to make the estimate about as well as any one else. In cases like this the quantity of timber destroyed must necessarily be ascertained by estimate, and the estimates of practical men of affairs are admissible. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Kirven, 57 S. C. 445, 35 S. E. 745, Dent v. South-Round Ry. Co., 61 S. C. 329, 39 S. E. 527; Perry v. Jefferies, 61 S. C.

292, 39 S. E. 515; Wofford v. Clinton Cotton Mills, 72 S. C. 346, 51 S. E. 918.

We think that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed, and the cause be remanded to that court for a new trial; but, the court being equally divided, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

GARY, A. J., dissents.

HYDRICK, J. (concurring and dissenting). I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice WOODS, except upon the two points upon which the conclusion is reached that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed. There was testimony that the usual width of the right of way required for defendant's purposes was 80 feet, with the right to cut any trees beyond that width tall enough to endanger its wires. L. B. Sloop and J. P. King, agents of defendant, both testified that they instructed the servants of defendant set to cut out the right of way through the plaintiff's land, to clear a way 80 feet wide, and Mr. King said he told them that he would designate the trees beyond the 80 feet which should be cut. When plaintiff's son called the attention of the cutters to the fact that they were cutting beyond the 80 feet, and objected to it, he was told that they were cutting according to the directions of Mr. Sloop, and they continued to cut beyond the 80 feet, notwithstanding his objection, until they were afterwards stopped. True, when Mr. Sloop came, and his attention was called to the unnecessary cutting, and objection made, he ordered the cutters to stop, which, as to that particular matter, leads away from the inference of an intentional disregard of the plaintiff's rights on the part of Mr. Sloop. But the cutters were also the servants of defendant, for whose acts the defendant is liable, and this testimony tends to show that they cut unnecessarily and beyond the 80 feet, after their attention had been called to the fact, and objection made. This testimony was clearly sufficient to warrant a reasonable inference of a reckless disregard by them of the rights of the plaintiff. Moreover, the testimony shows that the cutting through plaintiff's land was continued three or four weeks, and that once a week either Mr. Sloop or Mr. King went there to see after the work and pay off the hands. Now, as the usual right of way cut out was only 80 feet, and as their instructions had been to cut out only 80 feet through plaintiff's lands, and, as the testimony shows that a way averaging 150 feet was actually cut out, and in some places as much as 200 feet, I think the conclusion would not be unreasonable that they (Sloop and King) must have seen and known the extent of the unnecessary cutting, and their failure to stop it evinced that degree of carelessness from which an inference of indifference to the plaintiff's right might reasonably be drawn. I think, therefore, there was no error in refusing to nonsuit plaintiff's demand for punitive damages, and in submitting that issue to the jury.

I agree that the testimony of the witness Cousar was competent, and should have been admitted. But the defendant practically had the benefit of it; for the witness did testify to the facts from which his opinion as to the extent of the unnecessary cutting was drawn, and, besides, defendant had an abundance of testimony upon the same point from other witnesses. In fact, there was scarcely any difference upon that point between the witnesses for the plaintiff and those for the defendant. I think, therefore, the error was not prejudicial, and is not of sufficient consequence to call for a reversal of the judgment.

For these reasons, I dissent from the judgment of reversal.

3. WILLS (§ 263*)—PROBATE—PARTIES.

Civ. Code 1902, § 2491, providing that probate of a will in common form shall be good unless some one interested to invalidate the will gives notice, etc., and that all persons who would have been entitled to distribution of the estate if the decedent had died intestate shall be summoned, does not preclude making as parties to a probate proceeding beneficiaries under a prior will though they are not heirs; and an executor is entitled to make them parties to avoid independent litigation with them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 608-614; Dec. Dig. § 263.*]

4. PARTIES (§ 51*)—BRINGING IN—JUDICIAL POWER.

When jurisdiction of a subject-matter is conferred on a court, the power to bring before it all necessary and proper parties for the determination of the matter follows as an incident to jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

5. WILLS (§ 374*)—PROBATE—APPEAL—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES TO JURY.

On appeal from a decree of the probate court in probate proceedings, it was not error to refuse a trial de novo before a jury until after the appeal was heard, since it might have appeared on hearing the appeal that only questions of law were involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 840; Dec. Dig. § 374.*]

6. WILLS (§ 374*)—PROBATE—APPEAL—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES TO JURY.

Where it appeared on appeal from a decree of the probate court in probate proceedings that the case was decided on a question of law without considering the facts, though issues of fact were involved, it was discretionary with the circuit court to order a trial de novo before a jury, instead of reversing the judgment and remanding the case to the probate court for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 840; Dec. Dig. § 374.*]

7. WILLS (§ 358*)—PROBATE—APPEAL—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE.

No appeal lies to the Supreme Court from an order of the circuit court on appeal from a decree of the probate court in probate proceedings refusing a trial de novo before a jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 822; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

8. WILLS (§ 391*)—PROBATE—APPEAL—DISPOSITION.

Where it appeared on appeal from a decree of the probate court in probate proceedings that the case was decided on a question of law without considering the facts, though issues of fact were involved, the circuit court could order a new trial in the probate court in order that the parties might have the judgment of the court of the original jurisdiction, before whom the witnesses were examined, on the issues of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 863; Dec. Dig. § 391.*]

9. WILLS (§ 163*)—PROBATE—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

In proceedings to probate a will devising the entire estate to an executor, he could show that he filed with it a declaration of trust in favor of others to rebut the presumption of improper inducement arising from proof of the procuring by a party of the will under which he takes an interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 396; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

10. WILLS (§ 114*)—WITNESSES—EFFECT OF ATTESTATION.

The fact that one attests a will as a witness implies an opinion on his part that testator has testamentary capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 277-279; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

11. WILLS (§ 114*)—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—WITNESSES.

Where nothing appears to the contrary, witnesses to a will may assume that testator is sane, and has testamentary capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 277-279; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

On Rehearing.

12. WILLS (§ 288*)—CONTEST—EVIDENCE.

Contestants of a will can rely entirely on evidence introduced by proponent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 288.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—INTERMEDIATE APPEAL—REMARKS BY JUDGE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where a circuit judge on appeal from a decree of the probate court in probate proceedings did not undertake to pass final judgment on the facts and granted a new trial, his remarks in passing on exceptions as to the sufficiency of the testimony are not res judicata.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4061-4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; S. W. G. Shipp, Judge.

Petition by T. Moultrie Mordecai, executor, against Michael V. Canty and others to probate a will. From the decree of the circuit court on appeal from probate court, defendants Elizabeth F. O'Neill and another appeal. Affirmed.

Logan & Grace, for appellants. Mitchell & Smith, Miller, Whaley & Bissell, and Geo. H. Moffett, for respondents.

HYDRICK, J. Two papers, each purporting to be the last will of Michael C. O'Neill, were admitted to probate in common form in the probate court of Charleston. By the first, which bears date September 5, 1907, legacies are given to Mary and Elizabeth O'Neill, James and Henry Corbett, St. Francis Xavier Infirmary, the trustees of the College of Charleston, Walford Johnson, and the residue to Edmund Kemble and J. W. O'Connell. By the second, which bears date September 19, 1907, the whole estate is given to T. Moultrie Mordecai, who is named executor, with full power of sale and disposition at his discretion. The executor filed with this will, when it was admitted to probate, a declaration of trust, bearing date September 19, 1907, which contained the following recital: "Whereas, Michael C. O'Neill has this day made a will devising his entire estate to me, and appointing me sole executor thereunder: Now, therefore, I declare that subject to the payment of his debts, and the legacies and annuities hereinafter mentioned, I hold the said estate in trust for William Henry Corbett and James Corbett, of New York City, N. Y." Following this recital a number of gifts and annuities are provided for. Upon the petition of Michael V. Canty, alleging that he is an heir of testator and interested to invalidate both wills, the executor of the will of September 19th was ordered to prove the same in due form of law. He filed his petition containing the usual allegations, and also an allegation of the probate, in common form, of the will of September 5th. The beneficiaries under the will of September 5th and the heirs of testator were made parties. Mary and Elizabeth O'Neill and Kemble and O'Connell answered, denying the validity of the will of September 19th, and St. Francis Xavier Infirmary answered, admitting the validity thereof. The other respondents do not appear to have answered. On motion of attorneys of Mary and Elizabeth O'Neill, the names of all respondents, except those alleged to be heirs of testator, were stricken from the records as improper parties. The three subscribing witnesses to the will of September 19th were examined. They testified that, at the suggestion of Mr. Mordecai, Mr. O'Neill acknowledged the paper to be his will and requested them to witness it, and they proved the formal execution thereof. The declaration of trust was proved and offered in evidence, but excluded on the ground that it was not a part of the will, not having been referred to therein, and was therefore irrelevant at that stage of the case. The court ruled, however, that it might become admissible in reply to the evidence against the will. On close of petitioner's testimony, Mary and Elizabeth O'Neill moved to dismiss the proceeding, and to have the will of September 19th adjudged not to be the last will of testator on the ground that a prima facie case had not been made out in favor of said will. The motion was based on numerous grounds, which raised, however, practically only two points: (1) That the witnesses to the will had not ascertained, and were therefore ignorant of and could not testify to the testamentary capacity of the testator. (2) Because it appeared in evidence that the relation of client and attorney existed between the testator and executor; that the will was in the handwriting of the executor's partner; that it was signed by testator's mark, without any explanation of why he did not sign his name, though he could write; that it was executed in the private office of the executor, no one being present, except the executor, the testator, and the witnesses, who were the executor's private clerks; that its date appeared to have been altered, and the witnesses were unable to fix the date of execution; that another will of only a few days anterior date was in existence; and that the executor was the sole beneficiary—that these facts and circumstances, one or more in combination, raised such a presumption against the validity of the will as destroyed the prima facie case made by proof of formal execution, and shifted the burden to proponent to prove testamentary capacity and intention. The probate court overruled all the grounds except the first. As to the others, the court said that having excluded the declaration of trust, which was evidently offered for the purpose of showing that the executor took no beneficial interest under the will, and having held that it might become admissible in reply to evidence against the will, it would stultify itself, if it sustained the motion on these grounds. As to the first, the court held that under the authority of Heyward v. Hazard, 1 Bay, 335, the failure of the witnesses to ascertain the mental capacity of the testator and give evidence thereof was fatal to the will. Thereupon a formal decree, adjudging the will propounded not to be the last will of testator, was entered.

From this decree, the executor and Mary and Elizabeth O'Neill and St. Francis Xavier Infirmary appealed to the circuit court. The executor's exceptions were numerous, but they really assigned only three grounds of error: (1) In sustaining the motion on the ground stated. (2) In excluding the declaration of trust. (3) In striking out the parties named as beneficiaries under the will of September 5th. The appeal of the Infirmary also alleged error in striking out said parties. Mary and Elizabeth O'Neill presented numerous exceptions, but, in one form or another, they involved only the point that the probate court erred in not sustaining the second ground of their motion, as it is above stated. They also served notice that they would move the circuit court for a trial de novo in that court, and for the submission to a jury therein of an issue of will or no will.

Upon the call of the case in the circuit court, the motion for a trial de novo therein before a jury was pressed, but the court declined to pass on the motion until the appeal was heard. Having heard the appeal, the circuit court reversed the judgment of the probate court, and remanded the case for a new trial, holding that the probate court erred (1) in striking from the record as improper parties the beneficiaries under the will of September 5th; (2) in holding that the failure of the witnesses to ascertain the testamentary capacity of the testator and give evidence thereof was fatal to the will; and (3) inferentially, as will be seen by the quotation from the circuit decree below, in excluding the declaration of trust. The court further held that the probate court did not err in refusing to sustain the motion to dismiss the proceeding and declare the will invalid on the other grounds urged by the appellants. The disposition of these grounds by the circuit court was as follows: "I have carefully considered the other grounds of the motion to dismiss, and I am satisfied with the reasoning of the judge of probate, and think that he properly refused to dismiss the proceedings on these grounds. It was contended before the judge of probate, and also in the argument before me, by contestants, that the will should be set aside because it appeared that the will left the entire estate to Mr. Mordecai, between whom and the testator there had existed the relation of attorney and client; that the will was in the handwriting of one of Mr. Mordecai's law partners, and was witnessed by three of the clerks or stenographers in Mr. Mordecai's office. It is very true that the law looks with jealousy upon the dealings of an attorney with his client, and will require, upon the part of the attorney, the utmost good faith and fair dealing; but I think the judge of probate properly refused to set aside the will upon the above grounds, and especially in the light of the declaration of trust, filed with the probate court when the will was first offered for probate. Certainly the law puts no constraint upon the power of a person to dispose of his property as he sees proper. He may give it to a stranger, or to one having no claim upon him, if he sees proper. Lee v. Lee, 4 McCord, 195, 17 Am. Dec. 722. The contestants upon another trial will have full opportunity to show any want of good faith, unfair dealings, undue influence, or any other ground that they can why the will should not stand, but certainly they have failed to bring out facts sufficient on the cross-examination of witnesses for petitioner, or from the will itself, to set it aside without other proof." From this decree Mary and Elizabeth O'Neill appealed. The grounds of their appeal are too numerous and lengthy to set them out in full. They present the following assignments of error: (1) In not holding that the probate court erred in refusing to sustain their motion on the other grounds urged by them; (2) in holding that the beneficiaries under the will of September 5th are proper parties to this proceeding; (3) in refusing their motion for a trial de novo before a jury in the circuit court; (4) in not specifically passing upon the admissibility of the declaration of trust; (5) in not sustaining the ruling of the probate court on the ground upon which it was based.

The grounds, other than the one sustained by the probate court, upon which appellants urged that the will should be declared invalid, involved a consideration of certain facts, which they alleged appeared in evidence, and the weight and sufficiency of those facts and of the inferences and presumptions properly arising therefrom. This being a law case, the findings of the circuit court upon questions of fact are not reviewable in this court. In re Solomon's Estate, 74 S. C. 189, 54 S. E. 207; Thames v. Rouse, 82 S. C. 43, 62 S. E. 254. These grounds involved also a question of law: Whether, on proof of the facts and circumstances therein mentioned, the burden shifted to the proponent of the will to prove affirmatively testamentary capacity. Without undertaking to review the cases, the effect of the decisions of this court upon that question is that, when the formal execution of a will is admitted or proved, a prima facie case is made out; and, as a general rule, subject to some exceptions, the burden is then on the contestants to prove fraud, undue influence, incapacity, or other ground of objection to the will, and this burden remains upon them to the end. Hobby v. Bobo, reported in a note to McKnight v. Wright, 12 Rich. Law, 247; Black v. Ellis, 3 Hill, Law, 73; Scarborough v. Baskin, 65 S. C. 558, 44 S. E. 63; Thames v. Rouse, 82 S. C. 40, 62 S. E. 254.

Appellants contend that section 2491, Code 1902, provides who shall be made parties to such proceedings. That section does provide that, upon the filing of a petition to prove a will in due form of law, "all such persons as would have been entitled to distribution of the estate, if the deceased had died intestate, shall be summoned to answer the petition." While such persons are by the language of the statute made necessary parties, there is nothing in the language of the statute to indicate an intention that other persons who may be interested in contesting a will shall not be made parties. The first two lines of the section seem to indicate the contrary: "Probate in common form shall be good, unless some person or persons interested to invalidate the said paper as a will shall give notice to the judge of probate," etc. This language seems to indicate an intention that any person interested to invalidate a will, whether an heir or not, may give the notice to require it proved in due form of law. The beneficiaries of an older will may be more interested to invalidate a later will than the heirs. It is a fundamental and universal principle of law that no man shall be concluded by a judgment until he has had his day in court. The beneficiaries under the will of September 5th were interested to invalidate the will of September 19th, and their rights would not have been concluded by the judgment unless they had been made parties. The executor had the right to have them made parties, to the end that he might not be compelled to litigate with them the same question which he had litigated with the heirs. It is not necessary to look for any statute conferring power on the probate court to make them parties. When jurisdiction of a subject-matter is conferred upon a court, the power to bring before it all necessary and proper parties for the determination of the matter follows as an incident to the jurisdiction.

There was no error in refusing the motion for a trial de novo before a jury until after the appeal was heard for the reason that it might have appeared on hearing the appeal that only questions of law were involved, and, in that event, there would have been no issue for a jury. Having discovered from a consideration of the appeal that issues of fact were involved, the court might in its discretion have ordered a trial de novo before a jury, instead of reversing the judgment and remanding the case to the probate court for a new trial. That might have been the better course; for, as said in Myers v. O'Hanlon, 12 Rich. Eq. 203-204: "In truth, the validity of a contested will is tried and determined practically in the court of common pleas. The primary decree of the ordinary in such controversies is regarded by the parties as comparatively immaterial. It is upon the appeal to the law courts that the actual contest, the substantial trial, really occurs." Prater v. Whittle, 16 S. C. 41. But that was a matter resting in the sound discretion of the circuit court whose order as to that matter is not appealable. Lamley v. Railroad, 77 S. C. 319, 57 S. E. 1104; Jones v. Woodside Cotton Mills, 83 S. C. 565, 65 S. E. 819, and cases cited. The circuit court unquestionably had the power to reverse the judgment and order a new trial. Stark v. Hopson, 22 S. C. 42; Ex parte White, 33 S.

C. 442, 12 S. E. 5. The fact that the probate court had decided the case on a question of law without considering the facts was a sufficient reason for ordering a new trial in that court, in order that the parties might have the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction, before whom the witnesses were examined, upon the issues of fact.

The circuit court held, inferentially, at least, that the declaration of trust was admissible; for in passing upon appellants' exceptions the court said, "I think the judge of probate properly refused to set aside the will upon the above grounds, and especially in the light of the declaration of trust," which shows clearly that the court held that the declaration of trust should have been admitted. It was competent and relevant because it tended to rebut the presumption which appellants contend arises from proof of the procuring by a party of a will under which he takes an interest. We are not called upon here to discuss the circumstances under which such a presumption does arise, or the force and effect which it should have. That depends upon the circumstances. Tomkins v. Tomkins, 1 Bailey, 92, 19 Am. Dec. 656; McKnight v. Wright, 12 Rich. Law, 247; Hobby v. Bobo, 12 Rich. Law, 247, note. In McKnight v. Wright such a declaration, though made long after the execution of the will, was admitted, though it does not appear that its admissibility was questioned.

The fifth assignment of error cannot be sustained. In the case of Heyward v. Hazard, 1 Bay, 344, which was relied upon by the probate judge to sustain his ruling, it is said: "The third requisite (in the execution of a will) is the attestation. The true construction of law under this head had always been that the act called the attention of the witnesses to the situation of the testator himself; and this particularly relates to his sanity. The witnesses are not called upon by the act to attest the mere factum of signing, but the capacity of the testator. The business, then, of the persons required by the statute to be present at executing a will, is not barely to attest the corporeal act of signing, but to try, judge, and determine whether the testator is compos to sign; that is, of a sound mind, as every will, upon the face of it, imports. And upon every controversy the heir at law or other person interested has a right to a proof of sanity from every one of them whom the statute has placed around the testator. There is no security but the witnesses and their integrity." The language above quoted was used by the judges in their charge to the jury in a case in which the validity of a will was in question. At that time the judges were allowed to advise the juries as to the weight which should be given the testimony. It appeared that the testator was subject to fits of insanity, occasioned by hard drinking, but, after these fits were over, he regained his senses. The witnesses to the will all testified that at the time of its execution he was "perfectly in his senses." The witnesses contra testified to his conduct and appearances at other times. The judges were evidently trying to impress upon the jury the weight which they should give the testimony of the witnesses to the will who gave evidence of testator's condition at the time of its execution, for they charged the jury further: "The three witnesses to the will all swear positively that he was perfectly in his senses the day it was signed; and there is nothing to impeach in the least their credibility." So that, when the circumstances under which the language above quoted was used are considered, it loses much of its force in establishing a general principle of law applicable to all cases. But, while the language quoted does indicate the duty of persons called upon to witness a will, and the right of the parties to their opinion, it does not go to the extent of holding that, if they fail in the performance of that duty, and are unable to give any opinion as to the sanity of the testator, the will must therefore be rejected. Nor do the later decisions of the court sanction such a proposition. The mere fact of attesting a will should be and is taken by the law to be tantamount to an expression of opinion on the part of the witnesses that the testator is possessed of testamentary capacity; for certainly no credible person of intelligence would attest such an instrument, if he knew or had reasonable cause to believe that testamentary capacity was wanting. In this sense the witnesses are to "try, judge, and determine" whether the testator is capable. But surely, where nothing appears to the contrary, the witnesses may rely and act upon the general presumption of sanity and testamentary capacity. Kinloch v. Palmer, 1 Mill, Const. 225; Lee v. Lee, 4 McCord, 183, 17 Am. Dec. 722; Verdier v. Verdier, 8 Rich. Law, 135; Black v. Ellis, 3 Hill, Law, 73; Welch v. Welch, 9 Rich. Law, 136; Hobby v. Bobo, 12 Rich. Law, 247, note. In Black v. Ellis two of the witnesses were dead. The third gave positive evidence of an utter want of testamentary capacity. Yet the will was established upon evidence allunde of capacity. In Verdier v. Verdier two of the witnesses were dead and their signatures were proved. The third recognized his signature, but had no recollection of the transaction. Held the will was sufficiently proved. In Kaufman v. Caughman, 49 S. C. 165, 27 S. E. 18, 61 Am. St. Rep. 808, this court said: "It is not incumbent upon the proponent of a will to prove in the examination in chief the fact of the testator's sanity by taking the opinion of the subscribing witnesses on that point. When proponent proves the formal execution of a will, including the attestation and subscription of the witnesses, as required by law, a presumption of testamentary capacity arises, since every adult is presumed sane until the contrary appears, and since witnesses when they attest and subscribe a will as such, not only attest the fact of the testator's signing, but also the testator's sanity."

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, A. J., concurs in the result.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The appellants entirely misconceive the ruling that, after a prima facie case had been made out in favor of the will by proof of its formal execution, the burden was upon them to prove fraud, undue influence, incapacity, etc., in supposing that the court held that in sustaining that burden they could not rely solely upon the testimony of the witnesses examined by the proponent, but must themselves necessarily have introduced testimony. Of course, the contestants of any will in any case may, if so advised, rely entirely upon the testimony of the witnesses and other evidence introduced by the proponent.

As none of the exceptions questioned the propriety of the circuit judge's making any findings of fact, this court did not consider that question; but, as he did not undertake to pass a final judgment on the facts, but granted a new trial, his remarks in passing on the exceptions, as to the sufficiency of the testimony, are not res judicata. Stark v. Hopson, 22 S. C. 46.

No principle of law or question of fact having been overlooked or disregarded, the petition is dismissed, and the stay of remittitur revoked.

CARTER v. BARNES.

MILEY v. GOODWIN.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 6, 1910.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 225*)—STOCK LAW—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Civ. Code 1902, § 1509, subd. 5, exempting a certain portion of Colleton county from the operation of the general stock law, is unconstitutional, as imposing the additional burden on the citizens of that portion of building a certain fence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 681, 682; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 225*)—STOCK LAW—CONSTITUTIONALITY—"SECTION."

In Civ. Code 1902, § 1509, subd. 5, the provision that the citizens of Colleton county exempted from the operation of the general stock law under "this section" shall build a certain fence, the words "this section" refer to subdivision 5, so as to render it alone unconstitutional, as imposing an additional burden, and not to the whole of section 1509, as the Legislature could not have intended the citizens of the other portions of the county, also exempted by other subdivisions, to help build a strictly local fence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 681, 682; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 183*)—CONSTRUCTION—INCONGRUITY—LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

Regardless of how plain the meaning of words used in a statute may be, yet the courts will not follow that meaning, if it is manifestly contrary to the intent of the Legislature, but will construe the statute so as to carry its intention into effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 261; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

4. ANIMALS (§ 50*)—STOCK LAWS.

Civ. Code 1902, § 1509, providing for exemptions in Colleton county from the operation of the general stock law, will not be considered as repealed by Act April 24, 1906 (25 St. at Large, p. 363), providing that an election should be held to determine whether the exemptions should be continued, in the absence of a showing that the election was held.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Colleton County; S. W. G. Shipp, Judge.

Actions by A. L. Carter against Willie Barnes and by J. B. Miley against B. B. Goodwin. Judgment for defendants in each case, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Padgett, Lemacks & Moorner, for appellants.
Howell & Gruber, for respondents.

WOODS, J. The facts of this litigation are thus stated in the record: "This was a claim and delivery proceeding, commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant, for the recovery of four pigs, before P. J. Wilson, Esq., magistrate, in April, 1909. The property sought to be recovered was owned by the plaintiff, and was taken up by the defendant while roaming at large upon the lands of the defendant. The defendant seized the same under the provisions of the general stock law; the defendant's farm, whereon the said hogs were seized, lying partly within the county of Colleton and partly within the county of Bamberg, the boundary line separating the said counties running through the defendant's farm. The hogs were seized on that portion of the defendant's farm lying within the county of Colleton, and within the territory embraced in subdivision 1 of section 1509 of the Code of Laws of 1902." The appeal depends on the single question whether subdivision 1 of section 1509 of the Civil Code of 1902, relating to exemptions from the general stock law in Colleton county, is constitutional. The magistrate, holding the subdivision to be constitutional, entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The circuit judge came to the opposite conclusion, and reversed the judgment of the magistrate.

Section 1509 of the Civil Code of 1902 provides: "The following portions of Colleton county are exempted from the operations of article 1 of this chapter relating to the general stock law." Then follow five subdivisions of the section, each exempting a different portion of the county. Subdivision 1, which covers the territory in which the pigs here sued for were taken up, is as follows: "All that portion of Colleton county bounded north by the Edisto river, south to the Little Salkahatchie and Combahee rivers, east by Charleston & Savannah Railway and west by the Barnwell line on the Edisto river, and running thence to the Little Salkahatchie river along the said Barnwell line." Standing alone, there could be no doubt of the constitutionality of this exemption. Goodale v. Sowell, 62 S. C. 524, 40 S. E. 970; Brown v. Tharpe, 74 S. C. 207, 54 S. E. 363; Sanders v. Donnelly, 86 S. C. 94, 67 S. E. 1070. But subdivision 5 of section 1509 imposes the unequal burden of building and maintaining a fence, and it is conceded that by the imposition of this burden subdivision 5 was made unconstitutional. Sanders v. Venning, 38 S. C. 502, 17 S. E. 134; Sanders v. Donnelly, supra.

The contention of the respondent is that the unconstitutional burdens imposed by subdivision 5 are not limited to the territory therein described, but apply to all the exemptions of section 1509, and that therefore there is no statutory exemption from the operation of the stock law of force in Colleton county. This position is clearly untenable. We quote so much of subdivision 5 as is necessary to make clear the point involved. "All that portion of Colleton county formerly known as St. Paul's parish, and so delineated on the old plats of the state, is exempted from the operation of the general stock law, as enacted in article 1 of this chapter: Provided, this section shall not apply to that portion of said parish lying below a line running from the upper line of Stephen Barnwell's plantation at or near Wilton Bluff, on Pon Pon river, to a point on Toogoodoo creek at or near Toogoodoo Bridge and down said creek to where the same enters into the North Edisto river: Provided, further, that the citizens of the territory exempted under the provisions of this section shall build a fence from the said point on Pon Pon river to the said point on Toogoodoo creek, separating the portion above described from the portion exempted under the provisions of this section, and construct a proper gate at said Toogoodoo Bridge to prevent the passage of animals. Said fence to be kept up to the height of four and one half feet."

The word "section," when used in the Civil Code, usually means the divisions of the Code designated and numbered as sections; but beyond the least doubt the word here used refers to the subdivision of the section in which it is found, and not to the whole of section 1509. Any other construction would require that the court attribute to the General Assembly obviously incongruous legislation. There are five different parts of Colleton county exempted under the five subdivisions of section 1509. The fence required in subdivision 5 for St. Paul's parish has no relation to any of the other exempted parts of the county. In saying, under subdivision 5, "that the citizens of the territory exempted under this section" should build a fence having only local value, it is impossible that the General Assembly meant to impose any part of the burden of building and maintaining the fence on the citizens of the other four exempted portions of the county entirely separate from St. Paul's parish. Without more detailed analysis it is enough to say that the context clearly indicates that the words "this section," as used in subdivision 5, refer to the subdivision, and not to the whole of section 1509. That the court should give them this limited and plainly intended meaning, rather than that which they usually have, there can be no doubt. The subject has been recently discussed in Stackhouse v. Board of Commissioners, 86 S. C. 419, 68 S. E. 561, where the rule was thus stated: "However plain the ordinary meaning of the words used in a statute may be, the courts will reject that meaning, when to accept it would lead to a result so plainly absurd that it could not possibly have been intended by the Legislature, or would defeat the plain legislative intention, and, if possible, will construe the statute so as to escape the absurdity and carry the intention into effect."

The most casual inspection of section 1509 shows that the several exemptions of different portions of Colleton county from the operation of the stock law are quite independent of each other. The different subdivisions providing for these exemptions separately have little connection with each other, and one may stand as a complete enactment, expressive of the legislative will, although another may be unconstitutional. The unconstitutionality of subdivision 5, therefore, does not affect the validity of subdivision 1.

The next contention is that the whole of section 1509 was repealed by the statute of 1906 (25 St. at Large, p. 363) providing that an election should be held on a day to be designated by the supervisor of the county to determine whether the exemption existing under section 1509 should be continued. There is nothing before the court to indicate that the election was ever held, and manifestly the status fixed by previous legislation continued until changed as a result of such election. As we understand, the fact is no election was ever held under the act of 1906; and in 1907 another statute (25 St. at Large, p. 768) was passed repealing the law authorizing the election. This being so, the valid exemptions provided for by section 1509 remain until altered by statute.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

HILLIARD v. NEWBERRY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

1. INDEMNITY (§ 15*)—DAMAGES PREREQUISITE TO AN ACTION.

Action on a strict indemnity obligation will not lie till damage is suffered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Cent. Dig. §§ 36-47; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. INDEMNITY (§ 15*)—CONTRACTS—DAMAGE—ACTION.

Where a contract is made not alone to indemnify plaintiff but also to perform a particular obligation, an action will lie on the breach of such obligation, though no damages have been suffered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Cent. Dig. §§ 36-47; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. INDEMNITY (§ 6*)—CONTRACT—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A bond to indemnify plaintiff against any damage he may suffer by reason of a mortgage on land, which was also a promise to pay a certain sum by a certain date, was not strictly a contract of indemnity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—ORAL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

A bond was given to indemnify obligee for any damage he might suffer by reason of a mortgage, and was also a promise to pay a certain sum by a certain date. Held that, in the action on failure of payment, obligor could not show an oral agreement whereby the time for payment could be extended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2030-2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

5. INDEMNITY (§ 10*)—ACTION—NOTICE OF DAMAGES.

Where a bond was given to indemnify obligee for any damage he might suffer by reason of a mortgage, and was also a promise to pay a certain sum by a certain date, notice of damage need not be given obligor as a prerequisite to an action for failure of payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Carteret County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by W. H. Hilliard, administrator, against A. O. Newberry and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The action was instituted on February 2, 1910, and the complaint of plaintiff's duly verified, contained allegations to the effect: That on 27th day of January, 1908, plaintiff's intestate and defendant A. O. Newberry dissolved partnership theretofore existent between them. Defendant A. O. Newberry buying out the interest of the intestate, and in payment for such interest conveyed to plaintiff's intestate three tracts of land on which there was a mortgage, duly registered and now held by codefendant M. Hahn. This mortgage, annexed to and made part of the complaint, showed that it was given to secure a sum of money, on which there was a balance now due and owing to defendant Hahn as stated. That at said time, in order to secure the intestate against said mortgage debt, the defendant A. O. Newberry executed and delivered to intestate his note under seal as follows: "$3,000.00. On or before the first day of January, 1909, I promise to pay to Y. Z. Newberry $3,000 with interest from date at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum for value received. This note is given to secure Y. Z. Newberry against any loss which might arise from the amount now due Meyer Hahn, and with the understanding that if this note is paid when due it shall be returned as though never given. Given under my hand and seal, this 27th day of January, 1908. A. O. Newberry. [Seal.]" That there was a balance due on said mortgage which defendant had failed to pay. That, before bringing this action, plaintiff administrator had demanded payment and settlement of said note and mortgage of defendant A. O. Newberry, and he had failed to pay same. Replying to defendant's answer, there was further allegation to the effect that A. O. Newberry was insolvent and incumbering his property by specific liens thereon to different persons, and that judgment on the note was necessary to the preservation and protection of plaintiff's rights under the contract, etc. Defendant A. O. Newberry answered, admitting the dissolution of partnership and purchase of the assets, the conveyance of the realty in part payment and the execution of the note declared on, and admitted, further, that the mortgage had not been paid, and that a balance was still due thereon. Denying liability, defendant further alleged and claimed in effect: (1) That the obligation was strictly one of indemnity, and that no action thereon arose to plaintiff until he had suffered actual loss or damage by reason of the mortgage. (2) That no definite time was set for paying off the mortgage, and that it was understood and agreed at the time the note was given that, if A. O. Newberry was not in a position to pay the mortgage debt when due, he was to be at liberty to obtain an extension thereon from Hahn, and have the benefit of same in respect to the plaintiff's present claim. That defendant had obtained such extension and was gradually paying off the mortgage, and there was no likelihood that plaintiff would ever suffer damage by reason thereof. (3) That no notice of loss or damage actually suffered had been given before action brought. On perusal of the pleadings and motion duly made the court gave judgment for plaintiff on the note to be discharged on "production and surrender of said mortgage duly paid and satisfied of record," or on payment of amount due thereon principal and interest to plaintiff and costs of present action, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Abernathy & Davis, for appellants. D. L. Ward, Moore & Dunn, Guion & Guion, and Loftin, Varser & Dawson, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). On the question presented, the authorities are to the effect that, when a collateral obligation is in strictness one of indemnity, an action at law will not lie unless and until some actual loss or damage has been suffered, but, when the obligation amounts to a binding agreement to do or refrain from doing some definite, specific thing materially affecting the rights of the parties an action will presently lie for breach of such an agreement, and no damage need be shown. Even on a bond of strict indemnity, however, while an action at law would not lie until damage suffered, our own decisions under the old system were to the effect that a person could invoke the aid of the equity courts when the facts disclosed that such action was required for the preservation and maintenance of his rights under the contract. Burroughs v. McNeill, 22 N. C. 297. Recurring to the principle first stated in 16 A. & E. p. 179, it is said: "Where the promisor has undertaken to do a particular act or make a specific payment as well as to indemnify the promisee, the contract is broken, and a recovery for such breach may be had as soon as the time for doing such act or making such payment has arrived, and the promisor has failed to perform his obligations, and in such case it is no defense that the promisee has not been damaged." And in Pingrey on Suretyship and Guaranty the author, in speaking to the question (section 182) says: "It is settled that no action can be maintained by the surety upon an implied promise, if the principal has made default, without first making payment of the debt, except where the principal has broken his promise to do or refrain from doing some particular act or thing or to save the surety from some charge or liability. Thus where the maker of a note agrees with the surety to pay the amount of the note to the payee on a given day, but makes default, the surety can recover from his principal without first making payment of the note. In like manner, where a partnership is dissolved by one partner leaving the firm with the debts outstanding, and a new firm agrees with the outgoing partner to pay the debt of the old partnership and save him harmless from any costs, trouble, or liability on the account of the same, upon default of the new firm, the partner who withdrew can recover against the new firm without first paying such debts. When an obligation to do a particular thing or to pay a debt for which the covenantor is liable, or to indemnify against liability, is broken, the right of action is complete upon the principal's failure to do the particular thing he agreed to perform or to pay the debt or discharge the liability. If the contract be one of indemnity simply, and nothing more, then damages must be shown before the party indemnified is entitled to recover; but, if there be an affirmative contract to do a certain act or to pay a certain sum or sums of money, then the surety can sue the principal before paying the debt to the creditor." And the authorities cited fully support this statement of the doctrine, many of them being on facts very similar to those presented in the present case. Dorrington v. Minnick, 15 Neb. 397-403, 19 N. W. 456; Wilson v. Stilwell, 9 Ohio St. 467, 75 Am. Dec. 477; Lathrop v. Atwood, 21 Conn. 117; Kohler, Extr'x, v. Matlage, 72 N. Y. 259; Hall et al. v. Nash, 10 Mich. 303; Loosemore v. Radford, 9 M. & W. Exchequer, 656. In Wilson v. Stilwell, supra, the digest appears in the official reports as follows: "Where S., a retiring member of a firm, took from his late partner, T., a bond, with W. as surety thereon, conditioned that T. would pay all the debts of the late firm, which condition was broken, held (1) that S., without having first paid any of said debts, or been otherwise specifically damaged, is entitled to recover on said bond against the obligors therein, to the amount of such debts remaining unpaid. (2) In such action, it is proper that the creditors of the firm should be made parties, and that the court should, in the judgment, authorize the application of the amount recovered to the payment of the debts of the firm in discharge of the judgment." And in Loosemore v. Radford the doctrine is stated in the headnote as follows: "The plaintiff and defendant being joint makers of a promissory note, the defendant as principal and the plaintiff as his surety, the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff to pay the amount to the payee of the note on a given day but made default. Held, in an action on the covenant, that the plaintiff was entitled, though he had not paid the note, to recover the full amount of it by way of damages."

In the present case, while the note sued on was undoubtedly given to secure plaintiff's intestate from any loss or liability by reason of the mortgage, it contained, further, the promise to pay a definite sum by a stated time, and we concur with the judge below in the opinion that, under the authorities cited and the principle established and sustained by them, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

And we agree with his honor also in the position that no valid defense is set up in defendant's answer, and no issue raised in bar of plaintiff's demand. As heretofore stated, the obligation sued on is not in strictness one of indemnity simply, but contains in addition a positive promise to pay a definite sum, and at a specified time, and entitles the plaintiff to judgment according to the tenor of the bond. The claim that there was a contemporaneous oral agreement to the effect that the time could be further extended is in direct contradiction to the written stipulation of the agreement, and under several recent decisions of the court such a position was not open to defendant. Woodson v. Beck, 151 N. C. 145, 65 S. E. 751;

Walker v. Cooper, 150 N. C. 129, 63 S. E. 681; Walker v. Venters, 148 N. C. 388, 62 S. E. 510; Mudge v. Varner, 146 N. C. 147, 59 S. E. 540; Bank v. Moore, 138 N. C. 529, 51 S. E. 79.

On the question of notice raised by defendant, it will be observed that there is no denial in the answer "that, before bringing this suit, plaintiff administrator demanded payment and settlement of the note and mortgage," but the allegation is "that, before bringing this suit, defendant had not been notified of any loss or damages suffered by plaintiff." The position of defendant in regard to the necessity of notice before action brought applies to collateral obligations strictly of indemnity, and has no bearing when the suit is on an obligation which contains in addition binding stipulations to do or refrain from doing specific things and on breach of which, as we have endeavored to show, neither actual loss nor the notice of it is required. An examination of the authorities relied on by defendant here, notably Cox v. Brown, 51 N. C. 100, Sherrod v. Woodard, 15 N. C. 360, 25 Am. Dec. 714, and others, will disclose, too, that even on bonds of indemnity strictly the failure to give notice was held not to affect a plaintiff's cause of action at all, but only his right to presently sue without first making demand, and, in cases of that character, a demand is generally waived by an answer denying any and all liability on part of defendant. The doctrine last referred to was approved by this court in a recent case (Smith v. French, 141 N. C. 1, 53 S. E. 435), and its application would in any event deprive defendant of defense on that ground.

There is no error, and the judgment below is affirmed.

Affirmed.

TAYLOR et al. v. CARMON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

MORTGAGES (§ 256*)—ASSIGNMENT—DEFENSES.

Under the statute authorizing the assignment of things in action, and allowing the assignee to sustain a demand therefor in his own name, but providing that such action shall be without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing at the time of or before notice of the assignment, an assignee of mortgages, the mortgagor having no notice of the assignment, held the same subject to any set-off or other defense in the mortgagor's favor against the mortgagee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by Mary L. Taylor and others against M. W. Carmon, administrator of George Wilcox, and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. No error.

Guion & Guion, for appellant Meadows Moore & Dunn, for appellant Carmon. W. D. McIver, for appellees.

HOKE, J. The court has carefully considered the record and testimony presented, and finds no reversible error to appellant's prejudice.

It appears that plaintiff, having executed three mortgages on her land, one to T. Burke for $300 acquired by George W. Wilcox, intestate of defendant Carmon, one to Wilcox himself for $221, and the third to said Wilcox for $190, instituted this action, alleging that the two mortgages made direct to Wilcox were for accommodation of said intestate and without valuable consideration, and that all of them had been much more than paid and satisfied by certain personal property delivered by plaintiff to said Wilcox for the purpose in the course of the dealings between them and to an amount of not less than $1,000. Defendant Carmon, administrator of George Wilcox, answered, denying payment and denying the other allegations, and averring that the amounts secured by said mortgages were still due, and alleged that plaintiff owed other sums to her intestate to an amount of $380. Defendant Jane Meadows, administratrix of J. A. Meadows, answered, denying plaintiff's allegations, and alleged, further, that said mortgages had been acquired by her intestate for full value and were held by him to secure certain sums due from George Wilcox, and that no part of same had been paid. The cause was referred according to the course of practice of the court, and the referee made report finding that the amounts secured by the mortgages were due and unpaid, and that over and above said amounts there was a small balance still due from plaintiff to the intestate, Wilcox.

The court sustained several exceptions to said report, and on issues raised by specific exceptions, the jury further rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Was the Burke bond and mortgage of $300 paid to George S. Wilcox before notice of transfer? Answer: No.

"(2) What amount have plaintiffs paid on the Burke $300 note and mortgage? Answer: $150.

"(3) What is the value of the personal property received and had by George S. Wilcox from plaintiffs as alleged in the complaint? Answer: $801.16."

On this verdict and the rulings of the court sustaining plaintiff's exceptions to the report, and which together substantially reversed the conclusions of the referee, the court gave judgment that the sum established in plaintiff's favor to the extent required should be applied in the discharge and satisfaction of the mortgages, and that plaintiff have and recover the remainder of said amount of defendant Carmon, administratrix of Wilcox. There is no evidence in the record that plaintiff had either knowledge or notice of the assignment and transfer of these mortgages to J. A. Meadows, the intestate, nor is there any claim or evidence tending to show that said Meadows was a holder in due course of the notes which the mortgages were given to secure, and while our statute authorizes the assignment of things in action, allowing the assignee to sustain a demand therefor in his own name, the law also provides as follows: "In the case of an assignment of a thing in action the action by the assignee shall be without prejudice to any set-off or other defense, existing at the time of, or before notice of, the assignment; but this section shall not apply to a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange, transferred in good faith, and upon good consideration, before due." Revisal 1908, § 400. The mortgages therefore were held by the intestate, Meadows, subject to any set-off or other defense existing in plaintiff's favor against the intestate Wilcox, and the sum of $801.16, established by the verdict to the extent required, was properly applied to their satisfaction. This being true, the many exceptions noted to the rulings of the court on the question of the transfer of these mortgages to J. A. Meadows become immaterial. As heretofore stated, there is no sustainable objection shown to the validity of the trial. The only one that could be seriously urged was to the exclusion of certain items of charge against plaintiff appearing on the books of intestate, Wilcox. The judge below finds that these books were never offered in evidence, and, if it were otherwise, the proof concerning them was very far from meeting the conditions required for the admission of entries in a party's own favor.

There is no error, and the judgment below must be affirmed.

No error.

MITCHELL v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 382*)—CROSSING ACCIDENT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A deaf person, familiar with train schedules, who stepped from behind a box car and started across the main track of a railroad in front of a fast-coming train, without looking for it, or without heeding its approach, and endeavored to rush across in front of it, when there was a space of eleven feet between the car and the main track, and a glance along the track would have disclosed the train, was guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1297-1304; Dec. Dig. § 382.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*)—NONSUIT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

While contributory negligence is a matter of defense, it is proper to nonsuit plaintiff on his own evidence when such defense is thereby fully made out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 286; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Franklin County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by Cornelius Mitchell against the Seaboard Air Line Railway for personal injury. From a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, after motion for nonsuit was overruled, and exception thereon taken, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Murray Allen, for appellant. Spruill & Holden, for appellee.

BROWN, J. All the evidence tends to prove that plaintiff, a deaf and dumb negro man, was struck by fast passenger train No. 66 while crossing defendant's tracks at Youngsville; that plaintiff spends much of his time around defendant's station there and is familiar with train schedules. The evidence is plain to the effect that plaintiff stepped from behind a box car and started across track in front of a fast-coming train without looking, or, if he did look, he did not heed the approach of the train, and endeavored to rush across in front of it. There was 11 feet space between the box car and the main line track, and a mere glance of the eye along the track would have discovered the train. To enter on a track and attempt to cross it under such circumstances is such contributory negligence as bars recovery.

This has been decided so often that it should be considered as settled. Cooper v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 209, 52 S. E. 932, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391; Royster v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 350, 61 S. E. 179; Daily v. Railroad, 106 N. C. 801, 11 S. E. 320; Beach v. Railroad, 148 N. C. 153, 61 S. E. 664; Trull v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 340, 66 S. E. 586; Champion v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 197, 65 S. E. 917. It is also equally well settled that, while contributory negligence is a matter of defense, it is proper to nonsuit plaintiff upon his own evidence when the proof of such defense is thereby fully made out. Strickland v. Railroad, 150 N. C. 4, 63 S. E. 161; Baker v. Railroad, 150 N. C. 562, 64 S. E. 506.

The motion to nonsuit is allowed.

WHITEHEAD et al. v. WEAVER et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

DEEDS (§ 136*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES CREATED.

A deed to D. and E., his wife, provided: "To have and to hold to them, the said D. and wife for life, and the life of each of them, and after the death of the survivor, then to the living sister and the children of the deceased sister or sisters of said E., in fee, and in the event of the death of the living sister of the said E. without issue before the death of the said D.

and wife, and both of them, then the whole of said land shall go to the children of the other sister in fee. The purpose of this deed is to vest the title of said land in said D. and wife for their joint lives, then in the survivor for life, and then in W. and the children of P. deceased, and if at the death of said D. and wife or the survivor, the said W. shall be dead without issue, then to the children of the said P. in fee simple." Held that, there being eight children of P., the conveyance vested an undivided one-ninth interest in each of them and W., and, on the death of W. after the life tenancy ceased, her undivided one-ninth descended to her children.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wilson County; Gulon, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Whitehead and others against Mary Eliza Weaver and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Both parties claim under a deed from S. A. Woodard, January 21, 1884, to Jesse P. Dixon and wife Elizabeth for 400 acres. The habendum is as follows: "To have and to hold, to them, the said Jesse P. Dixon and wife, for life, and the life of each of them, and after the death of the survivor, then to the living sister and the children of the deceased sister or sisters of the said Elizabeth Dixon, in fee, and in the event of the death of the living sister of the said Elizabeth Dixon without issue living at her death, before the death of the said Jesse P. Dixon and wife, and both of them, then the whole of the said land shall go to the children of the other sister in fee. The purpose of this deed is to vest the title of the said land in the said Jesse P. Dixon and wife for their joint lives, then in the survivor for his or her life, and then in Polly Whitehead and the children of Penina Dixon, deceased, and if at the death of the said Dixon and wife, or the survivor, the said Polly Whitehead shall be dead without issue living at her death, then to the children of the said Penina Dixon in fee simple." Jesse P. Dixon and wife are dead. Polly Whitehead had since died, leaving three children, these plaintiffs. The defendants are the eight "children of Penina Dixon." The clerk adjudged that Polly Whitehead was seised of one-ninth undivided interest in the land. The judge reversed this, and held that she was owner of an undivided one-half, and the defendants appealed.

Daniels & Swindell, for appellants. Pou & Finch and Murray Allen, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. The conveyance of the remainder to "Polly Whitehead and the children of Penina Dixon, deceased," vested such remainder in fee in them as tenants in common an undivided one-ninth interest to each; there being eight children of Penina Dixon. Upon the death of Polly Whitehead, who died after the life tenancy ceased, her undivided one-ninth descended to her three children, the plaintiffs herein.

In Helms v. Austin, 116 N. C. 752, 21 S. E. 556, a deed to "Sarah Staton and her children" was held to convey a fee simple to said Sarah and children as tenants in common. This was cited and approved in Darden v. Timberlake, 139 N. C. 182, 57 S. E. 895. In King v. Stokes, 125 N. C. 514, 34 S. E. 641, the words "Unto Alfred May during the term of his natural life, and after his death to his wife, the said Ida Eugenia, and her children," were held to confer a remainder upon said wife and children as tenants in common. In Gay v. Baker, 58 N. C. 344, 68 Am. Dec. 229, the conveyance in trust for a woman and her children was held to make the mother and children tenants in common. The same construction was held as to a devise in Moore v. Leach, 50 N. C. 88; Hunt v. Satterwhite, 85 N. C. 73; Hampton v. Wheeler, 99 N. C. 222, 6 S. E. 236. In Silliman v. Whitaker, 119 N. C. 89, 25 S. E. 742, it was held that a devise to "S. and her children, if she shall have any," vested the title in S. and her children as tenants in common.

The ruling below that the devise carried a half interest to Polly Whitehead must be reversed.

Action by C. L. Perry against the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Murray Allen, for appellant. Daniels & Swindell, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This action was brought in the superior court of Wilson county to recover damages for an injury to land situated in the county of Bladen. Plaintiff alleged that the defendant had negligently started a fire near its track, which spread over his land and burned the timber thereon. The defendant demanded in writing, as required by Revisal 1905, § 425, that the case be removed for trial to the proper county; that is, to the county of Bladen. This motion, called a demand in the statute, was refused, and the defendant appealed.

With regard to their venue, actions are divided into local and transitory. A local action is one where the principal facts upon which it is founded are of a local nature—an action, in other words, the cause of which could have arisen only in some particular county. Actions to recover damages for injuries to land are classified as local in their nature, because, generally speaking, the wrongful act or the damage to the land could only have been done in the county where the land, or some part thereof, is situated. 22 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. 776. Revisal, § 419, provides as follows: "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial in the cases provided by law: (1) For the recovery of real property or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property." The negligent burning of timber on land is an injury to real property within the meaning and intent of that section (Railway v. Foster, 107 Ind. 430, 8 N. E. 264; Railway v. Weak, 81 Tenn. 148), and by its provisions an action to recover damages for such an injury should be tried in the county where the injury was committed, and, where it is brought elsewhere, the court will remove it for trial to the proper county upon application duly made. We have recently so decided in a case similar to this one. Cooperage Company v. Lumber Company, 151 N. C. 455, 66 S. E. 434. But the plaintiff contends that by Act 1905, c. 367, amending Code, § 192 (Revisal, § 424), it is provided that actions against railroads may be tried in the county where the plaintiff resided at the time the cause of action arose, and therefore that the action was properly brought in Wilson county and should be tried there, and he relies on Propst v. Railroad, 139 N. C. 397, 51 S. E. 920, to support his contention. The cause of action in that case was transitory, not local, in its nature, as is the cause of action in this case, and the meaning of the proviso to section 424 is that actions against railroads, where not otherwise provided, shall be brought as therein prescribed. This is clear from the language of section 424. It is provided in the preceding sections where actions shall be tried, having reference to the nature of the causes of action, and without reference to the character of the defendant as being a natural or artificial person, and then provision is made for the trial of actions against public officers, executors, and administrators, domestic and foreign corporations. It is then provided by section 424 that in "all other cases" the action shall be tried as therein specified, with a different provision as to actions against railroads. We held in Propst v. Railroad that the proviso applied to all railroads, whether resident or nonresident, and we necessarily referred to an action of the kind then under consideration. It was not intended to decide, and we did not decide, that the proviso repealed section 419 or even modified it. The expression, "in all other cases," ex vi termini, excludes the idea that the Legislature intended the proviso to apply to an action against a railroad for the recovery of land, or any injury thereto, so that such an action will not be subject to the provisions of Revisal, § 419. When an action is brought for the recovery of real property, or any estate or interest therein, or for injuries thereto, the place of trial is determined by the nature of the cause of action, which is local, and not by the fact that one of the parties, the defendant, happens to be a railroad, and therefore it can make no difference who the parties are, whether natural or artificial persons. The proviso of section 424 is restricted to the kind of actions to which that section applies, and was not intended to except actions against railroads from the provisions of sections 419 and 420. In the case of McCullen v. Railroad, 146 N. C. 568, 60 S. E. 506, decided in 1908, it was conceded in the opinion that an action for a penalty must be brought in the county where the "cause of action or some part thereof arose," under section 420 of the Revisal. This would not be so unless the proviso to section 424 is to be construed as we have said in this case it should be. We held, it is true, in Propst v. Railroad, that it embraced railroad corporations, foreign and domestic, and to that extent created an exception to section 423 relating to such corporations, as to all causes of action coming within the provisions of section 424, to which it is an amendment, and this is so because the language of the amendment was so comprehensive as to take in both foreign and domestic railway corporations. The language of the opinion must be read with reference to the particular nature of that action, which was brought to recover damages for an injury to the person.

This appeal was properly taken from the order refusing to change the place of trial. Connor v. Dillard, 129 N. C. 50, 39 S. E. 641.

The court erred in refusing to grant the application for a removal of the case to the proper county for trial.

STATE v. MAY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 753*)—TRIAL—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

The refusal to direct a verdict of not guilty is proper where the evidence is not all in.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 753.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 683*)—TRIAL—SCOPE OF EVIDENCE IN REPLY.

In a trial for an affray, one of defendants against whom his codefendant and witnesses had testified was entitled to testify in rebuttal, not having been confronted with such witnesses; he having rested before any evidence which he cared to impeach was introduced against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1615-1617; Dec. Dig. § 683.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Franklin County; Peebles, Judge.

Walter May was convicted of an affray, and appeals. Error.

W. M. Person and W. H. Yarborough, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

CLARK, C. J. This was an indictment for an affray, and the defendant May alone was found guilty, and appeals.

The state introduced one witness and rested. The defendant May, whose name appeared first in the bill of indictment, without introducing evidence, moved the court to direct a verdict of not guilty. This was refused, the court saying that the evidence was not all in. In this there was no error. The defendant Jackson then produced evidence, much of which tended to incriminate May. When Jackson rested, the defendant May offered himself and others as witnesses in rebuttal of the evidence offered for Jackson. The court was of an opinion that he had no right to do so, and refused to allow said May to testify himself or put on other witnesses. In charging the jury the court said: "The state further contends that you should believe that part of the evidence offered by Jackson in which the witnesses testified that May struck Jackson with his stick willingly, and that you should be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt from that evidence that the defendant May is guilty." And further: "If you find from all the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that either or both of the prisoners are guilty, you should say so." If the evidence offered by Jackson had been used only to acquit him, the defendant May would have no ground to complain; but Jackson's evidence was competent against May, and was so used by the prosecution, and was submitted to the jury by the judge to be considered against him. It was therefore error not to permit May to reply to this evidence. He had not been "confronted" with these witnesses. It is true that, as to new matter brought out by May, the defendant Jackson, in turn, would have been entitled to a reply. But this anomaly is due to the fact that the testimony of the defendants in an affray is usually hostile to each other. Indeed, in trials for an affray the solicitor usually relies upon the testimony of the defendants to convict each other.

The conduct of a trial is largely left to the discretion of the presiding judge. But when the state relied upon the evidence offered by the defendant Jackson to convict May, the latter had a right to offer evidence in reply to evidence with which he had not been confronted when the state rested. When the defendant May rested, no evidence which he cared to impeach had been introduced against him, and there was nothing which he cared to contradict. Hence he rested and waited for further evidence. "Where, on the trial of four defendants indicted for an affray, three of them testified, and the fourth, their antagonist, was called in his own behalf, the other defendants had the same right to impeach him on cross-examination as if he had been a witness instead of a codefendant." S. v. Goff, 117 N. C. 735, 23 S. E. 355.

Error.

(153 N. C. 110)

NEWBY et al. v. EDWARDS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

1. EJECTMENT (§ 110*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a suit by an heir to recover property claiming it to have been transferred to her intestate, Julia A. Edwards, while defendant claims that it was transferred to intestate's unborn child, Julia O. Edwards, who was never born, the court's instruction that if intestate was sometimes called Julia Caroline, and sometimes called Julia Ann, then the finding must be that the conveyance was to intestate and not to her unborn child, as the middle name is of no importance, and the law presumes that the conveyance was intended to be made to a living person and not to one not in existence, was erroneous, as making the case turn on the fact that intestate was sometimes called different names, whereas the issue was who was the grantee; the middle name being important where the question of identity arose thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTION—IGNORING EVIDENCE OF THE BENEFIT OF TESTIMONY.

The instruction was also erroneous as depriving defendant of the benefit of his testimony explaining why the conveyance was not to intestate, but was to her unborn child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTION—IGNORING ISSUES.

The instruction was also erroneous as depriving defendant of the benefit of the argument that intestate was one of the grantors in the conveyance, and would not likely have attempted to deed property to herself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

4. NAMES (§ 14*)—MIDDLE NAMES—QUESTIONS OF IDENTITY.

The consideration of a person's middle name becomes of importance in a question of identity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Names, Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 140*)—QUESTION FOR THE JURY.

In a suit by an heir to recover property, claiming it to have been deeded to intestate, the credibility of defendant's statement that the property was deeded to intestate's unborn child was a matter for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 334, 335; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Peebles, Judge.

Ejectment by Polly Newby and others against Shade Edwards. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. New trial.

These issues were submitted:

"(1) Is feme plaintiff the owner on fee simple and entitled to the possession of the lands described in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Does defendant wrongfully withhold the possession of the land from the plaintiff? Answer: Yes.

"(3) If so, what damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant for wrongfully withholding possession of the land from feme plaintiff? Answer: $2.50 for whole rent, $4.16 for plaintiff."

Simmons, Ward & Allen, for appellant. W. D. McIver, for appellees.

BROWN, J. The feme plaintiff claims the land in controversy as the heir at law of Julia, the deceased wife of defendant, Shade Edwards, who died intestate without having given birth to a child.

The land was purchased by defendant from W. G. Brinson, and conveyed by a deed dated February 11, 1891, wherein said Brinson, Shade Edwards, and his wife, Julia A. Edwards, are grantors and Julia C. Edwards grantee. Defendant Shade Edwards testified that he was married to Julia A. Edwards in 1875, and lived with her for 24 years; that he had never heard her called by any other name than Julia A. Edwards; that he purchased this land from W. G. Brinson; that prior to this purchase he had made over most of his property to his wife, Julia A. Edwards, as he was a drinking man, and was afraid that he might incur his property while under the influence of whisky; that he and his wife agreed that they would have the lot described in the complaint deeded to their unborn child, supposed to be in esse; that he paid the purchase money and was advised by Brinson that, in order to have the deed made to an unborn child, it must be named, and that thereupon he and his wife agreed upon the name of Julia C. Edwards; that his wife, Julia, died, and no child was ever born to them. It further appears that thereafter the heirs of Brinson executed a deed, dated September 23, 1907, to defendant for the land. Plaintiff Polly Newby is one of the three heirs at law of defendant's deceased wife. There is much other evidence in the record introduced by both parties unnecessary to refer to.

The seventh assignment of error is as follows: The court erred in charging the jury: "If you are satisfied by the greater weight of the evidence that Julia, the wife of Shade, sometimes called Julia Caroline and sometimes called Julia Ann, you will answer the first issue, 'Yes,' for the plaintiff is the owner in fee simple, entitled to possession of the land described in the complaint, because the Supreme Court says the middle name is no important part of anybody's name, and the law presumes where there was a living person to take that land that that person was intended instead of somebody that had no existence." The exception must be sustained. It is true that in certain cases the initial of the second Christian name is unimportant, but this is only in such cases where the identity is certain. If there is any question as to the identity of the person, the initial or "middle name" becomes very important. Patterson v. Walton, 119 N. C. 500, 26 S. E. 43; Gibbs v. Fuller, 66 N. C. 116; State v. Best, 108 N. C. 747, 12 S. E. 907; Stevens v. West, 51 N. C. 50; 29 Cyc. 264 et seq.; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4660; Long v. Campbell, 37 W. Va. 665, 17 S. E. 197. The instruction appears to us to make the case turn exclusively upon the proposition that defendant's wife was sometimes called Julia Ann and sometimes Julia Caroline; whereas the real point in the case is as to who was the grantee in the deed of February 11, 1891, defendant's wife, Julia, or their unborn child then supposed to be in its mother's womb. If the former, then plaintiff is entitled to recover a one-third interest in the lot. If the latter, then plaintiff takes nothing by her writ. This instruction further deprives defendant of the benefit of his entire testimony explaining why the Julia C. Edwards, the grantee in the deed, was not his deceased wife. It further deprives defendant of a very potent argument to the effect that the deed to Julia C. Edwards was executed by Julia A. Edwards, the wife, and that it is not likely that she would be grantor and grantee in the same deed, and engaged in the legal anomaly of making a deed to herself. The credibility of defendant's statement and its reasonableness is a matter for the jury. The matter involved is essentially one of fact, to be determined by the jury under proper instructions.

New trial.

ROBERSON v. GREENLEAF JOHNSON LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*)—MAINTENANCE OF OFFICE WITHIN STATE.

As required by Acts 1901, c. 2, § 49 (Revisal 1905, § 1179), every corporation must maintain its principal office in some county within the state, which fixes its residence for the purpose of suing and being sued, even though its charter permits it to have its principal office at a place out of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1935-1939, 1942-1946; Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*)—DOMESTIC CORPORATIONS—WHERE THEY MAY BE SUED.

A domestic corporation can be sued in the same venue as an individual, except railroads, under Revisal 1905, § 424, providing that they may be sued either in the county where the cause of action arose or in the county where plaintiff resided at the time the cause of action arose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1935-1939, 1942-1946; Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*) — ACTIONS — VENUE — "PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS" — "PRINCIPAL OFFICE."

The phrase "principal place of business," as used in Revisal 1905, § 422, providing that the principal place of business of a domestic corporation shall be its residence for purposes of suing and being sued, is synonymous with the words "principal office," as used in Revisal 1905, §§ 1137, 1176, 1179, respectively providing that, in the formation of a corporation, the location of the principal office in the state must be set forth in the certificate of incorporation, that the board of directors may change the principal office, and that the meeting of stockholders shall be at the principal office in the state.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5559, 5560.]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*) — ACTION—VENUE—STATUTE.

Revisal 1905, § 422, providing that, for the purpose of suing and being sued, the place of business of a domestic corporation shall be its residence, does not change Revisal 1905, § 424, establishing the venue of actions in certain cases, nor deny plaintiff's right to sue a domestic corporation in the county in which he resides, except as to certain causes of action whose venue is fixed by other statutory provisions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1935-1939, 1942-1946; Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

5. DEATH (§ 36*)—ACTION—VENUE.

An action for wrongful death of an employé against the employer, a domestic lumber corporation, operating a private steam railroad for transporting its product, may be instituted in the county where the administratrix resided at the commencement of the action, and where she and the intestate resided when the cause of action arose, irrespective of whether the defendant is a railroad company or not, within the proviso to Revisal 1905, § 424.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 51; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Martin County; Gulon, Judge.

Action by H. A. Roberson, administratrix, against the Greenleaf Johnson Lumber Company. From the denial of a motion for change of venue, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff instituted this action against the defendant, a corporation, in Martin County, to recover damages for the negligent killing of her intestate, J. W. Roberson, while in the service of the defendant. The injuries resulting in immediate death of Roberson were received by him in Warren county. His honor found the following facts: "That the plaintiff administratrix and her intestate were residents of the county of Martin at the date of the alleged death of intestate. That the Greenleaf Johnson Lumber Company is a corporation engaged in the lumber business, with its principal office and place of business in Warren county, and in connection with its lumber business is engaged in running and operating a steam railroad for the transportation of its own logs and lumber only, and neither equipped for nor engaged in the transportation of passengers thereon; said road being operated under and by virtue of the special acts of the General Assembly, Private Acts 1889, chapter 27." Whereupon his honor denied the motion for a change of venue, and the defendant excepted, and appealed to this court.

Winston & Matthews, for appellant.

MANNING, J. While section 3 of the act incorporating the defendant (Priv. Laws 1889, c. 27) provides that Norfolk, Va., shall be the place of its principal office, this court held in Simmons v. Steamboat Company, 113 N. C. 147, 18 S. E. 117, 22 L. R. A. 677, 37 Am. St. Rep. 614: "It has been held, without reference to any express provision of law or specific requirement of the charter, that it is the duty of a corporation to keep its principal place of business, its books and records, and its principal officers within the state which incorporates it, to an extent necessary to the fullest jurisdiction and visitatorial power of the state and its courts, and the efficient exercise thereof in all proper cases which concern said corporation." While at the time of that decision—1893—there was no statute specifically imposing such duty upon a corporation created under the laws of this state, it was held that there was "a general system of legislation" imposing such duty. But Acts 1901, c. 2, § 49, now section 1179, Revisal 1905, specifically requires that "every corporation shall maintain a principal office in this state, and have an agent in charge thereof, wherein shall be kept the stock and transfer books for the inspection of all who are authorized to see the same, and for the transfer of stock," and the same act, now section 1176, Revisal, provides the method to be pursued to change the location of the principal office from one place in the state to another in the state. Although a domestic corporation may be authorized to maintain an office at some point beyond the state, at which some corporate meetings may be held, under our present statutes the corporation is not absolved from the duty of maintaining a principal office in some county in this state, which fixes its residence in such county for the purpose of suing and being sued. Garrett v. Bear, 144 N. C. 23, 56 S. E. 479.

The words "principal place of business," as used in section 422, Revisal, must be regarded as synonymous with the words "principal office," as used in sections 1137, 1176, 1179, and other sections of the Revisal. The purpose of section 422, Revisal, was not to change the provisions of section 424, Revisal, or to deny to a plaintiff the right to bring his action against a domestic corporation in the county in which he resides, except, of course, in those causes of action where the venue for trial is particularly fixed by other sections of the Revisal, such as sections 419, 420, 421, Revisal. Propst v. Railroad, 139 N. C. 397, 51 S. E. 920. The sole purpose of this section was to remedy a defect in our statute law, as construed in Cline v. Manufacturing Co., 116 N. C. 837, 21 S. E. 791, and Farmers' State Alliance v. Murrell, 119 N. C. 124, 25 S. E. 785, in which cases it was held that a domestic corporation had no residence, within the meaning of section 424, Revisal (Code, § 192), although it had a principal office or place of business in the state, and, being without a legal residence in any particular county in the state, it could be sued, to its great inconvenience and loss, by a nonresident in any county designated in the summons. This defect was remedied, and a domestic corporation can be sued in the same venue as an individual, except railroads, under the proviso of section 424, Revisal.

His honor also finds that the intestate, at the time the injury was received resulting in his death, was a resident of Martin county, and that the plaintiff, his administratrix, was a resident of the same county at the commencement of the action. It is immaterial, in determining the proper venue of this action, to decide whether the defendant is a "railroad," within the meaning of that word as used in the proviso to section 424. Revisal; it being alleged that the plaintiff, an employé, was negligently killed on defendant's lumber road, because, if a "railroad" (as that word is applied in Blackburn v. Lumber Co., 151 N. C. 361, 67 S. E. 915, and cases cited), Martin county was the residence of the plaintiff and her intestate at the time the cause of action accrued, and, if not a "railroad," then the action was properly brought in that county, as the plaintiff resided therein at the commencement of the action.

We think his honor properly denied the motion of defendant to change the venue, and his judgment is affirmed.

JOHN L. ROPER LUMBER CO. v. HUDSON
et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

1. WILLS (§ 434*)—FOREIGN WILL—EVIDENCE.

A will of a citizen of another state, executed and probated in such state, it having been executed substantially according to the laws of North Carolina, and probated substantially according to its form, and thereafter filed and probated in proper form in North Carolina, is admissible in evidence, under Revisal 1905, § 3133.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 434; * Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1416.]

2. ESTOPPEL (§ 22*)—ACCEPTANCE AND SATISFACTION OF MORTGAGE.

H. and his privies are estopped to assert that he had not conveyed land to R., he having accepted a mortgage thereof from R., reciting that it was the "land deeded to me * * * this day by H.;" R. having thereafter for several years been in possession of the land, and having then deeded it to D., and shortly thereafter H. having made the entry on the record of the registration of the mortgage: "This mortgage is discharged by the mortgagor giving a deed to D., the present owner of the mortgage and notes described therein."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 27-51; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Jones County; Peebles, Judge.

Civil action by the John L. Roper Lumber Company against Sam Hudson and others. From a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The issues, with the responses of the jury, were as follows:

"(1) Is the plaintiff the owner of the lands described in the complaint? Ans. Yes.

"(2) Did the defendant, E. T. Bender, trespass on said lands? Ans. Yes.

"(3) What damages is plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant E. T. Bender? Ans. $23.53½."

The defendant Sam Hudson died pending the action and before trial, and his widow and son, his only heir at law, were made parties. It was admitted that the trespasses charged against Bender were committed by him as agent of Sam Hudson. In deraigning title the plaintiff offered a paper purporting to be the last will and testament of W. T. Dixon, who died domiciled in Baltimore, Md., where his will was admitted to probate by the decree of the Orphans' court of that city. It was attested by three witnesses, and the proof of its execution was taken by the register of wills of that court in a form substantially similar to the method prescribed by the statutes of this state. An exemplified copy of the will and probate was offered for probate in Jones county, but it was improperly done. The will was probated in Baltimore on August 25, 1904, and filed in the clerk's office of Jones county November 18, 1908. When his will, as recorded in Book of Wills of Jones County, was offered in evidence, upon objection by defendants, his honor permitted the clerk nunc pro tunc to order its probate in proper form, and it was received in evidence over defendant's objection. The plaintiff also offered a mortgage deed duly recorded in Jones county, dated October 4, 1883, by Randolph Harris and wife to Samuel Hudson, conveying the land in controversy to secure an indebtedness evidenced by notes aggregating $700. After describing the land, the mortgage contained this language: "It being all of the Thomas Hall tract of land deeded to me in a deed made to me this day by S. Hudson." The plaintiff proved and offered the following writing on the margin of the book of registration of the mortgage: "This mortgage is discharged by the mortgagor giving a deed to W. T. Dixon and Bro., the present owners of the mortgage and notes described therein. May 6, 1889. Samuel Hudson. Witness: J. A. Smith, Reg." The deed from Randolph Harris to W. T. Dixon & Bro. was offered in evidence, dated April 19, 1889, and was registered on May 21, 1889. The plaintiff offered declarations of Samuel Hudson tending to show a recognition of Dixon's title, which were admitted over defendant's objection. No deed from Samuel Hudson was offered in evidence. The defendants offered evidence of deeds antedating any of the deeds offered by plaintiff, placing the title in Samuel Hudson, the last one dated March 19, 1871. The plaintiff offered evidence tending to show possession by Harris from the date of his purchase to his sale to Dixon, and then by tenants of Dixon to his death, and by other mesne holders of the title to the plaintiff and its possession up to the bringing of this action. The acts constituting the alleged trespass were admitted. The defendant offered evidence to show that Hudson was indebted to Dixon and transferred notes sufficient to secure his indebtedness, and that the indebtedness was paid by the proceeds of the sale of lumber cut from the land. The evidence was excluded, and defendants excepted. Judgment was rendered upon the verdict for plaintiff, but the right of dower of the widow of Samuel Hudson was preserved. The defendants excepted and appealed.

Moore & Dunn and Loftin, Varner & Dawson, for appellants. Simmons, Ward & Allen, Thos. D. Warren, and P. M. Pearsall, for appellee.

MANNING, J. One of the exceptions seriously argued before us was to the admission in evidence of the will of W. T. Dixon. We have carefully examined the record and certification of its probate in the orphans' court of Baltimore, the court having jurisdiction to admit wills and testaments to probate, and, though the pages of the manuscript exemplified copy are not orderly arranged, yet an examination discloses every fact required by section 3183, Revisal 1905, to entitle the will to be admitted to probate and record in this state. Roscoe v. Lumber Co., 124 N. C. 42, 32 S. E. 889. The older decisions, as Drake v. Merrill, 47 N. C. 368, do not apply, for the reason that the statutes are not the same. The will was executed according to the laws of this state, and the probate substantially made according to our form, and that fact appears in the certified probate or exemplification of the will. We cannot sustain this exception.

The plaintiff, admitting the title to have been in Samuel Hudson and producing no deed from him, offered evidence which it contends amounts to an estoppel upon his heir at law and his agent, who claim title under Samuel Hudson. The other defendant is the widow of Hudson, who claims no title to the fee in the land, but who is entitled to her dower therein. The question presented by these exceptions is: Do the facts proven, taken together or singly, amount to an estoppel? These facts are that Samuel Hudson took a mortgage from Randolph Harris, in which was the recital, "It being all of the Thomas Hall tract of land deeded to me in a deed made to me this day by S. Hudson," and that thereafter, for several years, said Harris was in the actual possession of said land; that he conveyed the land to Dixon for the consideration of $700 on the 19th April, 1889, and in a few days thereafter—on May 6, 1889—the said Samuel Hudson made the following entry on the record of the registration of the mortgage: "This mortgage is discharged by the mortgagor giving a deed to W. T. Dixon & Bro. the present owners of the mortgage and notes described therein." And after that time the evidence tended to show that Hudson recognized the title to be in Dixon. The mortgage by Harris to Hudson was a conveyance to him of the legal title. "In some of the states a mortgage is held by statutory regulation or judicial construction to be simply a lien, leaving the legal estate in the mortgagor. In North Carolina and many other states the common-law prevails, and the mortgage deed passes the legal title at once, defeasible by subsequent performance of its conditions." Hinson v. Smith, 118 N. C. 508, 24 S. E. 541; Williams v. Teachey, 85 N. C. 402; Mod- lin v. Insurance Co., 151 N. C. 35, 65 S. E. 605, and cases cited. And this is true, notwithstanding the statute has prescribed simple methods of acknowledgment of satisfaction which restores the legal title in the mortgagor other than by deeds of defeasance. In Smith v. Fuller, 152 N. C. 9, 67 S. E. 48, it is held by this court that the entry of satisfaction on the margin of its registration by the proper person is conclusive of the fact of the discharge of the mortgage and its satisfaction as to strangers to the mortgage. In Fort v. Allen, 110 N. C. 183, 14 S. E. 685, this court in discussing estoppels by recitals in deeds quotes with approval the following language of Henderson, C. J., in Brinegar v. Chaffin, 14 N. C. 108, 22 Am. Dec. 711: "Recitals in a deed are estoppels when they are the essence of the contract; that is, where, unless the facts recited exist, the contract, it is presumed, would not have been made." It is inconceivable, unless it were true, that Hudson would have accepted a deed from Harris for land claimed by him, Hudson, containing a recital that he, Hudson, had conveyed the same land on the same day to Harris, and accepted it as security for $700, evidently the whole or a part of the purchase price. It is evident that the conveyance from Hudson to Harris was the basis of the contract, and without such a conveyance it is fair to assume the mortgage deed would not have been made. "Such, we think, is the necessary inference to be drawn from the recital in the deed." This inference is made conclusive by the fair interpretation of the entry of satisfaction of the mortgage deed. From that it is evident that Hudson had previously assigned the notes secured by the mortgage to Dixon, and recognized the discharge of those notes and the satisfaction of the condition of the mortgage by the deed of conveyance from Harris to Dixon. Harris settled the notes by making a deed to the land, and Hudson was satisfied. Raby v. Reeves, 112 N. C. 688, 16 S. E. 760; 2 Herman on Estoppel and Res Adjudicata, §§ 636, 917. In 2 Herman on Estoppel, § 926, the principle is thus stated: "Where a person takes from another a mortgage of lands, the record title which is in himself at the time such mortgage is executed, and in good faith assigns such mortgage, and it is foreclosed, neither such mortgagee nor his representatives or privies can set up such prior title in him to defeat the mortgage." Rogers v. Cross, 3 Chand. (Wis.) 34; Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1. 83-88, 7 L. Ed. 761. In that action Samuel Hudson was the original defendant. He died pending the suit, and his widow and only heir at law were made parties. They claim as privies to the title of Samuel Hudson—not by any adverse or paramount title. And we think it is clear from the authorities cited they are estopped, as Samuel Hudson was estopped, by the recitals in the deed, by the entry on the record of satisfaction of the mortgage deed as a recognition of Harris' title and his conveyance to Dixon & Bro. of the land. The right of the widow of Samuel Hudson to dower is preserved to her in the judgment of his honor. Having carefully examined the other exceptions taken at the trial, we do not think they can be sustained.

Finding no reversible error, the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

VICK v. TRIPP et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 29, 1910.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 681*)—PARTIES CONCLUDED.

A judgment partitioning land, an interest in which had been devised to one for life, with remainder to another, is a nullity as to the latter, he not having been a party to or considered in the proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1202; Dec. Dig. § 681.*]

2. ESTOPPEL (§ 27*)—JOINDER IN DEED.

There having been devised to S., for life, with remainder to T., a quarter interest in lands, and S. having acquired another quarter interest therein from R., partition proceedings were had, to which T. was not a party, and certain tracts were allotted to S. After S. had deeded one of such tracts to defendant, she executed to B. a deed of another of them, reciting that the land was allotted to S. in such proceedings, in which deed T. joined. Held, that the joinder of T. in the deed was at most a recognition by him that the tracts set apart to S. were the two shares in the partitioned land, one of which had been acquired from R. and the other devised to S. for life with remainder to T., thus avoiding another proceeding for partition, and did not estop him to claim an undivided interest as remainderman, at least in the land deeded to defendant, and was not an election to treat as his share as remainderman the land deeded to B.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 63-67; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

3. LIFE ESTATES (§ 11*)—WASTE BY TENANT FOR LIFE.

A life tenant of land cannot authorize her grantee thereof to commit waste as against the remainderman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 26*)—WASTE.

A tenant in common of land cannot as against his co-tenant commit such waste as is destructive of the estate, and not within the usual legitimate exercise of the right of enjoyment thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Peebles, Judge.

Civil action by Thomas A. Vick against Joshua Tripp, Jr., and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

T. R. Cherry died in the spring of 1890, in Pitt county, leaving a last will and testament, which was duly admitted to probate. After bequeathing all his household and kitchen furniture and all other personal property in his house to his wife, Sallie A. Cherry, he devised all the balance of his estate to his four surviving children, to wit, T. A. Cherry, R. D. Cherry, Mrs. Maggie S. James, and Lillian Cherry. The balance of his estate consisted of several town lots and several parcels of farm lands, including the land involved in this controversy. Subsequently T. A. Cherry died in 1891, leaving his last will and testament, which was duly admitted to probate in Pitt county, in which he devised all his estate to his mother, Sallie A. Cherry, "to have and to hold her life-time and to use for her benefit exclusively, at her death to Thomas Argall Vick," and, if he should die under 21 years, then other disposition was made. Thomas Argall Vick is the plaintiff, and was a nephew of T. A. Cherry. Subsequently, also, to the death of T. B. Cherry, R. D. Cherry, a son and devisee of the testator, T. R. Cherry, conveyed his undivided interest to his mother, Sallie A. Cherry, by deed duly recorded. Still later a special proceeding for partition was brought in the superior court of Pitt county by J. B. Cherry, S. A. Cherry, Lillie Cherry, Maggie James, and her husband, D. L. James, against Thos. J. Jarvis, H. E. Daniel, and another. J. B. Cherry, one of the plaintiffs in the partition proceeding, was a tenant in common with the testator, T. R. Cherry. The plaintiff Thomas Argall Vick, being at that time an infant of tender years, was not made a party, plaintiff or defendant, to said proceeding nor was any guardian ad litem or next friend appointed for him, nor any process served upon him or his name mentioned in the petition. The petition alleged that the plaintiffs were tenants in common, seised in fee and in possession of the lands and lots described, among them the land in this controversy. As a result of, and by the judgment of, the court in that proceeding begun in 1895, three lots were set apart to, and allotted to, Sallie A. Cherry, to wit, a storehouse and lot in Greenville, a lot in Greenville containing $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and the farm containing $192\frac{1}{2}$ acres, the land admitted to be in the possession of the defendant. It was admitted that the storehouse and lot at the date of the partition was worth twice as much as the other two parcels of land. On September 25, 1897, Sallie A. Cherry sold and conveyed the land in controversy to Henry Sheppard, and it has by mesne conveyances come to the possession of the defendant Tripp. At the date of these deeds the plaintiff was an infant, and did not join therein. Sallie A. Cherry died December 30, 1903, and this action was commenced April 21, 1909. On July 21, 1905, the plaintiff, then being of age, joined Sallie A. Cherry in a deed for the storehouse and lot, which in the description these words are used: "Which was allotted to the said S. A. Cherry in the division of the lands of T. R. Cherry and Company, as recorded in the clerk's office of Pitt county, in the record of the division of lands in Book 2, page 163, to which reference is hereby made." The plaintiff sues to be let into possession with the defendant, as tenants in common, entitled to an undivided one-half interest, for an accounting for rents, and timber cut and sold. The court intimated upon the foregoing facts: "(1) That plaintiff could not ratify the partition proceedings as to the quantity of land allotted to S. A. Cherry and repudiate it as to the quality of the estate. (2) That his joining in the deed to the store lot with S. A. Cherry was an election to take it as his share of the lands. (3) That, if he had not signed the deed to the store lot, the plaintiff had the right in equity to compel S. A. Cherry to take the two tracts conveyed to her as her share of the common property, and that the plaintiff, having by signing the deed to the store lot deprived defendant of this means of protecting himself, was in equity and good conscience estopped from claiming any interest in the locus in quo." To this intimation of his honor, plaintiff, having excepted, submitted to a nonsuit and appealed to this court.

W. F. Evans and Harry Skinner, for appellant. Jarvis & Blow, for appellees.

MANNING, J. As an adjudication of the right, title, or interest of the plaintiff in the common property, the judgment of the court in the special proceedings was a nullity. The plaintiff was not a party to that proceeding in name or by service of process, nor did any one pretend to appear for or represent him. It is contended, however, that he is effectually concluded and estopped by that judgment as if he were a party thereto, because 10 years thereafter he joined Mrs. S. A. Cherry—one of the parties to that proceeding—in a deed to one Brown, conveying one of the lots allotted to Mrs. Cherry, and because reference to that proceeding is made in the deed for a more particular description of the lot. But the deed to the locus in quo was made by Mrs. Cherry several years before the deed to Brown, and while the plaintiff, it seems from the evidence, was an infant. So that it is now contended that the plaintiff is estopped by a judgment entered in a proceeding to which he was not a party, and by a deed to which he was not a party and of which he had no knowledge, solely because he joined in the deed to Brown. It would seem that the fact that the plaintiff joined with Mrs. Cherry in the deed to Brown was, at least, an assertion of claim by him to an interest in the land conveyed and a recognition of such claim by Mrs. Cherry and the grantee. Otherwise, his joinder was wholly unnecessary. The defendants were strangers to that deed; they assert no title under it. If we concede that the recital in the descriptive clause was a recognition of the special proceedings, and could be held an estoppel upon plaintiff to deny the existence of the special proceedings and the conclusiveness of its effect, it could be taken advantage of only by the grantee in that deed, or those claiming under him. This is discussed in Lumber Co. v. Hudson (at this term) 68 S. E. 1065. In Johnston v. Case, 132 N. C. 795, 44 S. E. 617, Walker, J., speaking for this court, said: "It must be conceded that the description in one deed may be referred to in another deed for the purpose of identifying and making more certain the lines and boundaries of the land which is intended to be conveyed (Everitt v. Thomas, 23 N. C. 252; Reed v. Reed, 93 N. C. 462; Davidson v. Arledge, 88 N. C. 326; Hemphill v. Annis, 119 N. C. 514 [26 S. E. 152]), provided, as is said in the last case cited, the language used points so clearly to the explanatory deed or instrument as to make it possible to identify it, and provided, further, that the deed to which reference is made is produced at the trial." This is undoubtedly the ordinary purpose, but it may, in exceptional cases, in conjunction with other facts, constitute an estoppel upon the grantor as well as the grantee. The other facts in this case all tend to contradict, instead of supporting, an estoppel against the plaintiff, and would seem to limit the reference to the special proceedings to the purpose of aiding in the description of the lot. We do not think the doctrine of election applicable to or decisive of this case. This "doctrine rests on the maxim that he who asks equity must do it, and means that, where two inconsistent rights are presented to the choice of a party by a person who manifests a clear intention that he shall not enjoy both, he must accept or reject one or the other; in other words, that one cannot take a benefit under an instrument and then repudiate that instrument." Fetter on Equity, 51; Tripp v. Nobles, 136 N. C. 99, 48 S. E. 675, 67 L. R. A. 449; Norwood v. Lassiter, 132 N. C. 52, 43 S. E. 509, in which case several illustrations are given of the application of this doctrine. The facts of this case certainly do not disclose any of the circumstances essential to the application of the doctrine to the plaintiff, certainly to the extent that will in any way inure to the benefit of the defendants. At the most, it can be said that the joinder of the plaintiff in the deed containing the references to the special proceedings was only a recognition by him that the lots set apart to Mrs. S. A. Cherry in that proceedings were the shares of R. D. Cherry and T. A. Cherry as tenants in common in the lands devised under the will of T. R. Cherry, and the effect of this would be simply to avoid another proceeding for partition. Accepting this as the limit of conclusiveness upon plaintiff of the recital the deed executed by him with Mrs. Cherry, the plaintiff would be tenant in common of an undivided one-half interest in the other parcels of land allotted to Mrs. Cherry, and as the defendants have, by the deed of Mrs. Cherry, become the owners in fee of her interest, it must follow that the plaintiff is entitled to be admitted into possession of the locus in quo as tenant in fee of an undivided one-half interest, and to an accounting for the rents and profits since Mrs. Cherry's death, and for the timber sold. The life tenant, Mrs. Cherry, could not by her deed authorize her vendee to commit waste, nor could the defendant Tripp as tenant in common of an undivided one-half interest commit such waste as "is destructive of the estate, and not within the usual legitimate exercise of the right of enjoyment of the estate." Dodd v. Watson, 57 N. C. 48, 72 Am. Dec. 577; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. 671; McPherson v. McPherson, 33 N. C. 391, 53 Am. Dec. 416; Roberts v. Roberts, 55 N. C. 131. Nor can we see, as intimated by his honor, how plaintiff's joining with Mrs. Cherry in the deed to Brown, with its reference to the special proceedings, was a ratification by him, not only of the land set apart to Mrs. Cherry as the part she was entitled to under the deed of R. D. Cherry and the will of T. A. Cherry—her only sources of title to any interest—but also that she was the owner in fee thereof and that he, the plaintiff, became divested of all interest devised to him under the will of T. A. Cherry. We cannot perceive any element of ratification in this act further than we have already suggested as its ultimate limit. If we concede that plaintiff's act was a recognition of the partition proceedings to the extent of the allotment to Mrs. Cherry as the shares of R. D. Cherry and T. A. Cherry, the plaintiff, upon the death of Mrs. Cherry, became entitled as tenant in common to an undivided one-half interest in the lands so allotted; the other tenants in common being those claiming under Mrs. Cherry as the assignee of R. D. Cherry. This tenancy in common extended to each separate tract, unless, as in the case of the lot sold to Brown, the plaintiff had joined in a deed conveying it. This must be true regardless of, and unaffected by, the value of any particular tract. There has been no partition by deed or otherwise between those claiming under Mrs. Cherry, as the assignee or vendee of R. D. Cherry, and the plaintiff, as the devisee of the fee of the interest of T. A. Cherry under his will. For the reasons given, the judgment of nonsuit will be set aside and the action further proceeded in accordance with the rights of the parties.

Error from City Court of Polk; F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Cave Spring against M. L. Tuggle, administratrix, of W. R. Tuggle. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Mundy & Mundy, for plaintiff in error. Bunn & Bunn, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. The Bank of Cave Spring brought suit against the administratrix of W. R. Tuggle on two promissory notes, one for $25 and one for $100, each signed "H. B. Tuggle." The petition alleges that W. R. Tuggle, the defendant's intestate, borrowed the money from the bank for his individual use and executed the notes to the bank for that purpose; that in making the notes W. R. Tuggle was not the agent for H. B. Tuggle, and in no wise represented H. B. Tuggle, although he used his name thereon, and that H. B. Tuggle had no interest in the money or in the execution of the notes and had no knowledge of the transaction; that the bank did not know W. R. Tuggle by name; that he was introduced to the cashier of the bank as "Mr. Tuggle," and that he made the contract with the bank solely for his individual use; that he signed the name of H. B. Tuggle to both notes without any authority from H. B. Tuggle, and that the bank or its cashier thought that W. R. Tuggle was in fact H. B. Tuggle at the time. It is insisted that under these facts the two notes in question were the individual contracts of W. R. Tuggle, and not of H. B. Tuggle, and could have been enforced against W. R. Tuggle during his lifetime, and that after his death his estate was liable thereon. A general demurrer was filed on the ground that the allegations set forth no cause of action against W. R. Tuggle, deceased, and therefore none against his administratrix, the defendant. The demurrer was overruled, and this is one of the errors assigned. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount of the suit, principal, interest, and attorney's fees, and the defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled.

The controlling question in the case, made both by the demurrer and the assignments of error in the motion for a new trial, is whether or not, under the facts as alleged and clearly proved as alleged, the administratrix of W. R. Tuggle was liable on the notes. We think that, under the allegations which were conclusively proved by the evidence, there can be no doubt that the notes sued on were the individual contracts of W. R. Tuggle, and not of H. B. Tuggle. There was no evidence whatever that in making these notes and in borrowing the money W. R. Tuggle acted as agent for H. B. Tuggle, or that H. B. Tuggle had any interest whatever in the execution of the notes or in the money borrowed thereon. When one executes a promissory note for the purpose of raising money thereon for his own individual benefit, and there is no indication whatever of any undisclosed principal for whom he is acting in the execution of the note, and the payee of the note deals with him as the principal maker of the note, under the belief that the name signed to the note is his individual name, the party who thus makes the note and secures the money thereon is liable on the note, although he may have signed to the note a fictitious name or the name of another person. It is a general principle of law that one in the transaction of business may use a purely artificial name, or assume the proper name of some other natural person, and the party who thus adopts a fictitious name or who uses the name of the other person will be held liable on the contracts, where the evidence clearly shows that the name is artificial, or that the name of the other person was used without his authority, and that only the party using it is interested in the transaction of the business and in the contract so made. As stated in 29 Cyc. 207, "without abandoning his real name a person may adopt any name, style, or signature wholly different from his own name, by which he may transact business, execute contracts, issue negotiable paper, and sue and be sued." Pease v. Pease, 35 Conn. 181, 95 Am. Dec. 225. See, also, cases cited in 36 Century Digest, 3208.

It is insisted by the plaintiff in error that the common-law suit could not be brought on the notes in question, but that it was necessary to go into a court of equity to have the notes reformed, and that the city court of Cedartown had no equitable jurisdiction for this purpose. We do not agree with this contention. It was not necessary to have these two contracts or notes reformed. Under the undisputed evidence, the two notes are enforceable as the contracts of W. R. Tuggle, and the fact that he signed the name of H. B. Tuggle thereto is wholly immaterial. If he had signed any other name under the same facts, being himself exclusively interested in the contracts and the sole beneficiary of the money received on the contracts, he would be liable thereon. It would put the bank in this case to an unnecessary delay and expense to go into a court of equity to seek any reformation of these contracts because they are shown by the undisputed evidence to be the contracts of W. R. Tuggle, and not H. B. Tuggle.

It was objected that H. B. Tuggle was allowed to testify that he did not sign the notes or authorize W. R. Tuggle to sign his name thereon; that he had no knowledge that the notes were executed; that he had never himself been to the bank at Cave Spring or made any loan on notes at the bank; and that, before his death, W. R. Tuggle had admitted to him that he himself had secured on two notes, one for $25 and one for $100, money from the bank. It is insisted that, as H. B. Tuggle was interested in the result of the litigation and W. R. Tuggle was deceased, he was incompetent to testify. Not only the allegations of the petition, but the undisputed evidence, negative any liability in any event of H. B. Tuggle on the notes, and therefore we do not think that he was an incompetent witness, for in no contingency did he have any interest in the result of the litigation, and he was not a party to the contracts sued on. But, exclusive of this evidence, it is indisputably shown that W. R. Tuggle did execute the notes without the authority of H. B. Tuggle, without the knowledge of H. B. Tuggle, without an intimation of any agency for H. B. Tuggle, and solely for his own benefit, and he secured the money on the notes and used it exclusively in his own business. In other words, without regard to the testimony of H. B. Tuggle, the evidence as a whole demanded the verdict that was rendered, and, even if any error of law was committed, it was wholly immaterial.

Judgment affirmed.

SMITH v. STATE. (No. 2,659.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 28, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ESCAPE (§ 5*) — ESCAPE FROM MUNICIPAL CHAIN GANG—AIDING "ESCAPE."

The crime of escaping from a chain gang where municipal or misdemeanor convicts are worked is an act continuous in its nature, and is not finally completed until the convict is retaken. A person who knowingly assists a convict to "escape" from such a chain gang, or to elude the officers after he has once gotten away and prior to his recapture, is punishable under section 315 of the Penal Code of 1895.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Escape, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 5.*

Error from City Court of Columbus; G. Y. Tigner, Judge.

Robert Smith was convicted of aiding a prisoner to escape from a chain gang, and brings error. Affirmed.

Wynn & Wohlwender, for plaintiff in error. T. H. Fort, Sol., for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was convicted of violating section 315 of the Penal Code of 1895, which provides: "If any person shall aid or assist, or attempt to aid or assist, a prisoner to escape, so confined or imprisoned, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The expression, "so confined or imprisoned," refers to section 314 of the Penal Code of 1895, which provides: "If any person shall be convicted of an offense below the grade of felony, and shall escape from the chain gang or other place of confinement, or imprisonment for the violation of any municipal, county or state laws, and be thereafter retaken, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The evidence discloses that, while the chain gang of the city of Columbus was being worked upon the streets, one of the convicts escaped, and that later in the day he met the defendant and asked for an ax. The defendant furnished the ax, and the convict, in the defendant's presence, cut off from his person the shackles which he was wearing pending his service in the chain gang, and by this the convict was able finally to make good his escape.

There are several sections of the Penal Code which relate to rescue and escapes. Some of these sections relate to rescue and escapes from the personal custody of officers; others to escapes from places of confinement, using the word "confinement" in a broader sense than the mere limits of prison walls. As to escapes from the personal custody of officers, the offense is complete whenever the prisoner gets entirely away. So long as the pursuit is in progress and the fleeing prisoner is in sight of the officers or posse, the escape is not complete; but when he outruns them, or successfully eludes them and gets away, the escape is complete, and thereafter the offense of aiding an escape cannot attach to that particular transaction. Cf. Perry v. State, 63 Ga. 402 (3). We think (though it is not without some doubt, and only after considerable study of the question, that we have come to this conclusion) that the rule as to escaping from a chain gang is different. Where convicts are being worked upon a chain gang, they are not, at least during working hours, usually confined within any special walls or bounds of imprisonment. Often the confinement is constructive, rather than actual, especially in the case of a trusty. This would seem to justify giving to the word "escape" a broader meaning when applied to chain gangs than when applied to prisons generally or to the custody of officers.

It may also be noticed that section 314 of the Penal Code of 1895, quoted above, seems to make the retaking of the prisoner a part of the crime. This apparent absurdity came about through the process of codification. By an examination of the several acts upon which the Code section is based, it will be seen that the provision was that, if a prisoner should escape from the chain gang and be retaken, he should thereafter be indicted and punished as for a misdemeanor. We think that the object of framing the statute in this particular language was to make the crime of escaping from a chain gang a continuous act, never finally completed so as to start the running of the statute of limitations in the prisoner's favor until the time of a recapture, with the consequent result that a convict absenting himself from the chain gang and from the officers with the intention essential to an escape (that is, being absent otherwise than on some temporary mission consistent with his relationship as a convict), is to be considered as committing a violation of the statute from the time of his leaving until the time of his recapture. Therefore any one who knowingly aids a convict, or attempts to aid him, either to get away from the chain gang or to stay away, is guilty of violating section 315 of the Penal Code of 1895.

We think that the words, "so imprisoned," found in section 315 of the Penal Code of 1895, were inserted, not with the view of making it criminal to aid a convict only while he was actually in prison, but merely with the view of relating section 315 to section 314, and of distinguishing the aiding of the escape of a misdemeanor or municipal convict from the other offenses provided for in section 316, of aiding felony convicts to escape—the latter being a higher offense. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the transaction in the present case was criminal, and punishable under section 315 of the Penal Code of 1895.

FORD v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.
(No. 2,558.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 28, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 408*)—LOSS OF BAGGAGE—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF PLEADING.

The allegations of the petition as amended were sufficient to show a cause of action, and the court erred in dismissing it on demurrer.

2. CARRIERS (§ 397½*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—LIABILITY FOR BAGGAGE.

Carriers of passengers are liable for baggage as common carriers, except when destroyed by the act of God or the public enemy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1519-1528; Dec. Dig. § 397½.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 408*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—UNREASONABLE DELAY IN DELIVERING BAGGAGE—LIABILITY.

Where a carrier unreasonably delays a trunk, and the passenger is thereby deprived of his wearing apparel, or necessary property for his use, contained in the trunk, the measure of damages is the value of the use of the wearing apparel or other property so delayed, during the delay in delivering it to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 408.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 408*)—UNREASONABLE DELAY IN DELIVERING BAGGAGE—NOMINAL DAMAGES.

In an action by a passenger against a carrier for unreasonably delay in delivering his baggage, in the absence of proof of special damages from being deprived of the use thereof, plaintiff may recover nominal general damages.

Error from City Court of Camilla; H. C. Dasher, Jr., Judge.

Action by Lizzie Ford against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Cox & Peacock and Davis & Merry, for plaintiff in error. Spence & Bennet and Pope & Bennet, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Lizzie Ford brought suit against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company to recover damages for delay in delivering to her a trunk containing the wearing apparel of herself and two of her infant children. She alleged that she was a passenger on the line of the defendant company and had checked her trunk to the point of her destination, and that a reasonable time for the delivery to her of her trunk would have been 1 day, but it was unreasonably delayed for 11 days. Her petition as amended alleged that the trunk contained all the wearing apparel of herself and two minor children who were with her, and that by reason of the negligence of the defendant company in not safely transporting the trunk to its destination and delivering it to her upon demand she was tortiously deprived of the use of the clothing and wearing apparel of herself and of her children for a period of about 11 days, and that she was unable to buy additional clothing and extra wearing apparel as a substitute for that contained in her trunk, greatly to her inconvenience, injury, and damage. In her original petition she alleged that, because of the deprivation of the wearing apparel, she and her children were forced to go without a change of clothing for 9 days, and during this time the clothing which she and her children wore became so soiled and filthy as to be indecent, and, being so far from home and among strangers, it caused her "great physical uncomferture and mental anguish and pain." She laid her damages in the sum of $500. The court sustained a general demurrer and dismissed her petition, and this judgment is the error assigned.

It is well settled in this state that carriers of passengers are liable for baggage as common carriers; that is, they are liable for baggage at all events, except when destroyed by the act of God or the public enemy. Dibble v. Brown, 12 Ga. 224, 56 Am. Dec. 460; 3 Hutcheson on Carriers, § 1241. It is insisted by learned counsel for the railroad company that plaintiff cannot recover damages resulting because of "physical uncomferture and mental anguish and pain" due to the wearing of soiled clothes by herself and children. It is conceded that she could recover damages for the loss of her trunk, or for injury to the trunk or its contents, or for its unreasonable delay and detention, but that "physical uncomferture and mental anguish and pain," and inconvenience on account of her not having the use of her wearing apparel that was in the delayed trunk, were not elements of damage for which she would have the right to recover.

We are inclined to think that a passenger whose trunk has been unreasonably delayed, and who is thereby subjected to inconvenience resulting from the loss of wearing apparel, and is compelled to suffer physical discomfort by reason of its loss, would be entitled to damages upon proper proof, if the damages that are inflicted could be estimated in dollars and cents. Certainly the physical discomfort and inconvenience of having one's clothing lost would be an element of damage in contemplation of the parties to the contract of transportation, when the trunk was received for shipment from the passenger by the railroad company. It has been held that a passenger could recover the value of the use of his wearing apparel or property contained in a lost trunk, or in a trunk which has been unreasonably delayed, due to delay in delivery. We think that the measure of damages, where a trunk has been unreasonably delayed and a passenger deprived of his wearing apparel or necessary property for his use contained in the trunk, would be the value of the use of the wearing apparel or other property so delayed, during the delay in delivering it to him. The rule for the measurement of damage in such case must be the value of the clothing or property for use by the plaintiff during the time he was deprived of such use by the tortious conduct of the defendant. Southern Ry. Co. v. Wood, 114 Ga. 163, 39 S. E. 922; Gulf, Colorado, & Santa Fé R. Co. v. Vancil, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 427, 21 S. W. 303; 3 Sutherland on Damages, § 955; Fairfax v. N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. Co., 73 N. Y. 172, 29 Am. Rep. 119.

In the absence of proof of special damages, the plaintiff might recover nominal general damages. The petition as amended set forth a cause of action, and the court erred in dismissing it on demurrer.

ALLEN v. LOTT-LEWIS CO. (No. 2,165.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 28, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ESTOPPEL (§ 94*)—TO CLAIM TITLE TO PROPERTY SOLD AS ANOTHER'S.

The judgment rendered was in accord with the law and evidence. The decision is controlled by the ruling in Wall Lumber Co. v. Lott-Lewis Co., 5 Ga. App. 604, 63 S. E. 637. One who, without interposing any claim or otherwise objecting, stands by and sees his property sold as the property of another, is estopped from thereafter asserting his right. Nor has he any property in the fund realized from such a sale which he can convey to a third person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 276-284; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

Error from City Court of Tifton; R. Eve, Judge.

Claim action between P. A. Allen and the Lott-Lewis Company. From the judgment, Allen brings error. Affirmed.

J. J. Murray and R. S. Foy, for plaintiff in error. Jas. H. Price and Fulwood & Murray, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. This was a contest for certain funds in the hands of the sheriff as the proceeds of a lot of lumber. The Lott-Lewis Company brought the rule against the sheriff to require him to pay the money over to them on their sawmill supply man's lien for supplies furnished one Brady, the proprietor of the sawmill which manufactured the lumber, and Allen, the plaintiff in error, intervened, setting up a claim to the fund. In brief, Allen's intervention sets up that the lumber which was sold under Lott-Lewis Company's lien as the property of the sawmill man, Brady, did not belong to Brady at all, but was, at the time of the sale, the property of the W. M. Wall Lumber Company, all of whose rights were thereafter purchased by Allen. It appears to be agreed that Allen stands in the shoes of the W. M. Wall Lumber Company. He has, then, the same right to the fund in the hands of the sheriff that Wall would have; but he certainly can have no better right than Wall would have had if he had not put Allen in his place. For this reason we think the decision of the court below was properly controlled by the ruling in Wall Lumber Co. v. Lott-Lewis Co., 5 Ga. App. 604, 63 S. E. 637, and that the fund was properly applied to the lien in favor of the Lott-Lewis Company.

According to the testimony of the claimant himself, he (Allen) originally bought the lumber in question from Brady and sold it to W. M. Wall, doing business as Wall Lumber Company. This was before the foreclosure of the Lott-Lewis Company's lien, and without any notice of any lien. The lien fi. fa. was levied, and the lumber was sold under a "short order." The Wall Lumber Company took no steps to prevent the sale. It filed no claim to the lumber. On the contrary, the lumber was purchased at the sale by the witness (the plaintiff in error) for Wall, and his right as claimant of the fund depends upon the fact that Wall was unable to repay him the amount of money which, acting for Wall, he had bid at the sheriff's sale, otherwise than by transferring to him Wall's claim to the fund, in satisfaction of the debt. In the Wall Case, supra, we held that Wall was estopped from claiming, because he bought at the "short order" sale. This being true, he cannot convey to Allen a right to claim. But, aside from this, there is no view of the case in which Allen could claim the fund after the sale. The money realized at the sale must be treated as belonging to the defendant, Brady. Even if Wall and Allen had not estopped themselves from claiming the lumber by bidding for their own property, and thus waiving any title they might have had therein, they could not claim the fund. Their recourse would be to proceed against the purchaser for the property or its value.

Judgment affirmed.

BLOSSER CO. v. DOONAN. (No. 2,195.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 28, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ERRONEOUS DIRECTED VERDICT.

The court erred in directing the jury to find the verdict in favor of the plaintiff, merely submitting to the jury the question of the amount of the plaintiff's recovery. Under the evidence submitted, there was an issue as to the nature of the custom sought to be established, as well as to whether such a custom in fact existed, and it was issuable whether a new contract of bailment was made by the parties at the conclusion of the original contract.

2. BAILMENT (§ 12*)—GRATUITOUS BAILMENT—ESSENTIALS OF RELATION.

NEW TRIAL (§ 108*)—GROUNDS—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, the assumption of liability by the defendant being the leading point at issue, the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial upon the grounds of newly discovered evidence. The matters brought to the attention of the court, while in a sense impeaching, are also susceptible of being considered as substantive proof, probably leading to a different result on another trial. Besides, the matter referred to went to the fairness of the trial itself.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 65*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where a judge, passing on a motion for a new trial, did not originally try the case, his discretion is not as broad as it would be otherwise; but he still has discretion to grant a new trial, where the evidence preponderates against the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 130; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

2. SALES (§ 480*)—CONDITIONAL SALE.

Where a vendor sells personal property, reserving title to secure the purchase price, and the vendee, with the vendor's consent, sells the property to a third person, who assumes the payment of the balance of the purchase price to the original vendor, the latter cannot recover in trover the property from the third person without offering to put him in statu quo.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 480.*]

3. NEW TRIAL PROPERLY GRANTED.

On the material issue as to whether or not the plaintiffs knew of and consented to the sale of the property by the original purchaser to the defendants, the evidence preponderates against the verdict, and therefore the judge did not err in granting a new trial.

The cases in which the discretion of the judge of the superior court in the first grant of a new trial upon certiorari will not be disturbed are those in which there is some conflict in the evidence, and not those in which the decision is controlled wholly by law.

4. RELEASE (§ 27*)—APPEARANCE (§ 19*)—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 148*)—JURISDICTION—WAIVER OF OBJECTION.

A creditor may release a surety without affecting the liability of the principal; and it is of no concern to the principal what consideration moved the plaintiff to release his surety.

5. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The certiorari should have been dismissed.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Action by W. E. Mumford against W. G. Solomon and another. Judgment for plaintiff as reversed on certiorari, and he brings error. Reversed.

W. G. Solomon, Jr., had obtained a judgment in a justice's court against W. E. Mumford, and upon this judgment he sued out a garnishment. T. C. Dickson became surety for Solomon upon the garnishment bond. The garnishees answered that their indebtedness to the defendant was for wages as a laborer, and upon the trial of a traverse of the answer the judgment was in favor of the garnishees. Thereupon Mumford brought suit in a justice's court of Fulton county upon the garnishment bond, against Solomon as principal and Dickson as surety. A second original was served upon Solomon in Bibb county, and, though Dickson was not served, he afterwards waived service, in consideration of a release from liability promised him by Mumford. Solomon filed a plea to the jurisdiction, which was verified by his attorney, and he also filed general and special demurrers. The justice of the peace rendered a judgment in favor of Mumford against Solomon for $30 principal and costs of suit. Solomon thereupon sued out a writ of certiorari, which was sustained by the judge of the superior court; and the writ of error challenges the correctness of the latter judgment. The evidence for the plaintiff was to the effect that he had been put to the expense of $30 for attorney's fees. by reason of the process of garnishment which was sued out by the defendant Solomon; and there was no evidence other than the plaintiff's upon this subject. The bond which was the basis of the suit was conditioned for the payment by the principal of all costs and damages that might be sustained by Mumford in consequence of the garnishment, in the event that the money sought to be garnished was not subject to garnishment.

Hines & Jordan, for plaintiff in error. C. B. Rosser, Jr., for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). We think the judge of the superior court erred in sustaining the certiorari.

1. This case does not come within the class of cases where the first grant of a new trial upon certiorari falls within the discretion of the judge, and where such discretion will not be disturbed. Those cases in which the judge may, in his discretion, grant a first new trial are those in which there is a conflict in evidence, and in which the decision is not plainly controlled by the law. In the present case nothing is involved but a pure question of law.

2. The justice of the peace properly struck the plea to the jurisdiction. It was not verified by the defendant, but by his attorney. The Code (Civ. Code 1895, § 5081) requires pleas to the jurisdiction to be "pleaded in person"; and for this reason, not only the original plea, but also the several amendments thereto, were insufficient.

3. This left the principal defendant without any defense before the court, and the question then arises whether the court had jurisdiction of the principal defendant by reason of its jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person of the surety, Dickson. It is insisted that the action sounds in tort, and that therefore the justice's court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. This contention would have been sustained if the plaintiff's suit had not been on the bond, but had asked for punitive damages, or, in fact, for any damages accruing to the defendant other than the express items of damages specified in the bond itself. In this case, however, the plaintiff asked for nothing more than the damages which the bond covenanted he should receive in the event there was a breach. The plaintiff's right to recover does not arise ex delicto, but arises ex contractu. It is not an action for a wrong the plaintiff may have suffered by reason of any bad faith of the plaintiff independent of the covenant, but it is an action for a breach of covenant as expressed in the bond. See Fourth National Bank v. Mayer, 96 Ga. 728, 24 S. E. 453.

4. It is contended, however, that even if the action is not one in tort the court had no jurisdiction of the person of Solomon. It is also insisted that, though the plaintiff had the right to sue the principal on the bond in the county of the surety's residence, yet by reason of the release of the surety and the failure to effect service upon him there could be no recovery against the principal in Fulton county. The principal cannot derive any advantage from the fact that the plaintiff agreed to release the surety; and the surety (who alone can object to the lack of service upon himself) does not make any point in his own behalf, or offer any objection thereto. Whether his waiver of service was sufficient for all purposes or not, it was certainly sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of his person, unless the surety himself raised the point.

The plea to the jurisdiction is one of personal privilege, and when the surety waived service without protesting the jurisdiction, it was to be assumed that the court had jurisdiction of the surety. This carried with it, under section 4078 of the Civil Code of 1895, jurisdiction of the person of the principal. And even though the plaintiff had released the surety in consideration of his acknowledgment of service, this was of no concern to the principal. The release of the surety does not affect the principal; and there is a broad difference between jurisdiction and liability. The justice court evidently declined to enter judgment against the surety, because it thought his defense of release was sustained; but, in order to pass upon this question, it was necessary that the court should have had jurisdiction of the person of the surety, and it did have such jurisdiction. We think, therefore, there can be no question that the court had jurisdiction both of the subject-matter and of the person of the surety.

5. The evidence sustained the judgment of the justice court, because the evidence that the plaintiff had assumed a liability of $30 for attorney's fees was not disputed. The certiorari should have been dismissed.

Judgment reversed.

1. NONSUIT ERRONEOUS.

The plaintiff proved his case as laid, and it was error to award a nonsuit.

2. SALES (§ 445*)—ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

According to the evidence for the plaintiff, he purchased borings and turnings from a pile of such material which appeared to be merchantable, to be loaded and shipped by the defendant to a buyer to whom the plaintiff had sold them. If the plaintiff had seen the car after it was loaded by the defendant, and after full opportunity for inspection had accepted it, a nonsuit might have been proper, because he would have waived all defects discoverable by ordinary care. But there was no proof that the car of material shipped by the defendant was taken from the pile which the plaintiff saw at the time of the purchase, and, from the testimony in behalf of the plaintiff as to the character of the turnings and borings he saw and as to the nature of merchantable turnings and borings in general, considered in connection with the testimony as to the very different character and the much inferior quality of the shipment received by the plaintiff's customer, the jury would have been authorized to infer that the scrap iron which was shipped was obtained from a different pile and was entirely distinct from the material actually purchased by the plaintiff, or that dirt and refuse had been added to that which he did see.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by the Atlanta Skirt Manufacturing Company against M. B. Jacobs. There was a directed verdict for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Horton Bros. & Burress, for plaintiff in error. Mayson & Johnson and W. D. Ellis, Jr., for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The Atlanta Skirt Manufacturing Company sued Jacobs in a justice's court on three promissory notes, and by consent of all parties the cases were appealed to the superior court and consolidated. Jacobs' defense to the notes was his discharge in bankruptcy. To avoid this discharge the plaintiff relied on section 17 of the bankruptcy law (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428]) as amended in 1903 (Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 5, 32 Stat. 798 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1310]), which provides as follows: "A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as * * * are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations." In support of this avoidance the plaintiff proved that for several years prior to the bankruptcy, and prior to the giving of the notes, Jacobs had been running an account with it, and had from time to time given his notes for balances due. Some of the notes involved in this suit were given about 30 days before the failure, which was involuntary. It was estimated by the plaintiff and his witnesses that at that time the stock of goods in the defendant's shop was only about one-fifth as valuable as it was 30 days before, when some of the goods represented by the notes were purchased. The schedule in bankruptcy showed liabilities of $15,634.35, and assets aggregating approximately $13,000. It was admitted that the notes were properly scheduled. Jacobs made no positive representation or statement as to his condition at the time he purchased the goods from the plaintiff. The goods were sold by the latter on the faith of past dealing, and on the confidence based on the appearance of prosperity indicated by the large size of the stock. There were, however, other circumstances from which it could be inferred that very soon after these goods were bought the defendant "made way" with a part of his stock of goods otherwise than in the due course of trade.

1. The judge directed a verdict for the defendant. In our opinion this was error. A discharge in bankruptcy does not release a bankrupt from liability for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations. It is true that in order to avoid the discharge it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show that the liability upon the notes survived in spite of the discharge, because the notes represented the purchase price of goods obtained by false pretenses or false representations.

2. But the duty of weighing the various facts and circumstances introduced upon the issue, and of determining whether they could reasonably support the conclusion that the goods were obtained with a fraudulent intent, was at last one for the jury. Fraud is not to be presumed, but slight circumstances may suffice to carry conviction of its existence.

3. A false representation may consist in the purchasing of goods with no present purpose of paying for them, and in contemplation of a fraudulent insolvency. To buy goods without a present intention to pay is a false representation of one's intention. Therefore to buy goods without a present intention to pay will avoid a discharge. Of course, ordinarily, promises to perform some act in the future will not amount to fraud in legal acceptance, although subsequently broken without excuse. This is especially true of a promise to pay money. Otherwise any breach of contract would amount to fraud. But the intent with which a promise, which has been violated, was made, is for the jury. There was before the jury a combination of facts and circumstances (which we have not recited above) from which the jury might have inferred that the goods were bought by the defendant with such a purpose. It was at least significant that the number of the identical skirts sold by the plaintiff, found in the defendant's store, was multiplied after the discharge in bankruptcy.

Judgment reversed.

Upon Rehearing.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 918*) — REVIEW — AMENDMENT TO PLEADING.

Where a party at the trial term tenders an amendment to his pleading without the affidavit required by statute, the court's refusal to allow the amendment cannot be reviewed, unless it affirmatively appears that the judge refused the amendment upon its merits, and not upon the technical ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3710; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 919*) — REVIEW — AMENDMENT TO PLEADINGS.

Where there is a failure to verify a pleading filed as matter of right and the court strikes it, it will be presumed that the court struck it for some matter affecting the merits, because, the failure to verify being a matter of form, it would be waived, unless specially objected to by the opposite party. But where a party tenders an amendment which may be rejected unless presented in a certain form and the amendment states matters good in substance, but is deficient in form, it will be presumed that the court's refusal thereof is for lack of form.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3718; Dec. Dig. § 919.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 382*) — GENERAL DENIAL — MATTERS PROVABLE.

Matter which is equally available for defense, whether the allegations of the petition be true or not, cannot be received in evidence under a general denial equivalent in effect to the old plea of general issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1280-1294; Dec. Dig. § 382.*]

Hill, C. J., dissenting.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; A. E. Calhoun, Judge.

Action by the Atlanta Sand & Supply Company against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Case certified to the Supreme Court and questions answered (68 S. E. 807), and judgment affirmed on rehearing.

McDaniel, Alston & Black, for plaintiff in error. Moore & Pomeroy and W. W. Hood, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment reversed.

Upon Rehearing.

RUSSELL and POWELL, JJ. In the original opinion the judgment was reversed because the trial court erred in rejecting certain evidence offered by the defendant, tending to show that notwithstanding that it had failed to furnish cars in compliance with the plaintiff's demand, under rule 9 of the Railroad Commission, the failure was occasioned by facts and circumstances which, under the decision of the Supreme Court in answer to the certified question presented to them in this case, would have excused it for not so doing. In the motion for rehearing the point is made that the defendant's original answer contained only a denial of the paragraphs of the plaintiff's petition in which was set up a violation of the rule through the failure of the defendant to furnish cars upon certain given dates and for a designated period thereafter, and that, as this rejected evidence tended to support only these matters of justification or avoidance, it was not admissible under the original plea. They say further that, while the defendant in the court below (the plaintiff in error here) did tender an amendment setting up these additional matters of defense, the court disallowed it. In the record before us one of the exceptions is to the disallowance of this amendment. The ground on which the court refused to allow it does not appear from the record; the recital being merely that on motion of the plaintiff the court overruled and disallowed the amendment. The amendment was not tendered until the trial term, and was not accompanied by the affidavit required by the statute in cases where an amendment is offered after the first term. To our minds, therefore, the case is squarely controlled as to this feature by Columbus Show Case Co. v. Brinson, 128 Ga. 437, 57 S. E. 871. We cannot reverse the judgment of the lower court for refusing to allow an amendment to the pleading at the second term, where this affidavit is not filed, unless it affirmatively appears that the judge refused the amendment upon its merits, and not upon the technical ground. Where there is a failure to verify pleadings which are filed as a matter of right, the rule is different from where it is where a party merely tenders an amendment as to which he must secure the consent of the court before it can be filed as part of the record. In the former case (where, say, a plea is regularly filed, but not verified, and the court on motion strikes it), it would be presumed that the court struck it for some matter affecting the merits, because, the failure to verify being merely a matter of form, it would be waived, unless specially objected to by the opposite party. But where a party tenders an amendment which the law says may be rejected unless presented in a certain form, and the amendment states matters good in substance, but is deficient for lack of form, it will be presumed that the court refused it on the ground on which he had the right to refuse it, namely, the lack of form. We are clear that the matters contained in the amendment cannot be shown under the general denial contained in the original answer. They were purely matters of justification or avoidance. They did not tend to deny any one of the particular facts upon which the plaintiff relied, but merely attempted to negative liability under the law by showing additional facts which would exculpate the defendant from the apparent liability. The original answer contained no hint that the defendant would attempt to show at the trial matters which would tend to defeat the plaintiff's right to recover, notwithstanding they (the plaintiffs) proved to the letter every allegation of fact contained in their petition. Matter which is equally available for defense, whether the allegations of the petition be true or not, cannot be received in evidence under a general denial equivalent in effect to the old plea of general issue. It is our opinion, therefore, that this court was in error in reversing the judgment of the lower court for the exclusion of this evidence. The rehearing having been granted, it is hereby ordered that the judgment hitherto rendered be vacated, and that the judgment of the lower court be affirmed.

HILL, C. J. dissents.

HILL, C. J. (dissenting). I cannot concur in the opinion of the majority of the court. I think the decision of the court as heretofore rendered is right, and should be adhered to. The suit was to recover damages against the railroad company for a violation of rule 9 of the Railroad Commission of the state. At the appearance term the defendant filed a plea of general issue, and at the trial term it filed an amendment to the plea, which was disallowed by the court, and exceptions pendente lite were preserved. At the conclusion of the evidence, the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff. The writ of error challenges the constitutionality of rule 9 on various grounds, and also the correctness of the ruling of the trial judge in disallowing the amendment to the plea and in subsequently, on the trial of the case, excluding from evidence testimony offered by the defendant tending to show that it had not violated that rule, and was not indebted to the plaintiff in any sum on account of its failure to comply with its request to deliver the cars. This court certified to the Supreme Court the constitutional questions made, and also certified to the Supreme Court the question whether as a matter of law the defendant railroad company in defense to the action could set up certain matters to prove that it was not at fault in not furnishing the cars requested by the plaintiff, these matters of defense being covered by the amendment to the plea, which was disallowed by the court, and being also embraced in the testimony which was excluded from evidence by the court. The Supreme Court answered the questions certified to it, sustained the constitutionality of the rule in question, and also held that some of the defenses set up by the defendant and offered to be proved by it were valid and sufficient under the law. It is not necessary in this place to set out the defenses which the Supreme Court holds could be made by the railroad company in such case. Reference is had to the decision of the Supreme Court on that question as reported in 135 Ga. —, 68 S. E. 807 et seq. As the trial court had expressly disallowed the amendment setting up the defenses, and had subsequently rejected the testimony which was offered under the plea of general issue (for the amendment had been rejected when the testimony was offered), this court in a brief headnote reversed the ruling of the trial court in excluding the evidence which the Supreme Court held would, if proved, have constituted a valid and sufficient defense to the suit. I think the judgment of this court was a necessary corollary to the decision of the Supreme Court on the question as to the sufficiency of the defense which the railroad company attempted to establish by the testimony which was excluded from evidence by the trial court. In my opinion this court should have gone further in its decision, and should have also held that the trial court erred in disallowing the amendment to the plea. But, regardless of the question whether the amendment to the plea was properly or improperly disallowed, I think that the testimony which was excluded by the trial judge set up matters of defense to the plaintiff's cause of action, and was admissible under the general denial of liability filed by the defendant company. In other words, I do not think that the amendment which the court disallowed was essential to the introduction of the evidence which the Supreme Court held would constitute a good defense, and which this court held that the latter court erred in rejecting.

My associates think that the amendment was properly disallowed because of the absence of the affidavit required by section 5057 of the Civil Code of 1895, as amended by the act of 1897 (Acts 1897, p. 35). Of course, the omission of this affidavit furnishes a reason for refusing to allow an amendment offered at the trial term, of which notice was not given by the original plea or answer. They insist that the record does not disclose upon what ground the trial judge based his judgment refusing to allow the amendment, and, as the omission of the affidavit was the only legal reason which he could have had for such refusal, they assume that his reason for so ruling was the fact that the amendment was not perfected by the statutory affidavit. I think it perfectly clear from the record that the trial court did not exclude the amendment because of the absence of the statutory affidavit referred to. I think the court treated this technical requirement of the law relating to the form of the affidavit as having been waived by the plaintiff, and that the amendment was disallowed because the allegations therein set up no defense to the suit. The record does not show that any specific objection to the amendment was made by the plaintiffs because of the absence of the affidavit. On the contrary, it shows inferentially that this formal defect was waived. It cannot be denied that the defect in question is amendable. Ward v. Frick Company, 95 Ga. 804, 22 S. E. 899; Rodgers v. Caldwell, 122 Ga. 279, 50 S. E. 95. And I think it also clear that, if the plaintiff does not object to the form of an amendment on this ground, he must be taken to have waived it. It seems to me that the plaintiff should be held to have waived this defect, if he does not specifically object to the answer on that ground, and allows the question raised by the proposed amendment to be considered and decided on the merits. It would be unfair to the defendant not to afford him an opportunity to amend by an objection as to the form of the proposed amendment. In the case of Ward v. Frick Company, supra, it was held: "It being, under the pleading act of 1893 [Acts 1893, p. 56], the duty of the judge of the superior court at each regular term to call all cases on the appearance docket, and hear and determine all objections made to the sufficiency of petitions and pleas, it is incumbent upon plaintiffs to make at that term their exceptions to pleas filed. Consequently, where to an action upon an unconditional contract in writing a plea was filed at the first term, which set forth a good defense, but was not sworn to by the defendants, and no objection was then made to it because of this defect, the plaintiff will be held to have waived the same so far as the term is concerned; and if, at a subsequent term, he moves to strike the plea because of such defect, the court should then allow the defendant to complete the plea by a proper verification." In the case of Rodgers v. Caldwell, supra, it is held that where a plaintiff verifies his petition in conformity with the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 4965, the omission of the defendant to likewise verify a plea interposed by him is an amendable defect which can be taken advantage of by the plaintiff only at the appearance term of the case. Section 4965 of the Civil Code, supra, is mandatory. It says that the defendant shall verify his plea or answer, where the plaintiff files a petition accompanied by an affidavit that the facts stated therein are true to the best of his knowledge and belief; and, under the act of 1897, the court can allow an amended answer or plea without the affidavit, if within its discretion it sees proper to do so. And yet, under section 4965 of the Civil Code, if the plaintiff does not object to the form of the plea at the first term, he is held to have waived it; and by analogy it would seem to follow that when the amendment to the answer or plea is offered by the defendant, if the plaintiff does not object to the amended plea or answer because of the omission of the affidavit required by the act of 1897, it would be a waiver of the formal defect. In 22 Encyclopedia of Pleading and Practice, p. 1052, the general rule on this subject is stated as follows: "It is usually held that the fact that a pleading is not properly verified, as required by statute, is not sufficient to oust the court of its jurisdiction, but is merely an irregularity, and that as such the objection may be waived if not raised at the proper time and in the proper manner, and cannot be raised for the first time after issue joined or on appeal."

Here it is perfectly apparent that the objection to the form of the amended answer was not made when the amendment was offered. If it had then been made, the amendment could have been perfected, and doubtless would have been perfected by an amendment with the required statutory affidavit.

In the original brief filed by the defendant in error in this court the point was not made that the amendment was defective because of the absence of the affidavit. It was first made in a supplemental brief. The action of the court below in rejecting the amendment rebuts the assumption that it was rejected because of the failure to have the proper verification. The order disallowing the amendment is as follows: "This amendment overruled and not allowed. Let the copy be filed, however." If the objection to the plea was one of form, would the court have required that such defective plea be preserved in the files of the case? On the contrary, if the amendatory answer or plea had been filed before the ruling of the court, would not the court have ordered that this defective plea be stricken from the files? 22 Enc. of P. & P. 1047. It is perfectly clear to my mind that the trial judge considered the plea on its merits and disallowed it because in his opinion it set up no defense to the suit. Not only does the record clearly show that in the trial court the amendment was objected to on its merits and ruled upon on its merits, but the record made by this court, and by the Supreme Court in its instructions on the questions certified to it, all lead to the same conclusion. As before stated, the learned counsel for the defendant in error in this court in their original brief and argument ably and elaborately contested the merits of the answer as proposed by the amendment. In the brief or argument, there was no hint that the amendment was disallowed because no affidavit was attached as required by the act of 1897. This court certified the question as to whether the allegations of the amendment set up a valid and sufficient defense, and the Supreme Court considered the defense as made by the amendment on its merits, and ruled that some of the matters of defense set out were sufficient and some were insufficient. It would seem that the learned and able counsel would not have put this court and the Supreme Court to the labor and trouble of considering questions purely of an academic character, but would have insisted that the question was eliminated from the case and the amendment was rejected because of the absence of the statutory affidavit. So far as I am individually concerned, I am unwilling to encourage a consumption of the valuable time of this court and of the Supreme Court by holding in effect that counsel can engage in useless and unnecessary discussions of legal questions and invoke a decision thereon when the questions are not properly before the court, or, after arguing a case on the merits and obtaining a decision on the merits, to subsequently change base and on a formal technicality obtain an advantage not contemplated by the original argument. I therefore think that the trial court erred in rejecting the amendment. I think that the record clearly shows that the omission of the affidavit to the amendment as required by the act of 1897 was waived by the conduct of the plaintiff or his counsel, and that the whole record from the trial court to the Supreme Court shows conclusively that the matters of defense set up by the amended answer were considered solely on their merits, and that the only logical conclusion from the decision of the Supreme Court is that it set up a valid defense, and the court erred in disallowing it.

But I think that the proposed testimony which the Supreme Court held would have constituted a good defense, and the question of which this court held was error, was admissible regardless of the amended answer. In my opinion it was admissible and pertinent evidence under the general denial of liability contained in the original plea or answer. The suit was for a violation of rule No. 9 of the Railroad Commission. The charge against the company was in effect that it was at fault in the violation of this rule, and that this fault on its part had resulted in damage to the plaintiff, and it claimed the liquidated damages fixed by the rule. The defendant in the original plea denied that it was guilty of any of the wrongs charged against it by the plaintiff; in other words, it denied that it had violated rule No. 9 of the Commission, or was at fault. When the Railroad Commission made the rule, it certainly contemplated that there might be some excuse or exculpation for the failure of the railroad company to comply with its terms. These excuses were necessarily a part of the rule itself, and were in the mind of the commission when the rule was promulgated, and these excuses should be considered as an essential part of the rule as plainly so as if they were written by express terms therein. The Supreme Court in this case has stated specifically that some of these excuses offered to be proved by the defendant constituted a defense, and it does seem to me that the general denial of the violation of the rule, a denial of the charge that the defendant was at fault, all tend to "disprove the plaintiff's cause of action," and evidence would be admissible even without a special or affirmative plea to that effect. There was no necessity to plead excuses or defenses which inhere in and are a part of the rule as contemplated by the commission and ruled as implied by the Supreme Court. In other words, where the plaintiff asserts that the defendant has violated the rule and is at fault and has damaged him on account of the violation, a denial of the violation and of such fault on its part would be sufficient pleading to admit testimony in evidence in support of the defense, and no other pleading would be necessary. The defendant in this case denied the charge that it had violated the rule of the commission or was at fault, and offered to show certain excuses as proof that the rule was not violated. Why should it be necessary to assert by an affirmative plea these excuses if they are lawful and inhere in the rule? Certainly these excuses are defenses. It was so held by the Supreme Court, and, if they are defenses, they tend "to disprove the plaintiff's cause of action," and, under section 5053 of the Civil Code, they are admissible without any special plea. They are in no sense matters of confession and avoidance, but are strictly matters of denial and defense. Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. Bulce, 88 Ga. 181 (4), 14 S. E. 205; Price v. Bell & Son, 88 Ga. 740, 15 S. E. 810; Bliss on Code Pleading, § 327.

WILLIAMS v. EMPIRE MUT. ANNUITY & LIFE INS. CO. (No. 2,077.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 28, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSURANCE (§§ 137, 141, 349, 372*)—EVIDENCE (§ 408*)—PAYMENT OF FIRST PREMIUM—WAIVER—CONDITION SUBSEQUENT—WAIVER OF FORFEITURE.

If a policy of life insurance, which on its face acknowledges the receipt of the first premium, is (without fraud, accident, or mistake) delivered to the insured by the company or its authorized agent, and the first premium is not in fact paid in cash, it will be conclusively presumed that the company intended to waive the payment of the first premium in cash and to extend credit to the insured. But the acknowledgment of the receipt of the premium, as contained in the face of the policy, may be explained by showing that, contemporaneously with the delivery of the policy, the insured executed his promissory note, payable to the company, for the premium, and that, by the terms of the policy, failure to pay the premium note at maturity would forfeit the policy. In such a case the insurance would become effective upon the delivery of the policy, subject to forfeiture for breach of the condition subsequent, namely, the nonpayment of the note; but, like other forfeitures for failure to comply with condition subsequent, the company may waive the forfeiture arising from failure to pay the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 231-245, 253-262, 891, 895-902, 941; Dec. Dig. §§ 137, 141, 349, 372;* Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1835; Dec. Dig. § 408.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 392*)—FORFEITURE FOR NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUM—WAIVER.

Where, in such a case, the company takes a note for the premium, and it is provided in the policy that if the note is not paid at maturity the policy shall be void, but the note represents the premium for an entire year, the company, by insisting upon the payment of the note in full after its maturity, will be held to have waived its right to forfeit the insurance during the year, especially where the note is an interest-bearing obligation. The law, following equity, will not allow the company either to collect or to assert its right to collect a full year's premium out of the insured, and yet declare the policy void at an earlier date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1069; Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 349*)—EVIDENCE (§ 418*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—VARYING SEALED INSTRUMENT—FORFEITURE FOR NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.

Where, however, a company allows a policy acknowledging receipt of the first premium to be delivered to the insured by its agent, under an arrangement whereby the company extends the credit for the insurance premium to the agent, and the agent, to protect himself, takes from the insured a promissory note, under seal, payable to the agent personally, the company will not be allowed to declare the policy forfeited for the nonpayment of the note given by the insured to the agent, under a clause in the policy which provides that if a note be taken for the premium, and the note be not paid at maturity, the policy shall be void, although the agent transferred the note of the insured to the company in payment or as security for the company's account against the agent for the amount of the premium.

(a) Where a sealed instrument is payable to a designated person, it is not permissible to show by aliunde testimony that in the transaction the payee was acting as agent for a third person, so as to make the liability of the payor a liability to that third person, instead of a liability to the person designated as payee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 897; Dec. Dig. § 349;* Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1906-1911; Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

4. INSURANCE (§ 664, 669*)—ACTION ON POLICY—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—WAIVER OF FORFEITURE—INSTRUCTIONS.

It is error to give an instruction which is wholly irrelevant to the issues between the parties and unsupported by the evidence. Proof that a notice was sent to the insured calling upon him to pay a premium, or notifying him when the next premium is due, may be admitted, to show a waiver of forfeiture on the part of the insurance company, even though it does not appear that the insured actually received such notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1637; Dec. Dig. §§ 664, 669.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 141*)—COMPETENCY—TRANSACTION WITH DECEDENT.

The agent of a corporation primarily is not incompetent to testify as a witness in behalf of the corporation concerning communications between himself, as such agent, and another, since deceased, whose assignee or transferee is the opposite party to the case, even though such latter party be insane.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 576-579; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 140*)—COMPETENCY—TRANSACTION WITH DECEDENT.

A person not a party to the suit, but who is interested in its result, is not competent to testify as to transactions or communications with an insane or deceased person in an action brought by the assignee or transferee of the insane or deceased person, although, as agent of the corporation, he might be generally competent as a witness, if he were not personally interested in the result of the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 615; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

7. CONTRACTS (§§ 278, 316*)—INSURANCE (§ 392*)—FORFEITURES—NATURE—RECALL OF WAIVER.

A forfeiture occurs, if it results at all, immediately upon a breach of the condition of the contract on which it is based; and, forfeitures not being favored in law, a waiver of the forfeiture once made cannot be recalled. The demand for payment in full of a future premium subsequent to the breach of a condition which would have entitled the insurer to insist upon a forfeiture of the contract will be held to be a waiver of the forfeiture, and be treated as an acknowledgment that the delinquent policy holder is still entitled to the benefits conferred by his contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1459; Dec. Dig. §§ 278, 316;* Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1069; Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

8. INSURANCE (§ 392*)—FORFEITURE FOR NON-PAYMENT OF PREMIUM NOTE.

In case a note is accepted in payment of the premium upon a policy of insurance, and in the policy it is stipulated that failure to pay such note at maturity will void the contract, the retention of the note and an attempt to collect it in full after its maturity is a waiver of the right of forfeiture. An insurance company which takes a note for a premium may, upon default in the payment of the note, forfeit the policy of insurance, if the contract so stipulates; but it cannot forfeit the policy and collect the entire note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1069; Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

9. INSURANCE (§§ 186, 349*)—FORFEITURE FOR NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUM NOTE—ACCEPTANCE OF AGENT'S LIABILITY INSTEAD OF PREMIUM—RIGHT TO GIVE CREDIT FOR PREMIUMS.

If the agent of the insurance company, who is not authorized to accept anything but cash in payment of a premium, takes a note for the first premium, and thereby becomes personally liable to the company for the cash, and the company holds him individually responsible for the amount of the premium, the nonpayment of the note does not forfeit the policy. An insurance company has the right to accept the assumption of personal liability on the part of its agents in lieu of the payment of a premium in behalf of another, to the same extent that it must look to its authorized agent to deliver or pay over to the company premiums actually paid to him in cash. An insurance company, in the absence of any provision to the contrary in its charter, may extend credit in the payment of insurance premiums, and such credit may be extended to an agent, who has assumed the payment of a premium in behalf of the insured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 396-398, 891, 895-902; Dec. Dig. §§ 186, 349.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by George W. Williams, guardian, against the Empire Mutual Annuity & Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Hines & Jordan, for plaintiff in error. Maynard & Hooper and Perry S. Pearson, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. 1. William Harrison Williams secured a policy of insurance with the Empire Life Insurance Company, dated August 5, 1905, and was given a receipt for the first annual premium on the policy, which stipulated that the regular premium up to the 5th day of August, 1906, was paid. The receipt contained a stipulation that, to be valid, it must be signed by the president or secretary and countersigned by an authorized agent of the company. It was countersigned on August 9, 1905, by Langford, Jones & Co., agents. The date upon which the secretary signed the receipt does not appear. On August 3, 1905, William H. Williams executed and delivered a note for $39.70, payable to the order of Langford, Jones & Co. This note was not paid at its maturity on December 1, 1906. Thereafter it was sent to the Bank of Soperton for collection, and was in the hands of this bank at the time that Williams, the insured, met his death, in the latter part of July, 1906. George W. Williams, as guardian for Roy Williams, the beneficiary of the policy, who was a brother of the insured, and who is non compos mentis, brought suit upon the contract of insurance. The insurance company defended upon the ground that the first annual premium was never paid by the insured, or by any one for him; that a note was given for the first annual premium, which was never paid, and that by the terms of the policy the failure to pay the note at maturity operated to forfeit the policy; and that, on account of the forfeiture, the policy was not in force at the time of the death of William Harrison Williams, the insured. The company admitted a prima facie case in behalf of the plaintiff, and took upon itself the burden of establishing its freedom from liability. The jury found in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff excepts to the judgment refusing a new trial.

The first question which arises in the case is the determination of the relation which the receipt bears to the policy. Is it independent of or a part of the contract of insurance? The view of the other members of the court on this question is stated in the first headnote; personally, the writer goes further. Nothing is better settled than that receipts generally are subject to explanation or denial as evidence of payment, and that parol evidence is competent for this purpose. If the receipt in this case cannot be considered a part of the contract, then the instruction of the judge, of which complaint is made, was correct, because no one is estopped by a receipt, for it is such a writing as is subject to be varied or explained by the party executing it. But inasmuch as the payment of the first premium is an essential prerequisite to the creation of a contract of insurance, and the defendant admits in its answer that the contract was entered into and executed as alleged by the plaintiff, it seems to me that the receipt becomes a part of the contract. As such, it is not subject to be varied by parol, and consequently I think that the judge erred in charging the jury that they were to determine whether or not the first premium was in fact paid. Of course, the antecedent evidence upon that subject was inadmissible; but that point is not made in the first exception, and will be dealt with later. I think that, where a policy of life insurance acknowledges receipt of the premium, proof that it has not been paid will not be permitted. We all agree that, upon the ground of public policy, the insurer should not be permitted, after the mouth of the insured has been forever sealed by death, and perhaps the only means of proving to the contrary has thus been destroyed, to assert that he entered into a contract with the deceased without any consideration. Such a rule would remove every guaranty that the beneficiaries of a policy would be paid, and put a premium upon frauds.

We do not mean to hold that the insurance company may not show that the policy was not in fact delivered, or that the insured came into possession of the contract wrongfully and fraudulently; but where it is admitted that a contract of insurance was, in the regular course of its business, delivered to the insured, it is to be conclusively presumed that the evidence of the insurance company's obligation was executed and delivered upon a consideration which the company at least deemed sufficient. An admission that the contract was made is incompatible with the assertion that the first premium, upon the payment of which the existence of the contract depends, was not paid in some way. The exact point does not seem to have been decided in this state, but in Illinois, New Jersey, Missouri, and North Carolina the question now before us has, we think, been correctly ruled. See Illinois Central Insurance Co. v. Wolf, 37 Ill. 354, 87 Am. Dec. 251; Teutonia Life Insurance Co. v. Mueller, 77 Ill. 22; Germania Fire Insurance Co. v. Muller, 110 Ill. Law, 429-431; Dobyns v. Bay State Benefit Association, 144 Mo. 95, 45 S. W. 1107; Kendrick v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 124 N. C. 315, 32 S. E. 728, 70 Am. St. Rep. 592; Grier v. Mutual Life Insurance Co., 132 N. C. 542, 44 S. E. 28. Furthermore, the evidence is uncontradicted in this case that the note was taken in payment of the premium, not by the insurance company, but by Langford, Jones & Co., if the consideration of the note was the amount required to pay the premium. The note was dated August 3d. The date of the receipt was August 9th. The note was not payable to the insurance company, or even to Langford, Jones & Co., as agents. It is admitted that Langford, Jones & Co. are indebted to the company for moneys representing premiums on policies of insurance written by them, and the fact that a note was taken by Langford, Jones & Co., and by them indorsed, is evidence that it was in the first instance payable to them individually, and the testimony shows that it not infrequently happened that premiums were charged to them. If the note was taken by the insurance company upon Langford, Jones & Co.'s indorsement merely as partial payment to the company of amounts collected by that firm upon premiums, including that of Williams, then there would be no legal significance, so far as a waiver of the forfeiture is concerned, in an effort of the company to collect the note through the Bank of Soperton. The effort of the insurance company to collect the note would not be evidence of any waiver of the forfeiture, but merely evidence of the insurance company's desire to collect the note, which they had purchased, or held as collateral from the original payees. This, however, would establish the fact that Williams paid the premium, or at least that Langford, Jones & Co. paid it for him. On the other hand, if the note was intended to be made payable to the insurance company, then the effort to collect it after its maturity was a waiver of the right to forfeit the policy for the non-payment of the note, as it was stipulated in the policy that the insurance company had a right to do, for reasons which we will point out further on in this opinion.

2. It is complained that the judge erred in charging the jury upon the right given the insured by the policy to reinstate himself upon certain conditions therein named, for the reason that it was irrelevant to any issue raised by the pleadings, and therefore any instructions upon the subject of reinstatement were necessarily misleading and confusing to the jury. We think this point is well taken. The issues between the parties were three: (1) Was the note given by the insured to the company in payment for the first premium? (2) Did the agents agree to assume and pay this premium? (3) Even if the note was payable to the company, was there a waiver of the forfeiture of the policy? These were the only issues, and it was therefore immaterial whether there was any provision for reinstatement or not. The plaintiff did not insist that he had taken the proper steps to be reinstated. Counsel for the defendant insists that the provision with regard to the reinstatement of the policy is immaterial, in view of the fact that by the terms of the policy the company is continually notifying its policy holders to reinstate, and this, taken in connection with the sending out of the notice of the second year's premium, is explanatory of the policy of the company and that the sending of the notice as to the second premium is simply for the purpose of continuing invitation and directing the attention of the insured to the reinstatement provision. In regard to this it is only necessary to say that there is nothing in the notice sent out which would sustain this view of the case. The notice simply requested the payment of the second premium; and, from the fact that no reference was made to any failure on the part of the insured to pay the first premium, it is necessarily corroborative of the plaintiff's contention that the first premium had been paid by Langford, Jones & Co., acting for the insured. The instruction to the jury to determine and consider whether the insured received the notice with reference to the second premium is likewise irrelevant to any issue presented in the pleadings, because the forfeiture of the policy, if waived by the sending of the notice at all, was completely waived by the action of the insurance company, and not dependent upon any affirmative action on the part of the insured. No act on the part of the insured could create a waiver of the company's right to forfeit the policy. This waiver was necessarily dependent upon some act on the part of the insurer.

It is insisted that the court erred in permitting W. W. Reed, a witness for the defendant, to testify, over the objection of the counsel for plaintiff: "The agents took a note from the insured. * * * It was forwarded by the agents to the company. The company took that [the note] simply as an extension of time that the agents granted that party for an extension of time for the settlement of that claim." The objection to the testimony was that the witness was incompetent to testify to transactions with the insured, who was dead, the plaintiff being insane, and that it could not prove a contract with the insured, who was dead, which would render the policy sued on void; said witness being the secretary of the company at the time of said transaction, and now its president. Under section 5269 of the Civil Code of 1895, the witness Reed was not incompetent, either by reason of the fact that the maker of the note was dead, or that the plaintiff in the case was insane. The witness did not purport to testify to any transaction or communication either with the deceased or with the party who was insane. Even if he had testified to a transaction or communication with the deceased, the evidence would have been admissible, under the rulings in Cody v. First National Bank, 103 Ga. 789, 30 S. E. 281, and Holston v. Southern Railway Co., 116 Ga. 656, 43 S. E. 29, in which it was held that the agent of a corporation is competent to testify as to transactions with a deceased party, even though the personal representative of the decedent is the adverse party to the corporation.

We think the court erred in overruling the objection to the testimony of the witness S. E. Jones, for the reason that he had a personal interest in the result of the suit. Civ. Code 1895, § 5269, par. 4. If the jury found in favor of the plaintiff, Jones would necessarily be liable to the insurance company for the amount of the note, either as money collected from the deceased and not paid over to the company, or as indorser upon the note, which he took without authority of the company, instead of collecting the premium. If the jury found in favor of the defendant, Jones would not be liable, according to the undisputed testimony, for a greater amount than the proportionate part of the premium from August 3d to December 1st, even if he was liable for anything. And the testimony of Jones, to which the objection was offered, concerned his transaction with the deceased, of whom the plaintiff was the transferee or assignee, and as to whom, therefore, the plaintiff stood in the same relation as if he had been his legal representative.

Conceding that the jury had a right to find that there had been no payment of the first premium, either by the deceased or by any one in his behalf, the insurance company had the right, under the terms of the policy, to forfeit the contract upon the failure of Williams to pay his note at maturity, and waived its right by sending the note to the bank, and leaving it there, and attempting to collect it, as the evidence shows, some months after the forfeiture could have been insisted upon. The company clearly waived its right to insist upon the forfeiture, by attempting to collect the note, instead of returning or attempting to return it to the maker, because as we held in Arnold v. Empire Insurance Co., 3 Ga. App. 685, 60 S. E. 470, an insurer cannot in any case insist upon a forfeiture and at the same time retain a note taken in payment of an unpaid premium, upon the nonpayment of which the forfeiture depends. This would be getting something for nothing. A waiver, when once made, cannot be recalled, because the law does not look with favor upon forfeiture of insurance policies, and will seize upon any circumstances which indicate an election to waive a forfeiture.

But not only does the attempt to collect the note after the insurer might have insisted upon a forfeiture of the policy indicate a waiver of its right on the part of the insurer, but the sending of the notice as to the second premium must be taken as proof of the fact that the delinquent policy holder was acknowledged by the company to be entitled to all the benefits conferred by his contract. In the present case, although the note for the first premium had been past due since December 1, 1905, the company still recognized that Williams was insured by it, and that the past-due note had been taken in lieu of the cash, because on July 19, 1906, only 15 days before the second premium would be due, the company mailed him the following premium notice:

"Take Notice.—Your annual premium on policy No. 7194 will be due August 5, 1906, as follows: Premium, $39.70, on or before which date payment must be made to the home office of the company. If the premium is paid quarterly, the amount will be $——, or if semiannually $——.

"[Signed] William W. Reed, Secretary.

"Note.—Premiums are payable to the company at its office in Atlanta, and no payment of the same shall be valid if paid to an agent or any other person whatsoever, unless such person is possessed of and turns over to the payee a receipt, signed by the president, and countersigned by himself, as evidence of payment to him. According to the policy contract, members must pay their premiums on or before the day on which they fall due, and in the event of their failure to do so their policy of insurance shall be deemed forfeited and of no effect, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the policy."

Now, if the company elected to forfeit the policy, as it had the right to do when the note was not paid on December 1st (for the forfeiture occurred immediately upon the failure of the insured to pay the note, according to the terms of the policy—Washburn v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 143 Ala. 485, 38 South. 1011), then it could not consistently notify the deceased on July 19, 1906, over 7 months after the note became due, that his annual premium would be due on August 5th following, and especially call the insured's attention to the fact that his policy would be deemed forfeited if that premium was not paid on or before August 5th. There was no claim, so far as appears from the evidence, that this notice was sent by mistake, and there is no other evidence which indicates that, if the payment of the premium had been tendered, it would not have been accepted. It is apparent to us, therefore, that no construction can be placed upon this evidence other than that the company had elected to waive its right to forfeit the policy after the nonpayment of the note, and the case is controlled by the ruling of this court in Farmers' Mutual Association v. Elliott, 4 Ga. App. 342, 61 S. E. 493, in which we held: "Even if, under the by-laws of a benevolent fraternal association or assessment insurance society, no affirmative action is necessary in order to enforce the forfeiture of a policy of insurance for nonpayment of dues or assessments, as the case may be, the subsequent demand for the payment of such dues or assessments is a waiver of the forfeiture, and an acknowledgment that the delinquent policy holder is still entitled to the benefits conferred by his contract with the association." In that case the insurer was a fraternal association, and not a regular insurance company; but this would not affect the rule, and, even if there was no other error in the judgment refusing a new trial, we should feel constrained to reverse the judgment because the verdict of the jury was contrary to the evidence in this respect. The evidence in regard to the sending of the notice is undisputed. It was sent three days before the insured was killed. It may not have been received by him; but certainly an insurer is estopped from asserting that he was attempting to collect a premium, due at a future date, upon a contract which he had a right to declare void, had declared to be void, and which was, therefore, utterly worthless. No one who has entered into a contract should be permitted to blow both hot and cold, and least of all should this privilege be allowed to life insurers, because in most instances the contingency upon which the liability of the insurance company depends leaves the beneficiaries of the deceased illy prepared to enforce their rights.

In any view of the evidence in this case, the nonpayment of the first premium, if not waived, was not satisfactorily established. And inasmuch as the defendant had the burden of establishing the fact of the nonpayment of the premium, in order to rebut the plaintiff's prima facie right of recovery, the evidence was not sufficient to authorize the verdict rendered in its favor. If the agents of the company, without authority, took the insured's note, instead of collecting the amount of the premium in money, and the amount thus represented was chargeable to the agents, and was charged to them by the company with the agents' consent, then the insured's premium was paid, and there was no default. If, on the other hand, the note was accepted by the company, after its indorsement by the agents, as an extension of the time within which the payment of the premium might be made, as contended by the defendant, the right to forfeit the policy was waived, so that in either event the defendant failed to show any reason why the policy should be adjudged to have been forfeited. Consequently the judge erred in refusing to grant a new trial.

Further, the note in this case was under seal, and the doctrine is well established that in sealed instruments it cannot be shown that the parties were acting merely as agents, when the agency is not disclosed. The note was payable to Langford, Jones & Co., and not to the company.

Judgment reversed.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. ANSLEY.

(No. 2,375.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 28, 1910.
On Petition for Rehearing, Sept. 29, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1026*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Mere error does not require the grant of a new trial. To set aside a verdict which is sustained by evidence, the error of which complaint is made must be shown to have been injurious to the complaining party, or at least appear to have affected some of his rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4029, 4080; Dec. Dig. § 1026.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1041*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF AMENDMENT.

Where the plaintiff in an action for damages placed his right to recover upon a statute of Alabama, it was not error harmful to the defendant to refuse at the second term to allow an amendment to the answer, setting forth that the train upon which the plaintiff was employed, and upon which he was injured, was engaged in interstate commerce, and that therefore the defendant, if liable at all, was liable under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 22, 1908 (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65, [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1171]), generally known as the employer's liability act. Even if this act of Congress, as to such a case, superseded the statute of Alabama, and even though the amendment would have been good if filed at the appearance term as a dilatory plea, it did not set up any substantive defensive matter affecting the merits; and as the rights of the plaintiff as an employé were greater, and the liabilities of the defendant as an employer were less, under the statute of Alabama (Code 1907, § 3910) than under the statute of the United States, the refusal of the amendment could not by any possibility have injured the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4106-4109; Dec. Dig. § 1041.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1041*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF AMENDMENT.

Even if the statute of the United States had been applied by the court, and the jury instructed accordingly, the verdict in favor of the plaintiff would have been demanded. Under the provisions of the federal employer's liability act, the evidence demanded the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4106-4109; Dec. Dig. § 1041.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 103*) — DILATORY PLEAS — TIME.

Dilatory pleas must be filed at the first term.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 26*)—DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP.

Where both parties are nonresidents of the state, the action cannot be removed to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. § 60; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

6. PLEADING (§ 35*)—SURPLUSAGE.

If plaintiff alleges a cause of action, though pleading the laws of another state, which would be good under the laws of Georgia, which embraces statutes of the United States passed in pursuance of the United States Constitution, the judge may disregard as mere surplusage any statement as to the law which may have been pleaded merely as basis for admission of proof as to the nature of a foreign law clearly not applicable to the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-80; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

One cannot complain of an error which is favorable to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4052-4062; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

8. STATUTES (§ 279*)—FOREIGN STATUTES.

The federal employer's liability act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1171]), not being a foreign law, is not required to be pleaded or referred to in the declaration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 378; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

On Petition for Rehearing.

9. PLEADING (§ 101*)—"DILATORY PLEA."

The test as to whether a plea is dilatory or goes to the merits is that if defendant, upon establishing the facts, can defeat plaintiff's cause of action in whole or in part, or can obtain any substantial relief against plaintiff, the plea is not dilatory; but if the effect of sustaining the plea is not to deny or diminish defendant's liability on the cause of action asserted, or to obtain other substantial relief, against plaintiff, but merely to defeat his action as presently laid, and leave him an unimpaired right to sue again, the plea is dilatory.

Error from City Court of Floyd County; Harper Hamilton, Judge.

Action by F. H. Ansley against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

McDaniel, Alston & Black, Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, and Geo. A. H. Harris & Son, for plaintiff in error. Arnold & Arnold and Seaborn & Barry Wright, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. F. H. Ansley sued the Southern Railway Company for damages, and recovered a verdict for $11,000.

No evidence was introduced, except in behalf of the plaintiff; and it thus appeared, without dispute in the testimony, that in a head-end collision between two of the defendant's trains of cars the plaintiff, who was an engineer, and who was engaged at his post of duty, received injuries as a result of which he lost his leg and was permanently disabled from carrying on the occupation of an engineer. According to the testimony with reference to the value of the plaintiff's services, the verdict was not excessive.

The several grounds of the motion for a new trial, and the exceptions pendente lite to the refusal of the judge to allow an amendment to the defendant's plea, and his refusal to sustain the demurrer to the plaintiff's petition, which are insisted upon, present really but one important point: Is the plaintiff entitled to recover, in view of the fact that his case was expressly based upon the statute of Alabama, and that the trial was had under the Alabama statute, and the jury were instructed solely with reference to the application of the Alabama law to the evidence?

Conceding that the employer's liability act, approved April 22, 1908 (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1171]), superseded section 3910 of the Code of Alabama of 1907, which was expressly pleaded by the plaintiff in his petition, we are nevertheless of the opinion that the defendant's writ of error does not present such a case as would entitle it to a reversal of the judgment refusing a new trial, and that the defendant cannot justly complain of the court's refusal to allow it to amend its answer. The writer confesses that he has not reached this conclusion without difficulty, because it would indeed be quite anomalous, as is strongly urged by counsel, to allow a plaintiff to sue upon one cause of action and to recover upon a different one. Nor do we rule that this can be done. We do hold, however, that the evidence sufficiently conforms with the material portion of the declaration to legally authorize a recovery. Paramount to every other consideration is the rule which requires that injury shall concur with error before the finding of a jury in a case should be set aside.

We bear in mind the rulings in Exposition Cotton Mills v. W. & A. R. Co., 83 Ga. 441, 10 S. E. 113, and Bolton v. Georgia Pacific R. Co., 83 Ga. 659, 10 S. E. 352. These rulings, however, we deem to have been overruled and disapproved, or at least greatly limited, by the rulings of the Supreme Court in Ellison v. Ga. R. Co., 87 Ga. 691, 13 S. E. 809, and City of Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785, 48 S. E. 318. In the Anglin Case, supra, the Supreme Court held that new and distinct averments of negligence may be made, so long as they are descriptive of the same wrong originally pleaded in the declaration. In the opinion delivered in behalf of the court by Chief Justice Simmons (page 793 of 120 Ga., page 321 of 48 S. E.) it is said: "So long as the facts added by the amendment, however different they may be from those alleged in the original petition, show substantially the same wrong in respect to the same transaction, the amendment is not objectionable as adding a new and distinct cause of action. Persuaded of the correctness of the above views, we feel constrained to overrule so much of the decisions of the following cases as is in conflict therewith: Central R. Co. v. Wood, 51 Ga. 515; Skidaway S. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 73 Ga. 655; Henderson v. Central Railroad, 73 Ga. 718; Cox v. Murphy, 82 Ga. 623 [9 S. E. 604]; Georgia R. Co. v. Roughton, 109 Ga. 604 [34 S. E. 1026], and also so much of any other cases as conflicts with the ruling now made. This puts this court back in line with its earlier decisions." The court, therefore, in the Anglin Case, overruled, without specially naming them, many cases which conflict with it in principle.

The first question which arose in this case was upon the refusal of the judge to allow the defendant to amend his answer so as to set up that the plaintiff's cause of action, if he had any, was dependent upon the federal employer's liability act, approved April 22, 1908. We are of the opinion that, had this amendment been filed as a dilatory plea, at the appearance term, it should have been allowed, and might have been a good plea. But as the amendment was not filed until a term subsequent to the appearance term, it cannot be treated as a plea in abatement, and it is not apparent how the defendant was hurt, if hurt at all. The plea, which in substance alleged that the defendant, though it might be liable to the plaintiff for the particular wrong or injury for which he was suing, was not liable for the reason assigned in the plaintiff's petition (the Alabama law) but for another reason (the federal act), and which did not set up any fact which on the merits of the transaction would or should, in legal contemplation, diminish the liability or change the rules of evidence, was a dilatory plea. In no true sense can it be considered as a plea to the merits, and all dilatory pleas of whatever nature must be filed at the first term of the court. If the plea had set up anything which would have diminished the defendant's liability to the plaintiff, it would be different, for then it could be considered as a plea to the merits. If the defendant was not deprived of any right (no matter how inconsequential it might be) by the refusal of the court to allow the amendment, it would seem to be useless to order another trial, in order that the same finding may be had upon the facts; for under the testimony a finding in behalf of the plaintiff was inevitable.

It is argued that the right of removal is a valuable right. Agreed. But the defendant could not have removed this case to the United States court, even if the amendment had been allowed, because the plaintiff is a citizen of Alabama, and the Southern Railway Company is also a nonresident of this State. The parties, therefore, being both nonresidents of Georgia, the action could not be removed on the ground of diverse citizenship. It is clear, also, that the defendant did not lose the right of removal by reason of the nonallowance of the amendment, because the petition to remove should have been filed at the first term. Furthermore, the defendant was not hurt, because by the terms of the Alabama statute the right of the plaintiff to recover was narrower than that conferred by the federal statute, which the defendant endeavored to set up, and the consequent liability of the defendant was greater. Under the Alabama statute the plaintiff's recovery could be defeated or diminished by proof of the fact that the plaintiff contributed to the result. Under the United States statute the recovery, if any, would be apportioned in proportion to the plaintiff's negligence. Therefore, so far from the defendant being injured by the refusal of the court to allow the proposed amendment, it seems to us the ruling really benefited the defendant. After a careful consideration of every phase of the case, we are unable to conceive how the plaintiff could have been injured by the refusal of the court to allow its amendment. Suppose that the defendant had proved that the train was engaged in interstate commerce. If the amendment had been allowed, the plaintiff might still have been entitled to recover something under the federal employer's liability act, even if the defendant proved that the plaintiff was negligent. Under the Alabama statute, if the plaintiff had been shown to have contributed to his own injury, he could not recover at all. While it is not permissible to amend a declaration setting up the common-law liability of the carrier by asking a recovery upon its statutory liability, we think that, where the plaintiff proceeded upon a statute of Alabama, the court was entitled to enter judgment, regardless of whether that statute was superseded or not, because, under the evidence, the defendant was plainly liable under the statute of the United States, which our courts are bound to enforce, under the express terms of the Constitution of this state.

To the writer's mind there is great force in the argument of learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that this method of procedure will tend to allow the plaintiff to sue upon one cause of action and then to recover upon a totally different cause of action, thus taking the defendant completely by surprise. However, I agree that under the trend of modern jurisprudence the real question, when the pertinency of an amendment is raised, is as to the identity of the transaction involved in the litigation. If the plaintiff sets forth a cause of action (though pleading the laws of another state) which would be good under the laws of this state (and statutes of the United States passed in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States are in fact the supreme law of this state), then, upon the facts showing the plaintiff to be entitled to a recovery against the defendant, the judge may administer the law as he knows it to be, and may disregard as mere surplusage any statement as to the law which may have been pleaded merely as basis for the admission of proof as to the nature of a foreign law clearly not applicable to the case. It is to be borne in mind that the statutes of foreign jurisdictions are pleaded solely for the purpose of admitting them in proof; the court not being presumed to know the statutes of a foreign jurisdiction, which are administered by comity only. Should it appear in any case that a foreign statute which has been pleaded has been superseded or repealed, and if it should further appear that—omitting all reference to the foreign law and justly treating it as surplusage—the plaintiff has set forth a substantial cause of action under the controlling law, he should not be denied his rights or delayed in their enforcement merely because of the presence of this surplusage.

It is insisted, however, that the case was tried upon the theory that the plaintiff's rights were predicated upon the statute of Alabama, and the charge of the court shows that the judge conceived that the case was properly based upon the law of Alabama, and the liability of the defendant governed thereby. In our opinion this does not alter the case. In Cabaniss v. State, 68 S. E. 849, this court held that a new trial was not required, although the trial proceeded as if the defendant was charged with a felony, when he was only guilty of a misdemeanor; and in Spence v. State, 7 Ga. App. 825, 68 S. E. 443, we held that, the jury having found the defendant guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and a finding for a higher offense being demanded by the evidence, he had no cause for complaint, although the judge did not instruct the jury upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter, or treat it as applicable to the facts of the case. In the present case, if, as alleged by the defendant in its proposed amendment, the train upon which the plaintiff was employed as an engineer was in fact engaged in interstate commerce, then, under the evidence, the plaintiff's recovery was fully authorized by the provisions of the federal employer's liability act, and a finding in accordance with both the law and the facts should not be set aside, unless the complaining party was deprived of some right, and, by reason of the loss of this right, was in some degree at least injuriously affected. We have shown that the defendant was not deprived of the right of removal by the court's refusal to allow its amendment, and that it could not have been injuriously affected by reason of the fact that it was subjected to greater liability under the terms of the federal statute than that imposed by the law of Alabama. In fact, if there had been any evidence tending to show that the plaintiff contributed to his own injury, the court's application of the law of Alabama would have been beneficial to the defendant; and nothing is better settled than that one cannot complain of an error which is favorable to him.

Under our view of the case, the verdict established the liability of the defendant in an amount within the bounds of the evidence, and was authorized by the federal employer's liability act, as one of the laws of Georgia, which (not being a foreign law) was not required to be pleaded or referred to in the declaration. The plaintiff in error complains that the statute of the United States was not applied. We cannot know it was not applied. In our view, even if it cannot be presumed that the statute of the United States was applied by the jury (unwittingly, perhaps, or intuitively, if you prefer), yet the fact remains that the evidence, and the very law for the application of which the plaintiff in error calls, demanded the verdict. Although the judge did not charge the jury upon the liability of the defendant as measured by the employer's liability act, why should the case be tried again to reach the same inevitable result, with the aid of proper instructions, as the jury has already attained without them? To do so would in our judgment be an inexcusable addition to the law's delay. Especially is this true when the defendant did not plead this merely dilatory matter at the first term. While the law allows dilatory matters to be pleaded, they must be pleaded promptly. Civ. Code 1895, § 5058.

Judgment affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff in error says that the court should not have given any weight to the point that the amended plea, though dilatory in nature, was not offered at the first term, because the objection on which the court disallowed it was that "the same set up no defense to plaintiff's action," and, therefore, the fact that it was not filed at the first term was waived. Cf. Wright v. Jett, 120 Ga. 995, 48 S. E. 345.

To make our ruling clearer, and to test the sufficiency of the point now presented, let us look again to what the amendment to the plea set up, and to the purpose for which it was offered, as disclosed on its face. It set up that the plaintiff at the time of his injury was an engineer on a train engaged in interstate commerce, "within the terms of the act of Congress, approved April 22, 1903, regulating the liability of common carriers when engaged in the carriage of such interstate commerce." The purpose of the plea (i. e., whether it was offered as a dilatory plea or as a plea to the merits) is disclosed in the next paragraph, with which the amendment concludes, as follows: "Wherefore defendant says there is no right of action under the allegations of the petition." Plainly, the plea was not offered as a dilatory plea, but as a plea to the merits—not as a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, or to the form of the plaintiff's action, but as a defense to the cause of action itself. In the course of our opinion we have endeavored to show that the plea did not set up anything which could defeat the plaintiff's cause of action, that it merely went to the form or manner in which the plaintiff had sued, that it was in substance and effect a dilatory plea, whether tested by the pleadings or the proof, and that the court committed no reversible error in striking it.

We did intimate that, if it had been filed at the first term as a dilatory plea, it might have been well taken—that is to say, it might have been sufficient (if the facts set up therein were proved) to have caused the plaintiff's action as pleaded to abate, so that he would have been put to the necessity of amending or of suing over. We understand that the test as to whether a plea is dilatory or goes to the merits is this: If the defendant, upon establishing the facts, can defeat the plaintiff's cause of action in whole or in part, or can obtain any substantial relief against the plaintiff, the plea is not dilatory, but is a plea to the merits. On the other hand, if the effect of sustaining the plea is not to deny or diminish the defendant's liability on the cause of action asserted, or to obtain other substantial relief against the plaintiff, but is merely to defeat the plaintiff's action as presently laid, and to leave him with an unimpaired right to sue over again in some other form or way, or in some other court on the same cause of action, the plea is dilatory. For instance, pleas which allege that the plaintiff has sued in the wrong court, or that proper parties have not been joined, or that parties or causes of action have been misjoined, or that the defendant has not been legally served, or that the plaintiff has sued without complying with some statutory prerequisite, such as paying the costs in advance where such payment is required, or that the plaintiff has sued before his debt is due, or any other such matter which does not negative the idea that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff in the cause of action, are dilatory pleas, and must be filed at the first term.

As we attempted to show in the original opinion, the fact that the plaintiff was a servant engaged in interstate commerce did not tend to deny or to diminish the defendant's liability to him upon the very cause of action he was asserting, and did not give the defendant any other substantial right against him which it could not assert under the pleas already filed in the case. The defendant by the amendment to its plea in effect merely asserted that the plaintiff should not be allowed to proceed with his suit as it was laid in his petition, but should be required to amend (if amendment were permissible) or to sue over again, in another way or in another court, on the identical cause of action. The objection that the plea "set up no defense to the plaintiff's action" was, therefore, as we see it, well taken; and the court did not err in sustaining the objection.

Rehearing denied.

GREEN v. RHODES. (No. 2,036.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 28, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. AFFIDAVITS (§ 12*)—JURAT—CONCLUSIVE-NESS OF RECITALS.

The statement of a jurat that the affidavit to which it is attached was duly sworn to is only prima facie true. It is to be presumed in every case that the officer who signed a jurat does his duty. But the presumption in favor of a properly executed jurat is not conclusive. The fact as to whether the alleged affiant was sworn or not sworn may properly be inquired into, and the statement of the jurat may be shown to be false.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Affidavits, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 271*)—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

Where it is shown that no oath was in fact administered to one who apparently swore to an affidavit made to foreclose a chattel mortgage, and it does not appear from any statement of the alleged affiant, made at the time he affixed his signature to the alleged affidavit, that he intended expressly to affirm the truth of the statements contained in the affidavit, the mere fact of signing the affidavit, without more, is not sufficient to dispense with the administration of the requisite oath, and the paper thus signed is not a proper substitute for the affidavit required by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

3. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

There being no valid affidavit to foreclose the mortgage, the court erred in not sustaining the affidavit of illegality. The case is controlled by the ruling in Britt v. Davis, 130 Ga. 74, 60 S. E. 180.

Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.

4. AFFIDAVITS (§ 12*)—JURAT—EFFECT.

The officer who signed the jurat to an alleged affidavit is competent to testify that the affidavit was not sworn to.

Error from City Court of Waynesboro; S. Burney, Judge pro hac.

Action by W. E. Rhodes against Juett Green. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Isaac S. Peebles, Jr., for plaintiff in error. Phil P. Johnston and J. H. Porter, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. In the court below the plaintiff in error filed an affidavit of illegality to the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage. While there is more than one ground of the affidavit of illegality, only one was insisted upon. This was to the effect that the mortgage had never in fact been foreclosed, nor any affidavit for foreclosure made, for the reason that what purported to be the affidavit made for that purpose was not really sworn to. It purported to be the affidavit of F. L. Scales, the plaintiff's attorney, made in Burke county, Ga., and the jurat was signed: "Frank S. Palmer, N. P. ex-off. J. P." On the trial Frank S. Palmer was introduced as a witness by the plaintiff in error, and the record states that he testified that "he was a notary public and ex officio justice of the peace of Burke county, Ga., and that Mr. F. L. Scales came to him in December, 1908, and told Palmer that he had a paper that he wanted Palmer to sign; that Palmer looked at the paper, and saw that it was an affidavit for the foreclosure of a mortgage; that F. L. Scales signed it, and that Palmer signed it in his presence; that no oath was administered, nor anything said about the truth of the statements contained in the paper. Nothing was said except that he wanted Palmer to sign the paper. Mr. Scales then signed it, and the witness subscribed his name to it. Witness understood that he [Mr. Scales] was making an affidavit, and that he [Mr. Scales] was swearing to the contents of the paper he signed." The trial judge excluded this testimony, on objection by the plaintiff's counsel, upon the ground that the witness could not be heard to attack his own acts as a judicial officer, and thus the writ of error raises two questions: (1) Whether the magistrate could properly testify that what was in appearance an affidavit had not in fact been sworn to; and (2) if the testimony had not been excluded, what should have been its effect?

We are of the opinion that the testimony of the officer who signed the jurat was competent, and should not have been excluded. It is insisted that the exclusion of this testimony was proper on grounds of public policy, and as coming within the terms of section 5150 of the Civil Code of 1895, because it would be more unjust and productive of evil to hear the truth (if truth it be) than to forbear the investigation. The case of Britt v. Davis, 130 Ga. 74, 60 S. E. 180, affords a precedent (if not authority upon the point) that an investigation may be made into the truthfulness of the statements of a jurat. It is true that in that case it was not the officer who signed the jurat, but the purported affiant, who was the witness. We see no reason why, in the pursuit of truth, there should not be an investigation of the circumstances attending a purely ministerial act, even though he who performs it be a judicial officer. There might be a difference of opinion as to the validity or legal sufficiency of what the magistrate did to accomplish the designed effect, but no moral taint.

But, even if a magistrate or a judge acted corruptly, we know of no reason why he might not voluntarily testify thereto. If he did not wish to avail himself of the constitutional protection against self-incrimination, and yet wrong had been done, the truth which he alone could divulge might afford the only means of reparation. We have been unable to find any case in the reports of the Supreme Court in which it has been ruled in express terms that a magistrate may dispute the statements of his jurat; but, as we have already said, the Britt Case, supra, is a physical precedent authorizing an investigation into the truthfulness of the statements of the jurat, and we see no reason why in such an investigation the magistrate could not be permitted to swear that no oath was in fact administered as he would be allowed to swear, in sustaining his act, that the witness was duly sworn. In Cox v. Stern, 170 Ill. 442, 48 N. E. 906, 62 Am. St. Rep. 385, it was held that a properly executed jurat or certificate is not conclusive, but may be shown to be false, and if it be shown that the jurat is false, and that no oath was in fact administered, the instrument would not be an affidavit. And in Smith v. Johnson, 43 Neb. 754, 62 N. W. 217, it was held that the statement that the affidavit was sworn to might be rebutted. The jurat is not a necessary part of an affidavit.

It would seem that the rule which was applied without question in the Britt Case, supra, to the testimony of the affiant, applies to every other person who knows the facts, including the subscribing officer.

The remaining question is sufficiently covered by the headnotes. The case is fully controlled by the decision of the Supreme Court in Britt v. Davis, supra, in which Justice Lumpkin discusses the subject at length. The illegality should have been sustained. Judgment reversed.

SMITH v. MADDOX-RUCKER BANKING CO.

MADDOX-RUCKER BANKING CO. v. SMITH.

(Nos. 2,293, 2,294.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 28, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 76*)—EXCESSIVENESS OF VERDICT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The trial judge has the discretion of granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict is excessive, when his mind and conscience disapprove the verdict as rendered, though the verdict is not so large in amount as to carry conviction of bias and prejudice on the part of the jury, and though the case is one in which the only measure of damage is the enlightened conscience of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 153-156; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1145*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—EFFECT OF AFFIRMANCE OF MAIN BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Ordinarily, when the judgment on the main bill of exceptions is affirmed, the cross-bill is dismissed; but this result does not follow when the effect of the affirmance on the main bill is to require a new trial, and the cross-bill presents matters likely to be up for ruling on that trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1145.*]

3. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 140*)—POSTDATED CHECK—NATURE.

A postdated check (i. e., a check dated at a time in future) is not subject to payment or acceptance until the time of its date arrives. If it be presented at a time in advance of its date, the drawee, even if he has funds on hand sufficient to pay it, cannot pay it, or retain the fund to pay, as against other checks or drafts presented and payable prior to the time the check bears date. The drawer of a postdated check does not undertake to have the funds in the drawee's hands to meet it before the time at which the check bears date arrives.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 395, 404; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by M. K. Smith against the Maddox-Rucker Banking Company. A verdict for plaintiff was set aside, and a new trial granted, and plaintiff brought error to the Court of Appeals; defendant filing cross-exceptions. Questions were certified to the Supreme Court. On remand after answers to questions (68 S. E. 1031). Judgment affirmed on both main and cross bills of exceptions.

R. B. Blackburn, for plaintiff in error. Smith, Hammond & Smith, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Smith sued the bank for general damages resulting to him from the wrongful protest of two checks drawn by him on his bank account. Smith had a deposit account with the defendant bank, and on April 7, 1905, he had a sum to his credit. On that day he drew a check for $140, payable to an insurance company, but dated it 30 days ahead. This check came into the bank on April 17th, and was charged to his account. In the meantime he drew other checks, not sufficient, however, to have overdrawn his account if the postdated check for $140 had not been charged in; but his account did become apparently overdrawn by the charging in of this check, and when the two checks in question came in they were protested for lack of funds. The point is that the check of $140, being dated May 15, 1905, should not have been charged to his account prior to that date and the two checks that were protested should have been paid.

The jury found in favor of the plaintiff a verdict for $400. The defendant filed a motion for a new trial, containing several grounds. The judge granted a new trial, stating in his order that he granted it on two of the grounds only, the first and third. The first ground is that the verdict is excessive. We need not set out the third ground. It related to a request to charge. We may say, in passing, that we see no reason for granting a new trial on that ground. The plaintiff sued out a bill of exceptions, complaining of the grant of a new trial. The defendant filed a cross-bill, complaining that the court should have granted it on all the grounds, and not merely on the first and third.

In this court the plaintiff in error contended that as the sole measure of damage was the enlightened conscience of the jury, subject only to the legal limitation that the verdict should be temperate in amount (no special damages or malice being shown), the trial judge had no right to grant even the first new trial on the ground that the verdict was excessive, it not being so large as to indicate bias or prejudice on the part of the jury. This court held in Holland v. Williams, 3 Ga. App. 636, 60 S. E. 331, that, even in cases where the enlightened conscience of the jury is the only measure of damage, the trial judge has the right to grant one new trial as a matter of discretion, and that it is his duty to do so if his mind and conscience disapprove of the amount found, even though it be not so large as to suggest bias or prejudice on the part of the jury.

Counsel for the plaintiff in error called our attention to the fact that our decision was in conflict with the decision of the Supreme Court in Brown v. Autrey, 78 Ga. 756, 3 S. E. 669. Seeing that this was so, but believing that our decision was in accordance with a long line of decisions rendered by the Supreme Court, both prior and subsequent to the case of Brown v. Autrey, we certified the question to the Supreme Court. That court has filed instructions approving the holding of this court in the case of Holland v. Williams, supra. It follows that the main bill of exceptions is without merit.

Ordinarily, when the judgment on the main bill of exceptions is affirmed, the cross-bill is to be dismissed; but under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Thornton v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 116 Ga. 121 (1), 42 S. E. 287, 94 Am. St. Rep. 99, this result does not follow where the effect of the affirmance on the main bill is to require a new trial, and the matters in the cross-bill will likely arise on that trial. Hence we pass on the questions presented in the cross-bill.

A postdated check (i. e., a check dated at a time in future) is not subject to payment or acceptance until the time of its date arrives. If it be presented at a time in advance of its date, the drawee, even if he has funds sufficient to pay it, cannot pay it, or retain the fund to pay it, as against other checks or drafts presented prior to the time the check bears date. The drawer of the postdated check does not undertake to have the funds in the drawee's hands to meet it before the time at which the check bears date arrives. Joyce, Defenses to Commercial Paper, § 490, and authorities there cited.

Judgment affirmed on both the main and the cross-bill of exceptions.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER CO. OF AMERICA v. ADAMS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 21, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

PLEADING (§ 420*)—EVIDENCE (§§ 317, 471*)—SALES (§ 347*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—INSTRUCTIONS—DEMURRER—SUFFICIENCY—HEARSAY—OPINION EVIDENCE.

Certain notes were given for the purchase money of an engine known as an International gas or gasoline engine bought of the payee by the maker of the notes. In the contract of purchase a written guaranty by the seller provided: "The International gas or gasoline engines are warranted to be well made, of good material, and durable with proper care. The rate horse power is guaranteed on every International engine when leaving the factory; the break test showing a greater horse power than rated. The International engines are warranted for one year from date of purchase. If within this time a part prove defective, a new part will be furnished at our factory on receipt of part showing defect." Suit was brought on the notes by the payee, and the defendant pleaded a breach of the warranty and a failure of consideration. Held:

(1) Where the court sustained several grounds of a special demurrer of the plaintiff to several allegations in the answer of the defendant, "with privilege to defendant to amend his plea and answer in such form as to cure the defects therein specified," and several amendments offered for this purpose were allowed by the court over a general objection of the plaintiff "that the defects complained of had not been cured by said amendments," there was no error in overruling the objections and allowing the several amendments where any one, or any part, of either of the amendments, was allowable and cured any of the specified defects.

(2) A witness in behalf of the defendant, after having testified that the horse power of his engine was 9.7, testified as follows: "I do not know and cannot swear what horse power my engine is, only from trying it, and comparing it with other engines. I have known 8 or 10 different ones, and am only comparing it with other engines, and I did not know the horse power of those engines with which I compared it, only by what they claimed." It was error to admit such testimony, over the objection of the plaintiff that it was hearsay.

(3) It was error to admit testimony of a witness for the defendant: "I don't know anything about gasoline engines. From my knowledge of machinery and the usage and custom in this country, and from my knowledge of machinery in general and my past experience, I am satisfied that a 10 horse power engine would pull this 70-saw gin of Mr. Adams"—over objection of the plaintiff "that the evidence was opinionative, that the witness had not qualified as an expert, and confessed ignorance of gasoline engines, and did not know the conditions under which the gin testified concerning was operated by defendant."

(4) It was error to admit testimony of a witness for defendant: "A 10 horse power engine would pull that [defendant's] gin. This is not a 10 horse power engine [referring to the engine in dispute]. If I shall judge by the work it is doing, not that I am qualified to say it was not, but according to my judgment, it is not. I am not an expert as to machinery. It is a fact that my testimony about this horse power is only by getting comparison from what I have seen of other engines that were said to be of a certain horse power. Therefore I am judging that horse power by what they told me, and not by actual measurement made by myself"—over objection of the plaintiff "that said evidence was hearsay, based upon statements made by others as to horse power of other engines used in comparison of work done, that said evidence was opinionative, and witness had not qualified as an expert."

(5) It was error to admit testimony of a witness for the defendant: "If this engine [the engine in dispute] reached us [the defendant, witness' father, and him] in the same condition that it was when it left the factory, I will swear that it would not under the break test show a greater horse power than 10 horse power, when it left the factory. I only swear to that fact by comparison with other engines. I know what other engines are rated at; what their horse power is rated at. That is what somebody said. All the testimony that I gave to Mr. Boykin's [counsel for defendant] questions has been based upon comparison with other engines which are said to have a certain horse power"—over objection of the plaintiff, "because the evidence of the witness was based upon hearsay testimony, because he swore as to horse power of the engine in dispute by comparing same with other engines the horse power of which he did not know, merely 'understood' or 'heard' or 'were rated' at so much horse power, that the testimony was not a statement of fact, but a conclusion of the witness, that the evidence was opinionative, and the witness had not qualified as an expert."

(6) The court charged the jury as follows: "On the other hand, if you find that the plaintiff company contracted to sell and did ship to the defendant a certain gasoline engine which was not well made and was not of good material, and was not durable with careful and proper use and gear, or if you find that the engine was not of a 10 horse power when geared to properly adjusted and set up machinery, and you find that the engine by reason of not being well made, or not having been made of good material, or was not durable with due care and caution in its operation, or you find that by reason of the construction of the engine that it would not develop in operation and use a 10 horse power with proper handling, you would not be authorized to find for the plaintiff, but, if you find such to be the facts of the case, you would be authorized to find that the consideration of the notes sued on has failed, and you would be authorized in that instance to find for the defendant." This charge was error and subject to the criticism made that "the error herein complained of being in the court's directing the jury, under this charge that, however slight might have been the failure of the company, this movant, to comply with its part of the contract, either as to furnishing a 10 horse power engine, or machinery that was durable or of good material, the defendant would be allowed the benefit of entire failure of consideration, and excluding from the consideration of the jury all idea of partial failure of consideration."

(7) In view of the entire record, there was no error requiring a new trial with respect to the matters complained of in any of the other assignments of error.

1. INTERPLEADER (§ 11*) — GROUNDS — CONFLICTING CLAIMS.

A party indebted upon a note representing the balance of the unpaid purchase money for certain lands in this state, to which he held bond for title, can maintain an equitable petition in the nature of a bill of interpleader against two foreign administrators with the will annexed of the deceased payee, where each of the two administrators claims that he is the rightfully appointed administrator with the will annexed, and entitled to collect the money due on the notes, and the petitioner cannot, without reasonable apprehension of danger, determine which of the two claimants of the fund is rightfully entitled thereto, upon offering to pay the fund in controversy into the registry of the court, that it may be awarded to the successful one of the parties required to interplead. A petition alleging these facts is not open to general demurrer, although petitioner prays for the affirmative relief of a judgment decreeing the title to the land purchased as aforesaid to be in him, upon the payment of the balance of the unpaid purchase money.

2. INTERPLEADER (§ 16*)—NATURE OF "BILL OF INTERPLEADER."

A bill in the nature of a "bill of interpleader" is one where complainant seeks relief of an equitable nature concerning the fund or subject-matter in the suit, in addition to the interpleader of conflicting claimants, and complainant is not required, as in strict interpleader, to be an indifferent stakeholder without interest in the subject-matter; but the facts on which he relies must entitle him to equitable rather than legal relief, and he cannot, under the guise of a bill in equity, litigate a purely legal claim.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Action by Rosa Daniels against A. T. McKinney and another. From an order overruling a demurrer, defendant McKinney brings error. Affirmed.

Rosa Daniels filed her equitable petition against A. T. McKinney and Hill Montague, wherein she alleged that she purchased certain real estate in Bibb county, Ga., from Ida McKinney Long, and paid a portion of the purchase price, leaving due and unpaid $1,100, represented by three certain notes signed by Rosa Daniels and payable to Ida M. Long, or order; that Ida McKinney Long died in Richmond, Va., where she then lived, and had in her possession at the time of her death the three notes above referred to; that she left surviving her a husband, then residing in Richmond, and an infant child, who is still in life; that Hill Montague, shortly after the death of Mrs. Long, was appointed administrator of her estate by proceedings in the proper courts of Virginia; that A. T. McKinney, the other defendant, who was a brother-in-law of Mrs. Long, probated, in Trigg county, Ky., an alleged will of Ida M. Long, and was appointed administrator with the will annexed of Mrs. Long; that said McKinney had received the three notes above referred to, and had them in his possession at the time of his appointment as administrator of Mrs. Long; that Hill Montague, upon learning of the proceedings taken by McKinney, did himself, by proceedings in the Virginia courts, obtain letters of administration with the will annexed upon the estate of Mrs. Long, in addition to his previous appointment as administrator upon her estate; that, since their respective appointments as administrator in Virginia and Kentucky, each of the defendants has repeatedly demanded of her the payment of the three notes, each insisting that he alone is the legal administrator and that the appointment of the other was wholly illegal and void; that each of them has repeatedly notified petitioner not to pay over to the other the amount due on the notes, threatening that if she did so she would be required to pay the same the second time; that McKinney contends that his appointment in Trigg county, Ky., is legal, and that that county was the home of Mrs. Long at the time of her death, and that he is actually in possession of the property composing her estate in Trigg county, Ky., including the said notes; that Montague contends that Mrs. Long was a citizen of Virginia and resident of Richmond at the time of her death, and that the notes were assets of her estate at the time of her death, and that they were unlawfully taken in possession and removed to Kentucky by McKinney; and that McKinney, claiming to be the administrator with the will annexed, commenced suit on the notes in the city court of Macon to recover the principal, interest, and attorney's fees provided for in the notes. Attached to the petition was an affidavit that the petitioner was not in collusion with either defendant. She prayed that the defendants be required to interplead, that McKinney be enjoined from further prosecuting his suit in the city court, that a decree be rendered determining the rights of the defendants with respect to the fund in controversy, and providing for the complete protection of petitioner by so framing the decree as to protect her in the payment of the balance of the purchase money, and also requiring the proper party to execute to her good and sufficient titles to the land bought by her from Mrs. Long, as described in the bond for title attached to the petition as an exhibit, or by providing that the decree shall itself constitute such good and sufficient titles in petitioner. McKinney filed a general demurrer, insisting that the petition was without equity, "because the plaintiff had a complete and adequate remedy at common law, because whatever defense she may have she could set up in the city court, because the petition makes out no cause for interpleader and seeks other and affirmative relief, because plaintiff has not paid into court the money that she admits to be due, and because her petition shows affirmatively that she has no defense to the suit which she seeks to enjoin."

Hardeman, Jones, Callaway & Johnston, for plaintiff in error. Miller, Jones & Miller, W. E. Martin, Jr., and Jno. R. L. Smith, for defendants in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). Inasmuch as the petitioner in this case seeks affirmative equitable relief, the petition might be open to criticism if she were relying upon the petition in the case purely as a bill of interpleader. But we are of the opinion that the petition contains all of the allegations essential to a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader and to the maintenance of the petition. "A bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader is one in which the complainant seeks some relief of an equitable nature concerning the fund or other subject-matter in dispute, in addition to the interpleader of conflicting complainants. The complainant is not required, as in strict interpleader, to be an indifferent stakeholder, without interest in the subject-matter. It is essential, however, that the facts on which he relies entitle him to equitable, as distinguished from legal relief. He is not permitted, under the guise of a bill in equity, to litigate a purely legal claim or interest in the subject-matter." 5 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 60. It is manifest that there reasonable grounds of doubt as to which one of the two claimants of the fund joined as defendants in this petition is entitled to demand and receive payment of the same. And while in the petition it is alleged that at the time of her death the payee in the notes was living in the state of Virginia, and that an administrator upon her estate was appointed by the proper court in Virginia, it also appears that McKinney, who is the codefendant of the Virginia administrator in this petition, duly probated a will of Mrs. Long, the payee of the notes, in the proper court in the state of Kentucky, and at the time had actual possession of the personal property belonging to the estate of Mrs. Long in Kentucky, including the notes representing the fund in controversy. Can it be said, under these circumstances and the others set forth in the statement of facts, that the petitioner could pay the fund in controversy to McKinney, who has already instituted a suit against petitioner in the city court of Macon, without the danger, probable and to be reasonably apprehended, of being forced to pay it again to Montague, the Virginia administrator? Is not the question of the rightful possession of the notes, and the question as to whether Montague or McKinney has the legal right to administer that part of the estate of Mrs. Long which is represented by the notes sued on, a question to be settled between the Virginia and the Kentucky administrators?

It seems to us that an affirmative answer to this question is demanded. We can hardly conceive of a debtor, who does not deny her indebtedness, and who is seeking to pay the amount thereof to the rightful holder of the written evidence of the debt, being placed in a more perplexing situation than that of the petitioner. And, further, inasmuch as, upon the payment of the balance of the purchase money of the land which she bought from Mrs. Long, she would have been entitled, had Mrs. Long lived, to a deed conveying the property to herself, and as neither of the defendants in this case is in a position at present to convey the land, so far as appears from this record, we think this fact is another ground for the maintenance of the petition, so that the proper court, in its final judgment, may render a decree which will, of itself, be record evidence of at least a perfect equitable title to the land in the petitioner upon her payment of the balance of the purchase money for the same. While the offer to pay the fund due into court, as made in the petition, might have been open to special demurrer, we do not think that a defective allegation of readiness and willingness to pay that fund into court was a ground of general demurrer; and, the petition stating as a whole an equitable cause of action, the general demurrer was properly overruled.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

SCOTTISH UNION & NATIONAL INS. CO.
v. COLVARD et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 30, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 397*)—FORFEITURE—WAIVER.

If there was any breach of the stipulation in the policy prohibiting any change in the title, interest, or possession of the assured, the insurance company was estopped from claiming a forfeiture on that ground by reason of the fact that its adjuster, with full knowledge of the facts giving rise to such claim of forfeiture, demanded of and caused the assured to incur trouble and expense in furnishing an estimate of a builder showing the value of the property insured and destroyed by fire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1078; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 606*)—SUBROGATION.

Where a policy on the property of a mortgagor is made payable to the lender as his interest may appear, and the insurance company by separate agreement with the lender is obligated to pay the latter notwithstanding it may deny liability to the assured, with the right under such agreement to be subrogated to the rights of the lender against the assured, and pays the lender with a denial of liability to the assured, but is in fact at the time liable to the assured, the payment to the lender operates at the time it is made to extinguish pro tanto the debt of the assured to the lender; and in a suit wherein it is sought to obtain against the assured a judgment on her notes transferred by the lender to the insurance company in consideration of such payment, the assured may plead the fact of payment, notwithstanding a failure to furnish proofs of loss, or to commence suit on the policy within the time prescribed therein, the payment to the lender having been made before the expiration of such time.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. INSURANCE (§ 397*)—FIRE INSURANCE—CONSTRUCTION OF PROPERTY "APPRAISAL"—"EXAMINATION."

A fire policy provided that the insurer should not be held to have waived any provision or condition of the policy or any forfeiture thereof by any requirement, act, or proceeding on its part relating to the appraisal or to any examination therein provided for. Held, that the "appraisal" and "examination" did not cover acts of the assured's appraiser in demanding of and causing assured to incur trouble and expense in furnishing an estimate of the builder showing the value of the property insured and destroyed by fire.

Lumpkin, J., dissenting in part.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by William F. Tait against J. M. Colvard, executrix of Mrs. L. F. McCroskey, in which the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company, was made a party defendant. From the judgment, the insurance company brings error. Affirmed.

Willis M. Everett, for plaintiff in error. Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. Mrs. L. F. McCroskey (hereinafter called the assured) executed to the Security Investment Company (hereinafter called the lender) three promissory notes, of $1,000 each, to secure a loan from that company to her on a farm, with a dwelling thereon, owned by her. While the loan was in force, Mrs. McCroskey insured the dwelling for $1,500 with the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company (hereinafter called the insurer, or insurance company). By the terms of the policy any loss thereunder was made payable to the lender, for itself, or as agent for its assigns. One of the provisions of the loan agreement was that the borrower should keep the property insured for the benefit of the lender. The insurance company was under an agreement (which was made independent of the policy between the insurance company and what was termed the "Association," the latter representing certain lenders, including the lender in the instant case) that, so far as the lender was concerned, the policy should not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the insured, "nor by any defect in or any change in title, occupation, or ownership of said property." This agreement further provided that whenever the insurance company should pay to the lender any sum for loss or damage under the policy, "and shall claim that, as to the mortgagor or owner, no liability therefor existed, the said insurance company shall, to the extent of such payment, be subrogated to all the rights of the said Association under all securities held by it as collateral as to the mortgage debt."

In July, 1903, the buildings covered by the insurance were destroyed by fire. Some preliminary negotiations (not necessary to be detailed here, but which will be adverted to later on) were had between the insurer and the assured relative to an adjustment of the loss. Afterwards the adjuster of the insurer learned that there had been a contract between the insured and a third person, by virtue of which the latter was placed in possession of the property prior to the fire. He wrote to the attorney for the insured to ascertain the nature of the contract, whereupon the latter replied in effect that the contract was not one violative of any provision in the policy relating to change of title, interest, or possession. The policy contained a provision that it should be void in the event "any change, other than by the death of an insured, take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance (except change of occupants without increase of hazard) * * * by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise." The letter of the attorney above referred to was forwarded by the adjuster to the insurance company, which replied that the policy was void as to the insured by reason of breach of the above-quoted condition, but that the insurer was obligated by reason of its contract with the lender to pay it the amount of the loss, and directed that this be done and an assignment to the extent of the payment be taken from the lender, subrogating the insurer to the lender's rights against the insured to that extent. This correspondence was had during September and October next succeeding the fire in July. On December 26, 1903, the insurer took from the lender an instrument of this character, wherein the lender acknowledged receipt of $1,500 as the full amount of the policy, and recited that, as the insurer claimed no liability existed as to the assured, the lender assigned to the insurer "all its [the lender's] rights under said mortgage and all securities held by it as collateral to the mortgage debt to the extent of said payment to them of fifteen hundred ($1,500) dollars, priority being given the debt due" to the lender.

In December, 1906, William F. Tait, as transferee of one of the $1,000 loan notes and of the half interest in another, brought suit against the executrix of the estate of Mrs. McCroskey, the insured, to recover the amount of principal and interest due thereon to him. In answer thereto, the defendant set up the execution of the three notes, for $1,000 each, to the Security Investment Company, heretofore mentioned, the payment by the insurer to the lender of $1,500, and that, instead of crediting her with the $1,500 thus paid, the lender had unlawfully and against her protest transferred one of the notes and one-half of another to the insurer, and insisted that each of the outstanding loan notes, those in the hands of the plaintiff and those transferred to the insurer, was entitled to a credit of one-half of principal and one-half of interest, and prayed that the insurance company be made a party to the suit. The latter, having been made a party, filed its answer, claiming that it was entitled to collect the notes transferred to it in full, having paid full value therefor, and denied that it was in any way liable to the defendant on account of the insurance policy heretofore mentioned. By amendment the insurance company asserted that it was not liable on the policy, because the insured, before the fire occurred, had made a contract of sale of the property and the purchaser had gone into possession, thereby violating the stipulation in the policy that it should be void if any change in the title, ownership, or possession of the insured took place by the voluntary act of the insured, and further cou-tended that it was not liable because the defendant had neither furnished the company with proof of loss as provided in the policy, nor commenced an action thereon within 12 months from date of fire, as also provided. The case was submitted to the judge as the trier of both law and fact. His decision was adverse to the contentions of the insurance company, and it excepted.

1. One of the contentions of the executrix of the assured is that, if there was any forfeiture of the policy worked by the alleged contract of sale changing the title, interest, or possession of the assured with respect to the property destroyed by fire, the insurance company has waived such forfeiture and was estopped from asserting the same. The assured died in the spring of 1903, and the fire occurred on July 27th next thereafter. The executrix qualified in September. The letters which we will now refer to were all written in 1903. On September 20th the adjuster wrote to the attorney for the assured that he had just learned that the assured had made a sale of the property to a Mrs. Davis after the policy was issued, and wished to know the facts regarding such sale. On September 30th the attorney wrote to the adjuster in regard to the nature of the contract, and that no such contract was made as vitiated the policy. This letter was sent by the adjuster to the insurance company, and its agency superintendent wrote the adjuster on October 17th, that the contract between the assured and Mrs. Davis forfeited the policy, and the proper thing to do was to pay the lender and take from the latter a transfer of the obligation of the assured to the lender, in accordance with the contract referred to in the statement of facts existing between the insurance company and the lender. In this letter it was stated: "After this, you can settle with the assured, or not, upon such terms as you deem best." On November 2d the agency superintendent wrote to the adjuster, directing him to make a settlement with and take a transfer from the lender and close the matter up. On November 11th a copy of this letter was sent to the attorney for the executrix of the assured, by a representative of the lender. On November 14th the adjuster wrote to the executrix as follows: "Your letter of the 9th inst. received. I wrote you some time ago, and also Mr. Crafts, asking that you send me a builder's estimate of the property. Kindly give this your attention, and we will act promptly." On November 20th the adjuster wrote to the attorney for the executrix that the last-mentioned letter had been returned to him, presumably from lack of proper address; that he was anxious to have the executrix comply with his request for a builder's estimate, and asked that the attorney write for him to the executrix about the matter, closing the letter with the following statement: "You are no doubt familiar with the terms of insurance policies, and know that we have a right to call upon the assured for this." On December 8th the attorney of the executrix sent the adjuster "an estimate made by the builder," giving the value of the property burned. On December 9th the adjuster wrote to the attorney, acknowledging receipt of the builder's estimate, and stating that it varied from another which he had; that it varied in one particular, in that it estimated the value of the property at $1,720, whereas the one he had estimated it at $2,650. This letter closed with the statement: "I am satisfied that Mrs. Colvard had better have Mr. Horne go over his figures again, as the three-fourths clause is in the policy, and may come up in connection with this loss, and I do not wish this to play any part in the adjustment." On December 31st the adjuster wrote to the attorney that he appreciated his kindness in the matter and would not trouble him further in regard to it; and on January 5, 1904, the adjuster wrote the attorney that he had completed the adjustment of the matter with the agent of the lender, and would settle with him the full amount of the policy, provided the lender would consent to one requirement of its agent. This letter closed with the statement: "It is therefore, in all probability, unnecessary for you to trouble yourself further in regard to it."

Conceding, without deciding, that the contract of the assured with Mrs. Davis worked a forfeiture of the policy, we think that the conduct of the adjuster of the insurance company, after having knowledge of such facts as, according to the contention of the insured, worked the forfeiture, estopped the insurer from claiming such forfeiture, if there was any. After such knowledge was obtained by the insurance company, it wrote to the adjuster that the company should pay the lender according to its agreement with the lender, and after this "settle with the assured or not upon such terms, as you deem best." The adjuster then wrote to the executrix of the assured and her attorney to have a builder make an estimate of the value of the property burned, that he had a right to require this under the terms of the policy, and that upon receipt of such estimate he would act promptly in regard to the matter. While it does not appear from the record that the executrix incurred any expense for the service rendered by the builder in making the estimate, it is fair to presume that such expense was incurred; and we think the insurance company was estopped from asserting a forfeiture of the policy, if any right to do so existed, where, after it had knowledge of the facts which it contended worked the forfeiture, it required the assured to incur trouble and expense in having an estimate of the value of the property destroyed made by a builder, and did not in connection with such request inform the assured that it expected to insist on such forfeiture. The adjuster, at the time of making such request and causing the executor of the assured this trouble and expense, had authority from the company to disregard the forfeiture, if he saw fit, and settle with the assured upon such terms as he deemed best; and his dealing with the assured as above outlined, looking to an adjustment, without any reservation of the right to claim a forfeiture, might fairly justify the executrix in believing that it was his intention to forego the forfeiture and settle the loss under the terms of the policy. In this connection, see 3 Cooley's Briefs on Ins. §§ 2733, 2739. Unless such conduct on the part of the adjuster caused her to believe that a forfeiture, if any existed, would not be insisted upon, it is not fair to presume that the executrix would have incurred the expense and trouble of furnishing a builder's estimate of the property burned. It does not appear that any agent of the insurance company had the agent of the lender to send to the attorney for the insured the letter to the adjuster from the insurer claiming that the contract with Mrs. Davis and the owner worked a forfeiture of the policy, nor does it appear that the insurer, or its agents, ever notified the executrix of the assured, or her attorney, before or at the time of the payment to the lender, that any forfeiture of the policy was claimed.

The policy provided: "This company shall not be held to have waived any provision or condition of this policy or any forfeiture thereof by any requirement, act, or proceeding on its part relating to the appraisal or to any examination herein provided for." The conduct of the adjuster hereinbefore set forth involved "no proceeding on its part relating to the appraisal or to any examination" referred to in the policy. The "appraisal" and "examination" referred to in the above-quoted provision of the policy refer to matters other than that of an estimate of the builder of the value of the property destroyed, which was requested by the adjuster.

2. Having determined that the insurance company was estopped from insisting that there was any forfeiture of the policy, and as the company was compelled to pay the lender in any event, payment by the insurance company to the lender operated as a payment on the debt of the insured to the lender, and operated at that time to discharge, to the extent of the payment, the debt of the assured to the lender. The payment was a conclusive admission of loss, and the company is in no position to contend that the payment it made should not thus operate because proofs of loss were not furnished. The requirement in the policy that suit be commenced thereon within 12 months from the date of the fire has no application in this case, holding, as we do, that the payment by the insurance company to the lender was an extinguishment pro tanto of the debt of the assured to the lender. It was a settlement of the policy as far as concerned the assured, as well as the lender, and no suit by the assured on the policy was necessary. It follows that the assured, in a suit wherein the insurance company sought to enforce against her the notes transferred to it by the lender, could interpose in defense thereof a plea of payment, as she did in this case. See 4 Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 3917.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except LUMPKIN, J. (dissenting). I concur in the principle stated in the second headnote. I do not think the facts of the case can be declared as matter of law to work an estoppel on the insurance company.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 153*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE—IRREGULAR ORDER—JURISDICTION.

A motion for new trial was presented to the judge in due time during the term at which the trial was had, and an order was passed declaring that: "The foregoing motion for a new trial is read and approved. Let it be filed, and let respondent show cause before me at —, on the — day of —, 1908, why the verdict and judgment should not be set aside and a new trial granted as prayed. As there is not sufficient time during the present term to file a brief of the evidence introduced on the trial of the case, it is further ordered that the movant have until the hearing of this motion, whenever had, to present and have approved the brief of the evidence, and that he have five days thereafter in which to file the same in the office of the clerk of the superior court. If for any reason this motion should not be heard at the time and place named, it is ordered that it be heard at such time and place as may be convenient to court and counsel, either party having the right to call up the same for a hearing upon ten days' notice to the opposite party." Held, that the failure to specify in the order with greater particularity the time and place at which the motion for new trial should be heard was irregular, but not sufficient to defeat the jurisdiction of the court at the next term to approve the brief of evidence and render judgment on the merits of the motion for new trial. In this connection, see Clements v. Ladden, 132 Ga. 430, 64 S. E. 460; Eady v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 129 Ga. 363, 58 S. E. 895. There was no error in refusing to dismiss the motion.

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 152*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE—AMENDED GROUNDS—APPROVAL.

Where an amendment to a motion for new trial excepted to certain parts of the judge's charge to the jury, quoted from the approved charge, thus making the exceptions separate grounds of the motion for new trial, such amended grounds were sufficiently approved by the order, which recited: "The foregoing amendment is examined, and the recitals of fact there-

MARRIAGE (§ 60*)—PROCEEDINGS TO ANNUL—JURISDICTION.

In 1908 a petition addressed to the superior court was filed in a county of this state, alleging in substance as follows: The plaintiff has now, and for over one year prior to the filing of the petition has had, his residence in said state and county. The defendant resides outside of the limits of the state, somewhere in the state of South Carolina; her exact location being unknown to the plaintiff. On a named date a marriage ceremony was performed between the plaintiff and the defendant. At the time of the ceremony the plaintiff was so drunk that he was deprived of reason, did not understand the nature and quality of his act, and was unable to consent to the marriage contract. "Shortly after the said ceremony plaintiff repudiated said marriage, and since that time has never lived with defendant as man and wife." No children have been born of the union. The plaintiff prayed "that said marriage be declared and adjudged null and void, and that he be forever released and discharged from any and all obligations and duties arising from said pretended marriage, and for such other relief as to the court may seem meet and proper in the premises." Service was made by publication. There was no appearance for the defendant. A verdict was found by one jury "in favor of the annulment of said marriage," and a decree was entered declaring the marriage to be null and void, and that the plaintiff and defendant be dissolved from any duties or liabilities arising therefrom. At the same term a motion to set aside the verdict and decree was made, on the grounds that there was no jurisdiction in the court to entertain the suit, treating the action as one, not for divorce, but for annulment, the jurisdiction being in South Carolina, and also that the proceeding for the annulment of the marriage was in law a suit for divorce, and the decree was void because it was based on one verdict, whereas the Constitution requires two verdicts at successive terms for the granting of divorces. The motion was granted, and the judgment or decree was set aside. Held, that this was not error.

Other than as indicated in the third head-note, the special demurrers are without merit.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 278*)—SEPARATION AGREEMENT—VALIDITY—PROMOTION OF SEPARATION.

Under the ruling in Chapman v. Gray, 8 Ga. 341, the contract sued on is not void, as being promotive of a separation and dissolution of the marital relation, and there was no error in refusing to dismiss the petition on general demurrer.

Atkinson, J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Action by P. C. Hubbard, executrix of Otis Irene Melton, against G. D. Melton. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

On March 2, 1907, Gustavus D. Melton and his wife, Otis Irene Melton, entered into the following contract:

"State of Georgia, County of Bibb. This agreement, made and entered into this the second day of March, 1907, between Gustavus D. Melton, of the first part, and his wife, Otis Irene Melton, of the second part, witnesseth: That the said Gustavus D. Melton, husband, and the said Otis Irene Melton, wife, have agreed to a voluntary separation as man and wife, and hereby agree for the future to live separate and apart, and have agreed upon the following as the terms and conditions of such separation, to wit: That the said Gustavus D. Melton, husband, agrees to pay to his said wife, Otis Irene Melton, the sum of fourteen hundred and forty ($1,440.00) dollars in full, ample, and complete settlement of all claims that his said wife, Otis Irene Melton, may have upon him for alimony, either temporary or permanent, or for present or future support that he may owe to her. That in consideration of said sum so agreed to be paid by the said Gustavus D. Melton to his said wife, Otis Irene Melton, she hereby agrees and does release him from all claim that she may now have, or may hereafter have, for any alimony, either temporary or permanent, and for support; and if at any time in the future she may bring suit for divorce, she hereby agrees to release the said Gustavus D. Melton from any claim for attorney's fees to which she might be entitled under the law. The said sum of money so agreed upon as aforesaid by the parties to this contract to be paid by the said Gustavus D. Melton in the sum of forty ($40.00) dollars per month for the period of thirty-six (36) consecutive months until paid, beginning on the first day of March, 1907, and it is to fall due on the first day of each succeeding month until paid. And it is further agreed between the parties to this contract that the minor child, Eston Melton, the only child of said marriage, is to remain in the possession, custody, and control of her said husband, Gustavus D. Melton, who is alone under this contract chargeable with the support, maintenance, and education of said minor child. The sum of money agreed to be paid under this contract to the said Otis Irene Melton is to belong absolutely to her, and is not chargeable in any way with the support of said child." Signed and witnessed.

Thereafter Mrs. Melton died testate, and her executrix brought suit to recover the installments due under the contract, and also prayed to recover such installments as would fall due pending the suit. The defendant demurred generally and specially to the petition. The demurrers were overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Arthur L. Dasher and W. A. McClellan, for plaintiff in error. Ryals, Grace & Anderson, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except ATKINSON, J. (dissenting). I concur in each of the rulings except that expressed in the fifth headnote. Under a proper construction the contract in question was not a result of separation, but was intended to promote separation, between husband and wife, and contrary to public policy. In addition to the cases cited by the majority, see, also, Hill v. Hill, 74 N. H. 288, 67 Atl. 406, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 848, and note, 124 Am. St. Rep. 966.

SANDERS et al. v. ALLEN et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 127*)—AMENDED PLEADING.

Where suit was filed to the January term, 1901, for damages from breach of contract to deliver cotton in 1900, and the damage alleged was the difference between the contract price and the price which the plaintiffs were compelled to pay in order to procure other cotton to supply the place of that specified in the contract, and an amendment was allowed and filed on January 14, 1907, laying the measure of damages for the same breach of contract as the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time and place of delivery, the amendment related back to the time of filing the suit, and was not barred by the statute of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 543-547; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

2. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The evidence did not demand a verdict for the defendants.

3. SALES (§ 421*)—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

The evidence discloses that for a valuable consideration the parties contracted for the sale and actual delivery of cotton, which the sellers did not have, but which they expected to procure from producers, to whom they had sold and were selling fertilizers, for which thereafter notes might be given payable in cotton; and there was no evidence to show that the parties contemplated that the contract could not be complied with otherwise than by actual delivery of cotton. The evidence was not sufficient to show that the transaction was speculative, as contemplated by the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 3537, or that it was a gambling contract: and it was erroneous to instruct the jury as follows: "The law provides that a bare contingency or possibility cannot be subject of sale, unless there exist a certain right in the person selling to a future benefit; so a contract for the sale of goods to be delivered at a future day, where both parties are aware that the seller expects to purchase himself to fulfill his contract, and no skill or labor or expense enters into consideration, but the same is pure speculation upon chances, is contrary to the policy of the law, and cannot be enforced by either party. A mere gambling contract is not enforceable; it is void. A mere contingency cannot be sold; it would be void. Such a contract is not enforceable." In this connection, see Forsyth Mfg. Co. v. Castlen, 112 Ga. 199, 37 S. E. 485, 81 Am. St. Rep. 23; Watson v. Hazlehurst & McAllister, 127 Ga. 298, 56 S. E. 459; Bearden Mercantile Co. v. Madison Oil Co., 128 Ga. 698, 58 S. E. 200; Northington-Munger-Pratt Co. v. Farmers' Gin & Warehouse Co., 119 Ga. 851, 47 S. E. 200, 100 Am. St. Rep. 210.

4. QUESTION FOR JURY—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

The amount of recovery, as well as the right of one partner to bind the other to the contract, was a question which, under the evidence, it was proper to submit to the jury; and it was not erroneous to refuse a request to charge which had the effect of excluding the amount of recovery from the consideration of the jury.

5. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The evidence demanded a verdict for the plaintiffs against the defendant Cooper for such an amount as the jury, under the evidence, might have found in their favor.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 30, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 180*)—ACT UNDER ILLEGAL AMENDMENT TO CHARTER—REMEDY OF STOCKHOLDER.

If an unauthorized and illegal amendment to its charter has been accepted by a corporation and is about to be acted upon, a stockholder, who has not assented thereto or become estopped from complaining, may bring an equitable proceeding to enjoin or set aside any action by the corporation under the amendment. 1 Cook on Stock and Stockholders (3d Ed.) pp. 638-641, §§ 502, 503.

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 155*)—ACTION FOR DIVIDEND.

But where an amendment to a charter of a corporation was obtained and accepted, reducing the capital stock, and all of the stockholders

(of whom there were apparently many), save two, surrendered their shares upon the terms provided in the amendment, and received amounts of money and the lesser amounts of stock in accordance therewith, and where the corporation proceeded to do business upon the new basis for about a year, with the knowledge of one of the nonconsenting stockholders, and a dividend of a certain per cent. was then declared, he could not recognize such a declaration and sue and recover the dividend, basing the amount of his recovery upon the amount of his stock unreduced and the per cent. declared, while others were paid on the basis of the reduced stock; no proceeding having been instituted to set aside the illegal action complained of by him.

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 155*)—ACTION FOR DIVIDEND.

Under such a suit to recover the dividend so declared, the only question being as to the amount which the plaintiff was entitled to recover, there was no error in directing a verdict for the amount of dividend only on the reduced basis.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 593-603; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

Holden, J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by W. J. Harbin and others against the Southern Railway Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff against the railway company, which brings error. Reversed.

W. J. Harbin brought suit against the Southern Railway Company and James Michael to recover damages for the homicide of a son, James Harbin, who was struck and killed by a locomotive of the defendant company which was being operated on its tracks by the codefendant James Michael, who was an engineer in the employment of the company. The suit was "brought jointly against said defendants for their concurrent acts of negligence which caused the homicide." It was alleged in the petition that the decedent was in the employment as a switchman on a yard crew, and that in the discharge of his duties he had to throw two switches which connected what is known as a shop track with the north-bound main line, in order to allow the engine with which he was working to pass on and over said main line and eventually to get to the south-bound main line; that it was necessary for him to go along the tracks a certain distance to another switch in the discharge of his duties; that while proceeding along the track and changing the switches he could easily have been seen by the engineer and fireman, who were directing the engine which killed him, for a distance of 500 feet from the place where he was struck; that he had to work with his face towards the north, and, in the exercise of due care, he proceeded to walk upon the south-bound main line so as to have his face in the direction from which trains or engines might come upon him, and while so walking, in plain view of the employees operating the engine which struck him, he was run down without any warning or any effort to stop the engine until after he was struck; that the engine was operated at a high and negligent rate of speed; that the engineer, one of the defendants, failed to blow the whistle or ring the bell of said engine or cause the same to be rung, and failed to keep proper lookout ahead, and failed to check his engine and to slow up as the engine approached the switch point, as ordinary care required; that this conduct of the defendant Michael was very negligent in view of the crowded condition of the yard at that time and the loud noises being made with escaping steam from other engines; that instead of running in the proper direction on the south-bound track—that is, towards the south—Michael was running his engine north on said track; that the engine which killed decedent was being run in violation of law, in that there was on a street which crosses the defendant company's tracks at grade a line of electric railroad, and the defendant engineer failed to cause the engine to come to a full stop within 50 feet of the place of crossing and then to move slowly forward in violation of section 515 of the Penal Code, as well as in violation of the rules of the defendant company; and that in running across and beyond said crossing the engineer was violating the laws of the state, and that he also violated a valid ordinance of the city of Atlanta by running at a speed exceeding the limit fixed by the ordinance. And it was alleged that "the said Michael, being in sole charge of the movement of said engine, was the entire representative of the defendant railway in the movements thereof."

There was evidence supporting the allegations of negligence upon the part of the engineer. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff against the railway company, but in favor of the company's codefendant, James Michael. The railway company made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and it excepted.

McDaniel, Alston & Black, for plaintiff in error. A. H. Davis and Jackson & Orme, for defendants in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). Under the decision of this court in the case of Southern Railway Co. v. Grizzle, 124 Ga. 735, 53 S. E. 244, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191, a railway company and its engineer may be jointly sued for a negligent homicide, where the negligence of the company results solely from the act and conduct of the engineer. And in the case at bar counsel for defendant relies for authority to support the finding in favor of the plaintiff against the railway company (while in the same verdict the codefendant, the engineer, whose actual negligence is alleged to have caused the homicide, is exonerated) upon decisions of this and other courts and the rule laid down in text-books, to the effect that, where several are sued as joint tort-feasors, there may be a finding against one or all of the defendants joined in the action. But we do not think that this rule, in view of the acts of negligence pleaded in this case, is applicable. Under the allegations of negligence in the petition made to show liability upon the part of the defendants, the only acts of negligence were committed by the engineer who was operating the engine at the time it struck and killed the deceased, James Harbin; and under the decision in the case of Southern Railway Co. v. Grizzle, supra, the negligence alleged in the present case constituted misfeasance upon the part of the railway company's employé, its codefendant. If he were guilty of the negligence pleaded, the railway company, of course, was liable upon the principle of respondeat superior. The company itself was not, and could not have been, guilty of any negligence independently of the acts of misfeasance upon the part of its engineer. By the verdict of the jury Michael was found not guilty of negligence causing the death of the plaintiff's son; and, where the codefendant was not and could not have been guilty of negligence that would render it liable save on the principle of respondeat superior, we do not think that liability could be imputed to it where its employé was exonerated, when he alone performed the act which constitutes the basis for the charge of negligence.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In the case of McGinnis v. Railway Co., 200 Mo. 347, 98 S. W. 590, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 118 Am. St. Rep. 661, where a verdict was found exonerating the servant in an action against the master and servant for personal injuries caused by the misfeasance of the servant, the Missouri Supreme Court said: "We are firmly of the opinion that in cases where the right to recover is dependent solely upon the doctrine of respondeat superior, and there is a finding that the servant, through whose negligence the master is attempted to be held liable, has not been negligent, as was true in the case in hand, there should be no judgment against the master. The verdict in this case is a monstrosity. The jury say French was guilty of no negligence, yet, in the same breath, say the company was guilty of negligence, although nothing further was done by the company than what it did through French, its servant." And in the case of Doremus v. Root, 23 Wash. 715, 63 Pac. 574 (54 L. R. A. 649), the court says: "Joint tort-feasors are liable to the injured person (other than that he may have but one satisfaction) as if the act causing the injury was the separate act of each of them, and they have, except in certain special cases, no right of contribution among themselves. But the defendants in this character of action are in no sense joint tort-feasors, nor does their liability to the plaintiff rest upon the same or like grounds. The act of an employé, even in legal intendment, is not the act of his employer, unless the employer either previously directs the act to be done or subsequently ratifies it. For injuries caused by the negligence of an employé not directed or ratified by the employer, the employé is liable because he committed the act which caused the injury, while the employer is liable, not as if the act was done by himself, but because of the doctrine of respondeat superior, the rule of law which holds the master responsible for the negligent act of his servant committed while the servant is acting within the general scope of his employment and engaged in his master's business. The primary liability to answer for such an act, therefore, rests upon the employé, and, when the employer is compelled to answer in damages therefor, he can recover over against the employé. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Compania Transatlantica Espanola, 134 N. Y. 461, 31 N. E. 987, 30 Am. St. Rep. 685, note to Carterville v. Cook, 16 Am. St. Rep. 248; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. (5th Ed.) § 242; 2 Van Fleet on Former Adjudication, p. 1162." Again, on page 716 of 23 Wash., on page 574 of 63 Pac. (54 L. R. A. 649), Fullerton, J., in that case, further says: "So, also, in such an action, whether brought against the employer severally or jointly with the employé, the gravamen of the charge is, and must be, the negligence of the employé, and no recovery can be had unless it be proved, and found by the jury, that the employé was negligent. Stated in another way: If the employé who causes the injury is free from liability therefor, his employer must also be free from liability. This was held in New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jones, 142 U. S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 109, 35 L. Ed. 919." In the note to case of McGinnis v. Railroad, supra, 200 Mo. 347, 98 S. W. 590, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881, 118 Am. St. Rep. 661, it is said: "In Montfort v. Hughes, 3 E. D. Smith [N. Y.] 591, it was held that if in a joint action against master and servant, founded solely upon the negligence of the servant, the master not being present nor acting in the matter, the servant is acquitted, there can be no recovery against the master. In such a case a verdict against the master and in favor of the servant would be self-contradictory. Indiana Nitroglycerine & Torpedo Co. v. Lippincott Glass Co., 165 Ind. 361, 75 N. E. 649." See in same connection note to the McGinnis Case in 19 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cases, 660. And in the case of Furnace Corporation v. Crowder's Adm'r, 110 Va. 387, 66 S. E. 63, the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, affirming the judgment of the court below in overruling a motion in arrest of judgment and a motion for a judgment notwithstanding a verdict, said: "If the court had adhered to its original position and entered judgment upon the verdict for $3,500 which was first rendered by the jury, and the case in that situation had been brought before us upon the petition of the Ivanhoe Furnace Corporation, McGinnis v. Chicago, Rock Island, etc., Ry. Co., 200 Mo. 347 [98 S. W. 590, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 118 Am. St. Rep. 661], and Doremus v. Root, 23 Wash. 710 [63 Pac. 572, 54 L. R. A. 649], relied upon by plaintiff in error, would have been pertinent and entitled to very grave consideration; but the case before us differs materially from the cases cited." Other cases in support of the conclusion which we have reached might be cited, but the question involved is elaborately discussed in the decisions which we have referred to and in the cases there cited.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except

HOLDEN, J. (dissenting). I cannot concur in the ruling made by a majority of the court, and must dissent from the judgment of reversal. In a suit for damages brought against a railroad company and its engineer for the killing of the son of the plaintiff, where the sole ground upon which liability of the defendants is claimed is the misfeasance of the engineer, the servant of the company, in operating one of its trains, it is not proper to rule that a verdict in favor of the engineer and against the company cannot stand because it is contradictory. If the proof of the facts raising a presumption that the railroad company was guilty of the acts of negligence alleged did under the law raise such presumption against the engineer as well as against the railroad company, or if such proof raised no presumption against either, a verdict finding against the railroad company and in favor of the engineer might be said to be contradictory, and it might be proper to set it aside for this reason. But the presumption of negligence of the railroad company created by the law of this state upon proof by the plaintiff that the company in the operation of its train killed the son of the plaintiff without fault of the deceased is not applicable to the servant who is charged with the acts causing the homicide in a suit against the latter and the railroad company. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 2321, upon the trial of such a case, upon proof that without fault of the deceased he was killed by the running of the train of the company, the presumption that the company was negligent as alleged in the declaration of plaintiff arises. Such proof alone would raise no presumption of negligence against the engineer, the other defendant, or that he did the acts of which complaint is made. Southern Railroad Company v. Cash, 131 Ga. 537, 62 S. E. 823. If upon the trial the plaintiff proved the homicide, and that it occurred without fault of the deceased, and no other evidence was introduced by plaintiff, or by either of the defendants, the evidence introduced would authorize a recovery against the railroad company, but there would be no evidence before the jury authorizing a recovery against the engineer. If, after plaintiff introduced such evidence making the proof of the facts above stated, other evidence was introduced by plaintiff and defendants, and this other evidence was equally balanced in its effect upon the mind of the jury upon the question as to whether or not the engineer was guilty of the acts complained of, it would be the duty of the jury to render a verdict against the railroad company because it had not rebutted the presumption of negligence against it, and to render a verdict in favor of the engineer because the plaintiff had not shown by a preponderance of the testimony that the engineer was guilty of such acts. The law gave the plaintiff the right to sue the defendants jointly; and it is not proper to set aside the verdict of the jury because it was rendered in accordance with, and in the observance of, the rules of evidence prescribed by the law, to be applied by the jury in trying the case and rendering a verdict.

BRYAN v. MADISON SUPPLY CO.

MADISON SUPPLY CO. v. BRYAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 82*)—LABORER'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

The method of foreclosing a laborer's lien on personal property is as provided in Civ. Code 1895, § 2816. Among the essentials to such a foreclosure is the requirement that the person asserting the lien must, by himself, his agent, or attorney, make affidavit showing all the facts necessary to constitute a lien under the Code.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 128-134; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 82*)—LABORER'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

Where, in an effort to foreclose, the person asserting the lien procured a justice of the peace to "write out the lien and the affidavit," and then "signed," and the justice of the peace "attested" his signature, without the administration of any oath, the paper so executed did not constitute a valid affidavit. Britt v. Davis, 130 Ga. 74, 60 S. E. 180.

(a) A paper of this character was not rendered valid by testimony delivered by the purported affiant as a witness on the trial of a money-rule case, where it was sought to subject the money to the payment of an execution issued upon the pretended foreclosure, to the effect that the facts stated in the paper were true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 128-134; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 82*)—LABORER'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

No valid execution can issue upon a paper purporting to be an affidavit foreclosing a laborer's lien, which is void for the reasons indicated in the preceding notes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 128-134; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 248*)—LABORER'S LIEN—NECESSITY FOR FORECLOSURE.

In the absence of equitable grounds, a laborer's lien which is not foreclosed cannot participate in a fund brought into court under other process, which is the subject of controversy in a money-rule case. Cumming v. Wright, 72 Ga. 767. See, also, in this connection, Berrie v. Smith, 97 Ga. 782, 25 S. E. 757. In such a case, where the contest is between an unfore-closed laborer's lien and an execution based on a duly foreclosed landlord's lien for supplies, the latter is entitled to so much of the fund as is necessary to its discharge, without regard to the rank of the respective liens.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

5. JURY (§ 16*)—EXECUTION—ESTABLISHMENT OF CLAIMS OF THIRD PERSONS—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL.

This being a money-rule case, which involved only a question of law, the judge had the power to dispose of the case without submitting it to the jury or causing them to render a verdict. Durden v. Belt, 61 Ga. 545.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 82*)—EXECUTION—ESTABLISHMENT OF CLAIMS OF THIRD PERSONS.

The motion to quash the execution based on the alleged laborer's lien, because the undisputed evidence showed that the alleged affidavit upon which it was based was not sworn to by the affiant, was in effect a motion to award the fund to the contesting lien; and as the cross-bill of exceptions assigns error on the refusal of such motion: the point raised by the cross-bill controls the whole case, and renders it unnecessary to consider the main bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 128-134; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

HODGES v. PINE PRODUCT CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 76*)—FISH (§ 6*)—POLLUTION OF STREAM—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The plaintiff brought suit against the defendant, making among other allegations substantially the following: The defendant is engaged in a certain business, in the operation of which it discharges into a ditch water which flows into a creek running through a tract of land owned by the plaintiff, part of which is used as a pasture. The water thus discharged is poisoned with gases and chemicals extracted from pine wood, and the water in such stream is thereby polluted and adulterated, rendering it unfit for the stock of the plaintiff to drink, and causing to the plaintiff damages in specified ways. Held: (1) The adulteration of such stream by artificial means constitutes an invasion of the property rights of the plaintiff, for which he is entitled to nominal damages, even though he shows no special damages. (2) If one by artificial means pollutes the water in the stream on land of another, whereby the fishing privileges of the latter of a pecuniary value are destroyed or injured, he is entitled to recover damages therefor. (3) If, by reason of the conduct of the defendant in polluting the stream, the land was rendered unfit or less valuable for use as a pasture, or other purposes for which it was adapted with the stream running through it unpolluted, in the absence of other items of special damages, the measure of damages of the owner would be the diminution in the market value of the property, if the injury was of a permanent nature, or the diminution in the rental value, if the injury was of a temporary nature.

2. NUISANCE (§ 44*)—PRIVATE NUISANCE.

A private nuisance gives a right of action to the person injured thereby under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 3853, and, under the express provisions of section 3861, that the act may be otherwise lawful does not keep it from being a nuisance.

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by W. H. P. Hodges against the Pine Product Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. T. Burkhalter and Hines & Jordan, for plaintiff in error. O'Byrne, Hartridge & Wright and H. H. Elders, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. The plaintiff brought suit against the defendant for damages, making, among others, substantially the following allegations: Defendant is engaged in the business of extracting from wood, at its plant, "rosin, turpentine, creosote, etc., including all the poisonous gases and chemicals contained in pine wood." From an artesian well the defendant pumps every day thousands of gallons of water, which is discharged into a ditch used to convey the water into Cedar creek. "The said poisonous gases and chemicals extracted from the said wood contaminates the said artesian water as used and discharged from further service in said plant and let flow by said defendant into a ditch and over lands and on into Cedar creek." Cedar creek runs through a described tract of land of 1,000 acres, more or less, owned by the plaintiff, and is "especially adapted for fishing and water for the stock of petitioner." Prior to the conduct of the defendant complained of, the plaintiff had fenced this tract of land. "Your petitioner is a sheep owner and stock raiser, and had this pasture especially prepared for his stock, consisting of sheep, cattle, hogs, goats, etc.; that their dependence for water was on said creek. Petitioner alleges, and shows to the court, that the said poisonous waters from defendant's plant has already destroyed all the fish in said stream; that your petitioner has no way to water his said stock in said pasture, because the said waters in the said creek have been poisoned by the said defendant. * * * Your petitioner shows to the court that the said contaminated, poisonous waters kills vegetation and some trees; * * * that the said tract of land has been further damaged by the said poisonous waters in the opinion of this plaintiff by the said waters killing some of the small growth and timber and grasses growing thereon," and an offensive odor comes from the stream. Other allegations of the petition will be hereinafter stated. To the order of the court sustaining the general and special demurrers of the defendant and dismissing the petition, the plaintiff excepted.

1. While the petition was subject to some of the grounds of special demurrer, as will be hereinafter pointed out, we do not think it was subject to general demurrer. Civ. Code 1895, § 3879, provides: "The owner of land is entitled to the free and exclusive enjoyment of all water courses, not navigable, flowing over his land; and the diverting of the stream, * * * or the adulterating thereof so as to interfere with its value to him, is a trespass upon his property." Section 3057 provides: "Running water, while on land, belongs to the owner of it, but he has no power to divert it from the usual channel, nor can he so use or adulterate it as to interfere with the enjoyment of it by the next owner." And section 3061 is as follows: "The owner of a stream not navigable is entitled to the same exclusive possession thereof as he has to any other part of his land; and the Legislature has no power to compel or interfere with him in its lawful use, for the benefit of those above or below him on the stream, except to restrain nuisances." A private nuisance gives a right of action to the person injured thereby, and the fact that the act may be otherwise lawful does not keep it from being a nuisance. See Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3858-3861. Any unlawful interference by one with the enjoyment by another of his private property gives a cause of action. Civ. Code 1895, § 3874. In 2 Farnham on Water and Water Rights, § 462, pp. 1565, 1566, it is said: "The right to have a natural water course continue its physical existence upon one's property is as much property as is the right to have the hills or forests remain in place. * * * Such flow and use belong to the land through which it passes, as an incident, convenience, or easement which inseparably connects itself therewith as a part thereof, and frequently gives or adds value thereto; and is a private property right in the proprietor thereof within the protection of the constitutional provision that private property shall be forever held inviolate, subject to the public welfare, and shall not be taken for public use without compensation being first made. The property, therefore, consists, not in the water itself, but in the added value which the stream gives to the land through which it flows. This is made up of the power which may be obtained from the flow of the stream, from the increased fertility of the adjoining fields because of the presence of the water, and of the value of the water for the uses to which it may be put. The right to the continued existence of these conditions is property, to protect which the owner may resort to any or all of the instrumentalities which may be employed for the protection of private property rights." According to the allegations of the petition, the defendant, in the operation of its plant, was continuously adulterating the waters of the stream passing through the land of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover whatever damages he sustained by reason thereof. Horton v. Fulton, 130 Ga. 468, 60 S. E. 1059; Satterfield v. Rowan, 83 Ga. 187, 9 S. E. 677; Price v. High Shoals Mfg. Co., 132 Ga. 246, 64 S. E. 87, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684; Parker v. American Woolen Co., 195 Mass. 591, 81 N. E. 468, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 584; Bowling Coal Co. v. Ruffner, 117 Tenn. 180, 100 S. W. 116, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 923, 10 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 581. There was an illegal invasion of the property rights of the plaintiff, and he was entitled to recover nominal damages, if he sustained no special damages. Price v. High Shoals Mfg. Co., supra.

2. The pollution of a stream by one riparian owner so as to pollute the water as it passes through the land of a lower riparian owner gives a right of action to the latter. If no measure of damages is furnished beyond the mere commission of the tort, nominal damages may be recovered. In the present case there is no allegation of diminution of market value of the land, or of its rental value. The only suggestion in that direction is an allegation that the plaintiff has been damaged in being deprived of the use of his pasture at least $100 a year. This is not a sufficient allegation as to rental value. The plaintiff relies upon items of special damages sought to be set up by him. One of these is comprised in allegations to the effect that the fish in the creek which passes through the plaintiff's land down to its mouth at the river had been totally destroyed, and that the fish in the river had been practically destroyed; also, that the plaintiff had been deprived of his fishing privileges in the creek passing through his land, which he had enjoyed all his life and which had been valuable to him; and that thereby he had been damaged in the sum of $300. This allegation also states that the privilege was valuable to him, his family, and his settlement. Of course, the statements of value to his family and his settlement are wholly irrelevant, and furnish no ground for recovery. The allegation is also imperfect in not distinctly alleging the value of the fishing privilege owned by the plaintiff; but the demurrer does not rest on either of these last two points.

While, therefore, the allegation is imperfect, it amounts to a statement that the plaintiff owned a fishing privilege in the creek passing through his land which had a pecuniary value; that this had been destroyed by the conduct of the defendant; and that the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $300. Game running wild upon the plaintiff's land is not owned absolutely by him, and fish swimming in a stream running through his land are not his absolute property. He cannot recover the value of fish destroyed in the stream, or game killed on the land, by reason of the pollution of the stream, but a fishing privilege shown to have a pecuniary value is a property right, for the destruction of which damages are recoverable. As against the demurrer filed, it was error to strike the allegations on the subject of the plaintiff's fishing privilege and its destruction or injury by the defendant. As the plaintiff alleged an injury to his fishing privilege of pecuniary value, the allegation that the fish in the stream on his land were destroyed should not have been stricken. See, in this connection, 9 Cyc. 988-991, 1000; 32 Am. Dig. "Fish," § 11. There was no allegation that there was any injury to or destruction of plaintiff's hunting privileges of any pecuniary value, and the allegation that game was destroyed should have been stricken. The demurrer admitted the facts alleged for the purpose of the argument. What the evidence may show will develop on the trial.

3. The petition also alleged: "Your petitioner shows that he has been actually damaged the cost of building his said pasture fence around the said 1,000 acres of land in the sum of $500, or some other large sum. Your petitioner further shows that, in addition to this damage, he has been damaged in being deprived of the use of said pasture at least $100 a year, and this damage is a continuous one; that the said damage in being deprived of the use of said pasture will amount to at least $1,500." The demurrer to this paragraph should have been sustained, as the damages alleged were not such as were recoverable. The measure of his damages would not be the expense he incurred in building a pasture fence, as the pasture fence was not destroyed or injured by the pollution of the stream, nor would his measure of damages be the actual value of the pasture to him during any period. If, by reason of the conduct of the defendant in polluting the stream, the land was rendered unfit or less valuable for use as a pasture, or other purposes for which it was adapted with the stream running through it unpolluted, in the absence of other items of special damages, the measure of damages of the owner would be the diminution in the market value of the property if the injury was of a permanent nature, or the diminution in the rental value. If the injury was of a temporary nature. See Muncie Pulp Co. v. Kees- ling, 166 Ind. 479, 76 N. E. 1002, 9 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 530, and authorities cited in the note on page 534. It is also alleged "that the evaporation of the said waters from the said creek contaminated by the said poisonous gases and chemicals give out an odor in vapor when said stream is drying, or the waters evaporating, that is indeed offensive. Your petitioner shows to the court that the said contaminated poisonous waters kills vegetation and some trees." These allegations were too general in their nature, and were properly stricken on special demurrer. The petition further alleged: "Your petitioner shows that the said defendant operates its plant on Sunday in disregard of the laws of God and man, and setting an example to the said town of Collins to the injury of the morals and good citizenship of the inhabitants of that community, and especially the young boys therein." The demurrer to this allegation on the ground that it was irrelevant and set up no liability "as against this defendant in favor of said plaintiff" should have been sustained. The fact that the conduct of the defendant operates "to the injury of the morals and good citizenship of that community, and especially the young boys therein," however reprehensible from a moral standpoint, gave to the defendant no legal right to damages because of such conduct, nor did the facts alleged illustrate any question involved in the case.

The allegation that the plaintiff was entitled to punitive and exemplary damages because of the destruction of the fish in the stream should have been stricken on demurrer, as there were no allegations in the petition entitling the plaintiff to recover damages of this nature.

The petition alleged: "Your petitioner further alleges and shows that the said defendant first turned its said poisonous waters down alongside the Seaboard Air-Line right of way, and got into trouble by reason of the injury they were doing said parties, and the said defendant changed its said poisonous waste waters into Cedar creek to avoid the trouble damages they had incurred on themselves by turning water down alongside the said Seaboard Air-Line Railway. Your petitioner shows that the said defendant has no regard for the rights of other folks or the welfare of the people, and especially your petitioner." These allegations were demurred to on the ground that they were irrelevant, and the demurrer should have been sustained. Proof of these allegations would give the plaintiff no right to damages, and would illustrate no question involved in the case.

The third paragraph of the petition was not subject to the demurrer filed thereto. The thirteenth paragraph of the petition was subject to the demurrer filed thereto, and should have been stricken.

GUTHRIE v. GWINNETT COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1910.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence. The amended grounds of the motion for new trial complain of certain excerpts from the charge of the court, in some instances of omissions to charge (though not requested in writing), and in other instances that the evidence did not authorize the charge. The charge was not altogether free from criticism, but, considering the evidence and the charge in its entirety, there was no such error as to require a new trial for any reason assigned.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CARRIERS (§ 120)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—INJURY THROUGH NATURAL DETERIORATION—LIABILITY—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

After having issued and levied an attachment against a nonresident railroad company, consignors filed a declaration in attachment, making substantially the following allegations: The plaintiff shipped from Rome, Ga., to named consignees in New York City, by way of the Southern Railway Company, a car load of peaches, which was delivered by that company to the defendant, and the latter carried the peaches to their destination, where they arrived in good condition on July 30th. The defendant gave the consignee no opportunity to unload the car the day of its arrival, but it was sent to Jersey City, where it was allowed to remain without icing, or any steps taken to prevent decay of the fruit, until the 1st day of August. The failure of the defendant to deliver the car promptly on the day of its arrival, or to ice it, was the cause of the peaches becoming unmarketable, and the consignees refused to accept them when finally notified by the defendant that the car was ready for unloading. The peaches were lost to the plaintiffs, and they sue to recover their value. Held, if the value of the peaches was lessened because of becoming unsound by reason of natural deterioration while in the possession of the defendant, without any fault on the part of the defendant, it would not be liable in damages to the plaintiffs because of such injury, though it occurred without fault of the consignees.

(a) As the evidence authorized the jury to find that the peaches thus suffered injury while in the possession of the defendant, without fault on its part, it was error to charge: "If, while these peaches were in the possession of the defendant company, you find that they were damaged, and without fault on the part of the consignee, Goetchius & Co., of New York, either for the want of payment of freight or otherwise, they became damaged, then the plaintiffs can recover the extent of such damages."

3. OBJECTIONS WITHOUT MERIT.

4. DEMURRER PROPERLY OVERRULED.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer.

Error from Superior Court, Hart County; D. W. Meadow, Judge.

Action by Lydia Hilliard, by next friend, against A. D. Hilliard and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Lydia Hilliard, a minor, by next friend, brought suit against A. D. Hilliard, J. M. Cannon, Sr., G. W. Grizzle, O. C. Madden, F. A. Weaver, R. C. Madden, and L. T. Welton for recovery of possession of certain land and the value of its rents. The petition, as amended, in substance alleged that the defendants were claiming the land under a purchaser at a sheriff's sale held on the first Tuesday in May, 1900, where the property was sold as the property of W. A. Hilliard; that under the Constitution of 1868 the land had been set apart as a homestead to William A. Hilliard as the head of a family, and was so held when, at the March term, 1890, of Hart superior court, the plaintiff, being a child, was formally adopted by W. A. Hilliard and given his name; that thereupon she became a member of the family of W. A. Hilliard and a co-beneficiary of the homestead estate, the other members of the family being his wife and minor son; that William A. Hilliard is dead, and the plaintiff is the only beneficiary of the homestead estate, and as such is entitled to possession of the land and the rents therefrom; that the executions under which the land was sold were based upon debts contracted after the land had been set apart as a homestead, for which the homestead property was not subject, and the sale was void. Paragraphs 3 and 4 were as follows: "(3) That petitioner is a female under the age of 21 years, and as the adopted child of the said Wm. A. Hilliard is a beneficiary of said homestead and entitled to possession of said tract of land and to the rents and profits thereof. (4) That said defendants, or those under whom they claim, have been in possession of said tract of land since the 5th of May, 1900, and receiving the rents and profits thereof, going into possession under some pretended, illegal, and void claim." The defendants demurred to the petition as a whole, on the grounds that it failed to show that the plaintiff was a member of W. A. Hilliard's family at the time the homestead was set apart, and that the petition failed to set forth a cause of action against the defendants, or either of them. They demurred to paragraph 3, on the ground that the facts set forth did not make the plaintiff a beneficiary of the homestead, and to paragraph 4, on the grounds that it did not allege sufficient facts to put the defendants on notice wherein their possession of the land was illegal, and under what void claims they took possession of the land, and that the language used in the paragraph was a mere conclusion of the pleader. The court overruled the demurrer, and the defendants excepted.

Jas. H. Skelton, Jos. N. Worley, and A. G. & Julian McCurry, for plaintiffs in error. T. G. Dorough and Sam. B. Swilling, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. 1. The homestead was set apart under article 7 of the Constitution of 1868 (Code 1873, § 5135), which, among other things, declared that "each head of a family, or guardian or trustee of a family of minor children, shall be entitled to a homestead" of realty and personalty, and that it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to provide by law for the setting apart and valuation of the property, and to enact laws for the full and complete "protection and security of the same to the sole use and benefit of said families as aforesaid." This put the beneficial use in the family. The case of Dismuke v. Eady & Co., 80 Ga. 289, 5 S. E. 494, involved a homestead set apart under the Constitution of 1868, and it was held: "Where, in 1870, a father of minor children obtained a homestead in certain lands, and subsequently, during the minority of the children, he remarried, his wife, by virtue of her marriage, became a beneficiary of the homestead, and it did not terminate upon the arrival of the children at majority, and was not subject to the debts of creditors of the homestead to whom he and his wife conveyed the land, with the approval of the ordinary, to secure such indebtedness." The case of Nelson v. Commercial Bank, 80 Ga. 328, 9 S. E. 1075, also involved a homestead set apart under the Constitution of 1868; and it was there held: "Where the head of a family as such secured a homestead for his minor children named and described in the application, then married and had another child, his wife and his child by her became members of the same family of which he was head when the homestead was taken; and that family was not dissolved nor the homestead right terminated when the children for whose benefit the homestead was originally secured attained majority and withdrew from the family. The homestead continued to exist by operation of law, and the wife and her child as beneficiaries." See, also, Barfield v. Barfield, 72 Ga. 668. Under these authorities, the second wife and after-born children were held to be beneficiaries of existing homestead estates only on the ground that they lawfully became members of the family. A child adopted under Civ. Code 1895, § 2497, would lawfully come into the family of the person adopting it (Pace v. Klink, 51 Ga. 220), and for the same reason as a second wife or after-born children would become a beneficiary of an existing homestead estate set apart and being enjoyed by the family. See on the general subject cases cited in 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 540, 541.

HUGHES et al. v. PURCELL et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMESTEAD (§ 21*)—PERSONS ENTITLED—ABANDONED WIFE.

Where a husband, being the head of a family consisting of his wife and minor children, abandoned them, and refused to make application to have a homestead set apart out of his land and personal property under the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 2806, it was competent for the wife to make such application, where she unequivocally alleged that the husband had refused to make the application. Civ. Code 1895, § 2842; Hirsch v. Stinson, 112 Ga. 348, 37 S. E. 365.

(a) It would not suffice to allege merely that the husband "neglected or refused." Davis v. Lumpkin, 106 Ga. 582, 32 S. E. 626.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 29, 30; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

2. HOMESTEAD (§ 22*)—RIGHT TO POSSESSION—"FAMILY."

Where, upon appropriate application by the wife, land was laid off by the county surveyor and platted, and the plat was duly returned, filed, and recorded by the ordinary, the family became beneficiaries of the homestead and entitled to possession of the land. Civ. Code 1895, § 2874; Gresham v. Johnson, 70 Ga. 631.

(a) The term "family," as thus employed, contemplates children born afterwards to the husband and wife as well as those in esse and designated in the homestead proceedings. In this connection, see Hilliard v. Hilliard (Ga.) 68 S. E. 1110.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2673-2691; vol. 8, p. 7661.]

3. HOMESTEAD (§ 142*)—ACTION FOR POSSESSION—PARTIES.

In a suit to recover possession of land from which the beneficiaries of a homestead exemption have been unlawfully evicted, ordinarily the husband would be a proper party; but if the husband be dead, and the exemption has ceased to exist as to the children in existence at the time the property was set apart by reason of death, marriage, or attainment of majority, but has not ceased to exist as to a child born after the homestead was set apart, the widow for the use of herself and such afterborn child during its minority may maintain the action. In this connection see Braswell v. McDaniel, 74 Ga. 319; Pritchett v. Davis, 101 Ga. 236, 28 S. E. 666, 65 Am. St. Rep. 298.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 271-280; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

4. HOMESTEAD (§ 213*)—ACTION FOR POSSESSION—PLEADING.

In such an action, where it was alleged that the husband was the owner of the land, seised and possessed thereof, and that the wife obtained the homestead and took possession thereunder and with the children remained in possession for more than seven years, this was sufficient allegation of title and interest to withstand a general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 394-396; Dec. Dig. § 213.*]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 19*)—RECOVERY OF HOMESTEAD.

The action being at law, the fact that 16 years may have intervened between the date of eviction and institution of the suit will not bar the action. McWhorter v. Cheney, 121 Ga. 541, 49 S. E. 603, being an equitable action, the ruling there made does not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 73-85; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

6. SUFFICIENCY OF PLEADING.

The allegations relative to the ouster and possession by defendants were not of such character as to make it affirmatively appear on the face of the petition that a title adverse to the beneficiaries of the homestead had been acquired by prescription.

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 19*)—SUITS TO RECOVER LAND.

The petition stated a cause of action in the nature of a complaint for land and for mesne profits. No equitable relief is prayed. The statute of limitations does not apply to suits to recover land; lapse of time being only available in aid of any prescriptive title which the defendant may set up. As against a general demurrer, the petition set forth a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 73-85; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

Lumpkin and Beck, JJ., dissenting.

ATKINSON, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except LUMPKIN and BECK, JJ. (dissenting). The allegations indicate an equitable petition rather than an action of ejectment or complaint for land. The plaintiff stated that, "for herself and the minor child," she "brings this her equitable petition," and at the close of the allegations she again said: "Wherefore, your petitioner's husband being dead, and she and her minor child being the only beneficiaries left, she brings this her equitable petition, and prays," etc. She alleged that "petitioner further shows that she was ignorant of her rights under her homestead, and not knowing of the rights of defendant, James H. Purcell, she and her minor children vacated said homestead by reason of the demands and threats made by the defendant, James H. Purcell, and that he immediately took charge and possession of same." It was further alleged that at the time when the demand was made by defendant he insisted that he had title to the property, and it appeared that this occurred about sixteen years before the suit was brought. The prayers of the petition were for restoration of the possession, to recover the profits of the homestead, together with the value of the timber which it was alleged that the principal defendant (Purcell) had removed and sold, receiving value therefor, "that she have such other and further relief in this case as in equity and justice may seem meet and proper" and for process. We think the action was an equitable one, and that the case is controlled by the decisions in Taylor v. James, 109 Ga. 327 (4) (5), 34 S. E. 674, and McWhorter v. Cheney, 121 Ga. 541, 49 S. E. 603.

W. K. Miller, for plaintiff in error. C. H. & R. S. Cohen, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. A number of questions are presented by the record; but, under the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to deal with but one. The action was for the value of a trunk and its contents, which was received by the Southern Express Company on March 23, 1904, to be forwarded to New York. It was carried to Washington City, and there delivered to the Adams Express Company, which undertook to deliver it to the person to whom it was addressed in New York. It reached New York on the 25th of March, 1904, and, on account of the failure to deliver it to the addressee on that date, it was stored in the office of the Adams Express Company. On the morning of March 26, 1904, the office was burned, and the trunk destroyed by fire. Valuing the trunk and its contents at $380, the plaintiff on May 25, 1903, more than four years from the date of the loss of the trunk, filed suit for the above-stated value as principal, with interest thereon from March 23, 1904.

The action was founded upon the breach of the contract, and, being such, was barred. Civ. Code 1895, § 3774; Patterson v. Augusta & Savannah R. Co., 94 Ga. 140, 21 S. E. 283; Palmer v. Southern Express Co., 52 Ga. 240. This was the third action which the plaintiff had instituted. The first was one of a similar character, filed July 11, 1904; but that was dismissed by the plaintiff more than six months previous to the institution of the third action. The second action was a suit in trover, which was different in character both from the first and third, and was not a recommencement of the first suit; nor was the third action a renewal of the second. There was no dismissal of the second action, but it was prosecuted to a final determination on its merits, and brought to this court (Southern Express Co. v. Sinclair, 130 Ga. 372, 60 S. E. 849), where the judgment of the trial court, which had gone in favor of the plaintiff, was reversed. It is provided in Civ. Code 1895, § 3786, that "if a plaintiff shall be nonsuited, or shall discontinue or dismiss his case, and shall recommence it within six months, such renewed case shall stand upon the same footing as to limitation as the original case; but this privilege of dismissal and renewal shall be exercised only once under this clause." It is manifest that the pendency of the former actions above recited will not suffice to remove the bar of the statute.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

DENSON v. GEORGIA RY. & ELECTRIC CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 4)—ELECTRICITY (§§ 14, 19*)—"ORDINARY CARE"—MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO EMPLOYEE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for damages on account of the homicide of the plaintiff's husband, under the pleading and the evidence the following facts appeared: The plaintiff's husband was in the employment of one of the defendant's patrons, and was charged with the duty of repairing shafting, machinery, "and the like." The defendant contracted to deliver into the plant of the company where the plaintiff's husband worked currents of 220 volts of electricity on a wire for supplying power and 110 volts on each of two other wires used for feeding electric lights. While engaged in his duties, the plaintiff's husband came into contact with the wire or bulb on an extension cord connected with a wire feeding one of the electric lights, and received a shock causing his death. The defendant carried on its primary wires to a transformer located near the plant a current of 2,300 volts; said transformer being for the purpose of reducing the current to that which the defendant was to supply to the plant. Various acts of negligence were alleged to have been committed by the defendant, which resulted in allowing the wire with which the plaintiff came in contact to become charged with an excessive and deadly current, and with respect to its failure to provide suitable appliances whereby this could have been prevented. The jury found for the defendant, and the plaintiff excepted to the order of the court denying her motion for a new trial. Held, that "ordinary care" is a relative term, and the diligence which will amount to ordinary care varies according to the circumstances of each particular case. Central R., etc., Co. v. Ryles, 84 Ga. 420, 11 S. E. 499.

(a) A power company, in furnishing electric-ty to patrons, with respect to employes of the latter rightfully on the premises of the patron and likely to come into contact with wires carrying the current supplied, is bound to use ordinary care, which demands that the power company shall use such diligence in preventing injuries to such employes as is commensurate with the danger involved in the use and control of such a subtle and deadly agency as electricity. 1 Thompson on Negligence, § 804.

(b) The court charged the jury as follows: "If you find, under the evidence and the law as given you in charge, that the defendant was supplying electricity to the building in which the plaintiff's husband was employed and at work, and that the defendant exercised ordinary care in supplying electric current and in supplying such appliances as were in general use at the time of the death of plaintiff's husband, then the plaintiff could not recover. The defendant is not required to put in every latest device. It is only required to use the kind of machinery in general use and that is reasonably suited for the purpose for which it was intended; and you are to consider this at the time of the accident." The court gave the jury other charges of a similar nature. Such charges were erroneous, for the reason that it was a question for the jury to determine as to whether or not the defendant, relatively to an employe of one of its patrons to whom it was supplying electricity, had exercised ordinary care if it did not use the "latest devices," but only used "the kind of machinery in general use and that is reasonably suited for the purpose for which it was intended."

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5029-5042; vol. 8, pp. 7739, 7740.]

2. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

As between the plaintiff and the defendant, there was no evidence to authorize a charge upon the subject of negligence on the part of the plaintiff's husband. (Lumpkin, J., dissenting as to the point dealt with in this headnote.)

3. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE TO PRESENT ALL ISSUES.

The charge: "To render the defendant liable for such negligence as would entitle the plaintiff to recover under the law as given you in charge, the evidence must by a preponderance go further, and show that the defendant knew of the defective condition of the wires, if any is shown, or of their operation, if shown, by the exercise of ordinary care as explained, could have discovered it or correct it"—was not accurate, as it confined the negligence of the defendant for which a recovery might be had to "the defective condition of the wires * * * or of their operation," whereas there were other grounds of negligence involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

4. INSTRUCTIONS.

The use of the words "in your discretion" by the court in the charge complained of in the tenth ground of the amended motion for a new trial, while an inapt expression, was not likely to mislead the jury as to their province with respect to the subject-matter of the charge.

5. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

There was no error, for any reason assigned, requiring a new trial, with respect to the matters complained of in the other assignments of error.

STILWELL v. WATKINS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 637*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—DISMISSAL.

A bill of exceptions, reciting that it was tendered within 30 days from the adjournment of the court, and followed by the usual certificate of the judge, will not be dismissed, although not actually certified by the judge until after the time allowed by law for tendering the same had expired, unless it be made to appear that the failure of the judge to certify the same within the period allowed for tendering the bill of exceptions was due to some act of the plaintiff in error or his counsel. Dyson v. Southern Ry. Co., 113 Ga. 327, 38 S. E. 749; Proctor v. Piedmont Portland Cement & Lime Co., 134 Ga. 391, 67 S. E. 942.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 56*)—ADDITIONAL CERTIFICATE.

Where a bill of exceptions is duly and regularly certified according to law, an additional certificate, following the one required by statute, will be ignored and treated as surplusage. Dyson v. Southern Ry. Co., supra; Atkins v. Winter, 121 Ga. 75, 48 S. E. 717; Cordray v. Savannah Union Station Co., 134 Ga. 865, 68 S. E. 697.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 592*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—DISMISSAL.

Under the ruling in Southern Mining Co. v. Brown, 107 Ga. 264, 33 S. E. 73, the bill of exceptions will not be dismissed on the ground that there was no bona fide effort to brief the evidence contained in the bill of exceptions.

4. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER (§ 6*)—DEFENDANT CLAIMING RIGHT OF POSSESSION IN GOOD FAITH.

In a proceeding under Civ. Code 1895, § 4808, against an intruder, the defendant cannot be evicted if in good faith he claims a right to the possession of the land. Thompson v. Glover, 120 Ga. 440, 47 S. E. 935; Lane v. Williams, 114 Ga. 124, 39 S. E. 919. Under this rule, the evidence, being conflicting, was not of such character as to authorize the direction of a verdict against the defendant.

WATTS v. LANGSTON et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 24, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 69, 327*)—RIGHT OF REVIEW—PARTIES.

Where an attachment was sued out by a creditor against a firm composed of two members, on the ground that they resided out of the state, and was levied upon sufficient property to make the amount of the debt sought to be collected, and a replevy bond was given, with defendants in attachment as principals and certain persons as sureties, and where afterwards an order was taken suggesting the death of one of the principals and authorizing the case to proceed against the firm and the surviving partner and against the sureties on the replevy bond, and upon the trial a verdict was obtained in favor of the plaintiff against one of the principals as surviving partner and in his individual capacity, and against the said sureties, and where after this verdict a motion for a new trial was made and granted by the court, and the case came on for trial a second time, and the sureties were allowed to intervene, setting up, among others, a defense based on the ground that their risk had been increased, etc., "because the plaintiff had dismissed one of the principal defendants," and the issue made by this intervention was tried independently of the main case and prior thereto, the main case standing on the docket for trial, it was competent for the plaintiff in attachment, upon the determination of the issue made by the intervention of the sureties by a verdict of the jury, after having made a motion for a new trial, to sue out a direct bill of exceptions and bring to this court for review the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial, as well as the rulings made by the court during the trial of the issue made by the intervention.

(a) The defendant in attachment was not a necessary party to this bill of exceptions, as the determination of the issue involved concerned only the plaintiff in attachment and the sureties on the replevy bond; and the failure to make the surviving defendant in attachment a party will not work a dismissal of the bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1814-1820; Dec. Dig. §§ 69, 327.*]

2. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 77*)—DEATH OF ONE DEFENDANT—PROCEEDING AGAINST OTHER DEFENDANT.

Under the facts stated in the first head-note relative to the suing out of the attachment against the debtor firm and the giving of a replevy bond, it was proper, upon an order taken suggesting the death of one of the members of the defendant firm, to allow the case to proceed against the firm and the surviving partner and against the sureties on the replevy bond; and the court should have stricken the intervention filed by the sureties, setting up as a defense against liability on the bond the fact that the deceased member of the firm had been stricken from the case, and the case ordered to proceed against the surviving partner, who is alleged to have been insolvent, and against the firm, which was also alleged to be insolvent, while the estate of the deceased partner was solvent, and that the surviving partner failed and refused to defend the case, although, as the interveners set up, the grounds of the attachment were not true, as the firm and both members thereof were residents of the state of Georgia, and did not reside out of the state at the time of suing out the attachment, and that the risk of the sureties was increased by the dismissal of the deceased partner from the case and in consequence of the other facts set up in the intervention. WAGENER, for Use of BANK OF CUMMING, v. FORSYTH COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 24, 1910.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 121*)—CONTRACTS.

Where one entered into a contract with the proper county authorities for the furnishing of material and for the building of a courthouse, and the work contemplated by the contract was finished and accepted by the proper county authorities before the contract was entered on the minutes of the ordinary, such a contract was unenforceable until entered on the minutes of the ordinary; but where this was done after the completion of the work, in compliance with a judgment in mandamus proceedings instituted to compel the entry of the contract on the minutes, the defect resulting from a failure to enter the contract on the minutes before the work was begun or completed was cured, and the contract was enforceable by an action instituted therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

2. COUNTIES (§ 222*)—ACTIONS—PLEADING.

There were sufficient allegations in the petition of the presentation of plaintiffs' demand and claim against the county within the time prescribed by statute, and of the acceptance of the building erected under the contract sued on; consequently the grounds of general demurrer attacking the petition for the lack of such allegations should have been overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

Error from Superior Court, Forsyth County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Action by Fred Wagener, for use of the Bank of Cumming, against Forsyth County. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Fred Wagener, who sued for the use of the Bank of Cumming, brought his petition against Forsyth county, alleging as follows: H. V. Jones, as ordinary of said county, being duly authorized under the law so to do, in behalf of the county entered into a contract in writing with petitioner, wherein it was agreed that the latter would furnish material and erect a courthouse for said county, according to plans and specifications prescribed for the same, for $24,000, to be paid in installments, and that the work should be completed and accepted as therein set out. Petitioner executed a bond for the faithful performance of his contract. He fully complied with the obligations of the contract, and delivered up the building to the ordinary in perfect repair, clean, and in good condition, and free of all claims and liens whatsoever, in March, 1906, and it was accepted by the ordinary and the committee duly appointed on the part of the county, subject to certain additional work to be done on the upstairs floor, the plastering and columns, which additional work was completed to the satisfaction of the ordinary in May, 1906. The building has been occupied by the authorized officers of the county, for all the purposes for which the same was intended, continuously since said date to the filing of the petition. In the progress of the work on the building, and in order to enable him to pay for the necessary material and labor therefor, petitioner gave to the Bank of Cumming orders upon the ordinary, requesting him to deliver to the said bank the county warrants falling due for the fourth, fifth, and sixth payments, upon the faith of which orders the bank furnished to petitioner the full amounts due upon each of said payments; but the said ordinary refuses to pay to petitioner or to the Bank of Cumming the sixth and last payment due upon the contract, amounting to $3,600. Written demand for the county warrant covering said payment was presented to said defendant by said Bank of Cumming, through its attorney, on the 23d of March, 1907. Petitioner also sues for the additional sum of $165 for extra work done upon the building, consisting of putting a double floor both on the first and second stories, a steel ceiling instead of plastering overhead at the east entrance to the building, and substituting metal columns for wooden columns at the north, south, and west doors, all of which, it is alleged, was agreed upon and the price fixed before said work was commenced, as prescribed in the specifications furnished by the architect.

The defendant demurred upon the following, among other, grounds: (1) No cause of action is set out. (2) Plaintiff is not entitled to any relief under the facts stated. (3) It does not appear from said petition that the plaintiff's claim or demand was presented to the proper authorities of the county for payment within 12 months after it became payable. (4) It is not alleged that the contract sued upon was entered upon the minutes of the court of ordinary of said county before the work thereunder was done. (5) The petition does not allege that the courthouse was accepted by the ordinary of Forsyth county and its architects. (6) It is not stated when the contract was entered of record upon the minutes of the ordinary. (7) The petition does not set forth any facts which make this defendant liable for the extra work alleged to have been done by the plaintiff; it not being alleged that said work was let according to law.

H. L. Patterson and H. H. Perry, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Brooke and Hines & Jordan, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). As appears from the bill of exceptions and the judgment of the court rendered in this case, the plaintiff's petition was dismissed by the court upon the general demurrer.

1. The contract with the county, relied on by the plaintiff as the foundation of his right to recover against defendant, was in writing, as is required by law; but it was not entered on the minutes, as prescribed in section 343 of the Political Code of 1895, before the work of erecting the courthouse had begun, nor even during the progress of that work. Subsequently to the completion of the building and the delivery of it to the county authorities, a demand was made upon the ordinary to enter the contract upon his minutes, and this demand was refused, whereupon application for mandamus was filed by the Bank of Cumming, the use in the present case, which resulted in a mandamus absolute requiring the entry of the contract on the minutes, and in accordance with this order the contract sued on was actually entered on the minutes, all of which appears in the report of the case of Jones v. Bank of Cumming, 131 Ga. 614, 63 S. E. 36.

The controlling question in this case, as it stands at present, is whether the entry of the contract on the minutes of the ordinary subsequently to the completion of the work provided for in the contract, at the command of the court in mandamus proceedings, could give to the party contracting with the county the same rights under the contract as if that contract had been entered on the minutes previously to the commencement of the work or during its progress. The court below was of the opinion that, if the contract "is kept off the minutes until the contract has been fully executed and the work finished," it could not be enforced at the instance of the party contracting with the county. It has been repeatedly ruled that in a suit against the county upon a contract like this one an allegation that the same was in writing and had been entered on the minutes was necessary to the maintenance of the suit; but it has never been held, and nothing in the statute requires such a holding, that the contract could not be enforced where it had been entered prior to the time of bringing the suit for its enforcement, although the entry was not made before the commencement of the work or during its progress.

In the case of Jones v. Bank of Cumming, supra, where the judgment of the court below granting mandamus absolute against the ordinary and requiring him to enter the contract in question upon his minutes was under consideration, Justice Lumpkin has collected the cases bearing upon the question of the validity of contracts with a county of the character of that involved in this case, and (page 624 of 131 Ga., page 40 of 63 S. E.), after reviewing them, says: "The statement that the object of the law requiring the entry of such contracts on the minutes is to give information, easily accessible to the public, as to the character of contracts being made by the county authorities, is equally true, whether the provision as to entering on the minutes be treated as mandatory or directory. If the failure of the ordinary to enter the formal written contract upon the minutes promptly rendered it wholly void, when did it become so? What would have been the effect if he had recorded it on the day after it was made, or some day soon thereafter? At what point did the failure of the ordinary to perform his duty, as the public may presume he will do, render his written contract an absolute nullity? If the contract was 'invalid' until recorded, only in the sense that it was not perfected or completed in matter of formal entry, so as to form a basis for a suit, could the county get the courthouse and use it, and, when called on to pay, respond that its official made the contract in writing, but failed to record it, and that, if it should now be recorded, it would still be a nullity? It was suggested that the contract might have been recorded at any time before the contractor began work, but, if not then recorded, it became a nullity. The statute makes no such declaration, and prescribes no time within which the written contract remains inchoate and at end of which it becomes null because not entered."

And it seems to us that the conclusion from this argument, when it is considered in connection with other portions of the opinion from which it is taken, is that the contract was not absolutely void or invalid before it was recorded, except "in the sense that it was not perfected or completed, * * * so as to form a basis for a suit"; and when that defect in the contract had been remedied, either by the voluntary act of the ordinary in entering it upon his minutes, or in entering it at the behest of the court, it might, if properly executed by parties having authority to execute it on the part of the county, and if complied with by the other contracting party, be enforced by him just as if it had been entered on the minutes of the ordinary before the commencement of the work. And while the precise question which we have under consideration here, as to whether or not the entry of the contract on the minutes of the ordinary in obedience to the writ of mandamus after the completion of the work provided for in the contract would have the effect to render the contract enforceable in an action based thereon, was not directly involved in the case of Jones v. Bank of Cumming, supra, the conclusion reached in that case, that mandamus should have issued to compel the entry of the contract on the minutes, is strongly persuasive, and supports us in the conclusion which we have announced above, because, unless an entry of the contract on the minutes of the ordinary cured the defect which prevented the enforcement of the contract, it would seem that a judgment ordering the entry, in mandamus proceedings, would have been entirely nugatory and vain, and the court would not have undertaken by a judgment to direct the performance of a vain act.

.2. There were sufficient allegations in the petition of the presentation of plaintiff's demand and claim against the county within the time prescribed by statute, and of the acceptance of the building erected under the contract sued on; consequently the grounds of general demurrer attacking the petition for the lack of such allegations should have been overruled.

The special demurrers were not passed upon by the court below; but, as stated above, the petition was dismissed upon grounds taken in the general demurrer, and the questions covered by the special demurrers are left open for determination by the court below.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

STATE ex rel. LYON, Atty. Gen., v. CITY OF COLUMBIA et al. (Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 5, 1910.) Suit by the State, on the relation of Lyon, Attorney General, against the Columbia Water Power Company, the City of Columbia, and others. Decree for complainant. Proceeding in the original jurisdiction of the court by Attorney General Lyon against the Columbia Water Power Company, the Columbia Street Railway, Light & Power Company, and the City of Columbia. Attorney General Lyon and Porter A. McMaster, for the motion. Green & Green, opposed.

PER CURIAM. Upon reading and filing the report of A. D. McFadden, Esq., special master herein, of 22d January, 1910, and on motion of the Attorney General: It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the respondent, the city of Columbia, and the mayor and aldermen of the city of Columbia, and each of them, are hereby enjoined and required to remove, within eight months from the date of this order, the water mains and bridge constructed across the Columbia Canal by the city of Columbia, and located near the city water pumping station, a fuller description of said bridge and water mains appearing in the petition. It is further ordered that a certified copy of this order be served upon the city of Columbia, by delivering the same to the mayor and clerk of said city, and also served upon the mayor and each of the aldermen of said city, and that this original order be exhibited to each of them. It is further ordered that the costs and disbursements be taxed by the clerk of this court, and be paid by the city of Columbia.

PHENIX INS. CO. OF BROOKLYN, N. Y., v. SHERMAN. (Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. June 6, 1910.) Error to Circuit Court, Wise County. Action by J. B. Sherman against the Phenix Insurance Company of Brooklyn, N. Y. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed. Phlegar & Powell and Irvine & Morrison, for plaintiff in error. Bullitt & Chalkley and W. S. Mathews, for defendant in error.

PER CURIAM. The court being of opinion that this case is controlled by the opinion and judgment of this court in the case of Phoenix Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., v. J. B. Sherman, decided November 18, 1909, and reported in 66 S. E. 81, it is therefore ordered that the judgment of the circuit court of Wise county be reversed, and this court will enter such judgment as the circuit court should have entered. Reversed.

Fred Wagener, who sued for the use of the Bank of Cumming, brought his petition against Forsyth county, alleging as follows: H. V. Jones, as ordinary of said county, being duly authorized under the law so to do, in behalf of the county entered into a contract in writing with petitioner, wherein it was agreed that the latter would furnish material and erect a courthouse for said county, according to plans and specifications prescribed for the same, for $24,000, to be paid in installments, and that the work should be completed and accepted as therein set out. Petitioner executed a bond for the faithful performance of his contract. He fully complied with the obligations of the contract, and delivered up the building to the ordinary in perfect repair, clean, and in good condition, and free of all claims and liens whatsoever, in March, 1906, and it was accepted by the ordinary and the committee duly appointed on the part of the county, subject to certain additional work to be done on the upstairs floor, the plastering and columns, which additional work was completed to the satisfaction of the ordinary in May, 1906. The building has been occupied by the authorized officers of the county, for all the purposes for which the same was intended, continuously since said date to the filing of the petition. In the progress of the work on the building, and in order to enable him to pay for the necessary material and labor therefor, petitioner gave to the Bank of Cumming orders upon the ordinary, requesting him to deliver to the said bank the county warrants falling due for the fourth, fifth, and sixth payments, upon the faith of which orders the bank furnished to petitioner the full amounts due upon each of said payments; but the said ordinary refuses to pay to petitioner or to the Bank of Cumming the sixth and last payment due upon the contract, amounting to $3,600. Written demand for the county warrant covering said payment was presented to said defendant by said Bank of Cumming, through its attorney, on the 23d of March, 1907. Petitioner also sues for the additional sum of $165 for extra work done upon the building, consisting of putting a double floor both on the first and second stories, a steel ceiling instead of plastering overhead at the east entrance to the building, and substituting metal columns for wooden columns at the north, south, and west doors, all of which, it is alleged, was agreed upon and the price fixed before said work was commenced, as prescribed in the specifications furnished by the architect.

The defendant demurred upon the following, among other, grounds: (1) No cause of action is set out. (2) Plaintiff is not entitled to any relief under the facts stated. (3) It does not appear from said petition that the plaintiff's claim or demand was presented to the proper authorities of the county for payment within 12 months after it became payable. (4) It is not alleged that the contract sued upon was entered upon the minutes of the court of ordinary of said county before the work thereunder was done. (5) The petition does not allege that the courthouse was accepted by the ordinary of Forsyth county and its architects. (6) It is not stated when the contract was entered of record upon the minutes of the ordinary. (7) The petition does not set forth any facts which make this defendant liable for the extra work alleged to have been done by the plaintiff; it not being alleged that said work was let according to law.

H. L. Patterson and H. H. Perry, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Brooke and Hines & Jordan, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). As appears from the bill of exceptions and the judgment of the court rendered in this case, the plaintiff's petition was dismissed by the court upon the general demurrer.

1. The contract with the county, relied on by the plaintiff as the foundation of his right to recover against defendant, was in writing, as is required by law; but it was not entered on the minutes, as prescribed in section 343 of the Political Code of 1895, before the work of erecting the courthouse had begun, nor even during the progress of that work. Subsequently to the completion of the building and the delivery of it to the county authorities, a demand was made upon the ordinary to enter the contract upon his minutes, and this demand was refused, whereupon application for mandamus was filed by the Bank of Cumming, the use in the present case, which resulted in a mandamus absolute requiring the entry of the contract on the minutes, and in accordance with this order the contract sued on was actually entered on the minutes, all of which appears in the report of the case of Jones v. Bank of Cumming, 131 Ga. 614, 63 S. E. 36.

The controlling question in this case, as it stands at present, is whether the entry of the contract on the minutes of the ordinary subsequently to the completion of the work provided for in the contract, at the command of the court in mandamus proceedings, could give to the party contracting with the county the same rights under the contract as if that contract had been entered on the minutes previously to the commencement of the work or during its progress. The court below was of the opinion that, if the contract "is kept off the minutes until the contract has been fully executed and the work finished," it could not be enforced at the instance of the party contracting with the county. It has been repeatedly ruled that in a suit against the county upon a contract like this one an allegation that the same was in writing and had been entered on the minutes was necessary to the maintenance of the suit; but it has never been held, and nothing in the statute requires such a holding, that the contract could not be enforced where it had been entered prior to the time of bringing the suit for its enforcement, although the entry was not made before the commencement of the work or during its progress.

In the case of Jones v. Bank of Cumming, supra, where the judgment of the court below granting mandamus absolute against the ordinary and requiring him to enter the contract in question upon his minutes was under consideration, Justice Lumpkin has collected the cases bearing upon the question of the validity of contracts with a county of the character of that involved in this case, and (page 624 of 131 Ga., page 40 of 63 S. E.), after reviewing them, says: "The statement that the object of the law requiring the entry of such contracts on the minutes is to give information, easily accessible to the public, as to the character of contracts being made by the county authorities, is equally true, whether the provision as to entering on the minutes be treated as mandatory or directory. If the failure of the ordinary to enter the formal written contract upon the minutes promptly rendered it wholly void, when did it become so? What would have been the effect if he had recorded it on the day after it was made, or some day soon thereafter? At what point did the failure of the ordinary to perform his duty, as the public may presume he will do, render his written contract an absolute nullity? If the contract was 'invalid' until recorded, only in the sense that it was not perfected or completed in matter of formal entry, so as to form a basis for a suit, could the county get the courthouse and use it, and, when called on to pay, respond that its official made the contract in writing, but failed to record it, and that, if it should now be recorded, it would still be a nullity? It was suggested that the contract might have been recorded at any time before the contractor began work, but, if not then recorded, it became a nullity. The statute makes no such declaration, and prescribes no time within which the written contract remains inchoate and at end of which it becomes null because not entered."

And it seems to us that the conclusion from this argument, when it is considered in connection with other portions of the opinion from which it is taken, is that the contract was not absolutely void or invalid before it was recorded, except "in the sense that it was not perfected or completed, * * * so as to form a basis for a suit"; and when that defect in the contract had been remedied, either by the voluntary act of the ordinary in entering it upon his minutes, or in entering it at the behest of the court, it might, if properly executed by parties having authority to execute it on the part of the county, and if complied with by the other contracting party, be enforced by him just as if it had been entered on the minutes of the ordinary before the commencement of the work. And while the precise question which we have under consideration here, as to whether or not the entry of the contract on the minutes of the ordinary in obedience to the writ of mandamus after the completion of the work provided for in the contract would have the effect to render the contract enforceable in an action based thereon, was not directly involved in the case of Jones v. Bank of Cumming, supra, the conclusion reached in that case, that mandamus should have issued to compel the entry of the contract on the minutes, is strongly persuasive, and supports us in the conclusion which we have announced above, because, unless an entry of the contract on the minutes of the ordinary cured the defect which prevented the enforcement of the contract, it would seem that a judgment ordering the entry, in mandamus proceedings, would have been entirely nugatory and vain, and the court would not have undertaken by a judgment to direct the performance of a vain act.

.2. There were sufficient allegations in the petition of the presentation of plaintiff's demand and claim against the county within the time prescribed by statute, and of the acceptance of the building erected under the contract sued on; consequently the grounds of general demurrer attacking the petition for the lack of such allegations should have been overruled.

The special demurrers were not passed upon by the court below; but, as stated above, the petition was dismissed upon grounds taken in the general demurrer, and the questions covered by the special demurrers are left open for determination by the court below.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.
